One of the greatest accomplishments of Orchard Hill is the amount of student leaders that emerge from this area. There are a ton of students that are from Orchard Hill who are involved on campus through various organizations, whether it be music, intramurals or registered student organizations. Students from the Hill are actively contributing to the University in their own way, which is essential to student life, especially in the student senate. Every year, senate seats and area government seats are actually contested, where in other living areas many students run unopposed. From my frame of reference many commuter senators or commuters students who are actively involved on campus are formerly from the Hill. Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) has always been an exceptional area government, even through the tides of change as people graduate and new students take over. The OHAG office has its own copying machine open to resident use, exchanges money for quarters for laundry and hosts events on a regular basis.

Another big myth about the Hill is that the honors students are always studying and are very quiet people. As somebody who lives directly under a Commonwealth College learning community, this is a complete lie. The freshmen that live above me are incredibly noisy! It's not even just the room above me, but the entire wing. A few of my neighbors have also heard the noise, which includes moving furniture, basketballs, slamming doors and running. There are also many other loud unidentifiable noises that sound like explosions, which loosen the Christmas lights around my room. Apparently, students on the floor above them are also hearing the cacophony and ready to kill. When finals begin, the whole situation could get very ugly.

The honors students and non-honors students on the Hill also know how to party, contrary to popular belief. The Hill gets very noisy starting with Thirsty Thursday and continuing into Saturday night when it quiets down a bit. Students have parties on the Hill, they go to other parts of campus and they go into town looking for fun. There are also many students who go along with the stereotype and do spend their weekends doing alternative things such as play Snood and watch movies in their own rooms, but tell me what's wrong with that? Everyone has different tastes and interests and if playing Starcraft in your dorm is your idea of fun, then I'm not about to discriminate. People talk about students isolating themselves as if it were a bad thing, when in reality it's just a matter of choice.

People often compare Orchard Hill to our polar opposite Southwest, but there are clear reasons why the Hill is better. For example, power outages. If another large power outage were to occur campus wide that lasted under five minutes, the students on Orchard Hill would be upset (especially if you just lost that paper you were finishing) but fairly calm. In Southwest, furniture would have been set on fire, hundreds of beer bottles thrown out windows and unnecessary rioting would happen. It's a power outage for crying out loud. The electricity will come back and students on Orchard Hill know this. In Southwest they're rioting for the sake of rioting. In terms of furniture I will acknowledge that students on Orchard Hill have this obsession with throwing couches off the balconies. Most of the sturdy couches survive the fall and magically appear in our lounges again. Though impractical, we keep our furniture, whereas in Southwest once it's charred sufficiently that couch is done. Orchard Hill buildings only have seven floors and the elevators stop at all of them, whereas Southwest elevators don't stop on every floor, making moving day painful and waiting longer. This battle could continue on forever between the living areas, and I hope no one was too offended. I have a lot of good friends in Southwest, though I personally would never actually live there. Orchard Hill is great and I'm proud to say that I live there (but I'm not an honors student. I always make that very clear to possible haters). The Hill and the students that live there are a lot better than people perceive it to be.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

Smooth Operators - A Top Ten List

COURTESY HANK CHO-DUNHAM

COURTESY BOB SARPSHAR

COURTESY FRANK MASI

COURTESY CLAUDETTE BARIUS

COURTESY MERRITT MORTON

COURTESY RACHEL MYLES

COURTESY CLAUDETTE BARIUS

By David Cornwell
Collegian Correspondent

The key to making a really good movie is creating a character that the audience will fall for (but not necessarily relate to). So what sort of traits do we look for a character to have? Strength? Maybe. Intelligence? Usually not. Good looks? Just about always. How about wit, charm, and charisma? Definitely.

These suave, debonair characters are the ones that we remember most. And so, this is a Top Ten Smoothest Film Characters of All-Time List.

Before stumbling into this Top Ten, "smooth" must first be defined. For one to be smooth, he must possess people skills (I know, I know, "people skills," what a horribly boring term). He must be able to make an entrance, hold everyone's attention, and get what he wants from anybody. A suave talker with a slight amount of intimidation working, he must always be somewhere in the background and must never do anything clumsy or embarrassing. He cannot be embarrassed. Anyway, I think we all really know the most important thing that "smooth" means – it means he can always get the ladies.

10. Doc Holliday (played by Val Kilmer) – Kilmer's performance In Tombstone (1993) was simply excellent. The movie itself was good, but the audience sat transfixed, just waiting for Holliday's next appearance. He was a sickly, pale looking character, but he made that soul patch under his lip look really good – which is tough to do. Doc was also quite nasty at the poker table, always good when you're trying to make yourself look like a winner. Plus while he won he had a really hot chick standing by his side, collecting the winnings. However, what got him on The List was a scene that came towards the end of the movie in which Johnny Ringo (a real roughneck, feared by most) asks if "anyone here is man enough to play for blood." Holliday steps out from nowhere and coolly replies, "I'm your huckleberry." Man, typing that just does not do it justice. He also quarrels with Ringo in Latin. Knowing second and third languages is always really smooth.

9. Harry Callahan (played by Clint Eastwood) – Dirty Harry (1971) has always been a highly acclaimed movie, basically falling into the "classic" department. Clint Eastwood always plays a really tough, sometimes witty, character, but Harry takes the cake. Callahan doesn't make many mistakes, and definitely intimidates everyone he meets. It's a stretch putting him on a "smooth" list, for he's probably better suited for a Top Ten Bad Mofo list. But his catchy, smart lines as he stares down "punks" and talks about his .44 Magnum make him smooth-worthy.

8. Pete "Maverick" Mitchell (played by Tom Cruise) – In Top Gun (1986), he flies in some of the fastest jets in the Navy of the most developed country in the world. He competes with his peers and develops an incredible rivalry. He rattles off some of the smoothest one-liners in the history of one-liners.

7. Rick Blain (played by Humphrey Bogart) – Casablanca (1942) is a classic, if you've never seen it, go see it. I really need not say more.

6. Johnny Castle (played by Patrick Swayze) – With Swayze in Dirty Dancing (1987), you could feel the vibes pulsating through the screen. Swayze was just awesome; or at least the girls all thought so. He was no player, but he won over "Baby" Houseman with ease. One more comment about the movie – as a kid, I claimed I hated it, but when my sister watched it for the 11th, 17th and 40th time, I eventually began to stop lying to myself. I put my machismo aside and admitted that the movie was good. I also secretly had a thing for Jennifer Grey... does that make me some kind of pervert?

5. Ferris Bueller (played by Matthew Broderick) – Seriously, one of my all-time favorite characters. As a kid I wished I could be like him once I got to high school. Why this guy is smooth: gets Sloan Peterson for a girlfriend, successfully impersonates Abe Froman (the Sausage King of Chicago), sings "Twist and Shout" on a float during a parade, and gets his uptight friend Cameron to let him drive his father's Ferrari. Plus he can outwit Ed Rooney any day of the week. As Grace (the secretary) put it best, "Oh, he's very popular Ed. The sportos, the motorheads, geeks, sluts, bloods, waistoids, dweebies, dickheads...they all adore him. They think he's a righteous dude." Perfect Grace, perfect.

4. James Bond (played by Sean

Turn to SMOOTH, page 6

THREE 6 MAFIA - SAME OLD STORY, SAME OLD BEATS

COURTESY ARNOLD TURNER

Three 6 Mafia: Original picture... not so original lyrics.

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

THREE 6 MAFIA
Choices: The Album
Loud Records

The Dirty South rap trio, Three 6 Mafia, has gone ahead and followed the direction of Snoop Dogg, Master P, Nas, and DMX in that they are all rap artists who star in a movie with their own album serving as the soundtrack. However, Three 6 Mafia and the previously mentioned artists have three things that are not in common. 1) Master P and Snoop Dogg knew they're movies were bad, and they made the movies to go along with the soundtrack. Nas and DMX starrred in Hype Williams' Belly – a tough and sincere look at the lives of two "gangstas" and the unforgiving streets. Three 6 Mafia's film Choices, is a terrible movie that they take very seriously. But that is a review for another time. 2) Master P, Snoop Dogg, Nas, and DMX can hold their own without a movie – their music and sound is infectious and anyone with an open mind can accept it. Three 6 Mafia's CD could not hold its own, even within the movie that it is the soundtrack for, never mind its imminent failure if it were released on its own. 3) They are actually known. Three 6 Mafia lives in a limbo world of other mediocre rappers, without either a) the talent or b) a strong promotional backing.

Three 6 Mafia are three MCs that try too hard, and don't realize that they need to experiment with sounds to become popular In even the underground circles of rap and hip-hop.

Choices is totally run by beats. That's it – beats. No melody, no samples, nothing harmonic. Nothing, besides the hypnotic style of rhyming that the MCs contribute to the album, which in all honesty is the only highlight of the album. They have great flow and rhythm and it shows throughout the album. But the songs themselves are void of anything original. The songs are almost all paced the same and the sound of drums, bass or synthesizer (whatever they decided to use) gets repetitive.

The words of the songs themselves, are equally dull Unlike songs by DMX, Ja Rule, Nelly, or other popular rappers who switch what type of music they play and experiment with different genres, Three 6 Mafia sticks to the same formula.

Song storyline as follows – Man falls on some tough times, his girlfriend is using him for money, and he is being harassed by people who have higher authority. He is looking for money and an honest woman. He doesn't want to be used by anyone. And most importantly, no one should "Fk Wit U" (title of track 14) All the tracks on the CD follow at least one of these storylines, sometimes even using more than one. I'm not saying that the material isn't relevant or real, I'm not questioning their sincerity, but I am saying that the message gets lost in the repetitiveness. What could be a

Turn to MAFIA, page 6

■ smooth

continued from page 5

Connery) – OK, I know many are thinking why is Bond at number four? He ALWAYS gets the girl, has probably killed as many people as attend this school (all criminals and evil guys, don't worry), and he gets stated-of-the-art cars and gadgets. He's recognized and accepted by like, three generations. Number four?!?! Yes, four. You can thank Pierce Brosnan for that one. I feel I'm being generous ranking him at four. Pierce Brosnan sucks. I'm not going to even begin to argue it. Bond's character rocks, but damn it, I hate Pierce Brosnan.

5. Prince Vlad Dracula (Played by Gary Oldman) –Many of you have probably not seen Bram Stoker's Dracula (1992). You really should. It's brilliant and is, actually, a love story. Oldman's portrayal of the classic character is electrifying. He also is the smoothest character ever! He's not number one because he cheats – you know, vampires have some special abilities when it comes to seducing women. Vlad has this middle aged, upscale charm to him. He defies death to once again encounter his lost love (played by Winona Ryder). You really have to see it to know what I'm talking about. It's a different kind of smooth than say, Bogart, but when he's wearing his top hat with the purple shades and long coat in the 1800's setting, it's just awesome.

2. Trent Walker (played by Vince Vaughn) – "Baby, you're so money!" Trent, from Swingers (1996), is the definition of smooth. He's amazing with the girls and with his friends as well. He can talk himself in and out of any situation. He fixes the situation with the thugs after Sue pulls a gun on them. He's a hero to many guys who want to be players, and a motivator for those guys who lack confidence. If you still haven't seen this movie, you're a horrible person. Go rent it.

1. Dr. Henry "Indiana" Jones (played by Harrison Ford) – Forgot about Indy, didn't you? Jones was the man. He gets Marion Ravenwood (Karen Allen) in Raiders of the Lost Ark (1981) and Willie Scott (Kate Upshaw) in Temple of Doom (1984). Not to mention that 19 of the 20 students in his (boring) class were girls who transferred in because of their crushes on him. Jones could play hard-to-get like no other man. You know he would succeed; and win over the girl. Jones was the man; I have nothing more to say.

■ mafia

continued from page 5

good message to the populous turns into, by the end of the album, the same old same old.

Not even popular Dirty South rapper Ludacris, can save track 11 "Dis Is CII. Dat I^^" Although his style is a refreshing breath of fresh air in a CD that by this point has become quite stale. His forty seconds of rhyming follow the same repetitive beat, and his lyrics aren't that well groomed, as he just goes on about how ladies like him and what he would like to do to them (take out of that what you want to).

The members of Three 6 Mafia are obviously talented when it comes down to rhyming, flowing, and controlling the words used. I'm actually very impressed and pleasantly surprised at the control they have over the construction of their messages. However, it's the repetitive messages, beats that get old just as fast as "Who Let the Dogs Out" and unimaginative songs that make this album feel long, bothersome, and a chore to listen to.

Opening this weekend

Ocean's Eleven opens this weekend and is full of star power. Pictured here, Matt Damon and George Clooney.

It's Our First Anniversary CELEBRATION!

3500 FREE Monthly Minutes for LIFE

PLUS

Unlimited Nationwide Long Distance
when calling from your home airtime rate area

That's 3200 Night & Weekend and 300 Anytime home airtime minutes!

All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up now for one year and remain on a SingleRate™ East plan

FREE

FREE Headset!
FREE Car Charger!
Available on select models with annual contract

One Year Anniversary Special
December 5 - 9 only!

HOLYOKE MALL
(413) 533-2500

HADLEY
322 Russell Street
(413) 587-3248

@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com

36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 ext 226 for franchise opportunities.

verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer

Shakira soars

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

SHAKIRA
Laundry Service
Epic

Already a Madonna-level rock star in Latin America, Colombian sensation Shakira has become the latest Latin artist to attempt an English crossover. But don't expect the flimsy, if catchy, "Livin' La Vida Loca" cheese of Ricky Martin. Laundry Service is a hot-blooded debut full of crackling electricity, from an artist with more passion than your average Jennifer Lopez.

The 24-year-old Shakira has been involved with music since the age of 15, when she signed her first record deal. At 18, she broke through in her native land with Pies Descalzos and went multiplatinum in several countries (including the United States) with Donde Estan los Ladrones. Even fellow countryman, Nobel Prize-winning author Gabriel Garcia Marquez, has sung her praises. It's easy to know why. Her voice is a unique and powerful instrument, capable of going high and sweet, or dropping to deep, commanding rumble, while avoiding the vocal chord-abusing histrionics of Christina Aguilera, Jessica Simpson and Celine Dion (as a singer, the thin-voiced J. Lo makes a great actress). She gave show-stealing performances at awards shows like the Latin Grammies. In charge of her own music, she wrote (or co-wrote) all the songs on Laundry Service herself, with Emilio Estefan Jr. (who worked with Mandy Moore on her last album), as on los Ladrones. Shakira has created a Latin-tinged pop-rock album that is sexy, playful and spirited – a far cry from the homogenized, indistinguishable work of her forebears (i.e. Ricky).

Shakira kicks off the album on a high note, with "Objection Tango." No surprisingly, the song starts with a traditional tango flourish, which it soon pairs with a sped-up surf rock beat. Shakira tears through the song with a crazed, ardent energy, whirling through the beats like a Tasmanian devil. It starts the album with a blast. Unfortunately, the singer quickly stumbles with "Underneath Your Clothes," which has a slight country lilt. That's strike one, because I don't like country. But then it couldn't even have the guts to go all out and be respectable, "classic" country. Instead, she plays it safe, adopting the vapid brand of Faith Hill pop-country, which is worse.

Shakira regains her footing on first single "Whenever, Wherever," co-written with Gloria Estefan. The video is utterly shameless with a belly-dancing Shakira writhing in the mud (what else do you expect from Francis Lawrence, the guy who turned Britney Spears' "I'm A Slave 4 You" into Skinemax soft-core), but the song is incredibly catchy. It's a sister to Enrigue Iglesias' "Rhythm Divine," but has added flavor with mandolins, Andean pan flutes and Brazilian drums in the background. It also highlights Shakira's incredible range most dramatically. "Eyes Like Yours" has a de rigueur Middle Eastern feel to it (Shakira is part Lebanese). You can feel the heat as Shakira grunts and moans her way through the tribal drums. The song originally appeared as "Ojos Asi" on los Ladrones: Gloria Estefan translated the lyrics into English. Unlike many songs that ride the same handwagon, "Eyes Like Yours" has forcefulness, a full-bodied muscle.

"Ready for the Good Times" brings back the good old days of the disco, with a beat that wouldn't be out of place in the era of white leisure suits. "Fool" recalls the wounded girl angst rock of Alanis Morrisette (not for nothing has Shakira been compared to Alanis), with lyrics like "You might swear, you'd never hit a lady/ well let me say, you're not too far from maybe/ everyday you find new ways to hurt me." Her collaboration with popsulist hitmaker Glen Ballard (who worked on recent albums by the Corrs, Shelby Lynne and the Dave Matthews Band) is hamstrung by the regurgitation of bland cliches. It's an overpowering, slightly rockish ballad, and the weakest track on the album. The sweetly romantic "Rules" is backed by upbeat and lively horn arrangements (trumpet, flugelhorn, trombone, sax), and has a chorus that will stick like glue to your mind. Don't be surprised if you find yourself singing it, as I did. The badly titled "Poem To A Horse" is a decent song that also recalls Alanis (the song is about dumping a junkie loser), but it isn't up to the gold standard of Shakira's other songs.

Shakira hasn't forgotten her roots, and includes four songs in her native tongue. But "Suerte" and "Te Aviso, Te Anuncio" are nothing but Spanish language remakes of "Whenever, Wherever" and "Objection Tango," respectively, and thus are pointless (and beg the question: will the Latin version repeat the songs in English?). "Te Dejo Madrid" is a sunny, club ready track with a terrific salsa beat. It could get anyone to dance, even if they could only understand half the words (as in my case). "Que Me Quedes Tu" is respectable, nothing more.

Shakira is fairly strong lyrically, weaving sometimes-quirky lines that refreshingly don't say baby five times per song, but she is capable of making missteps ("Lucky that my breasts are small and humble/ so you don't confuse them with mountains." Yeah). She's definitely sensual hooks, grooves and beats. She's stunning vocally with her striking voice. Her album reminded me a lot of Stella Soleil's Mas release Dirty Little Secret – a near perfect dance-pop album that no one bought – they make great sister albums. Shakira has already had some success in the states, enough to get Laundry Service a No. 5 debut on the Billboard charts and a widely ran Pepsi commercial. Let's hope that she remains successful and knocks J. Lo and her ilk tough. – Christina Milian –cough– off the pop charts.

COURTESY SHAKIRA.COM

Shakira would have made it to the Smooth List on page 5, but she's a woman.

"You're on the ride, you might as well open your eyes." – Jessica Riddel

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY

T-Shirts & PRINTING

Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters

Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166

Yo! Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5

BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!

All Printing Needs

- Stadium Cups
- T-Shirts for fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events

YOUR ART HERE

MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

LSU "d" prepares for Vols

By Chris Gibson
The Reveille (Louisiana State U.)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, La. – The Tiger defense was just beat up.

Beat up by the national and local media.

Beat up by Rex Grossman's arm and the hands of Iabar Gaffney and Kelley Washington.

And, they were trying to find an answer to their porous pass defense, which saw them ranked as one of the Nation's worst statistically.

After a close win against Kentucky, in which Wildcat quarterback Jared Lorenzen nearly topped the Tigers with two late touchdown passes, something needed to change.

And, something did change.

The following week, LSU's defense added an element that had been missing for most of the season: a pass rush. In turn, LSU registered three sacks in the contest and helped out a secondary that intercepted two Mississippi State quarterbacks three times en route to a 42-0 win.

The Tigers have 10 sacks in their last four games and 19 for the season, which ranks in the middle of the SEC pack.

Defensive end Kyle Kipps said the defensive unit discussed getting more pressure on opposing quarterbacks before their impressive win over State. Kipps also said a reason for the improving defense is grasping the defensive system better.

"We have to get pressure," Kipps said. "It's not really an adjustment we made; we made it a point to get pressure [before the State game]. We don't do as many plays in practice. Practice goes smoother. Being around the system long enough, we've gotten a lot more comfortable."

Middle linebacker Trev Faulk said the team, and specifically the defensive group, is playing looser and not playing with pressure as it did earlier in the season.

"Right now, we're just loose," Faulk said. "We just have the attitude if someone messes up, 'Oh well, we'll get it back and make a play.' We're joking in pre-game. We're just out there trying to have fun and enjoy each other. We're playing better."

Head coach Nick Saban said the defensive unit has been playing much better. He said the defensive unit as a whole, and not just the secondary, has been playing the pass much better.

"Philosophically, we had to change the style we played with," Saban said. "I think that our players have done a better job of executing. I think the defensive unit has gotten better against the pass."

And so the Tigers will take their improving pass rush, looser attitude and improving secondary to the Georgia Dome in Atlanta to take on the Southeastern Conference's Eastern Division Champion Tennessee on Saturday night.

That means the Tigers will have to take on Tennessee running back Travis Stephens, who scorched Florida last week for 226 yards on 19 carries and two touchdowns.

It also means the Tiger secondary must come face-to-face with Tennessee receiver Kelley Washington, who single-handedly gave Saban and his defenders fits with his 11 receptions for 256 yards and one long touchdown in the Vols early-season win over the Tigers.

But this time, Tennessee has an additional weapon in receiver Donte' Stallworth, allowing the Volunteers to have a receiving double threat.

Saban said the Volunteers would present the Tigers with a tough challenge on Saturday.

"To run the ball like they did against Florida, this is going to be a very difficult game," Saban said. "Tennessee basically beats you with execution. Getting Stallworth back [has made] Clausen become a more consistent quarterback."

■ hoop

continued from page 10

competitiveness come out," O'Brien said.

As for the competition, Arkansas-Little Rock (2-5) has also struggled in the 2001-02 campaign, despite the fact that it is coming off a recent 67-39 crushing of Mississippi Valley State. However, considering that the Trojans went 6-22 (0-16 in conference) a year ago, it is obvious that they have shown some signs of improvement.

Freshman guard Darci Cassidy has been the main reason for this, and has totaled 11.6 ppg, including a career-high 23 in her most recent outing. Much like the Minutewomen, though, Arkansas-Little Rock has had a tendency to turn the ball over, and has done so a miserable 25.6 times a contest.

For Memphis (3-4), Shannon Hamp is its leading scorer (16.2 ppg) and has also been a main contributor off the glass (6.2 rpg). Princess Swilley has also been explosive at times, totaling 10.2 points a game.

Tip off for the game against the Trojans is tonight at 7 p.m. while the contest with the Tigers takes place on Sunday afternoon at 3 p.m.

■ football

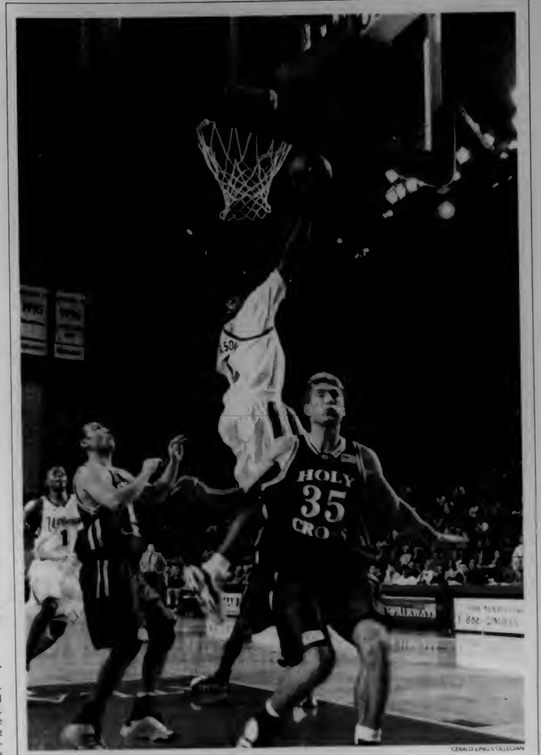
continued from page 10

week. Although the Buffaloes might not be the most deserving team, they certainly should have precedence over the Huskers.



Oregon is another team that could have a major gripe should Nebraska earn the trip to the Rose Bowl. The Ducks are third in both polls, ahead of both NU and CU, and won the Pac-10. With its only loss coming at the hands of a tough Stanford team, the Ducks definitely should not be overlooked, despite a somewhat weak schedule strength. However, this schedule strength is derived by one of those pesky computers; the Pac-10 is widely regarded as one of the toughest conferences in college football.

One team that will be overlooked unfortunately will be Brigham Young. Despite finishing with an undefeated season (should they win at Hawaii this weekend) and the second most productive offense in the nation, BYU will not even get a chance to play in a BCS bowl, let alone the national championship. The Cougars put up more than 40 points in nine of their 12 games and 50 points in six of 12. Sadly, BYU runs into the same problems that mid-major teams in college basketball face: no one wants to face them for fear of it being a "bad loss." The Cougars do play in a rather weak conference (Mountain West), but did as much as they could with their schedule. Is it fair that a school automatically gets eliminated from contention just because of a weak schedule, despite how well it plays?

The worst part about the Nebraska scenario is that the team had to do NOTHING to get into its current position. After being destroyed by Colorado, the Huskers went home to Lincoln to sit on their thumbs, supposedly completely out of the national championship picture. That is, until the scourge of upsets started going down, first with Oklahoma, and then Florida and Texas. Suddenly, the Cornhuskers were vaulted back into the picture, after doing nothing but changing channels. It seems ridiculous to reward a team for sitting, especially considering the outputs of the Ducks, Buffs and Cougars over the last couple weeks.

This simply proves the need for a playoff in college football. Every single other sport, college and pro (including I-AA, Div. II and Div. III college football), uses a playoff system to crown a champion. If a team wants to win a championship, they should have to earn it, not just be randomly picked by a bunch of inanimate objects. Until we get rid of the garbage that is the BCS, there will be too many teams continuing to get the shaft.

Andy Vogt is a Collegian Columnist.

COURTESY LONG'S COLLEGIAN

Flying high

The Minutemen have gotten off to a 4-1 start, in part because of the outstanding play of sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson.

TO WRITE FOR COLLEGIAN SPORTS CALL 545-0719 OR COME DOWN TO THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT, ROOM 116.

Time is your most precious resource...
Invisible Typist™
is your most valuable tool...
Instantly retype previously typed words
Automatically correct spelling errors as you type
Transform your abbreviations into words or phrases
Works invisibly with any Windows® 95/98/Me/2000 application
Great for word processing, e-mail, chat, instant messaging...
Invisible Typist
Download it now from www.Quolux.com ~ Only $9.95
Quolux™ ~ Illuminators of Cyberspace
Quolux and Invisible Typist are trademarks of Quolux, Inc
Windows is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

Zanna has it...
Sweater Dusters

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

UMass HOCKEY
FRIDAY NIGHT
THE MASS ATTACK
vs.
#7 Ranked
BOSTON UNIVERSITY TERRIERS

7:00 pm
Mullins Center
FREE STUDENT TICKETS!
For more information call 545-0810
GET YOUR TICKETS @ Mullins Center Campus Center Curry Hicks Cage

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Free Tickets to Picasso Commuter Area Government is giving away 100 free tickets to the Umass Theater Guild show Picasso at the Lapin Asile Dec. 6-8 at the Student Union Ballroom. Just mention this ad when you set your ticket at Tix Unlimited in the Student Union.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Preparing New Years Resolutions? Enroll in a new 3-credit course (Excscil97A-Physical Activity, health, & Fitness) this spring to help you adopt a healthier, more productive lifestyle. Questions? Contact murso@excsci.umass.edu

New Brothers! The Brothers of Delta Upsilon would like to congratulate the Alpha Phi pledge Class upon their initiation to our fraternity: John Albert, Al Allston, Michael Fisher, Dan Fraher, Josh Hackett, Colin Marsetta, Larry McMahon JR, Can Neuyen, Chris Phillian, Frank Piccinnini, Patrick Sisk, Andy Sucharewicz, Mathew Tarselli, and Eddie Wells Dikaia Upotheka, Justice Our Foundation

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in rushing next semester? Come help the sisters of alpha Chi Omega decorate candygrams and see what we're all about. Thursday, December 13 at 6pm. Call 549-8459 if you have any questions

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom Apt in Boulders; bath & full kitchen sublet Jan 1/May 31. Cheap rent! Call quick 253-0915 or 695-3680 ask for Adam

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline great location. Available Jan 1. call Adrena 413-397-0978

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'93 Ford Taurus GL Sedan, auto transmission, front wheel drive, 58.300 miles, AC, excellent tires, power steering/windows/door locks, $3,500, 253-7026

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K Great Condition $6500 413-256-1989

'88 Ford CrownVic Wagon 130K mi, good condition except transmission, runs well $2000 w/ new transmission, $1500 w/out. 413-665-6832

'92 Toyota Tercel great dependable transportation, 4 speed low miles 1,800 or B.O. Call Josy 253-5149

1987 Subaru runs good 142K $250 or B.O call 549-7816

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800. call 586-1521

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser. com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser. com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

www.FluidVisions. com

EMPLOYMENT

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

Software Sales/Telemarketing for economic forecasting and policy analysis firm. Part-time. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Japanese Speaking candidates for software firm. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel. M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

FOR SALE

Sega Dreamcast Game System plus games + attachments. $450.00 or O.B.O. 548-9430

FOR SALE

For sale Twin bed & frame $70. Fan w/ remote $20. Call 256-3951

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

TV For Sale. 19" with remote control. Bought 2 months ago. $100. call 546-0978..

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Bedroom available in Hobart Lane to be shared by 2 girls. Rent neg 549-9192

Furnished Room all inclusive. Price nego. Available now. 253-5066 or 218-7896

Bedroom with own bathroom available call 253-8915 for details

Room Available for Jan. 1st. walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.intercampus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpring breakGirl.com

WANTED

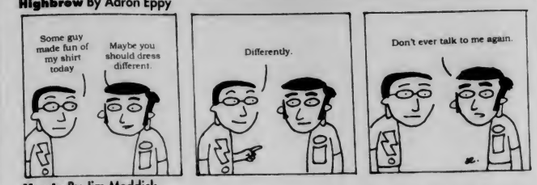
Wanted Models for art classes. Experience preferred. Holyoke Community College. Contact Frank Cressotti. 413-552-2489.

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

0 • HSCN Bulletin Board
2 • CBS 3 Hartford
4 • CBS 4 Boston
5 • ABC 40 Springfield
6 • PBS 57 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 20 Hartford
9 • HSCN New Movie Channel
10 • NBC 30 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • PBS 24 Hartford
13 • NBC 29 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 • WB 59 New Haven
17 • HSPN
18 • UPN 9
19 • UVETV (Boston Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Govt. to Govt.
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • CNN Headline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • USA
27 • TBS
28 • TNT
29 • E!
30 • Sci-Fi
31 • Discovery
32 • Nesn
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel



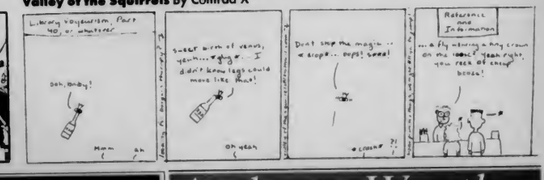
Got Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Got Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Monty By Jim Meddick

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

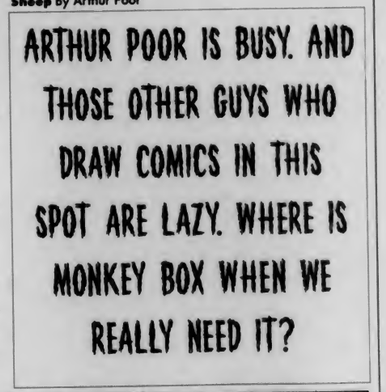
Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"We will always remember how they died for liberty, let's remember Pearl Harbor."

–Sammy Kay and Don Reid "Let's Remember Pearl Harbor"



Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 26	HIGH: 40 LOW: 25	HIGH: 38 LOW: 24

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You won't find yourself waiting around too much today; be prepared to swing into action early on – and to keep it up all day long.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Now is no time to neglect your home in any way. Keep things neat and tidy, and don't forget to make those changes and improvements you've planned.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care that you're not living too much in your head at this time. Trust something that you're not likely to forget. Take care you don't get burnt out.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – What begins with excitement is likely to develop quickly today into something that you're not likely to forget.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – What you need to know now is spend some time fine-tuning; the major push is over, now it's time once again to concentrate on the details.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have reason to regret a recent decision today, but before long you'll realize that you are indeed on the right road.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You needn't take things quite so seriously today – and yet you yourself will surely be taken seriously as you wish, nonetheless.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't lose sight of things you most want to attain. It may mean you have to go without something in order to acquire something else.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone close to you is likely to wan to get even closer today, and the responses he or she gets from you are likely to surprise both of you!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The more unusual it is, the more you're going to like it – whether at the workplace or at home. You may want someone else to call the shots.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The unlikely may well prove likely today – and vise versa. You may have to enter a new realm of activity today in order to address certain issues.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may come in contact with someone who knows how to make sense of issues you've found difficult or even impenetrable. Try joining forces.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Roast Turkey

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

Onion Quiche (vegetarian) (W Basics)

DINNER

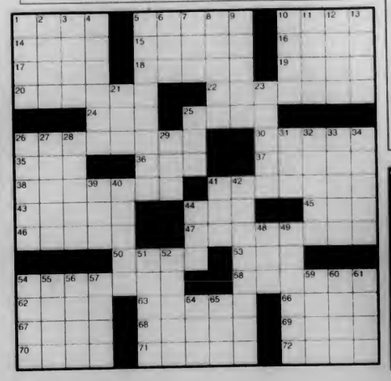
Shrimp & Scallop Creole

Veal Madeline

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Garden Chili (vegan)

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E HAMPTON 413 584 8764
E LONGMEADOW 413 781 5942



ACROSS
1 Extra
5 Walked in the ocean
10 Confess
14 "Ranger —" magazine
15 Zoo attraction
16 Grant, as land
17 Earthenware pot
18 Consumed
19 Use the post office
20 Radio noise
22 Pranced on the runway
24 Lodge member
25 Bronte heroine
26 Snow vehicles
30 Move smoothly
35 NYC's Madison, e.g.
36 Street in Paris
37 Was unwell
38 Setback
41 Observing Yom Kippur
43 Payola
44 Placed
45 Red — rose
46 Expensive
47 Unwelcome visitor
50 Encourage
53 Purpose
54 Gin-flavoring berry
58 Office machine
62 Very dry
63 Trust
66 Capri, for one
67 Low-lying area
68 Murphy of films
69 Police bust
70 Pub brews
71 Units for 58 Across
72 — out: scraped by with

DOWN
1 Old hands
2 Jaunty tune
3 Bruins' sch.
4 Uses the rink
5 They raze buildings
6 "So!"
7 Morse signal
8 Foe
9 Benefactor
10 Highest point
11 Wiener schnitzel base
12 Garfield's pal
13 Fuse together
21 Sick
23 Painter of ballerinas
25 Flight dir.
26 Pointed remarks
27 Plain as day
28 Contradict
29 Expected
31 Burning
32 Homeric epic
33 Tightly packed
34 Poe's first name
39 Actor Vigoda
40 Enliven
41 Pleasure
42 Embassy staffers
44 Mom's dessert?
46 — Grande
48 Ballpark official
51 Consult one's notes
52 Mark
54 Coffee, slangily
55 — River of Asia
56 Cairo's river
57 Dangerous March date
59 Meryl, in "Out of Africa"
60 Writer Wiesel
61 "Sanford and Son" name
64 Bone's st.
65 Scrooge and Tiny —

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	P	A	N		D	A	U	B		H	E	L M
A	L	M	A		R	U	S	E		O	N	I O N
G	O	B	I		A	G	E	E		S	T	A R E
S	T	O	R	A	G	E		R	E	T	I	N A S
			O	D	O	R		D	E	C	A	L S
R	I	B	B	O	N		A	N	G	L	E
A	D	L	I	B		T	I	D	E		Z	I P
F	E	E		E	A	R	M	A	R	K		I N A
T	A	W		L	E	E	K		H	I	N	T S
			F	L	O	Y	D		M	A	S	C O T
A	T	T	A	I	N		A	I	N	T
P	A	R	T	N	E	R		B	A	S	H	F U L
S	L	A	T	E		U	T	E	S		M	I L E
E	L	D	E	R		M	A	A	M		U	R N S
Y	E	N	S		P	U	M	A		S	E	A T

11-6-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Ken Campbell
Photo Technician	Martha Olive
Copy Editor	Matt Brady
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	Alicia Upano

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass, BC continue intrastate rivalry

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Micah Brand and his 13.6 points per game will travel across the state to compete against Boston College this Saturday.

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

They don't get any bigger than this.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team travels to the state capital on Saturday night for the seventh annual Commonwealth Classic against the 15th-ranked Boston College Eagles at the sold out Conte Forum. The Minutemen will be looking to win their sixth unofficial state title as well as to show that Tuesday night's loss to Holy Cross was an aberration. In their last game the Minutemen (4-1) were defeated for the first time under new Head Coach Steve Lappas, dropping an ugly 67-56 decision to the Crusaders.

"Everybody's ready to go, everybody understands that we shouldn't have lost on Tuesday but we did and there's nothing you can do about it," sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson said. "But we're not talking about Holy Cross anymore – we know what we have to do and everybody's ready to go."

Boston College (6-0) comes into the game as winner of its last 10 regular season contests and 22 straight at the Conte Forum. The last time the Eagles fell at home was all the way back on Feb. 23, 2000 in head coach Al Skinner's third season at the Heights, when they dropped a 70-60 contest to Pittsburgh. Two of those 22 victories came at the expense of Lappas and his Villanova Wildcat squad. This will be the 20th meeting with B.C. for Lappas, as he comes in with an 11-8 all-time record against the Eagles.

Saturday's game will be a homecoming of sorts for three Minutemen who hail from the Boston area. Senior guard Shannon Crooks as well as sophomores Anderson and Raheim Lamb all grew up in Beantown, and will be all that more fired up to take on the Eagles in front of their friends and family.

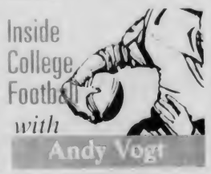
"That's a big game. I live five minutes away from there, all my family is going to be at the game," Lamb said. "I'm just going to be up and ready to play."

In order to knock off the Eagles and make it a happy homecoming for that trio, UMass will need to shut down one of the nation's best backcourts in junior Troy Bell and sophomore Ryan Sidney. Bell, a preseason All-American, has not missed a step since returning to the B.C. lineup for its season opener back on Nov. 18 against Boston University. After missing all of the preseason while recovering from knee surgery, Bell has come on strong, averaging 20.5 points per contest, good enough for second on the squad.

Bell's partner in crime, Sidney, has gone from one of the Big East's best bench players to one of the conference's best players, period. After averaging 9.4 points per game last year as a freshman, Sidney has exploded out of the gates in 2001-02, leading the Eagles in scoring at 21.3 per game as well as rebounds, grabbing 10 per contest. Last Saturday Sidney dropped a career-high 29 points and grabbed a career-high 15 rebounds in B.C.'s 83-74 come-from-behind win over the Michigan Wolverines. However, Sidney suffered a fractured jaw yesterday at practice and will need to have his jaw wired. Despite the injury, his playing status for Saturday is uncertain.

"Part of [shutting down the B.C. backcourt] will be not turning the ball over. That will help stop them if they're not stealing the ball and going in transition," Lappas said. "If we can make it more of a half court game, that will help us."

UMass' backcourt of Crooks and Anderson will be given the task of shutting down these two, but they will not be alone out there. If either Bell or Sidney is successful at penetrating into the lane, they will then find Kitwana Rhymer waiting there for them. Rhymer has blocked at least two shots in each of the Minutemen's five games this season and tied a career-high on Tuesday with six rejections against Holy Cross.



However, Rhymer twisted a knee in practice yesterday and while he will play, it is unclear as to whether or not he will be at 100 percent. If he isn't, look for Lappas to switch up his defensive sets more than he customarily would.

"They're a team that you have to use a little bit of everything [defensively to beat]," Lappas said.

At the other end of the floor, the Minutemen will look to exploit the inexperience of Eagle center Nate Doornekamp. The seven-foot freshman from Canada will be put to the test by UMass' big man trio of Rhymer, Micah Brand and Eric Williams. Those three will need to manage more than the 25 points and 15 rebounds that they tallied against Holy Cross if the Maroon and White wants to beat B.C.

PLAYER	MIN	AVG	REBOUNDS	ASSISTS	POINTS
30 CROOKS, Shannon	176	35.2	3.4	3.8	15.0
40 BRAND, Micah	148	29.8	4.8	1.4	13.6
33 RHYMER, Kitwana	135	27.0	5.6	1.0	8.0
12 ANDERSON, Anthony	162	32.4	4.4	4.2	7.8
01 JENKINS, Willie	96	19.2	4.6	2.0	6.2
34 LAMB, Raheim	95	19.0	3.0	0.4	5.4
21 WILLIAMS, Eric	87	17.4	4.2	0.4	5.4
24 PUGH, Jameel	4	4.0	1.0	0.0	2.0
11 WILSON, Kyle	66	13.2	1.0	2.2	1.2
03 BLIZZARD, Ronell	30	7.5	1.5	0.4	1.0

Computer proves to be Nebraska's 12th man

With the college football season winding down for the second straight year the national championship might hinge on the biggest travesty in sports today – the Bowl Championship Series. More than ever this year it is glaringly evident that the NCAA needs to implement a playoff system. Because right now the winner is not decided on the field but rather by a plethora of computers that weigh about as much as Hegel. football as Quincy Jhabeth.

Of course, if Tennessee defeats LSU in this weekend's SEC Championship this will be an irrelevant discussion. After drowning Florida in the Swamp last week for their first win in Gainesville in 30 years, and destroying Vanderbilt the week before, the Volunteers have proven over the last few weeks to be well deserving of a trip to Pasadena to tackle the Miami Hurricanes. Should Tennessee lose, however, then the BCS again will show flaws at the worst time possible.

Last year, despite finishing second in both the AP and coaches' poll, Miami was delegated to the Sugar Bowl, while Florida State, third in both polls, played for the National Championship. The Seminoles proceeded to embarrass themselves in a game in which their offense scored exactly zero points in a 15-2 rout that wasn't nearly as close as the score suggests. The Sooners smothered FSU, which left many critics questioning the merits of the BCS.

A Volunteers loss would resurrect all of these criticisms. Nebraska would likely slip into the Rose Bowl against the Canes, even though the Cornhuskers are far less deserving than several other teams in the mix, including Oregon and Colorado. Nebraska, despite having one loss, played a far easier schedule than Colorado, and could not even win its own division. Yet alone the Big 12 Conference. The Huskers did have a quality win on the road against Oklahoma, but spent the rest of the year beating up on Big 12 patsies such as Kansas and non-conference cupcakes like Troy State.

Colorado, meanwhile, has proven to be one of the strongest teams in the nation over the last few weeks after a 26-point demolition of Nebraska and after running over Texas in the Big 12 Championship. Although the Buffaloes have two losses, one was to a very good Fresno State team in the opening week, and one came at the hands of the Longhorns, who Colorado defeated last

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

Bible belt holds answers to hoop's prayers

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

The North has not been that kind to the Massachusetts women's basketball team.

With five of its first six contests taking place above the Mason-Dixon line, the Minutewomen have struggled to a 1-5 out-of-conference record, including a recent 68-51 blowout at the hands of Vermont.

Now, they will try and change their luck this upcoming weekend when they travel to the heart of the south in order to compete against Arkansas-Little Rock and Memphis.

Because of its early season struggles, these games have become all the more important, and could make or break the Maroon and White's season. Two losses would be devastating to the team's psyche and would kill basically any chance of an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament, despite the fact that the season is so young.

Two wins, however, could go a long way toward turning UMass in a positive direction.

So far, the problems with the Minutewomen have all lain on the offensive end, as they have averaged a mere 51.3 points a contest. Turnovers and foul shooting have especially killed them, with a woeful 23.2 miscues a game to along with an absolutely atrocious .474 free throw percentage not doing much to help the cause.

Jen Butler has been the main catalyst for poor shooting from the line (29 percent) despite the fact that she leads the team in both scoring (11.8 ppg) and rebounding (10.8 rpg).

In her team's 56-49 loss to James Madison, the junior center's foul shooting was especially hideous, firing seven bricks from the stripe without connecting on a single one.

Butler, however, is not the only one having offensive difficulties, and is in fact the only player wearing maroon and white that is averaging double digits.

As for the positives, freshman Katie Nelson has been a steady, if not spectacular, contributor at the point, and has generally been a calming influence on her team. She has even replaced a lot of what UMass lost with the graduation of Kathy Coyner, last season's leader in points scored and assists.

"[Nelson] has done a great job of picking things up quickly," Maroon and White Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "Her instinct for the game is probably even better than Kathy ever had."

Nekole Smith, who missed all of last year to a knee injury, has also shown some signs of breaking out of her early season slump. The junior forward totaled 15 points in Sunday's game against Vermont, and has picked her scoring average up to 7.7 ppg, good enough for third on the team.

"Nicole felt comfortable for the first time in a long time [against the Catamounts] and she finally let her

Turn to HOOP, page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Katie Nelson and the rest of the women's hoop team will attempt to drive by Arkansas Little-Rock and Memphis this weekend.

Turn to Arts for our swingin' review of Ocean's Eleven.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass men's basketball lost to BC 80-78. Read about it Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 64 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, December 10, 2001

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Snow ball attack
Snow ball fights were a common sight outside the dormitories.

Faculty Senate closing year

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate will conclude the semester's agenda by hearing from Interim Chancellor Marcellene Williams, as well as a series of councils and committees which will be presenting special reports.

Williams will address the Senate with her comments and concerns for the fiscal year of 2002.

In addition to hearing from Interim Chancellor Williams, the Senate will hear the Annual Report of the Status of Women Council, decide on whether or not to approve 11 new undergraduate courses, hear new business concerning the recently established Ad Hoc Committee and hear from the Foreign and International Studies Council.

The Status of Women Council is co-chaired by Micheline Asselsin of the Nursing College and Nancy Patteson of the Education department. The council's job is to make recommendations concerning the status of women on campus in areas such as recruitment, promotion, salaries, tenure, day-care, admissions and financial aid. In 2000 the Council made a Take Our Daughters to Work Day possible at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Last spring, the council supported and pushed for enhanced benefits for families on campus regardless of gender, race or sexual orientation. Thursday, the Senate will hear its report on what it has focused this past year's efforts on and what is in the works for the upcoming year.

The Academic Matters Council has asked the Senate to approve 11 more courses for the 2001-2002 school year. The 11 courses are all undergraduate courses; Human Physiology, Diets, Supplements and Athletic Performance under the Exercise and Science Department, Infectious Disease and Defense from Micro Biology, Pharmacology in Nursing II, Community Health Nursing IIB: Restorative Nursing, Professional Code, Community Health Nursing IIIA Community, Clinical Practicum IIIA: Community Based Care, Clinical Practicum IIIB: Restorative Nursing, Clinical Practicum IVA: Community Intervention and Clinical Practice IVB: Internship from the School of Nursing. Earlier this year the Senate approved nine new undergraduate courses and four graduate courses for next year.

New business on the Senate's agenda is a special report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Admissions Practices and Minority Recruitment concerning the recruitment of Asian, Latino, African and Native American (ALANA) undergraduates. The Ad Hoc committee is advising that the Senate recommend to the administration that it continue to adjust its admissions policies and procedures in order to maintain the present level of ALANA students in each entering class. In addition, the committee will be charged with reviewing the current undergraduate admissions with special attention to the need for promoting campus diversity through yield enhancement. Currently, U.S. News reports that 83 percent of UMass-Amherst students categorize themselves as white, while five percent are African-American, seven percent are Hispanic and two percent are international.

The Senate will also hear a special report from the General Education Council concerning the creation of "Social and Cultural Diversity" courses and a special report of the Rules Committee concerning the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee on Sustainability for a term of three years.

The General Education Council reviews proposals for the general education curriculum and courses required for all undergraduate students, advising both the Faculty Senate's course approvals and the administration. The council is co-chaired by Professor Ralph Faulkingham of the Anthropology department and Professor Richard Aschbrook from the School of Management.

The special report by the Foreign and International Studies Council will center on international agreements between UMass and various international universities. Examples of these agreements are the Program agreement between the Universite Paris Dauphine and UMass, a graduate student agreement between Doshisha Women's College of Liberal Arts and UMass, an agreement for exchange and cooperation between the University of Cape Town, South Africa and UMass and a basic agreement for scientific and educational cooperation between Victoria University of Wellington and UMass. The Senate will hear about each of these proposed agreements and approve or dismiss them.

The final meeting of the Senate for 2001 will be held in room 227 of Herter Hall on Thursday, Dec. 13 at 3:30 p.m.

Tibet event tonight

In an effort to inform the public of the anniversary of International Human Rights Day and the culture of the Tibetans, Students for a Free Tibet (SFT), a registered student organization, will have a Culture and Dance performance on Dec. 10 at 7 p.m.

The event will also commemorate the Dalai Lama, the Tibetan spiritual and political leader who received the Novel Peace Prize in 1989.

Ngawang Choephel, Middlebury College and Fulbright student, will also be commemorated at the event. Choephel was imprisoned in Tibet after the government of the People's Republic of China charged him with spying and engaging in 'splittist' activity, and sentenced him to 18 years imprisonment. Choephel was documenting traditional music through film.

Choephel's Middlebury advisor, Jay Pillay, is now a professor at Hampshire College and will be speaking at the event, along with a brief video.

Food and beverages will be provided by People's Market.

Several events leading up to the Dec. 10 performance have been held. Street theater in front of the Student Union and a banner of Choephel were two of the steps taken by SFT members to draw attention to their cause, as well as a student gagged, handcuffed, silent and sitting in a chair. This resembles what Choephel is currently facing in prison.

Student for a Free Tibet believe that "in order to resolve the situation in Tibet, there must be negotiation without preconditions between His Holiness the Dalai Lama and the Chinese Leadership. Only through substantive dialogue can meaningful progress be made on this critical issue," according to their literature.

The nation of Tibet was invaded by China in 1949, the Dalai Lama fled in 1959 and established the Tibetan Government-In-Exile in Dharamsala, India. Over 120,000 other Tibetans have since followed their leader to the area.

-Catherine Turner

Exercise Science has new offering

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Getting into Exercise Science classes will be made much easier this coming semester with the addition of a new course to the department's slate.

Exercise Science 197A, Physical Activity, Health & Fitness is a new course that will be offered by the department this coming spring and will be taught by Professor Pricilla Clarkson.

According to Clarkson's description of the course, it will allow students away from home for the first time to develop a healthy way of living.

"Adopting a healthy lifestyle during the first years away at college is a difficult task for many students," the description states. "Yet, getting enough exercise is important in maintaining your health and reducing stress, which will make you feel and do better."

This class is intended to give students the necessary information in order for them to go on to lead a healthy and active lifestyle.

Lectures and laboratory exercises will enable students to progress from a basic understanding of physical activity to create an individualized program designed to meet personal goals and healthy living pursuits.

The course will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 2:30-3:45. The Tuesday class will be held in a traditional lecture format, focusing on topics such as healthy eating, creating a reasonable exercise program, different ways to deal with stress and intervention for an overall healthy lifestyle.

Thursday classes will be more interactive and will allow students to design their own exercise programs and resistance levels, and to learn techniques for body composition assessment. Other things on the list for possible class activities include physical activity readiness, target heart rate zone training, blood pressure assessment and how to improve health and fitness. The class will include two exams, a goal achievement project and a journal.

The description explains that the class was intended for students who wanted to improve their lifestyle and become healthier.

"Many students, especially freshman, find it difficult to maintain a healthy lifestyle while away at college. From improper food choices to frequent social events involving alcohol and drugs, optimal health become a thing of the past," the description states. "While the intentions of this course are not to abolish any and all unhealthy practices, it should help to improve the lifestyle of students now and for the future."

This course is three credits and open to all students.

Afghanistan city holding out; fighting fierce near mountains

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The hunt for Osama bin Laden and other al Qaeda leaders continues in Afghanistan, and U.S. officials are cautioning the public that while the conflict seems to be ending, it isn't over yet.

The fighting is concentrating around the city of Kandahar and the mountainous eastern region of Tora Bora, where bin Laden is rumored to be hiding. Small regions of fighting in other areas of the country have appeared recently as well.

"The only thing that's changed really in the last day or so has been what's taking place in Kandahar. In the north and the west, the what we used to call oppositon forces, and I suppose we should for a few more days, are going after pockets of Taliban and that is somewhat new," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld told The Washington Post. "They're trying to reduce the dangers to humanitarian assistance and they're trying to reduce the risk to everybody, actually, by having these folks roaming around with weapons. And they're mostly Afghan Taliban as opposed to al Qaeda."

Fighting, Rumsfeld said, is happening in "three or four locations" of Afghanistan.

"[In] Jalalabad to the border area east of Kabul is an effort on the ground by Afghan forces with, in some cases U.S. Special Forces with them, to try to systematically work their way through areas that they think al Qaeda are located in, and they are finding them," Rumsfeld told the Post. "It's working well. It's dangerous and it's a messy business, but they're at it."

The city of Kandahar has seen fierce fighting and mixed reports of victory and surrenders. Rumsfeld said, leave the scene confusing and dangerous.

"The Kandahar situation is a bit like a Wild West show. It is very untidy. There are all kinds of reports, some of which may be true, many of which probably aren't, and a lot of speculation about what's happening," Rumsfeld told the Post. "Some Taliban are turning in weapons, others are not. There's a good deal of confusion about what might happen prospectively."

Rumsfeld said that fighters were trying to avoid the type of uprising seen last month at Mazar-e Sharif, where an American was killed.

"I think it's a very dangerous situation in the sense that you saw what happened up in Mazar where people kept their weapons, killed people, started a major firefight, and a lot of people got killed. That is entirely possible here in Kandahar," Rumsfeld told the Post. "I suppose it will be opposition forces as well as United States forces obviously – that are aware of what happened up in Mazar and one would think they'd be a good deal more careful about checking people. But there are a lot of Taliban and al Qaeda people inside of Kandahar."

General Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told CBS's "Face the Nation" about the Taliban's control of Kandahar.

"There are reports that the Taliban control there has broken down. We think it has to a great extent, but there is still a lot of confusion and there probably will be for several days to come," Myers said on the Sunday morning show. "It's that – that is, it's not over there. There is still a substantial number of Taliban fighters there, to include foreign fighters fighting for the Taliban.

"And our – our main purpose right now, our main goal is to ensure that any of the foreign fighters or Taliban that try to escape, that we can interdict them and capture those we want and interrogate them and so forth," Myers added. "And that's one of the main missions that our U.S. Marines have that are in the vicinity of Kandahar right now."

Myers also said Sunday that the United States has an idea where bin Laden is.

"We're still on the hunt for all the al Qaeda leadership. And [bin Laden] is part of that, but not the only part of that," Myers told Fox's "Sunday Morning." "In the hunt up there, we think we know in general where he is. Can't be sure, but we think we know."

And the net is closing, Myers said.

"And we've got – we're approaching it from a couple of different directions. One is we've got oppositon folks that are prosecuting the war against the al Qaeda up there in the hills. The fighting has been very, very intense," Myers told Fox.

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Let it snow, let it snow, let it snow!
The first snow left a white dusting all over campus.

International Briefs

By Arjun Mahalingam and Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

Belgium – North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and Russian foreign ministers met during the two-day ministerial meeting held on Dec. 6 and 7 to discuss international terrorism. This was the first meeting of foreign ministers since September.

NATO and Russia reached a significant agreement in the fight against terrorism and other major issues.

"Today we commit ourselves to forge a new relationship between NATO Allies and Russia," the agreement stated. "We have decided to give impetus and substance to our partnership, with the goal of creating a new council bringing together NATO member states and Russia to identify and pursue opportunities for joint action."

Russian foreign minister Igor Ivanov said that the agreement was a "profound change" in the relationship between NATO countries and Russia.

It was also issued in the joint statement that collaboration would be increased on issues of crisis management, non-proliferation, theatre missile defense and civil emergencies.

NATO also issued a "package for Alliance measures" for the Prague summit in 2002, in support of the fight against terrorism.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell thanked NATO allies for their support, although in a press conference on Dec. 6, Powell also told the press that although Russia and NATO strengthened ties, Russia would not be joining NATO. Ivanov also said that Russia "has no interest in queuing up for membership." The organization currently has 19 members.

NATO ministers also discussed the Balkan situation at a NATO-European council (EU) meeting on Dec. 6. The main basis of discussion in these talks was terrorism and the NATO-EU co-operation in the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia. 27 non-NATO foreign ministers met with NATO foreign ministers to review the prevailing situation and to agree to review their partnership next year.

Japan – Gross domestic product (GDP) has turned out negative for a second quarter, throwing Japan's economy into a recession. It has joined the United States and Germany, which are also threatened by recessions.

Since the previous quarter months from April through June, the GDP dropped by 0.5 percent in the latest quarter, from July through September. This totals to an annual decline of 2.2 percent.

Junichiro Koizumi, Japan's prime minister, is planning to adopt new policies that will steer Japan's economy in the right direction.

"We're taking steps," Koizumi, said. "Structural reform is the best policy."

As Japan's economy is contracting, global concerns are rising.

The U.S. National Bureau of Economic Research confirmed the United States' situation of a recession in March, and German officials also fear the circumstance.

"If the current situation continues, negative growth is inevitable," trade minister Takeo Hiramuna said.

The third quarter also does not look good according to Economy Minister Heizo Takenaka, who believes that the months from October through December will be harsh conditions as well.

The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) predicted Japan's economy would shrink a full percent by next year.

The economy is lacking the cooperation of consumers who are unwilling to spend money while the value of goods is dropping.

"All factors on the demand side are annihilated," Banque Nationale de Paris (BNP Paribas) chief economist Ryutaro Kono said. "With the economy slowing, incomes are down so consumption is down."

There are still problems with a previous collapse of the stock market prices and land prices that the country has to deal with.

"The world economy is in a downturn so exports are down," Kono said. "Corporate profits are faltering so investments are down."

Unemployment, which is at its highest at 5 percent, also looms over the declining economy.

Brazil – Masked pirates killed Sir Robert Blake on Dec. 5 on his ship near Macapa, at the mouth of the Amazon. He died at the Macapa hospital an hour after he was stabbed.

The 53-year-old sailor won the America's Cup twice. He was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II and was on an ecological voyage in the Amazon when he was murdered. His original destination was the Orinoco River in Venezuela.

Two of Blake's crewmembers aboard the Seamaster were also injured in the fiasco.

Brazilian President Henrique Cardoso had given "express orders" that the pirates must be found and dealt with seriously and also hinted that Brazilian police were searching for the pirates in the remote Amazon jungle and waterways.

The pirates allegedly stole watches, cameras, a dinghy and one of the boat's engines.

New Zealand's ambassador to Brazil, Denise Almao, rushed to Macapa as soon as he heard of Sir Robert Blake's death. New Zealand's Prime Minister Helen Clark, who visited Blake on his ship in the Amazon last month, also paid tribute to him.

There were 10 crewmembers on the Seamaster when the pirates attacked. Blake had started an organization, Blakexpeditions, with a main aim of protecting aquatic life around the world.

Blake had also been appointed as special envoy of the United Nations (UN) environment program in July. He was the first New Zealander ever to be appointed to this post.

Klaus Toepfer, the executive director of the United Nations' environment program, expressed his condolence on Sir Blake's death.

"One of Sir Peter's special skills was to make the beauty of this planet and the environmental threats to it accessible to the scientist, the politician, business leaders and the 'mum and women' on the street," he said. "We are deeply saddened and shocked that the life of a person of so much ability, generosity and influence has been taken in this way. Our sympathy goes to his family and friends, and to the people of New Zealand."

Israel – Another suicide bomber injured 10 people in Northern Israel following a recent Israeli raid that killed four Palestinians.

Israelis then invaded independent Palestinian area to detain militants.

The recent Israeli raid occurred in Anabta and Ramin in the West Bank, where 25 militants were arrested.

Officials described the area as "a terrorist network in the villages."

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell continued to ask Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to stop the militants.

Sharon said he would drive stronger security operations in the West Bank and Gaza Strip after there was another suicide attack that left 10 Israelis dead.

"Our operations are yielding impressive results but we have not finished our action in light of what is happening. We might have to step up our activities," Sharon reported to an Israeli radio.

Palestinians argue that their occupation in these areas cause much of the violence and is an important factor.

"The burden is right now on Mr. Arafat to do more to get the violence down to zero," Powell said.

The second round of security talks were held in Tel Aviv, which U.S. representative Anthony Zinni supervised.

"They were very difficult talks and the Israelis were trying to dictate and give us orders. There was almost a fist fight and we were shouting at each other," a Palestinian official told Reuters.

While Palestinian officials want to see something done about the Israeli raids, Powell said that Arafat could do more to stop his militant activists from creating violence.

Iran – AIDS is now a growing concern in Iran, as an estimated number of more than 15,000 cases were reported, according to Deputy Health Minister, Dr. Ali Akbar Sayyari.

Being an Islamic country, which adheres to its Islamic values, the record number of AIDS patients has startled officials.

The number of AIDS cases has been rising in the past five years, and now they are confronted by an epidemic.

Sayyari said the practice of temporary marriages does not deter the spread of this disease. This practice, called the Sigha, allows men to have numerous temporary wives.

The prison director also blamed the use of dirty needles in jails by drug users, and warned officials to curb the growing numbers.

Doctors said that this is a serious problem and a serious campaign is needed to fix the predicament.

Briefs were compiled from CNN News, BBC News, www.nato.org, www.unep.org and www.bbc.com.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Davé Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gárczye Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nikki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

BMCP & UPC
Roc-A-Fella Records
SHOWCASE
DEC. 1
9PM-1AM
FEATURING:
ROC-A-FELLA FAMILY APPEARANCES BY:
FREEWAY
OSCHINO & SPARKS &
YOUNG GUNS
HOSTED BY:
HOT 93.7's DJ KG
$5 - FIVE COLLEGE
$10 - GENERAL ADMISSION
DOORS OPEN
@ 8:30PM
UMASS, AMHERST
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

Trustees to meet on budget issue

In Boston today, John Sheehan, the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association President, will stand in for Trustee Jon Laubinger at an emergency meeting of the UMass Board of Trustees.

In Africa, Laubinger will miss a meeting at which new budget a hastily gathered Board of Trustees will discuss cuts. The meeting was called Friday. Sheehan suspects that the Trustees will likely discuss proposed new student fees designed to offset the loss of state money.

"What Aaron [Saunders, Speaker of the SGA's Senate] and I would like to discuss is the budget, the cuts, where our priorities should be and, if new fees are going to be implemented. We want to ensure that students get a voice in where those fees are going," Sheehan said late Friday. "This is money from our parents' pockets and they wouldn't be happy to hear that nobody has say in where it's going."

Sheehan said that he wanted to beat the administration to the story of possible new fees, giving himself leverage should there be protracted negotiations over fees.

"We need to hammer the administration on this and they're going to be more apt to listen if students are angry," Sheehan said.

-Sam Wilkinson

A fedora costs 80 bucks. Write for News instead.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily Weekly/ Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

STUDENT TICKETS
UMass basketball VS CONNECTICUT HUSKIES
ESPN
Tuesday • DEC. 11TH • 9:00 pm
$5.00 each
WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER
THE BATTLE OF THE BORDER
THE BIGGEST BASKETBALL GAME OF THE YEAR!
TICKETS ONSALE NOW!
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-0810
GET YOUR TICKETS AT CAMPUS CENTER • THE CAGE • MULLINS CENTER

YOU WANT TO CHANGE THINGS.

TEACH FOR AMERICA IS THE NATIONAL CORPS THAT CALLS UPON OUTSTANDING AND DIVERSE RECENT COLLEGE GRADUATES TO COMMIT TWO YEARS TO TEACH IN URBAN AND RURAL PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND BECOME LIFELONG LEADERS IN ENSURING THAT ALL OF OUR NATION'S CHILDREN HAVE AN EQUAL CHANCE IN LIFE.
No previous education coursework required. Full teacher salary and benefits.
TEACHFORAMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

TO STUDENTS IN RESIDENCE HALLS:
BEFORE YOU LEAVE FOR THE HOLIDAYS!
UNCLE SAM SAYS: BE PATRIOTIC AND RECYCLE
PLACE FOOD (NON-PERISHABLE) AND CLOTHING (TIE SHOES TOGETHER) IN BINS LOCATED IN YOUR HALL LOBBY.
FOOD WILL BE DONATED TO LOCAL SOUP KITCHENS, AND CLOTHING TO GOODWILL
THANKS AND HAVE A GREAT WINTER BREAK!
THE OFFICE OF WASTE MANAGEMENT AND HOUSING RECYCLING.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Cheney's conspiracy
Don't cause suspicion

While America teeters closer and closer to recession, while Congressional Democrats and Republicans squabble with one and other about a fiscal stimulus package for the nation's ailing economy, Dick Cheney emerged from his recent hideaway only to confirm that Osama bin Laden is the primary suspect in the September 11 attacks.

Instead of doing anything to help Americans (offering to broker a deal between Republicans and Democrats for example), Cheney's public announcement seemed geared only to further the public relations war against bin Laden, a war that the Saudi terrorism tycoon had been losing before.

So we ask: why Dick, why?

Cheney's declaration came after he confirmed the existence of a crude videotape that reportedly confirms what most already believe: that bin Laden planned Sept. 11 attacks. Unfortunately, few besides Cheney have seen the tape. And the tape itself seems to be a mystery: few have watched the tape supposedly obtained by Americans in Afghanistan. Still unclear is where how Americans obtained the tape, who did the filming or if it will be released to the American public (Cheney sheepishly braced for allegations that the tape doesn't exist, saying that the Bush administration hasn't been eager to "give the guy any extra television time...").

Smacking of Nixon's claims that he would provide accurate transcripts of tapes from the Oval Office, Cheney seems hollow describing a tape that the American public likely won't be allowed to see. If the tape itself is so damning, why not show it to Americans and the world. Perhaps the tape would have non-believers accepting the probably inevitable truth: that bin Laden not only masterminded, but carried out, the most horrific terrorist attack in world history.

Of course, that's if the tape even exists.

Far be it from us to fan the flames of conspiracy theorists, but we have a hard time believe that the tape is out there unless the tape is shown. Unfortunately, like most of the damning evidence against bin Laden, common Americans won't have a chance to judge for themselves.

Instead of feeding Mel Gibson and X-Files fans across the nation with a yet another Roswell, JFK or Hoffa, Cheney should have quietly left a good thing alone.

After defeating Afghanistan's Taliban handily, after establishing a temporary government for the struggling Asian nation, after uniting the world against terrorism, there are few left in the world who truly believe that anyone but Osama bin Laden masterminded Sept.'s horrific attacks.

Cheney's declaration seems more like war mongering and propagandizing than it does the work of a responsible politician. Clearly fearful that America will turn against the war effort now that the Taliban has crumbled, Cheney's transparent attempts to fuel the fire are both unwarranted and unnecessary.

Information from the Associated Press via Yahoo.com was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

The Berkshires are dream like on account of the frosting:
And the nightmare skaters can be buried under snow

KEN CAMPBELL

It's snowing.

Finally. I'm so glad that the world will once again be rightly covered in a blanket of snow. At least, I hope it will be. I hope this isn't a snow tease, where it snows, sticks around till about Sunday morning, and then suddenly has second thoughts about abandoning its wife and kids and throws some twenties on the dresser, kisses UMass on the cheek murmuring "thanks, hahe. I'll call you," and takes off. We'll wait by the phone on Monday, looking around at all that grass and pavement and wondering when snow will call. But it won't.

Snow can be such a bastard at times.

But for now snow is here, and I can count on it to do one thing – significantly decrease the number of skateboarding morons on this campus.

Let's define a skateboarding moron, before I start getting letters from the non moron skateboarding community. Do you use your skateboard as a means of transportation? Do you use proper equipment and respect the rights of pedestrians? Do you conduct your attempts at tricks in a designated area?

If you have answered 'Yes' to these questions, you are a responsible skateboarder.

Most of the moron skaters seem to hang out in two places: the front of the Fine Arts Center and the Campus Center. Why these places? Because the morons know those are the two places on campus I go – past the FAC and to the Campus Center. They are always there – the twelve and up rejects of healthy society, desperately trying to flip their skateboards and then land on them again. Or they attempt to grind along the cement retaining wall near the Campus Center. Or they throw a large trash receptacle in the middle of a handicapped parking lot and try and jump over it.

I have yet to see any of them pull off a trick. Every time I walk by I hear the sounds of their follies, though: roll, roll, roll, roll, scrape, clatter, clatter. Or if it's a jump, delete the scrape noise. Here's the noise I want to hear: roll, roll, roll, roll, scrape, thud, clatter...siren.

The little rolling SOBs are destroying our campus. Look at the retaining wall outside the Campus Center, near Hasbrouck. Look at the Student Union Steps. That chipped, blackened edge. And it's only a matter of time before one of the little morons splits their head open. Of course, they'll blame UMass, even though there are clearly posted signs: Do Not Skate. Go build a place for yourselves, you miniature hellions. We built this city on rock 'n' roll. Sorry, went into a Paul Kantner thing for a second there. We built this college on learning, reading, writing: not flipping plywood like some sort of twisted, natics boy lumberjack contest.

> "But the snow...sweet, sweet snow. Quiet snow. Impossible to wheel in snow. This will save what little remains of my sanity."

Hey you! You hooded-sweatshirt and Sketchers wearing Tony Hawk wannabe – stop wrecking public property. You are not Blink-182 – get off the stairs.

But the snow...sweet, sweet snow. Quiet snow. Impossible to wheel in snow. This will save what little remains of my sanity.

That, and the upcoming winter break, which is undoubtedly the greatest single possible time to be at UMass, will preserve me. It's quiet, it's gorgeous and it's deserted. Did I mention how quiet it is? It's so quiet. It's so empty. It's great. You can look out and see what Southwest looks like dark. And I mean really dark, not just with the lights out and backlit with bonfires and burning lounge furniture.

You can go into Amherst and go anywhere you want. Every bar is your oyster. Every store and shop there is catering to you and you alone, because once again, Amherst's population dwindles to about 5.

Damn – I just realized that by telling people how great it is, they'd stay, thereby defeating my grand plan of total control of the campus.

Before you scheme-wrecking bastards start to destroy my idyllic winter wonderland, you should remember this: It's cold.

I don't think you understand me. It's really cold. I'm talking polar bears wearing scarves kind of cold. It's the kind of cold that you step out in and you feel like someone just hit you in the face. Breathing in is hazardous, because lung tissue freezes. You carry your driver's license on you at all times, so the authorities can identify your corpse-cicle when they find it three months after the nine foot drifts melt.

Normal travel routes – such as the foot bridge over the pond – are closed down, as are sections of the FAC. Why? Because they may collapse, it's that cold. Ice covers everything, including you if you don't move fast enough.

You can't really go out at night, because there is a very likely chance of you getting lost and not being able to find your way back to your room, resulting in the aforementioned corpse-cicle. Blinding snow. Bone-chilling cold. Your skin pales, your eyes sink back into your skull. You take on an eerie, Eater of the Dead like look, as the sun only burns for a few hours during the early morning and gives no warmth whatsoever. Amherst is an abandoned little ice ball, and as you make your way across the frozen wasteland that is campus, you wonder if this is where they filmed the Hoth scenes for Empire Strikes Back. Darkness falls about 3:30 in the afternoon, and since the sun rises – or at least pops its head over the horizon at 8:30, it means that your world is dark, cold and miserable.

Unless you're me, in which case, this is your idea of heaven.

So snow, you magnificent clouds, snow! Cover UMass with your chilly white, anti-skateboarding folds of wonderful crystallized water. Chill the rest of the campus until it cracks. And then freeze it some more.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

"It was a cold and wet December day...snow was melting on the ground..." Bono knows. So should you. Read Ed/Op.

World leader love

BRIAN LOHNES

It is that time of the year once again: time to do your Christmas shopping. I know you must be running around buying gifts for everyone you know, or in the case of freshmen, traveling to the various locations of the campus store and buying anything that has a UMass logo and can be purchased with a UCard. The ironic thing about that is your parents probably put the money on it to begin with. Buying their presents with their own money – now that's a good racket!

In your haste to buy everyone gifts, you probably haven't given much thought of what to get for the leaders of the world. Well, good leader, as usual, I am here to help you solve your problem. Here's a list of the perfect gifts to give that special someone who already runs a nation.

George W. Bush – President of the United States: We might as well start off close to home. First off, has anyone taken a good look at the guy's dent lately? The guy is huge! Seriously. I think Georgie has been bulking up. He was stand ing next to Ashcroft last week and I thought he was going to grab his neck and administer a king sized dose of his legendary "atomic nuggies." The perfect gift for George W. Bush would be one of those ab-sculpting exercise machines. I am talking about one of the things you wear as a belt and it electrically contracts your abs all day long, there by giving you a washboard stomach within days. Can't you see him on the commercial? "I'm the leader of the free world...and I'm working my abs as we speak!"

> "Leading Canada is kind of the booby prize of world leadership. Yes, the country is huge, but it has no identity. It is kind of like when you were in junior high and had no self-confidence, so you just kind of went with everyone else. That's Canada."

Jean Chretien – Prime Minister of Canada: Ok, Jean will be given a nametag that says, "Hello, My Name is Jean Chretien and I'm the Prime Minister of Canada." People in his own country don't even know who he is, let alone anyone else in the world. Leading Canada is kind of the booby prize of world leadership. Yes, the country is huge, but it has no identity. It is kind of like when you were in junior high and had no self-confidence, so you just kind of went with everyone else. That's Canada.

Fidel Castro – Cuba: Fidel is getting a damn vacation! Talk about a workaholic. Fidel has been running the place non-stop since he took it over about fifty years ago. Amazingly, Fidel is still alive and he continues to try to give inspirational and uplifting speeches to a population racked by poverty. If anyone remembers, over the summer Fidel passed out at the podium while giving a speech. Now that's a confidence booster to the population.

Jacques Chirac – President of France: Jacques is getting a miniature model of the Eiffel tower for Christmas. Oh that Jacques, he sure loves a good gag gift. Seriously, the perfect gift for Chirac is one of those pocket dictionaries of "Dirty French."

Saddam Hussein – Iraq: Saddam is getting an extra large roll of toilet paper to wipe do-do out of his shorts when he finds out that his ass will be the next one over the fire when we get him. Hiding.

Vladimir Putin – President of Russia: Vlad. Scary? Yep. Brooding? You betcha. A tinge of cold war In his blood? You better believe it. Face it world, this dude is scary looking and he only has one expression that works for him on his face. Happy? Straight face. Sad? Straight face? Constipated? Ummm, yeah. The perfect gift for Putin would be a chisel so his aides could carve a new expression on his face for the next 365 days. Hopefully this one won't be as creep.

Harold the V – King of Norway: What do you get the King that has everything? Who the hell knows, this guy is a nightmare to buy for, he's a king for god sakes! If I had to get him one thing it would have to be a poster of a kitten hanging from a branch that says, "Hang in there." Why? Well being a king has to be tough, even if your country is Norway, and everyone needs a lift every once in a while.

Sir Howard Cooke – Governor General of Jamaica: Let's give Howard a big fat bag of oregano and see if we can trick him into smoking it. We all know how Jamaicans love their wacky-tobacky and it would be great to see the look on his face when he realizes that it is only oregano.

Mary Mcaleese – President of Ireland: Ah, the land of my ancestors. Well I propose doing the same thing I do every year when I shop to buy something for the leader of Ireland – leave the store and spend any money you were going to spend at the bar. It's the Irish way!

Happy Holidays to all!

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the editor:
On tenure and terrorism

To the Editor:

In his letter to the Collegian Professor John Brigham sought to distract attention from the important question of teaching raised in Sam Wilkinson's column, by alleging that the departmental consideration of Neta Crawford's tenure case involved "a small committee, in a secret meeting" and claiming that without her presence, the department becomes invisible outside UMass.

His allegation is a misrepresentation of the department's procedures. Consistent with the University policies that also provide for the college and provost level involvement Professor Brigham mentioned, the department's seven member personnel committee votes on tenure after extended discussion not only in the committee but also in a meeting open to every faculty member of the department. Professor Brigham was a member of the personnel committee when Crawford's case was considered, and took an active role in both committee and departmental discussion.

His claim that the department needs Crawford for visibility rests on an extremely eccentric interpretation of his colleague's accomplishments. Several colleagues have enjoyed prestigious fellowships; one spent 2000-2001 at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton. Colleagues' research is familiar both around the USA and in other parts of the world. Members of the department have been asked to provide expert assistance to the UN Environmental Programme, the European Union, the Canadian government, US government agencies including the Environmental Protection Agency, the State Department, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and the Justice Department, to Massachusetts state agencies and to cities and towns in the area.

We consider ourselves members of a department that is highly visible nationally and Internationally, and therefore in a position to examine the whole record very carefully before offering anyone the lifetime contract that is tenure. A careful examination of the record led to a majority judgment – supported by our Chair, our Dean and Provost Marretti – that Crawford lacked strength in the area of teaching and therefore did not satisfy the University's requirements for tenure.

Nicholas Xenos
M.I. Peterson
Patricia J. Mills
Peter M. Haas
Eric S. Einhorn
Carlene J. Edie
Roberto Alejandro

Department of Political Science

To the Editor:

In her article (Dec. 6), Robyn Brooks is exploiting the terrorism that we have been going through in this country in order to push Israel's cause. Terrorism must be condemned wherever it occurs. Justifying it is unacceptable.

There is, however, a big difference between the United States and Israel. Equating the two countries is offensive. The United States does not occupy another people, Israel does. The United States does not steal other people's land to build settlements. Israel does.

"If this is a war, aren't armies supposed to fight each other?" writes Ms. Brooks. Precisely, this is not a war. It is a resistance against an occupation. And there is only one army, the IOF, that is, the Israeli Occupation Forces.

Ms. Brooks characterizes Israel as "a state of democracy." If it is a "democracy" it is certainly not like ours. In our democracy everybody enjoys the same rights. Not in Israel, where there is a law called the Right of Return according to which Jews and only Jews are given automatic Israeli citizenship if they so desire. Israelis who are not Jews cannot invoke this law to bring over their relatives to Israel.

Ms. Brooks, however, should be applauded for saying that "the Palestinian people need a homeland."

Ronny Credl
UMass undergrad

Eleven squashes Potter as Enemy Lines hangs on to the third spot

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Uh-oh.

The space/time continuum must have shifted slightly after Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone was knocked out of the top spot at the box-office by George Clooney's Ocean's Eleven. After all, Potter is the single most important movie released in the United States...ever.

Eleven (reviewed un this page), directed by Oscar winner Steven Soderbergh, took in $39.3 million. Over-smooth and under-plotted, Eleven tapped into a group ignored in recent weeks: people who aren't interested in seeing a movie about a damned boy wizard. Still, Eleven's take must have been surprising considering the strong competition from pint-sized Potter.

But the child wizard got rocked at the box office, pulling in only $14.1 million. Although it has pulled in more than $200 million at the box office (and will likely cross the $300 million barrier soon enough), Potter only held the top-spot at the box-office for three weeks. Fewer and fewer Hollywood films are being made that can sustain a considerable audience – instead, they cash out and disappear. There is no joke – it's just weird.

Anyway, Behind Enemy Lines took third with a paltry $8.1 million. Owen Wilson's work was brilliant – unfortunately, his career crashed after being strafed by enemy fire and now he's mired in action obscurity. Wait. In the movie, Owen Wilson's flying was brilliant – unfortunately, he's bored, strafed by enemy fired and now he's mired in Bosnia. Oh the confusion. Is Lines nothing but a huge metaphor for Wilson's life, or is it just a bad movie?

Monsters Inc. gleefully reveled in Potter's sudden descent, taking fourth place with $6.7 million. Chugging away like Bills Crystal's career (who, ironically, stars), Monsters is waiting for its opportunity to rough Potter up. In the middle of last week, the film snuck across the $200 million threshold.

Spy Game rotted Robert Redford's career (and his body) even further, taking $4.6 million. Be careful Robert – there's still Horse Whisperer 2 to be made. Meanwhile, Brad Pitt has a second movie in the top-five. Next time Bradley, why not get two good movies into the top-five?

Top five, terrible, bottom five, atrocious.

There is no explanation for Black Knight dropping only spot on the list, seizing sixth with a stunning $3.3 million. What? Who went? Who paid? Who are you, oh Black Knight ticket buyers? And why do you find it necessary to enjoy his films in the theater; Martin Lawrence would still be hilarious on movies made direct-to-video.

Swallow Tail made $2.6 million. Unreal. Do fat jokes ever get old? (Answer: yes!)

Out Cold froze souls on its way to $1.4 million.

Amelie surrendered (this joke will be run until all twelve readers understand that Amelie is a French film and the French surrender like it's their job) ninth place with $1.2 million. Fans took over Paris just celebrating how wonderfully entertaining the film is!

Domestic Disturbance made $950,000 to bring the total over. Even Scientologists go to see movies.

Next week's new releases were all made by the devil himself: Vanilla Sky stars Tom Cruise and Penelope Cruz, and Not Another Teen Movie which takes a brilliant premise and ruins it entirely.

Fluffy Eleven a letdown

COURTESY BOB MARSHAK

Don Cheadle, Clooney, Shaobo Qin and Casey Affleck run into a snag doing the casino job.

COURTESY BOB MARSHAK

Clooney and Pitt are two cool cats.

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

OCEAN'S ELEVEN
Directed by Steve Soderbergh with George Clooney, Brad Pitt, Julia Roberts and Andy Garcia Showing at CineMark in Hadley

Ocean's Eleven is to crime movies what Erin Brockovich was to woman-against-the-system movies: perfectly acceptable fluff directed by the same young talent.

As one of Hollywood's rising directorial stars, has Steven Soderbergh's ascendance been predictable or what? Splashing onto the scene with sex, lies and videotape in 1989, an independently filmed drama that garnered him an Oscar nomination, Soderbergh combed the Hollywood underground waiting for his opportunity to bring his particular brand of moviemaking to the popular stage. With the late 90's independent film boom, the slight director had his chance: the spectacularly smooth Out of Sight starred a debonair George Clooney and an authoritarian Jennifer Lopez, gritty The Limey unearthed Brit Terance Stamp as a scorned father, he hit the big time with Julia Robert's Brockovich and his major artistic statement was Traffic, a three-perspective take on the drug war. The latter earned Soderbergh an Oscar for Best Director.

Which leaves Soderbergh in a dangerous situation. Having already done a number of career defining movies; does he revisit what he is adept at or does he continually force himself to branch out?

He chooses to abide tradition – he renews his membership in the growing club of directors who finds the world of the smooth criminal invigorating. With David Mamet (The Heist, The Spanish Prisoner) and Guy Ritchie (Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels and Snatch), Soderbergh originally signed up with Sight, starring the stylish Clooney and an up-and-coming Jennifer Lopez. Surrounding Clooney with likeable felons, Soderbergh made criminality seem downright dapper.

Eleven is no different.

Thin on plot – a ragtag bunch of thieves band together to take down the biggest score ever...sound familiar? – Soderbergh relies on his characters' charisma and the skillful way in which they actually steal the money to carry Eleven. Joining Clooney is thieving partner Brad Pitt, British explosives expert Don Cheadle, super pickpocket Matt Damon, outrageous undercover specialist Bernie Mac and aged character expert Carl Reiner.

The mark? Andy Garcia, who not only owns the three casinos the thieves plan to pilfer, but dates Ocean's ex-wife Tess (played by Julia Roberts). Criminally businesslike, Garcia is steel-jawed and without joy; Roberts can't help but dominate her few scenes, as she is the only woman in the movie.

The theft itself is a thing of brilliance, a complex series of machinations executed to near-perfection. Therein lays the problem: while the caper itself is smart, the movie isn't. Where Mamet takes the time to explain his criminals' intrigues, where Ritchie takes the time to show his criminals' intrigues, Soderbergh glides over crimes' complexities. As long as it seems silky, as long as characters are smooth, specifics just don't matter.

To that end, Ocean's criminals rarely get the attention they deserve. There just isn't enough time to explore eleven different thieves and their prodigious talents. Debuting Shaobo Qin's Yen, whose acrobatic skills are amazing, gets little more than choppy Asian accent jokes in his direction. Damon's Linus is similarly ignored skillful at pocket-picking ta Soderbergh shows in a brilliantly coarse sequence), his ability is nothing more than a parlor trick to the Oscar winning director. Excusing a racial hustle perpetrated by Bernie Mac and Damon, Soderbergh further misses an opportunity for development by keeping the characters separate for large tracts of the film.

Where there could have been illicit brilliance, instead there is only Soderbergh's straightforward presentation of a breezily plotted film. His insertion of a romance between Clooney and Roberts seems especially excessive and unimportant. So while he has a polished cast of characters in his world, he doesn't have them do anything more substantive than being smooth.

And in this case, being cool just doesn't hold up.

At the movies
with Sam Wilkinson

Dancing the spirit in all of us

COURTESY MICHAEL SAPPH

The Dirty Dozen Brass Band performed along with The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company in "When The Spirit Moves You," at the Fine Arts Center Thursday.

By Melissa Ladd
Collegian Correspondent

The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company and The Dirty Dozen Brass Band, who performed "When The Spirit Moves You" at the Concert Hall Thursday night, moved and then moved some more. Fourteen dancers and nine musicians held the energy high, and the audience was captivated for nearly two hours.

Gary Harris opened with the dance "Ostrich," a graceful work of art. Donned with feathers, Harris took his extraordinary body, with incredibly long arms and legs and a very muscular back and shoulders, and turned it into that of a bird. He executed beautiful fluidity and unique movements, which was just a taste of what was to come in the rest of the show.

"Only on a Sunday," depicted a scene from earlier days in New Orleans, of a place sectioned off where African Americans gathered on Sundays. This piece is dominated by the "ring shout," a traditional dance that derives from the African culture that the people of New Orleans embraced as a way of returning to their roots. Constantly moving in a circle, the dancers articulated their own emotions with personalized movements. There was also a vaudeville act, where three dancers appeared on stage as street performers, and even offered to take requests. After a silly and entertaining tap dance accompanied by two dancers, one on the spoons and one on the harmonica, they comically held out a hat and asked for contributions. The three characters were joined by the rest of the cast for a lively dance number, "Get an Early Start."

Another return to folk roots in New Orleans was, "Make Your Ancestors Happy And They Will Bless You." A funeral procession led by Harris again was a display of emotions. Words seem so meaningless to dancers whose motions speak so compellingly. Their hands shake and they use the whole body with such mutability from one position to the next that all positions seem to move in one long continuous stream of development towards expression. The funeral procession was a lamentation, but the focus was more a celebration of the life that was lived. Costumes, by Omotayo W. Olanja, complete with umbrellas, were wonderful.

The Dirty Dozen Brass Band raised the roof of the Fine Arts Center in Act II. They were a boisterous group of talented musicians who felt their music. "Big" Sammy Williams on the trombone had the moves and the music. He

Turn to DOZEN, page 6

The power of change

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

Mariposa's story is one of metamorphosis – beginning from her Bronx roots to St. Vincent's Acute Psychiatric Ward to the artist and activist who took flight in DiaspoRican Dementia, the final installment in New World Theater's fall season on Thurs. night at Bowker Auditorium.

Mariposa, born as Maria Teresa Fernandez, received a standing ovation to her one-woman performance, in which she fluctuated in and out of characters that revealed a story of "not a nervous breakdown, but a nervous breakthrough." Mariposa has woven song and humor into an otherwise sad tale.

I landed in a psychiatric ward for burning Hustler Magazine's in a bathtub, Mariposa was diagnosed with bipolar disorder and was told that she would be on medication for the rest of her life. In DiaspoRican Dementia, Fernández proclaims that she has been free of prescription drugs for six years and that she suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder. To complete her recovery, Maria shaved her head and became Mariposa, Spanish for "butterfly."

"I am metamorphisized. (I have) been reborn. [I am] a phoenix rising up out of the ashes of my people; not the lost Puerto Rican lost souls in search of an identity ... not fragmented but whole, not colonized but free," Mariposa said.

Mariposa's performance was ushered in by percussionist Angel Rodriguez and an introduction from her stylish but rather reserved twin, melleSol (Melissa Fernandez).

Mariposa first appears as a Catholic schoolgirl, punished by the nuns for talking. This scene, like the ones that follow, are conversations with an unseen other. However, Mariposa's character and her opposite are clear to the audience, both in dialogue and minimal costume changes.

Schoolgirl Maria conversing with God morphs into Nurse Thelma, who asks an invisible college-aged Maria, "Do you know where you are? You on the acute psychiatric ward at Saint Vincent, which means you're psychotic." Nurse Thelma, shakes her head at her patient who refuses to take her pills and protests her sanity. "Such a crying shame to be young, talented and crazy."

Throughout the performance, Mariposa also plays herself as a mental patient. Dressed in hospital gown, Maria is locked in the "quiet room" of the ward and performs the most telling dialogues to the hospital personnel on the other side of the door and to God.

"I don't give a flying fuck if you think I'm a man-hater or some crazy wounded bitch with issues. I'm not a victim, I'm a survivor, and I'm more than a survivor; I am flesh, I am blood. I am heartbeat," Maria yelled.

Shortly after, Maria collapses on the floor. "Why God? I used to have it all together, what's happened to my life? I believed ... I trusted ... I was only seven. Right now it's happening to someone else ... I wish I could forget, evaporate into the safe American childhood. What else are we supposed to do but go crazy? I'm not the only

Turn to MARIPOSA, page 5

COURTESY NEW WORLD THEATER

Mariposa, star of the one-woman show, DiaspoRican Dementia.

Mariposa

continued from page 5

one, God, you're the one who's crazy."

DiasporiRican Dementia does not unravel chronologically. Her scenes are injected with stories of Uncle Diego "a Chihuahua who thought he was a bulldog" who rebelled in silence and of her rebellion of words, notably getting arrested at John F. Kennedy Airport for finding an old Caucasian man with a young Asian girl suspicious. She spoke of the tales of the Puerto Ricans who came "looking for dreams but found misery," fairy madrinas of miracles, Menuedo concerts and a call to Nuyorican poet Pedro Pietri a fellow Manti. Depressive which she proudly relates to Nurse Thelma.

"It was poetry that lead me on a way out, it just took a while to find my way," Mariposa said. She sang a capella to "Sometimes I feel like a motherless child" as well as the Serenity Prayer.

She at last slips into the character of her mother, whose monologue tells that Maria has joined a Healing Circle for Women, is working as a psychic reader, and is fighting for the freedom of activists as a new form of therapy. Her mother speaks of Maria's company of artists, the Manhattan Art school she attended, and her new rebirth. "As hard as we worked to get out of the barrio, she works to get back in. She says that where her roots are in the Bronx, in Puerto Rico, and in Africa."

Mariposa's mother was a receptionist at New York University, allowing Mariposa and mellebol to attend the university. In fact, Mariposa received her BA in Women's Studies and MA in Special Education from NU.

"Maria said something crazy to me the other day. She said to me 'Manti Puerto Rico is like a butterfly. If you help the butterfly out of the cocoon it will die. It has to fight its way out, struggle, that's how its blood gets into the wings and it can fly and be free.'"

Morphing back into Mariposa, she concluded as saying. "Some people say that I'm not the real thing' Borikua, that is, because I was not born on the enchanted island, because I was born on the mainland north of Spanish Harlem, because I was born in the Bronx. So make an Puerto Rico, Puerto Rico nacio en mi pI was not born in Puerto Rico, Puerto Rico was born in me."

dozen

continued from page 5

couldn't keep his feet still.

"In My Father's House," choreographed by Debbie Blunden-Diggs, was an emotional ride for dancers and audience members. Set to gospel music by Kirk Franklin and the Family, the dancers poured their hearts on the stage. The women onstage were mesmerizing, with many turns in "attitude," a position where the lifted leg is behind the body, turned out at the hip and bent at the knee. In order to make this look nice the position must be correct, and these dancers implemented this beautifully many times.

The dancers' bodies were accented by the gorgeous costumes created by the choreographer. The long velvet gowns in rich blues, purples and reds for the women made every spin and every extension of the legs look breathtaking. The men were dressed in reds and blues with tight fitting tops that did not hinder their long lines of the torso or arms.

Soloist DeShona Pepper gave a riveting and emotional performance. She revealed after the show that during this piece, she and all the others involved cried. How wonderful to see such great artistic talents, that cannot only affect an audience, but can be affected themselves by their work.

Act III was amazing. "Children of the Passage," was an interpretation in movement of the journey of a generation into enlightenment. The dancers began in costumes that were worthy of a Paris runway trunk show. They were beautiful with an expensive "tuxedo" appearance, yet on each dancer one half of the body was missing the tux, and a bare arm and shoulder were exposed. Choreographers Donald McKayle and Ronald K. Brown pushed the athletic limits of the dancers. Performing with great power and strength, these dancers did not show an ounce of exhaustion. Stamina, speed, agility and grace gave this piece its thrilling qualities. In it, there were some of the great sins being portrayed, such as lust, gluttony and anger. Then the consciousness moved forward, and kept moving forward until all of the dancers had changed into pure white costumes.

Dirty Dozen blasted out its sound onstage for the conclusion and the dancers invited audience members to get up on the stage and dance to the music. The audience was more than happy to be involved, clapping and tapping their feet. Everyone moved, and everyone was touched by the intense display of emotion that encompassed the show.

WRITE FOR ARTS...PLEASE!

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins 2.99 4.29
Nachos Especial 2.95 4.49
Sweet Potato Fries 1.79 3.29
1/2 PRICE!
OCMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
Judie's
51 N Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

Work over Break
RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown NOW!
Boston 617-484-1788
North of Boston 978-777-2253
South of Boston 508-821-5591
New Hampshire 603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape 508-833-1145
Route 3 South 781-340-6355
Springfield 413-731-6910
Worcester 508-832-8757
Providence 508-336-5658
Earn $2,000.00 during break
$9.00 per hour and overtime potential
Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11
Equal Opportunity Employer

The Mercantile
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Chains Sweaters Toys India Print Bedspreads Candles
Incense Baskets Merry X'mas Mugs Paper Lampshades Cards Gloves Chinese Shoes
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
Dec. Hours Mon-Sat 10 am-9 pm Sun 12-6
Amherst-11 E.Pleasant-Carriage Shops
Northampton 108Main St.

COUSINS MARKET
11 E Pleasant Street
(Next to "The Pub")
Tel: 549.3500
Grocery • Dairy • Produce
Beer & Wine • Phone Cards
Large Deli • Tobacco Domestic & International OCMP
Fax Your Lunch Orders for Quick Pick-Up
Fax: 549.3600

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! Starting Under $20!
UMASS
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

Time is your most precious resource...
Invisible Typist™
is your most valuable tool...
Instantly retype previously typed words
Automatically correct spelling errors as you type
Transform your abbreviations into words or phrases
Works invisibly with any Windows® 95/98/Me/2000 application
Great for word processing, e-mail, chat, instant messaging...
Invisible Typist
Download it now from www.Quolux.com – Only $9.95
Quolux™ ~ Illuminators of Cyberspace
Quolux and Invisible Typist are trademarks of Quolux, Inc
Windows is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation

it's Live and Online!
CoedCam
The Needle
Allison
What will she get? Where will she get it?
Watch live when Allison from CoedCam goes under the needle and gets tattooed by Alex Lawrence from Skin Dreamz Tattooz.
Log on December 10, at 1:00 p.m. to check out the action as it happens!
Log on today!
www.masslive.com/coed
Listen to: PURE ROCK LAZER 99.3 for details
Sponsored in part by: Peter Pan mass live.com

www.collegian.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

Get Cash for your Books
No matter where you bought them, we'll buy them back*.
follett's SBX Bookstore
1737 Sherman Ave ▪ Ph: 847/328-2717
Serving the Northwestern University Community
Find us on the web at efollett.com
efollett.com NEW & USED COLLEGE TEXTBOOKS
Order now for next term!
*current market value applies.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in rushing next semester? Come help the sisters of alpha Chi Omega decorate candygrams and see what we're all about. Thursday, December 13 at 6pm. Call 549-8459 if you have any questions

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom Apt in Boulders: bath & full kitchen sublet Jan 1-May 31. Cheap rent! Call quick 253-0915 or 695-3680 ask for Adam

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline great location. Available Jan 1. call Adrena 413-397-0978

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1 $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

90 Subaru Legacy Wagon 117k $2000 Call 586-8412

'93 Ford Taurus GL Sedan, auto transmission, front wheel drive, 58,300 miles, AC, excellent tires, power steering/windows/door locks, $3,500, 253-7026

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K. CD player, leather interior. Great Condition $6500 O.B.O. 413-256-1989

'88 Ford CrownVic Wagon 130K mi, good condition except transmission, runs well $2000 w/ new transmission, $1500 w/out. 413-665-6832

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

EMPLOYMENT

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS
Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

Administrative Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

Sales Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

EMPLOYMENT

www.FluidVisions.com

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

FOR SALE

Klimax Skiboards $100 Salomon Equipe Boots (13s), skis (190s), polls, bag. Call Justin 546-0679

For sale Twin bed & frame $70. Fan w/ remote $20. Call 256-3951

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

TV For Sale. 19" with remote control. Bought 2 months ago. $100. call 546-0978.

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

Furnished Room all inclusive. Price nego. Available now. 253-5066 or 218-7896

Bedroom with own bathroom available call 253-8915 for details

Room Available for Jan. 1st, walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Lantern Court on bus route. AC, DW, pleanty of storage. Call 413-397-0925

TRAVEL

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted Models for art classes. Experience preferred. Holyoke Community College. Contact Frank Cressotti. 413-552-2489.

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.intercampus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

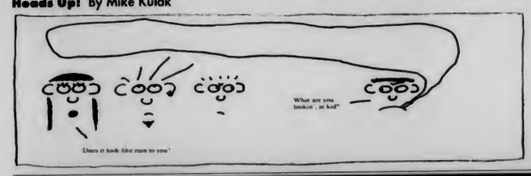
HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network
USC's Bulletin Board
2 • CBS 3 Hartford
3 • CBS 3 Boston
5 • ABC 40 Springfield
6 • PBS 57 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 30 Hartford
9 • HSCN Sci-Movie Channel
10 • CBS 61 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • PBS 24 Hartford
13 • NBC 22 Springfield
14 • (recreational Channel)
15 • UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 • WB 59 New Haven
17 • DSTV
18 • DSTV
19 • CVE TV (Student Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Good to Cheer
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • CSN Headline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • USA
27 • TBS
28 • TNT
29 • ESPN
30 • ESPN 2
31 • Discovery
32 • Nickelodeon
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nickelodeon
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Lifetime
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

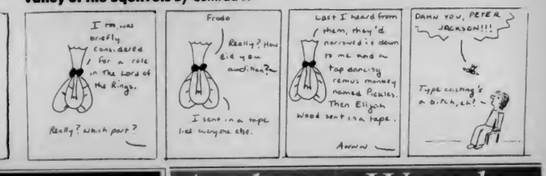
Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Monty By Jim Meddick

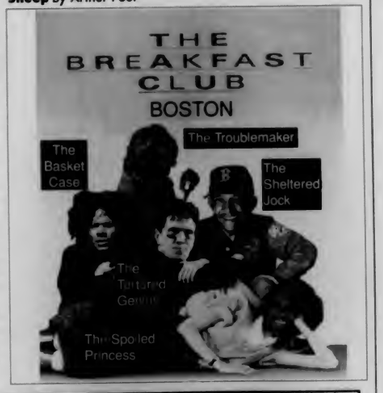
Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Pushing, shoving, and cheating are encouraged."

–Out Cold



Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 42 LOW: 29	HIGH: 47 LOW: 26	HIGH: 47 LOW: 34

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You won't find yourself waiting around too much today; you will be busy with a million things going on at once. Take a minute to relax.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Now is no time to neglect your home in any way. When you do decide to clean you will find all of the stuff that you have been looking for all semester.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care that you're not living too much in your head at this time. Pay attention to what is real and give up the fantasy.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – What begins with excitement is likely to develop quickly today into something that you're not likely to forget. Or simply want to forget and not be able to.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – What you need to know now is spend some time fine-tuning. Just because you completed your task doesn't mean it is done.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have reason to regret a recent decision today, but before long you'll realize that you are indeed on the right road. Make the attempt to contact someone that you haven't talked to in a long time.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You needn't take things quite so seriously today – just take a break when things get too stressful.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't lose sight of things you most want to attain. Just because your goals are unrealistic doesn't mean that your dreams can't come true.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone close to you is likely to want to get even closer today, don't let their feelings make you uncomfortable. Take time out to talk about what is going on.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The more unusual it is, the more you're going to like it – whether at the workplace or at home. However you are going to have a pretty ordinary day.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The unlikely may well prove likely today – and vise versa. You may have to change your schedule today in order to be more accommodating to others.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may come in contact with someone who knows how to make sense of issues you've found difficult or even impenetrable. Ask for advice when you feel that you need it.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Nuggets

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

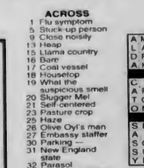
Orange-Garlic Tofu Chili with Nachos (vegan)

DINNER

Moroccan Lamb Stew

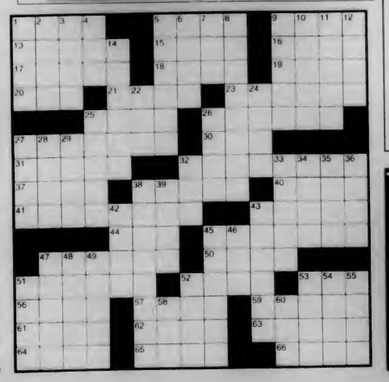
Chicken Margarita

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)



Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan) (W Basics)

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
TUESDAY!!
*Team Pub Trivia
win $ and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Flu symptom
5 Stuck-up person
9 Close noisily
13 Heap
15 Llama country
16 Barn
17 Cold vessel
18 Housetop
19 What the suspicious smell
20 Slugger Mel
21 Self-centered
23 Pasture crop
25 Haze
26 Olive Oyl's man
27 Embassy staffer
30 Parking –
31 New England state
32 Parasol
37 Cartoonist Peter
38 Faulty
40 Gance or Ferrara
41 Rural outings
43 Says frankly
44 Kind of deer
45 Paint the town
47 Handwriting
50 DeMille-type film
51 Most genuine
52 Wrestlers' pads
53 Got the trophy
56 Freud's daughter
57 Chills
59 Rub out
61 Uttered
62 Alaskan city
63 After sunset
64 Circle parts
65 Delicious
66 — and carrots

DOWN
1 Pupils
2 Winter need
3 Offended
4 UK part
5 Pixie
6 Garish light
7 Coronado's desire
8 Clowns
9 Capture
10 Virginia caverns
11 Proverb
12 Parcel out
14 Gadget
22 Bonfire remains
24 Makes a choice
25 Country estate
26 More
27 Asian nanny
28 "GWTW" home
29 Wee
32 Family nickname
33 Widespread destruction
34 — Ben Adhem"
35 Water condensations
36 End of a threat
38 Voting to accept (a bill)
39 Run into
42 Tall flower
43 Up and about
45 Halted
46 Fit
47 Whale finder
48 Pessimist often
49 Hits the books
51 Pedro's house
52 Written reminder
53 Hourly pay
54 Job-safety org
55 New Jersey cagers
58 Murmur
60 Clothing defect

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-12-01 © 2001, United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hammel
Photo Technician: Gerald Ling
Copy Editor: Jesse Greenspan
Production Supervisor: Jarrett Brimmer
Production Staff: Mike Kulak, Sean Becker, Shannon Farrington

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen counted out

Boston College survives late UMass comeback

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – The Minutemen were counting. It is a shame the baseline official wasn't.

Down 26 points at halftime, the Massachusetts men's basketball team fought its way back to within two points of Boston College with two seconds remaining, thanks in part to an amazing trio of 3-pointers in the final 15 seconds from Anthony Anderson.

And on the final inbound, it looked like the Minutemen had locked up the Eagles on their live second allotment, and had been given a chance to complete one of the greatest comebacks this state has ever seen.

But that is a tough call to make, especially in front of 8,526 at Boston College's Conte Forum, where the No. 13 Eagles held off UMass, 80-78 Saturday night, to capture their second consecutive Commonwealth Cup.

Boston College	80
UMass	78

"We were playing good in the first half, but our shots just weren't falling, and in the second half, we just went out there and played [defense] and we went on that big run," said Boston native Raheim Lamb, shaking his head.

"Man, I still think that was a five second count too, at the end."

Boston College (7-0) cruised to a 44-21 halftime advantage, and led 49-23 with just over 18 minutes remaining, but UMass (4-2) engineered a 30-8 run to cut the Eagles' lead down to 57-53 with 7:51 left. BC responded with a mini-run of its own, capped by an Andrew Bryant 3-pointer to take a 70-58 lead at the 3:23 mark, but the Minutemen made a final surge and found themselves down only 78-75 with 10 seconds left after Anderson's second of three late treys.

On the ensuing inbound though, confusion in the UMass press defense allowed Bryant to break out into the open court and throw down the winning hoop for BC. After Anderson's last long-ranger, the Eagles just ran out the clock.

"We almost made something crazy happen," said Head Coach Steve Lappas, whose team hosts UConn Tuesday and will look to break its two-game losing streak. "Especially against a team this good."

Troy Bell led Boston College with a career-high 34 points, a bucket better than his 32 points last year in his team's loss to Southern California in the NCAA East Regional. The junior shot 8-for-14 from the field, 13-for-7 from 3-point range, and connected on 15 of 16 free throws. He netted 18 of his points in the first half and scored 14 of BC's final 31, including a huge 13-foot jumper with 4:24 left to play to give BC the 65-54 lead and send the home crowd into a frenzy.

"Am I supposed to yell at these guys for him pulling from 30 feet, making 30-foot leaners from the 'C' in BC?" asked Lappas. "He's a tremendous player. When you have one of the best players in the country on your team, it's a tremendous advantage. That kid is the Player of the Year in the Big East, First Team All-American. I've had a couple of them. It makes a difference, believe me."

Ryan Sidney, who came in leading the Eagles at a 21.3 clip, managed only 10 points but added 10 boards. The sophomore played despite fracturing his jaw in practice Thursday.

Anderson led UMass with a career-high 19 points, dishing out three assists and grabbing four steals in the effort. Shannon Crooks tallied 18, Lamb and Micah Brand added 12 each and Eric Williams contributed with 10. All of Lamb's points came in the second half, leading to his career-night.

In fact, most of the Minutemen's points came in the second half as they outscored BC 57-36 in that stanza. In the first half, UMass shot 25 percent (6-for-32) from the floor while going 1-for-10 from behind the arc and 4-for-11 from the charity strip. But in Act II, the Minutemen shot 59.5 percent (22-37) from the field, while going 6-for-11 from 3-point range and 7-for-10 from the line. The 57 second-half points are the most BC has ever allowed in one half of play.

"If we play hard for both halves – just come out with the aggression and the pressure that we did in the second half – who knows what can happen. It's just something to learn on," said Kitwana Rhymer, who scored seven points in a season-low 17 minutes. The fifth-year senior saw limited action due to a twisted left knee and a gash over his right eye that ordered five stitches in the first half.

"There's a lot of what if's," Rhymer said. "Like, what if we got that five-second call? What if we played the way in the first half that we played in the second half? We probably would have won that game."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Anderson hit three 3-pointers in the final 15.2 seconds of Saturday's game at Boston College, but it was not enough as the Eagles held on for the 80-78 victory.

After rough beginning, Anderson orchestrates second half turnaround

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – A man once said, "As if it matters the way a man falls, when the fall is all he has left, it matters greatly."

If you asked nearly any of the 8,526 fans in attendance at the Conte Forum on Saturday night, they would say that the fall was all UMass (4-2) had left in the second half. After falling behind 44-21 at No. 13 Boston College (7-0) in the opening stanza, things looked bleak for the Minutemen as they reemerged from the locker room at halftime. But head coach Steve Lappas was optimistic and confident that his team could turn it around in the final 20 minutes.

"I didn't even yell at the guys at halftime, we missed a lot of easy shots and a lot of foul shots and that frustrated our young guys," Lappas said. "But I told them, if we play like this in the second half and just make those shots we'll be okay."

And they did start to make those shots and they did find a way to fight and claw their way back into the game, almost pulling off one of the greatest comebacks in school history.

Leading the ferocious second half comeback was a trio of players from the Boston area. Shannon Crooks, Anthony Anderson and Raheim Lamb combined for 40 of the Maroon and White's 57 second-half points on 15-of-25 shooting. However, it was just not enough as the Eagles held on for the 80-78 victory in the seventh annual Commonwealth Classic.

Trailing by 23 at the break, it would have been easy for the Minutemen to put their heads down and accept their fate. However, the team came out inspired and opened the half on a 32-11 run to cut the lead, which at one point was as large as 26, down to four.

Crooks, Lamb and Micah Brand had seven points apiece during this run to get UMass back into the game and help set the tone for the game's final seven and a half minutes. But it was the play of Anderson, Lappas' sophomore point guard, that shone brightest in the second half.

Anderson, who collected his second Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award on Sunday, ran the UMass offense near flawlessly for 19 minutes in the second half, collecting three assists and two steals as well as scoring 14 points, including three three-pointers in the final 15 seconds, en route to a career-high 19 on the night. But it was his floor leadership that most impressed Lappas.

"He took big steps tonight. He had three turnovers in 36 minutes against a team that averages 10 steals a game," he said. "I thought that part of his game was tremendous, his floor game was excellent and obviously he knocked out some shots at the end. He was an offensive threat tonight which he needs to be because he's a good player."

"That's one of the things that Coach Lappas talks about all the time, not turning the ball over," Anderson said. "As a point guard I can't have five, six or seven turnovers a game so I try and limited my turnovers, and do."

With Anderson running the show and handling the BC press, the rest of the Minutemen focused on other aspects of their games. Crooks intensified his defensive effort on Troy Bell, BC's All-American, and began to knock down some shots of his own at the other end, while Lamb was beginning to find his scoring touch.

"In the first half my shot wasn't really there, that's why I wasn't taking it," Lamb said. "In the second half I just took my time and let the game come to me."

Lamb tallied a career-high 12 points on the evening, all of which came in the second half. With 8:28 remaining he got the traveling contingent of UMass fans into an uproar with a vicious two-handed dunk along the baseline off a feed from Eric Williams (10 points, 8 rebounds and 3 assists.) The flush cut the Eagle lead to five at 56-51 and started chants of "We Can't Hear You" from the Minuteman faithful toward the suddenly silent BC majority.

Despite the comeback falling short, the Minutemen know that the effort put forth in the second half went a long way toward making a statement about the heights that this team can achieve as the season progresses.

"If there is such a thing as a good loss, this is one of them," Anderson said. "The confidence is going to give us something to get us going Tuesday against UConn."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Raheim Lamb was right at home Saturday at Conte Forum.

Same place, different teams for Beantown duo

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

UMASS HOOP NOTEBOOK

CHESTNUT HILL – Minuteman Raheim Lamb was already in the game, so he didn't notice when fellmainc Watson walked over to the scorer's table early in the first half of Saturday's contest at Boston College. But when Watson stepped on the floor and was assigned to guard him, it made it easier for Lamb to settle in to his familiar surroundings.

"That's my man. I love that dude," said Lamb, who lives about five minutes from BC's Conte Forum and played with Watson in the Boston Athletic Basketball Club's (BABC) AAU (Amateur Athletic Union) program for a few years, not to mention on the street courts of Beantown. "I knew he was going to go to BC. And it was great just playing out there, playing 1-on-1 with him."

Lamb scored a career-high 12 points, including a violent baseline jam with 8:28 left to play to cut the BC lead to five at 56-51. The sophomore also grabbed seven rebounds and blocked one shot in 23 minutes.

Watson only played 12 minutes and scored three points, but the kid from Roxbury faces a tougher challenge than Lamb in cracking his team's starting lineup, with All-America candidates Troy Bell and Ryan Sidney in the Eagle backcourt.

Still, both found the time to try to psyche each other out.

"I was out there talking trash, but that's part of the game, just having fun," Lamb said. "That's how he is too. Actually, after the game he told me to call him."

It was almost a perfect night. The only unfavorable condition was the 80-78 losing count.

"All my family was here, this is hometown for me, so I was up for the game from the beginning," said Lamb, whose 12 points all came in the second half. "I was only able to have 12 tickets, but I had a lot [more family members] who wanted to come.

Commander-in-Chief

Anthony Anderson has done more than solidify his spot in the UMass starting backcourt. He's already gained the respect of his elders.

"I already call Anthony the Allen Iverson of our squad," said Kitwana Rhymer, the fifth-year senior. "He's the commander. I mean, I may be one of the captains, but I call him the full-court general. Coach is coach. But Anthony is the one out there who is supposed to run us."

Including Saturday's contest, in which he had a career-high 19 points (14 in the second half), Anderson now has only nine turnovers in six games. To that, he has 24 assists, which is a team high.

"He has a tremendous understanding of the game, just naturally," said Head Coach Steve Lappas on the Lynn, Mass. native. "He just has a great feel for the game. And they know he has a great feel. You can just tell by the way he carries himself out there. He's important to this team."

Rival arrival

Connecticut is up next for UMass, as the Huskies travel to the Mullins Center Tuesday night (ESPN, 9 p.m.) for the sixth MassMutual "U" Game. After Saturday night's 80-44 win over Northeastern, UConn now stands at 4-1, with its other victories coming over Vanderbilt (84-71), New Hampshire (110-58) and George Washington (84-76). The Huskies lost to Maryland 77-65 last Monday.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 65 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, December 11, 2001

Mariah - wasn't it about time she came out with another Greatest Hits album?

ARTS p. 5

Women's hoop lost two games this weekend. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Students for Free Tibet host evening of traditional music and dance

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

While most University of Massachusetts students were busy focusing on final exams and end-of-the-semester parties, Students for a Free Tibet [SFT] turned their attentions to Tibetan political prisoner Ngawang Choephel.

SFT sponsored an evening of Tibetan Culture and Dance in the Campus Center last night, where various speakers and performers hoped to highlight the movement to free Choephel. Petitions and fliers were distributed, and attendees were given letters to send to congressional representatives.

Choephel was a student at Vermont's Middlebury College, who traveled to Tibet on a Fulbright Scholarship. His goal was to document traditional Tibetan music and dances. He was arrested and detained on charges of espionage on behalf of the United States, despite the fact that he was not known to be engaged in any political activity. Today, he remains in a Chinese prison.

The film Missing in Tibet, a documentary detailing the plight of Choephel, was shown at last night's event. Thondup Tsering, a graduate student in education, spoke after the film was broadcast.

"After watching the movie Missing in Tibet, I have two questions," Tsering said. "The first question is, 'Why is China doing this to Ngawang Choephel, and to Tibet?' The second is, 'Is there anything we can do to save Ngawang?'

"I'll try to answer these questions," he said. "It's important to understand the broader context of Tibet. Ever since China invaded Tibet in 1949, their sole mission has been to destroy Tibetan culture and identity. They think that if they can force the Tibetans to...sing the socialist song, they can say to the world, 'Look, the Tibetans are part of China.'

"They're trying to indoctrinate the Tibetan people," Tsering continued. "Anyone, be it either the Dalai Lama, or Ngawang Choephel, who thinks it's his right to preserve Tibet's oral tradition, is viewed as an enemy of the 'motherland' and called a reactionary. The harshest punishments are reserved for these people."

Tsering went on to say that he does have hope that the Chinese government will eventually free Choephel. He mentioned past incidents in China and South Africa, in which political prisoners were released in the face of political pressure.

Following Tsering's comments, Yonten Chophel Dhongsar and Pasang Dolwa of the Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts in Dharamsala, India, performed traditional Tibetan music. The first song that they played was written by Ngawang Choephel himself.

At the conclusion of the event, SFT member Matt Kozuch urged attendees to become active in the Tibetan freedom movement.

"There was congressional pressure to allow a visit by Ngawang's mother," said Kozuch, explaining why the decision was made to focus efforts on freeing Choephel. "It was from that visit that we learned that he's seriously ill."

"Our campaign," he continued, "is to have him released on medical parole. That way, the Chinese government won't lose face."

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Tibetan culture was presented, through dance and music, yesterday in the Campus Center.

Red Cross still seeking donors for blood drive

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Those seeking to aid in some volunteer efforts can hop on a bus or car to attend one of the American Red Cross' upcoming blood drives in Hampshire County or go online to apply for the AmeriSpan Unlimited Volunteer and Internship Program for college students.

The next blood drive will be held on Dec. 14 from 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. at the Northampton High School, followed by another drive the next day from 8:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. at the Cummington Community Center.

Two final drives will be held on Dec. 18 and 27 in Hatfield Town Hall and the Easthampton Congregational Church, respectively. However, the times for those drives have yet to be announced.

Aside from helping out locally, students can apply for an internship with AmeriSpan Unlimited, a self-proclaimed hybrid of a language school and a travel agency that aids volunteer groups in Latin America.

"In reality, by volunteering, you not only help others in need, you help yourself too," Liz Cleveland, AmeriSpan's Volunteer Coordinator, stated in a recent press release. "The personal growth and satisfaction experienced by our volunteers in their home country is the main reason that they [students] choose to enroll in a programs overseas. They're taking their volunteering skills to the next level, and that's something very commendable."

The program brings roughly 3,000 students, 10 percent of which participate in the Volunteer and Internship Program, to different areas of Latin America each year to learn about a country's language and culture.

Service projects for AmeriSpan volunteers include preserving the rainforest, aiding abandoned or orphaned children, protecting animals such as endangered sea turtles and scarlet macaws in Costa Rica or working with under funded public schools.

"In light of recent events, a new focus has been placed on helping others in need. While it is a wonderful opportunity to help out in your home country, the rewards of volunteering in countries overseas are limitless," an AmeriSpan press release promoted. "Volunteers are needed in many areas of the world in many different fields including: teaching, construction, environmental work, working with children and adults with disabilities, to name a few."

For further information about the Red Cross blood drives, call the Hampshire County Chapter headquarters at 413-584-8887. For more information about AmeriSpan and its internship program, visit www.amerispan.com/volunteer_intern/ on the web.

Graduating seniors sought as Student Commencement Speakers

The call has gone out for seniors eager to have the last word at graduation this year.

All seniors that will be graduating in May, 2002, and are interested in giving a speech in front of thousands of students, faculty and families, are encouraged to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker.

In order to be eligible, applicants must submit their proposed speech to the Student Speaker Selection Committee. Speeches must be two word-processed/typewritten pages, double spaced, or the equivalent of three to four minutes speaking time. Any speeches longer than that will not be considered.

After all the submissions are in, a non-voting staff person will delete the author's names, and a committee made up of majority students, faculty and staff will review all proposals. Three to five people will then be invited to audition their speeches in front of the committee. The speaker will be selected in March.

Speeches should be of general interest; it can address impressions and experiences of the speaker, both academic and extra-curricular. The deadline is Tuesday, Feb. 12, 2002, 4:30 p.m., and submissions may be handed into Paul R. Appleby, Chair of the Student Speaker Selection Committee, 243 Lederle Lowrise. Questions can be answered at 545-3464.

– Catherine Turner

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Time for some grub

Little Jessica enjoys a hearty meal in Earthfoods.

Students of color gather to celebrate Kwanzaa

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Correspondent

Umoja, Imani, Kuumba, Nia, Ujima, Ujamaa, and Kujichagulia are the seven principles of Kwanzaa. They are the values by which Black Americans must order their relations and live their lives if they are to make decisions about their lives and begin to build a new world and a new people to develop it, according to the Kwanzaa Information Center.

Students of color observing the holiday gathered at the annual Kwanzaa celebration that was held in the Student Union Ballroom on Dec. 9. Presented by Campus Activities, the event included dinner, speeches and performances.

The night started off with the introduction by Ogbo Oruma and Ajara Bomah. Bomah outlined the basic history of the celebration and what it has come to stand for.

"It is not a replacement for Christmas," said Bomah about the African-American cultural holiday traditionally celebrated from Dec. 26 until Jan. 1 with seven principles observed on each day. "It is a celebration of heritage and culture."

She went on to give a brief overview of Kwanzaa's history noting the holiday's birth in 1966 and the social and political issues that played roles in its founding. She then handed the floor over to Delicia Tultt who sang the Black National Anthem.

This was followed by a performance by "Umoja 2," a dance group consisting of 11 children dancers and eight drummers. They gave routines of dances and songs of African origin in the spirit of Kwanzaa.

A short prayer was led before dinner was served. Audience members were invited to view the traveling 'Women of Color' exhibition on display while they ate.

Keynote speaker for the event was Sidonio Ferreira, Assistant Director of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students, CCEMBS. Ferreira used the seven principles of Kwanzaa to illustrate the everyday issues facing people of color on campus.

"A lot of the new faces on campus feel uncomfortable here," Ferreira said. "It is very important that these young folks see us in a positive light."

His speech stressed the need for the coming together of the community and the called for the unity of the minority population of the campus.

He also touched on the need to support Black businesses in the area and called for more students to be involved in organizations such as BSU, CASA and CVSA. He again underlined the need for unity by quoting Amilcar Cabral saying, "there can not be unity without struggle, and there is no struggle without unity."

Another performance was then made by the group "Project 2030," a theatrical cultural group established twenty years ago to "explore the changing demographics of the country," according to one of its members.

The traditional lighting of the seven Kwanzaa candles followed the dance, which exemplified the principles of the holiday. Different members of the organizing committee read short excerpts for each principle explaining its significance to the audience.

Bomah then defined the libation as "a traditional poem that is read to thank ancestors." Pouring water as you thank a person that has passed and saying thanks is how the ritual is practiced, according to Bomah. Audience members were then able to get up and give libation to those in their lives for whom they wanted to show appreciation.

The night came to a close by the reading of the Maya Angelou poem "Black Family Pledge."

More information about Kwanzaa and its principles, symbols and calendar of events can be found at the Kwanzaa Information Center. On the Net: http://www.melanet.com/kwanzaa/.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE IV/COLLEGIAN

It's music to our ears

This trumpeter practices in a secluded part of the FAC.

National Briefs

Arkansas

By Rebecca Worster
Arkansas Traveler (U. Arkansas)

(U-WIRE) FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Theft remains the No. 1 crime committed at the University of Arkansas, according to UAPD campus crime reports.

Burglary reports and drug and alcohol violations rank second and third.

"Most thefts are crimes of opportunities," UAPD Lt. Gary Crain said.

Although theft has been more prevalent in residence halls, parking lots and the Arkansas Union, an individual wanting to steal something will look for an opportunity anywhere, Crain said.

Reports show 250 reports of theft were filed with UAPD in 2000, 26 more than were reported in 1999. Some of the reports go unsolved, although Crain said the police department investigates every case.

When a suspect is found they may be booked in jail and face charges from both criminal courts and the UA Judicial Board if the suspect is affiliated with the UA, he said.

He also said UAPD is investigating more than one suspect at this time. These suspects include people who are part of the UA community as well as some outside it. Crain said this high lights the fact some people who steal from the campus are not associated with it.

Many daily crime summaries include thefts of items from people who have left their belongings in the HPER Building. Signs have been posted in the HPER building and other areas of campus informing students to lock up belongings.

"Our biggest push has been to educate the members of the campus," Crain said.

This education is through orientation sessions, flyers and events throughout the year.

The HPER building is one of many places targeted for theft. John Horn, facility associate director, said more than 90 percent of the objects stolen are small items such as wallets, keys and clothing. Horn said UA ID cards often are taken because they have usable Razorbucks on them.

Most items are stolen because they are left out in the open and are easy targets, Horn said. Visitors of the HPER can use free locker space if they bring their own lock or pay a small fee for a locker space.

"They just don't do it," Horn said.

Many students leave their belongings out in the open, and this is when they're stolen. Some people also leave diamond rings, credit cards and other big items out, he said.

"It doesn't happen a lot that we find the stuff," Horn said.

Rarely, they do find the remains of a ransacked wallet in trashcans or bathrooms, he said.

Sometimes stolen items are returned, but to a different place and for money. Textbooks are one of them, Union Bookstore manager Ali Sadeghi said.

"We have two people a month that get into fraudulent activity," he said. This increases at the end of the semester, when more stolen textbooks are brought in for resale. Sadeghi said the store's policy is to ask for ID with a buy-back transaction.

Irregularities are caught by the system's daily reports, he said. ID numbers appearing frequently are flagged and police investigation begins, Sadeghi said. Other cases include someone selling the same type of book twice, which might indicate a theft, he said.

Other thieves are caught by mere chance. Sadeghi said some cases have occurred where a stolen book is reported minutes after when it is sold illegally to the bookstore. This leaves a clear path to trace the transaction, Sadeghi said.

Sarah Smith, a freshman business major from Little Rock, said she always locks her doors and belongings up and has never had anything stolen from her, although she has heard of many people who have.

"We [students] were warned at Orientation and by [resident assistants] and parents," Smith said.

Theft is a problem for many colleges and universities, which also report that the majority of their crimes on campus involve stolen items.

However, numbers vary greatly and no pattern of consistency can be determined from the year 2000 reports from about 400 higher education institutions reported on the Web site www.campus-safety.org. The Web site compiles statistics from many sources, including the FBI and the Department of Education, said Howard Clery III, executive director of Safer on Campus Inc.

Enrollment, location and prestige of the institution do play a role in the amount of theft occurring. But this role seems to be a small one, even within the same state. According to the Web site, last year Arizona State University with 44,215 students had 670 reports of theft. The smaller University of Arizona with 34,326 students, had 1,047 reports. The University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, with an enrollment of 37,846 students, reported one of the largest cases of theft at 1,499. And Oklahoma State University, which is larger than the UA, reported fewer crimes than the UA. OSU had 21,014 students and 134 cases of theft, compared to 250 at the UA.

Even two-year colleges are not exempt from theft. Many colleges reported proportional thefts to college size. But Cleveland State Community College, with 3,200 students, was unlike the others. It reported one case of theft.

The rape, beating and murder of 19-year-old Jeanne Clery at a Pennsylvania college in 1986 started an Act by Congress in 1990 mandating colleges and universities provide crime reports to the Department of Education and the public.

Howard Clery III, Jeanne's brother, said in a phone interview the family learned Lehigh University where Jeanne had been murdered had not made public 38 other violent crimes. This prompted his investigation, Clery said.

"We found many universities were worried about their image and not safety," he said. This started the ball rolling for the foundation of the Safer on Campus Inc., a crime and campus legality monitoring organization.

Later, the Congress passed a law requiring public release of all crime statistics including theft. The law is called the Jeanne Clery Disclosure of Campus Security Policy and Campus Crime Statistics Act. Under the law, universities can and have been fined $25,000 for each crime they intentionally fail to make public in their campus crime reports, Howard Clery said.

California

By Karlie Reiss
Spartan Daily (San Jose State U.)

(U-WIRE) SAN JOSE, Calif. — A 23-year-old San Jose State University student died in the eighth-floor women's bathroom of Joe West Hall at 6:45 a.m. on Thursday.

Liia Ramadanoff, a Women's Studies major, collapsed after having a seizure because of medical reasons. A resident of the dorm called the University Police Department, according to Lt. Bruce Lowe.

When police arrived at the scene, Ramadanoff had a pulse, but was unresponsive, Lowe said. The officers noticed that she was having difficulty breathing, according to Lowe, and she then became unconscious.

The San Jose Fire Department stepped in and performed CPR on Ramadanoff for 30 minutes. She did not respond and was then pronounced dead at the scene, Lowe said.

Ramadanoff was born with cystic fibrosis and spent the last 10 years in and out of hospitals, leading to a lung transplant in April, said her friend Mike Corpos.

Cystic fibrosis is an inherited disease that produces a thick, sticky fluid generated in the lungs. The mucus collects, festers inside the lungs and becomes rancid.

In Ramadanoff's case, doctors identified the disease when she was young, and she was able to receive a lung transplant before the expected 20 to 25 average-age limit of the disease.

She was taking antibiotics to fight the infections that were in her lungs as well as anti-rejection medicine from her transplant, Corpos said.

The exact cause of her death was not determined, but the University Police Department concluded that it was due to a medical condition.

"I saw Liia brushing her teeth really late last night," said Sarah Ortiz, who lives down the hall from Ramadanoff. "It was like at 5 a.m. or 5:15 a.m., and that was the last time I saw her. But last night she was sitting on the floor with her friends, and her eyes were so bloodshot that it seemed like she had been crying for days."

Ramadanoff transferred to SJSU in the fall of 2000 and had resided on the eighth floor of Joe West Hall since her arrival. She made her mark by always leaving her door open and being a very enthusiastic person, Corpos said.

The atmosphere of the eighth floor on Thursday was solemn.

"Usually we wake up early and play our music really loud," Ortiz said. "This morning no one played their music. I guess out of respect for her."

Ramadanoff was from Marin County and had a close relationship with her parents.

In April, her life looked like it was going to change for the better.

"Liia wore a special pager from Stanford Medical Center that would notify her if they had a transplant for her," Corpos said.

When she was paged in April, she told Corpos and he then organized a way for her to get to the hospital.

"After the transplant, Liia loved to go out," he said. "Prior to the transplant she would get worked up, breathe heavily and begin to hyperventilate."

Ramadanoff spent several months last summer in a recovery clinic and then slowly began to go out with her friends again.

"She stayed at Stanford Medical Center for a few months in an apartment that was within walking distance of the hospital," said friend Orshi Fejer. "We (Fejer and Corpos) visited her every week after her surgery."

Her death was unexpected because of the believed success of the transplant, Corpos said.

"Liia's favorite thing to do was to go clubbing," he said. "Because now she could dance without losing her breath."

An avid fan of hip-hop, Ramadanoff joined SJSU's radio station, KSJS, in hopes of becoming a disc jockey. She was described at the station as a person who embodied the qualities of a rookie, said Nick Martinez, the station's general manager.

"We have four Liias at the station, and I had to go down the line when I first heard, because I would have never guessed it would have been her," he said. "She was always so enthusiastic and always wanted to be involved with the station."

Reese Fernando trained Ramadanoff as an Urban DJ and had her first broadcast last week.

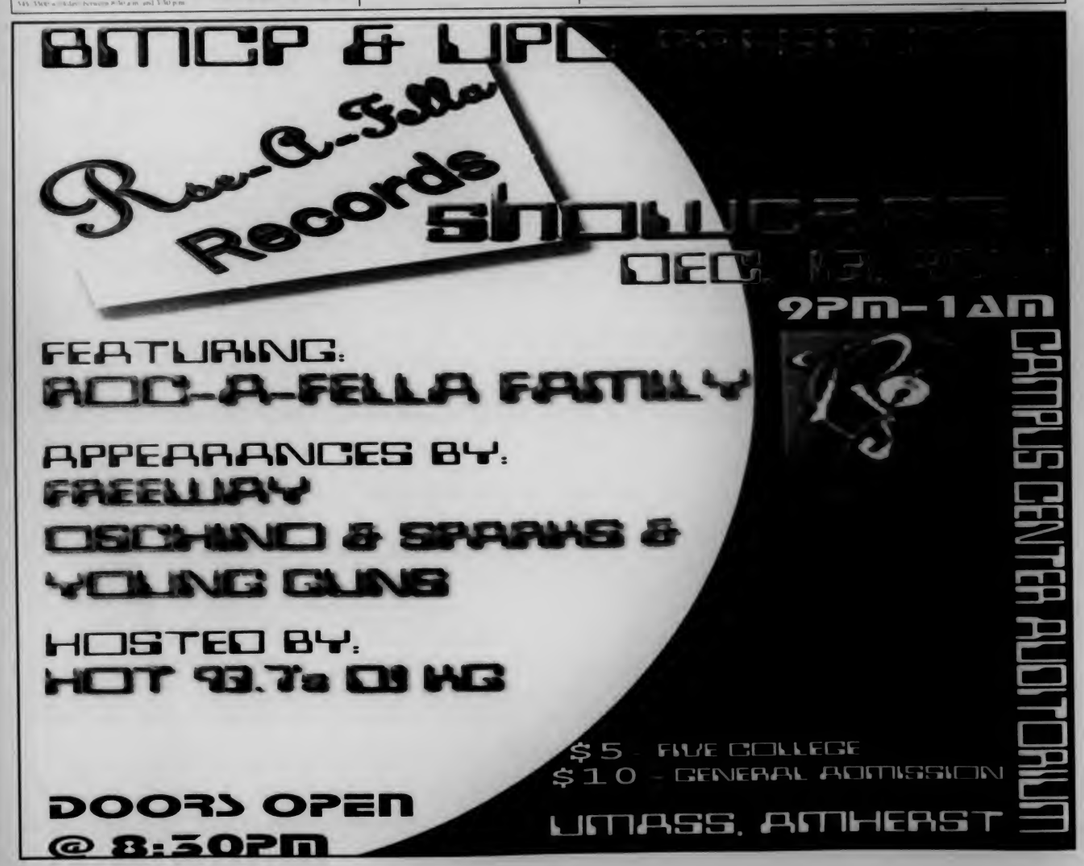
"Liia was very outgoing and was totally enthusiastic about hip-hop," Fernando said. "She was one of the most dedicated members at the station. She will be very much so missed."

She would have turned 24 on Dec. 20.

"I had already bought her present, and we scheduled a party for her before everyone left for break," Fejer said.

Corpos said that Ramadanoff knew her time was limited because of her disease, and because of her transplant she was well enough to start doing activities.

"She will be remembered as someone who put her heart into everything she did," he said.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delamo Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gárcyze-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Sadestrian Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Stanford mascot jumped at San Jose State game

By Mike Osegueda
Spartan Daily (San Jose State U.)

(U-WIRE) SAN JOSE, Calif. — A San Jose State University student tried to do something Dec. 1 that the Spartan football team could not — take down the Stanford Cardinal.

Cynthia Harrah, 20, a sophomore, hopped over the railing at Spartan Stadium at the start of halftime and tackled the Stanford mascot, a tree costume worn by 20-year-old Charles Armstrong, said Lt. Bruce Lowe of the University Police Department.

"I was jumping around," Armstrong said. "As I was spinning, I saw somebody running at me. I've been jumped several times before, so I know what it looks like. She kind of rammed into the metal frame of my costume."

Armstrong said he then put Harrah, a member of the Spartan women's soccer team, in a headlock, as she tried to punch him. He said he was hoping that security would come and escort Harrah away.

Some of the Stanford band, positioned nearby, then jumped in when security didn't arrive promptly. A member of the band, the drum major, became involved in the altercation and the three began a tussle.

"She started throwing punches and we started throwing punches," Armstrong said.

Eventually, the three of them slipped in the mud and were fighting on the ground.

Harrah declined to comment on the incident on Dec. 3.

Harrah is an SJSU scholar-athlete and was named to the Western Athletic Conference all-academic team in the 2000 season.

According to Lowe, Harrah was taken away by university police and cited with being drunk in public, a misdemeanor.

She was kept in a holding cell at the county jail, Lowe said, and then released once she had sobered up.

Armstrong said the police told him he could press charges against Harrah, but he elected not to.

"I don't care," Armstrong said. "I didn't get hurt at all. If she'd hurt my costume, then I would have been really pissed. I didn't get hurt, so I figure it was enough humiliation for her already."

Armstrong said his costume is made up vinyl, aluminum and insulated foam. It weights about 30 pounds.

Armstrong said he has been jumped at athletic events four times this season.

When the Cardinal football team played the University of Oregon, he said he was involved in three fights with fans.

Against the University of California at Berkeley, he was attacked. And he was involved in another light with the assistant coach of the Oregon State University volleyball team.

This time, Armstrong said he had no idea it was a female attacking him.

He said Harrah was wearing a hat and a hood pulled over her head.

"I didn't know it was a girl until after police took her away," Armstrong said.

Armstrong said he just tries to defend himself in incidents such as this, hoping to keep his attacker under wraps long enough for security or police to step in.

"It was just a large fray. She was startling to get free. She threw a punch at one of us. I threw a punch at one of the yell leaders, because I thought I was getting jumped from two sides."

Armstrong said he wasn't injured and hoped Harrah wasn't, either.

Lowe said he could not recall a similar incident occurring at an SJSU sporting event.

"There have been fights at football games," Lowe said. "But I don't remember anything of this nature."

Lowe said UPD doesn't have specific ways of stopping underage drinking at big events such as football games where alcohol is allowed.

It isn't possible, he said, to ask every person who appears to be near the age-limit for drinking to show proof of age at tailgates and things of that nature.

"When we see someone who is obviously under the age of 21," Lowe said, "we have probable cause to stop that person, take the alcohol and give a citation."

Lowe said the next step in the case occurs on two levels.

The university can take action, through the Student Judical Affairs department.

Harrah can also be accountable to the county's criminal justice system.

JED SWARTZ-COLLEGIAN

Walking through a winter wonderland
Snow is just one element that brings this campus to life.

Students should begin investing right now

By Dayton Wong
Ka Leo O Hawaii (U. Hawaii)

(U-WIRE) HONOLULU — When you receive a paycheck there are three things you can do with it. You can spend it, you can save it or you can invest it.

If you spend it, you will have no money. If you put it in a savings account, you will earn about 1.5 percent a year. (If you put $50 a month in a savings account at the going rate, you would have $22,714.86 in 30 years.) However, if you were to invest $50 a month in the stock market for 30 years, you could end up with more than $70,000.

Edward Jones Investing will talk about the options you have at its basic investing seminar at Campus Center room 307 on Dec. 11 at noon. Edward Jones is an investment company that serves individual investors and small business owners.

The free seminar is sponsored by the University of Hawaii at Manoa Activities Council and is open to all students, faculty and graduate students.

Rhodora Pagay, a financial advisor at Edward Jones, will talk about the benefits of investing. She will go over mutual funds, Individual Retirement Accounts (IRA), stocks, bonds and educational loans.

"It's a good opportunity for students because not too many students know about investing," said Claire dela Cruz, head of the education committee for the UH Activities Council.

Pagay said that most people don't know about investing because it's not something that's taught at home or in school.

"We are taught how to ride a bike, we are taught to do math but no one ever sits you down and says this is a bond, this is a mutual fund, this is an IRA. No one tells you that. That's what a financial advisor does," she said.

Pagay said that it is a good time to invest when you're young. The longer you have your money invested the more you will make.

"If you invest $50 a month, in 30 to 40 years you will have a lot of money," said Pagay.

If one person decided to invest $50 per month at 8 percent and another person waited 10 years to begin investing, in 20 years, the difference between the value of the two investors' accounts will be almost $20,000.

Students new to investing should start by setting aside money that they don't need.

"Set aside what you want to save, then buy stock with the rest," said Rosita Chang, professor of finance and executive director of the Asia-Pacific Financial Markets Research Center.

"Money should be split between savings and stock," said Pagay.

Students who are new to the market should diversify their investments.

Chang said the saying "don't put all your eggs in one basket" holds true for investing. She said that "you want to diversify," because you have a greater chance of success.

"Never invest in just one stock," she said. "You should have a portfolio of stocks from different industries."

Investing does have its risks. Chang said that investing in stocks is "still a better choice than other investments."

She said that if you want your money to be guaranteed then you should put your money in the bank.

"History shows that the market will go up and down but you will do well in the end because of the accumulation of money over the years," said Pagay.

Chang added that you shouldn't look at daily fluctuations because that doesn't become a loss unless you sell when it's low.

The events of Sept. 11 have caused stocks to drop and people to sell because of the damaged economy and the threat of further losses.

Pagay tells clients that they should "buy low and sell high." Taking that advice, this may be the best time to buy stocks because the prices are low.

Chang said that it makes little sense to sell when the market is down unless you really need the money.

Last news meeting of the semester tonight at 5:30. Come on! You know you wanna write!

YOU WANT TO CHANGE THINGS.

TEACH FOR AMERICA IS THE NATIONAL CORPS THAT CALLS UPON OUTSTANDING AND DIVERSE RECENT COLLEGE GRADUATES TO COMMIT TWO YEARS TO TEACH IN URBAN AND RURAL PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND BECOME LIFELONG LEADERS IN ENSURING THAT ALL OF OUR NATION'S CHILDREN HAVE AN EQUAL CHANCE IN LIFE

No previous education coursework required. Full teacher salary and benefits

TEACHFORAMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Britain has principles

U.S. pressure wrong

Great Britain has made the announcement that if its forces find Osama bin Laden before those of the United States, they will only extradite him after assurances are given that he will not face the death penalty.

This should come as no major shock, considering the legislation that the United Kingdom signed in the past. As a member that signed to the European Convention on Human Rights, Britain will not extradite suspects to another country unless they're sure that the suspect will not face execution. Period.

It doesn't matter if that suspect is Osama bin Laden, and if he's responsible for the murder of several thousand innocent Americans to them. Policy is policy. "I believe that it would be very important to respect the international legislation relevant to those circumstances," United Kingdom Secretary of Defense Geoff Hoon said in an interview yesterday.

"Those circumstances" is the dilemma that the United Kingdom faces. The pressure on them if they were to capture bin Laden would be substantial.

The pressure isn't fair. As much as many Americans would like to see Osama bin Laden swinging from a tree, if the British capture him, the United States needs to honor Britain's policies. No pressure. No strong-arm tactics. No asking them to bend/break the rules they agreed to long ago.

If Great Britain captures bin Laden and is willing to extradite him to the United States, America needs to swallow its pride and take him in under whatever rules Britain is supposed to follow.

America's first priority is to get bin Laden "off the streets," so to speak. He's a menace to the world. Tagging and bagging his body after bombing away at an Afghanistan mountain cave may be preferable to the majority of America's population, but getting him back here should be first priority. No arguments. No stupid politics. America needs to concede on this one if the situation arises. Drawing out the completion of justice that our nation is seeking by bickering with the British only prolongs getting bin Laden put away and makes our country look stupid and egotistical.

Two months ago, the Unites States openly accepted the United Kingdom's help in the "War Against Terrorism." We all proclaimed what a good nation Britain was for helping. If America didn't want the help and the complications that it offered then, it should have said something. It didn't. Britain has given of itself for America in this war. Expecting them to betray their fundamental principles is unreasonable.

Besides, there's always hope. American very well COULD be the one to catch bin Laden, right?

Staff editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

Santa isn't welcome here

MELODY ZAGAMI

Last year at the advent of the holiday season Chancellor Scott sent out a mass holiday email greeting. I'm not sure if Interim Chancellor Williams will continue this great tradition, but if she so chooses, I think we can all look forward to receiving our annual "Season's Greetings" email. You know, the one that tells you that you basically can't carry a Christmas tree, light the menorah, or sing Kwanzaa carols in front of the Campus Center. Not that you'd want to anyways but in a free country, on a free campus, you should be able to express yourself, right?

Not here. Nope. Sorry, Santa baby, but you're a fat, old, white guy that plays with elves. It's a given that your face is going to offend somebody. This isn't the Chancellor's fault. In fact, it has nothing to really do with administration. I am one of the few people that get offended by various holidays. I hate Valentine's Day – it is the blackest of days, undoubtedly. However, I do not cry out when I encounter a Valentine clutched in some classmate's hand, nor do I shudder at the sight of a bouquet of flowers.

What I want to know is how on earth is it possible that someone is offended by seeing the colors red and green or a Christmas tree? I work in an office on this campus, a very nice office in an often misunderstood and hated building where there are lines and such. A few year's ago we had to take our decorations down because an individual came in and stated that they were offended by our usage of the colors red and green and a Christmas tree in our decorating. I wasn't there. What if I was offended by his/her outdated reindeer sweater? Or his/her pairing of black shoes with white socks, giving off an offensive Michael Jacksonian "Thriller" implication, huh? I mean honestly.

Perhaps it's because I'm the daughter of an Italian father and an Irish mother who really value the holiday of Christmas. Maybe it's because I attended Catholic school for 10 years, where Christ's presence in the holiday and the colors of red and green were oh-so-prevalent. I don't know.

But honestly, it bothers me that there are not lights on the trees or wreaths on the doors. Why can't UMass look as pretty as area mall during the holiday season? The Fine Arts Center could be done up with huge red bows. "But, Mel," you're saying, "that's just tacky."

Maybe so, but it's got spirit. It's almost the middle of December and campus looks like it does any other time minus the leaves. I wouldn't know it was Christmas by looking around. In fact, hundreds, maybe even thousands, of our families would go without gifts this year if we did not have our calendars or TV Guides as reminders. We certainly can't see it in our environment. Last year's electronic memo said you can put the decorations of your denomination in your own personal space. How do we know that they won't target that next? No icicle lights in your room, no eggnog, certainly no eggnog with rum, no rare Who roast beast. I think that one night much like the Grinch (or Jim Carrey as we now call him), I will bequeath all the Christmas cheer and much needed decoration back into our UMass campus. I'm talking Christmas carolers at the steps of MacImner, Bartlett and the School of Management. "It's a Wonderful Life" will be projected onto the backside of the Campus Center Hotel. There will be gigantic, decorated Christmas trees from Lederle to Herter. Of course, I'll have to find a sleigh and a dog to staple an antler on to, but any project poses a challenge. I welcome this one with all the warmth and cheer of the holiday season.

Okay, now that I'm done bitching about the fun-sucking vampire that is political correctness, I'd like to take the rest of my space to talk about physical education. So you've made up your schedule for next semester.

You want to take it easy. You have a few tough academic classes and it just so happens you've got a little hour and a half slot that you'd like to fill with something. You're saying to yourself, "Self, hell, why don't I just sign up for one of those PE classes, Jujitsu? Social dance? Golf? The possibilities are limitless! I'll learn something new, and even get a credit. What could be better?"

I say unto thee, my naive little victim, for the love of god – do not do it. In fact, take a real course. Take a three-credit course, an engineering class will be easier and less of a hassle. If you want the credit do some volunteer work. If you want to get in shape, join a gym. If you want to actually learn jujitsu, I can't help you there. But whatever you do, do not sign up for a PE class. Here's why.

I made the horrible, horrible mistake of taking women's weight training at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. I figured I'd get up, eat my Wheaties, jog down to Boyden (ha) and start the day off right. That was a fine plan, but then I remembered a few things. One: I'm the laziest person alive. Two: I go to McMurphy's nearly every Wednesday (unless I have some troublesome academic assignment due, of course). Right away during the add/drop period I realized that signing up for it was a mistake, yet I continued to attend class. I should have seen the error of my poor scheduling.

Anyways, to make a long story short, my mom had to cancel surgery last week, so I've had to commute from home a few times. This has caused me to miss two and a half gym classes. The physical education department is going to give me an "incomplete," which is an "F" (yes, an F) factored into my grade point average until I can make up the classes next February. This is the most asinine thing I've ever heard. I've taken 4-credit journalism courses more merciful than this. I've got a real doctor's note and everything – I'm not making up an excuse. I have legal documentation.

Do not take a gym class. Spend that time sitting on the couch or in our dorm watching daytime television. Sure you won't get a credit. You might get fatter, but you'll be happy. That's all that that matters. So ends my last column for the year 2001. I wish you, dear reader, a Happy Holiday, a prosperous New Year and all the Hallmark crap you can stuff in your stocking.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

Christmas musings

Christmas is around the corner, the first snowfall of the season has come and gone, and the Fall semester is drawing to a close. This can only mean two things: my brain is completely fried from writing final papers and cramming for exams. Of course, the feeling isn't mutually exclusive. So to spare everyone the headache of trying to wade through yet another column filled with the obligatory holiday cheer Martha Stewart-style, here's a few random thoughts of mine to digest along with that last DC meal before you return to overindulge on sweet, sweet home-cooking. Call me the Grinch if you will, but random columns are always much more fun.

Speaking of the Grinch, I rented the Jim Carrey version the other night. It sucked. Why they bothered to turn the classic half-hour cartoon into a feature-length film is beyond me. It was so loosely based on Dr. Seuss's original version that the first half made no sense. And no offense to Mr. Carrey – who's a scene-stealer in any role – but my junior year high school English teacher looked much more like the Grinch than he does with all that makeup. I swear, all Mr. Mitchell had to do was slap on green paint, fur and a red hat and voila!, the Grinch in the flesh. It might have just been coincidental that he was an old grouch, too.

To see other lovable green creatures, buy Shrek 1 on for the whole family.

All I want for Christmas is my two front teeth. Wait, no, that's not right. That's at the top of a hockey stick-wielding Canuck's wish list. My bad.

Girls with purple coats rule. Just ask Shauna Billings, the Style File Mama.

I already know what I'm getting for Christmas. My mother spilled the beans (no surprise there) that my father managed to obtain tickets to The Producers, Broadway's smash hit musical starring Nathan Lane and Ferris Bueller. It scored a gazillion Tony Awards this year. Thanks, Mom. I can't wait to see it. But it's no wonder that I never believed in Santa Claus. Ever.

The Producers is based on wartime propaganda, and so are the ads for Pearl Harbor, now on DVD. They depict a few overhead shots of the missile attacks and Jon Voight as FDR proclaiming, "We are at war!" Given the pervasive pro-American attitude nowadays, this marketing gimmick is no surprise. Of course, anyone who's seen Pearl Harbor knows that Michael Bay and company reduced one of the most monumental events of the 20th century to an insipid, predictable love triangle starring Ben Affleck and Josh Hartnett – who had previously only been known as that rebel dude from The Faculty – before his big break. Amazing what a few trips to the gym and a decent haircut can do for a guy. Bonus for all the gals: Men in uniform. Sweet sassy molassy.

Hartnett can also be seen soon in Black Hawk Down, the true account of the U.S. military's botched mission in Somalia in 1993, adapted from Mark Bowden's best-seller. It was a wonderful book, so I can only hope the movie does it justice.

On my to-do list: See Ocean's Eleven, the modern remake of the original Rat Pack flick starring the most insanely beautiful cast ever assembled on-screen. George, Brad, Matt and yes, guys, Julia's thrown in there for good measure. Guys, dolls, and gambling in Vegas. Always a great show. Not only was this group able to overtake the behemoth of Harry Potter last weekend, but their one hundred watt smiles alone could light up the Christmas tree in Rockefeller Center. They could always do toothpaste commercials if their careers fall apart. Fat chance of that happening.

While we're on the topic of gorgeous people, let me add that Eric Crouch, the guy who won the Heisman Trophy, is no slouch in the looks department himself.

And while we're on the topic of movies, remakes and football, here's something I found out this past month. There are only two exceptions when it's acceptable for a guy to cry. One: when watching Brian's Song. Two: when watching the remake of Brian's Song.

Test you think all I do is watch movies and drool over attractive male celebrities, I digress. That's not all I do. I also play with Jules, my pet dwarf bunny, and sit on my ass and eat bon-bons.

Finally, I've compiled a list of a few individuals who should receive lumps of coal this year:

Osama Bubli, Enemy Numero Uno. His cave full of coal should be gift-wrapped by Uncle Sam, and then bombed to kingdom come.

Mullah Omar, Supreme leader of the Taliban falls right under bin Laden.

Britnes Spears. Call me biased, because I haven't liked the pop tart since she first crooed her way to the top, but she's easily crossed the line from nice to naughty with her latest offering. "I'm a Slave 4 U" is either an ode to the reluctant preservation of her much-publicized virginity, or a direct admittance of hypocrisy. Am was you look at it, she's a horrible role model for little girls and a pedophile's dream. Hey Britney, just how many ways can you spell dick-tease?

Bud Selig, As Commissioner of MLB, he's a disgrace. Eliminating the Twins would be dishonorable. I think the Brewers should be the ones to go. Selig needs to be "Body" slammed by Minnesota Gov. Ventura.

George Steinbrenner. The Boss will show you the money, Mr. Giambi, but there's a catch to your millions: Stipulated in your contract will be an order to liberally use a Mach 3 and stock up on Armani. Kiss your big-bad, biker dude image goodbye.

Bill O'Reilly. He practiced unfair, unethical, and unprofessional journalism in the accusations leveled at the celebrities who conducted telethons for the United Way relief fund. At least one of them had the gall to call him on it. Clooney 1, O'Reilly 0.

Charlotte Church. The 15-year old Welsh soprano may have the voice of an angel, but the remarks she allegedly made regarding the events of Sept.11 were less than saintly. Scheduled to appear on "Good Morning America" that morning, she apparently became quite upset when her performance was canceled. Since then, the little diva reportedly stated, "the people in New York are overreacting and need to get over it." Good Lord. Get over yourself, honey.

John Walker. He's the Benedict Arnold of the new millennium.

O.J. Simpson. Ok, I know he was exonerated of all charges for his "involvement" with the ecstasy ring in Florida. And perhaps the Miami P.D. does have it in for him. But since he's an accused killer and a social pariah, he automatically makes the list every year.

Robert Downey, Jr. He's dreaming of a white Christmas. Now and forever.

Tehani Schneider is a Collegian staff member.

TEHANI SCHNEIDER

Calling out Jewish supremacy

Naming an evil is the first step towards overcoming it, so it is important to publicly identify forms of hatred that are not usually acknowledged. Concepts that are widely recognized today, like white supremacy and sexual harrassment, had to be given names before they could be confronted by organized sectors of society. I want to call out another form of hatred that I hope people will start to identify: Jewish supremacy. Here is my call: the state of Israel is a Jewish supremacist state; many Americans are Jewish supremacists; Jewish supremacist ideology dominates discussion of the Israel-Palestine conflict in the United States. The vigil/political rally held at the Hillel House on Thursday was Jewish supremacist.

Let's be clear about what Jewish supremacy is. It is the belief that Jews have some special status that entitles them to privileges that other humans aren't entitled to, or the idea that Jews are better than other people. It's clear that identifying and opposing Jewish supremacy is not anti-Semitic, even though the concept is potentially of use to anti-Semites. This is a relevant consideration, since anti-Semitism is a serious problem, but I think that ultimately, the fact that Jewish supremacy exists is far better ammunition for anti-Semites than the practice of pointing it out and trying to eliminate it. So identifying and fighting Jewish supremacy, in my opinion, is not just good for the victims of this ideology, but also for the security of Jews.

Here is an example of Jewish supremacy in its less harmful form a few years ago, I spent a summer working behind the cash register at a bakery. At the time, I wore a kippa, making it obvious that I am a European Jew. A Jewish supremacist man saw me and was disturbed that a young European Jew should work at a menial job that he thought was fit for a non-Jew.

A far more serious consequence of Jewish supremacy, and the reason it needs to be identified, is the national tragedy of the Palestinians, who were driven out of their land by Zionist Jews who justified their actions by using Jewish supremacist ideology. Palestinians are divided into three populations: those who were not expelled in 1948 and remain in Israel as citizens, subjected to the harsh rule of the Jewish supremacist apartheid state; those who live in territories that were conquered in 1967, subjected to the same harsh rule but without the limited protection afforded by Israeli citizenship; and those who remain outside of historic Palestine, mostly in refugee camps.

The standard defense for Israel's refusal to allow them to return to their homes, as they are entitled to do under international law and agreements struck by Israel, is that doing so would "destroy the Jewish character of Israel". They believe recently arrived Jews don't just have a right to settle in Israel, but can also set up a state whose Jewish character is more important than the human rights of the indigenous inhabitants. Israel's "Jewish character", by the way, refers to the fact that Jews are privileged over non-Jews, not to the fact that Israel is governed by Jewish law or tradition. It isn't. The only exception is marriage law, which conveniently makes it illegal for Jews and non-Jews to marry, giving Israel one of the characteristics of classic racist states like apartheid South Africa.

The Jewish supremacist character of Israel is its essential characteristic. It is enshrined in all sorts of racial privileges in Israel's equivalent of a constitution. It cannot be challenged at the ballot box, because Israeli law does not allow political parties to advocate racial equality. It includes state-affiliated agencies like the Jewish National Fund, which administers 93% of the land in Israel (almost all of it stolen), and makes sure that none of it is sold or leased to non-Jews. It includes the police and court systems, which treat Palestinians worse than the U.S. police and courts treat African-Americans and other oppressed minorities. It is evident in the "temporary" state of emergency that since 1948 has denied Palestinians living in Israel the rights and freedoms to which the law entitles them, and in the discrimination that non-Jews face from every government agency.

If the state of Israel embodies Jewish supremacist values, then so do its supporters, or at least those who do not clearly dissociate themselves from its ideology. Such people have the job of defending their ideology cut out for them. Fortunately for them, they are assisted by the Jewish supremacist and anti-Arab culture that reigns in the U.S., especially in mainstream media. Newspaper columnists make outrageously false claims about Palestinians and the Palestinian Authority without backing them up, knowing that they're unlikely to be rebuked, let alone fired. A classic example is the lie that school textbooks printed by the Palestinian Authority inculcate hatred of Israel in Palestinian children, repeated just last week by The Boston Globe's Jeff Jacoby.

Even more common than these slanders are inaccuracies about the history of the Palestine-Israel conflict. A current favorite is the unsubstantiated myth that the last Israeli Prime Minister made an extremely generous offer to the Palestinians at the Camp David peace talks last year, but this is just one example among thousands. The Israeli version of events is almost always accepted as the reality, although disinterested inquiry usually reveals that the Palestinian version is far closer to the truth.

The usual defense of Israel's Jewish supremacy is that the Palestinians want to destroy Israel. Let's think about this argument for a minute, leaving aside any skepticism that a nation that doesn't have so much as an airport could defeat one of the world's most powerful armies, with its large arsenal of chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and its backing by the world's only superpower. In the worst plausible scenario, the Islamic organization Hamas ousts the Palestinian Authority and imposes an Islamic regime in Palestine, singling out Jews for especially harsh treatment and banishing a large number of them. The resulting situation would be a reversal of the current situation, except that the oppression would be religious in nature as opposed to racial. So the Jewish supremacist argument essentially boils down to: a Jewish supremacist state must be maintained because in the unlikely worst case scenario, Jews would be treated by Palestinian Muslims as they are treated by Jews today. This reasoning could not be accepted by any egalitarian. So the defense usually offered for Israel's Jewish supremacist character itself depends on Jewish supremacist assumptions.

Regarding the event held at Hillel on Thursday evening: it was publicized as a vigil for recent victims of terrorism and in solidarity with the State of Israel. To declare oneself in solidarity with the Jewish supremacist state without distancing oneself from this aspect of its character is to implicate oneself as a Jewish supremacist. What's more, the vigil focused on victims of acts of terror directed against Jews, despite the fact that terror aimed at Palestinians has produced far more victims. If you challenge a Jewish supremacist with this claim, they will dream up some reason for not considering Israel's unprovoked murder of civilians to be terrorism. But their real reason is that to the Jewish supremacist, victims of Israeli terrorism can't be elevated to the level of the victims of Palestinian terrorism, and an easy way to do it is to deny that the acts of violence fall into the same category.

Uri Strauss is a UMass student.

URI STRAUSS

Material Girl vs. Miss Jackson : ready to rumble

COURTESY MARIO TESTINO

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

It's difficult to imagine pop culture without Madonna or Janet Jackson. Both are, of course, two of the biggest female entertainers of our time and with such a tag the divas are constantly compared and contrasted. To underestimate the impact of either entertainer on society is to undermine their overall talent. Madonna and Jackson hit the road this year for two of the biggest concerts of their respective careers. So, with the year coming to a close, a reflective piece on the concerts seems primed and ready.

Madonna and Jackson have been prized through their flashy videos, stage spectacle and other grand gestures over songwriting craft, vocal skills and intimate reflection. It's difficult to imagine either woman would have made it if it weren't for MTV. So it is without surprise that both performers pull out all the stops in creating expensive sets, extravagant numbers and impressive choreography for their tours.

It rankled Madonna in the early 90s that while she was taking on creative challenges and catching considerable critical flak, other singers road her coattails. She always resented the fact that Jackson seemed to copy her every move, imitating the mood of her pop videos or even using a director Madonna had collaborated with. Ongoing remarks in interviews appear every once in a while demarcating the bitter battle between the two divas. All making for unimaginable tabloid fodder and hotly contested debates between fans of which artist holds more artistry.

Madonna's show was easily the hottest tour of the year. Tickets, priced as high as $250, were scarfed up in mere minutes. (Jackson's All For You show, in comparison, had difficulty selling out most of the dates.) And with good reason, as the tour was one of the best shows so far this millennium. The dazzling Drowned World Tour 2001 embodied so much emotion and character it easily puts to shame the comparatively tame Jackson show. Jackson's All for You concert was a tightly scripted and executed with the precision of a Broadway show but it was Madonna's show that held wisdom and cleverness.

Those who thought Madonna hung up her handcuffs along with the notorious Sex book should look again closely. With its themes of chaos, dominance, and, ultimately, celebration, Madonna's Drowned World explores her ever-fervid intrigue with both imposed and pious restraint.

From its futuristic techno-lighting to a breathtakingly funky set design the show was technically flawless, evidence of Madonna's perfectionist blond ambition.

The Drowned World Tour was split into four distinct chapters each portraying a distinct persona-a punk, a geisha, a cowgirl, and a ghetto-fabulous diva. Each episode was marked by a separate visual and lyric theme. Drowned World proves that Madonna is still unmatched in her ability to lift cultural iconography into the mainstream.

The Drowned World concert is entirely consistent with the themes that she has been exploring for the last twenty years, namely the relationship between the sexes, the ambiguity of gender, the unresolved conflict for women of a patriarchal society, and of being fully female and sexual while exercising complete control over her life.

Record producers Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis have helped Jackson keep up with the times sonically with settings that help downplay her vocal and songwriting weaknesses. And her themes in various albums have provided a dramatic sense of personal statement: the struggle for career independence in 1986's Control, the sexual awakening in 1993's janet., the self-affirmation of 1997's The Velvet Rope.

But where Madonna took her sexual codes and obligatory statements to the stage, Jackson left it off – losing the rhythm in her nation. There was little sense of overriding drama in the All for You tour and it left Jackson, in Madonna's cowgirl kicking dust. While hard work and determination have marked both Madonna and Jackson's careers, it was Madonna who brought those characteristics to life.

The razzle-dazzle Madonna show contained much more excitement than Jackson's show. Like every satisfying trip to the theatre, the show aimed to convey a message while it entertained. The brilliant theatrics included the 52-foot sleeve span of the geisha costume, the flying segment à la Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon battle with a samurai, the lap dance with a mechanical bull and Madonna's impressive guitar skills. All these elements never allowed the show to dull for any length of time. These absorbing elements made me feel like I was in the presence of a genuine artist, and someone who could surprise me at any moment. There were points during the All For You show where I felt like I could leave for a half-hour without missing much.

The show was also much tighter than Jackson's, moving from one performance to the next with intrinsic ease. Even during Madonna's four costume changes she didn't let her audience wait, entertaining them with newly shot videos and choreographed sequences presented by her dancers on the set's 38 video monitors. Jackson, however, left the audience waiting in the dark for a few minutes during rather lengthy costume changes.

Even more importantly, however, was the powerfully moving message that Madonna's cathartic show contained: a soul-killing obsession with success is naught without love and family. Madonna's show picked me up off my seat, shook me around, and over time made me reevaluate my own ideals. The forward thinking Madonna tour personified much more emotion that the relatively cold Jackson show. Madonna has matured significantly as a singer and songwriter in ways that Jackson hasn't. Four months after seeing the Drowned World show I continue to feel reverberations of Madonna's messages.

Madonna should also be lauded for eschewing any technical manipulation on her vocals. Although her performances didn't involve nearly as much choreography as Jackson's did, she was able to sing through her entire set whereas Jackson relied on voice-overs all too often.

Don't get me wrong, Jackson's concert was great in itself. But pitted against the grandiose Madonna show it didn't come close to matching the gusto and bravado that was the Drowned World Tour 2001. During the end of Jackson's show, we were able to see a deeper, rawer Janet. Without racing around, she could just sing; not rely on the apparent vocal enhancements that help carry her through strenuous numbers. It was also this property that helped the concert's medleys coalesce with surprising consistency.

The most memorable aspect of Jackson's show, however, was a steamy lap dance with a randomly selected audience member. Sadly it was an elaborate version of the same gimmick she has used for three tours now, and it's time to move on.

Moving on would have actually been appropriate for most of Jackson's concert. Beyond the lap dance, there really were no other outstanding points. The intricate choreography was impressive, but it was nothing more than translating the same 1980s moves (legendary as they may be) onto a 2001 stage.

Addison Grooves jams at Pearl Street

By Dave Siegel
Collegian Staff

ADDISON GROOVE PROJECT
Pearl Street
December 7

On Friday night, as the first snow of the season made its way down to the Pioneer Valley, the local Addison Groove Project were lighting it up inside the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton.

Opening the show, were the West Virginian acoustic/roots rock band The Recipe. This young seven-piece co-ed ensemble blends eclectic earthy jams with some tight bluegrass flare. With an amazingly tight rhythm section and an astounding fiddle, these guys really soared.

At a few minutes past ten o'clock, the six men that make up Addison Groove made their way to the stage to the delight of the very full Clubroom. These guys have been the beneficiaries of an amazing buzz going around the jamband scene. From their solid festival performances this past summer, they are finally beginning to draw crowds outside of New England. Gaining success and notoriety off their latest live album, titled Wicked Live, these guys are steamrolling, only being held back by the fact that all six of them are full-time college students.

Addison Groove started off their first set with an amazingly tight song "Shugy." This grooved-up funk tune showcased one of the multitudes of talents of lead man Brendan McGinn, playing trumpet. Next up was a song called "All the Boot to That," this time with Brendan on guitar and vocals. Next, the guys changed pace a little bit with the very bluesy, slower song "Divergent Perspectives." They ended the first set with another high-energy faster jam with tenor sax player Ben Groppe leading the way with an incredible dissonant jam.

After a very short break, Addison Groove re-took the stage to what definitely seemed like a smaller crowd. Either people got confused and thought it was the end of the show or maybe they just left in fear of the sloppy road conditions from the snow. Whatever the reason, they missed one hell of a set, with the band showing their versatility through a very diverse mixture of funk. Addison Groove opened the set with the fast paced "Wabadoo, Wabada," which the guys turned into a very spacey jam. I was especially excited to hear this type of jam, because they answered my own doubts about whether Addison Groove can continually step up to the challenge of playing to ever bigger rooms. With these types of spacey, grooved out jams the band allowed their music to create a much fuller sound, in contrast to their tight funkier grooves.

They played another grove track off of Wicked Live before playing the highlight of the entire show – a great funky version of "Beat Me 'til I'm Blue" driven by keyboardist Rob Marscher. Next they went into the funky archives and pulled out a Meters song "People Say." The set ended with a thunderous song showcasing the diversity of Addison Groove's sound, from a killer drum solo by Andrew Keith to the tight funky jams held together by the intricate bass work of John Hall to the blaring horn solos by Groppe, alto saxophonist Dave Adams and McGinn on both trumpet and guitar.

Overall, I felt this was a tremendous show. With the high energy bubbling over from the crowd, the band had no choice but to be pumped up for the show. I know that I for one, will be seeing these guys in the near future, possibly on New Year's Eve when they will be opening up for Strangefolk at the Worcester Palladium.

The Man Who Wasn't There triumphs quietly

COURTESY INTERNET MOVIE DATABASE

The Man Who Wasn't There stars Billy Bob Thorton and James Gandolfini.

COURTESY INTERNET MOVIE DATABASE

Billy Bob Thorton plays a barber in the newest Coen Brothers film.

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

THE MAN WHO WASN'T THERE
Starring Billy Bob Thornton, Frances McDormand and James Gandolfini
Directed by Joel Coen
Playing at Pleasant Street Theatre

The Man Who Wasn't There is the newest film from The Coen Brothers, the gifted auteurs behind last year's O Brother, Where Art Thou? and a slew of other off-the-wall, twisted films. Their latest is no exception to the rule, but the skillful direction creates a calmer, more steady progression into the absurd and dramatic than ever before. Not since their major debut film Blood Simple have the Coen Brothers crafted such a brooding and bold film that is full of life and color, even though it is filmed entirely in black and white. The plot of double-crossing, adultery and murder in the late 1940's setting are characteristics of film noir, and the Coen Brothers approach it with a mature and fond respect.

Billy Bob Thornton doesn't just play Ed Crane – he is Ed Crane, a lonely guy who works as a barber in his brother-in-law's shop. He is married to Doris (McDormand), a shallow woman who works as a bookkeeper at Nirdlinger's Department store. Crane begins to suspect that Doris is having an affair with her yappy boss Big Dave (Gandolfini) so he sets a plan to extort $10,000 from him in order to jump onboard a new business venture – dry cleaning.

When the plan backfires, as it so often does in movies like this, it sets the ball rolling to take down anyone in its path. But where The Man Who Wasn't There differs from other fare like it is that Crane remains relatively unmoved by all the misfortune occurring around him. He maintains the sulky and nonchalant look of no worries, and only gets partially excited when he takes an interest in the dry cleaning enterprise, and later on when he tries to coach a neighbor's kid to become a big time pianist. He truly means well, but his lackadaisical demeanor shows that his priorities are all out of whack. Despite Crane's misgivings, both Thornton and The Coen Brothers continually manage to leave some likable trait in Crane's character.

Crane is not far from the truth when he likens himself to a ghost, unable to be seen by anyone else. He blends into the scenery, the sharp black-and-white texture of the film, keeping a low profile from start to finish. Crane is not only the man who wasn't there, so little is known about him that he could just as well be the man who never was.

Supporting Thornton are Coen Brothers regulars, John Polito and Tony Shalhoub. The pudgy Polito fills the minimal role of Creighton Tolliver to its fullest. As the traveling entrepreneur who wants to start the dry cleaning biz, he oozes smarmy yet endearing subtlety. Shalhoub, on the other hand, is a powder keg that keeps going off, lighting up the screen with the fireworks of Sacramento lawyer Freddy Reiden-Schneider. The character is almost a complete clone of Shalhoub's performance in the Coen Brothers Barton Fink but no one could do it better than Shalhoub, so why bother? He is the complete opposite of Crane - the Hollywood lawyer against the hick from the sticks.

The cinematography of the film is brilliant, but might scare away viewers because of the common thinking that black-and-white equals a movie that isn't as good as a colorized one. The avant-garde appearance of the film makes it more haunting and sincere than would have been possible in any other format. The Coens have become known to dabble in each major film era period, and they have nailed the noir genre right on the head.

Like David Mamet and David Lynch, each Coen Brothers movie has a distinct feel to it, mostly due to the rich script. There are lines in the text that the Coen Brothers wrote in order to evoke a laugh (like when Thornton describes all the different styles of haircuts) as well as kooky and bizarre happenings such as Crane seeing a spacecraft floating over the prison he is being held in. Only the talented Coen Brothers could craft such an entertaining, and I daresay, believable story.

The Man Who Wasn't There might not wow critics like other Coen Brothers films have because of its plodding pace and unique appearance, and that is unfortunate because this is perhaps their most honest and talented work to date. Everyone involved deserves an Oscar nomination, but perhaps this might be the movie that wasn't there for the Coen Brothers.

Think T.I.N.K.

COURTESY EPITAPH

Dennis, Ludvig, Sara, Inge and Lars are here for you in their camouflage shirts and shiny, shiny pants. They're soldiers for your love.

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

THE (INTERNATIONAL) NOISE CONSPIRACY
A New Morning, Changing Weather
Burning Heart

"Distasteful ugly and cheap/ That is how you make me feel/ Capitalism stole my virginity."

Such is The (International) Noise Conspiracy at its best. Forceful in their radical politics but with an edge of humor and intelligence, set to an eminently danceable beat, "Capitalism Stole My Virginity" is the finest song T(I)NC has written yet. Dennis Lyxzen stretches the "stoooooooole" of the chorus into a drained, soulful moan and hammers the line "we're all sluts, cheap products in someone else's notebook" home not with the shattering aggression of his former band Refused, but in a hypnotic lull before ruminating on the chorus some more for the finale. Meanwhile, Sara Almgren's organ gives the proceedings a Murder City Devils-like feel and is just one more unexpected jab the song takes at ya: gloomy and foreboding but anthemic, down and dirty but sleek and stylish.

This last juxtaposition is the most interesting aspect of the Conspiracy, but also their most problematic. They're too in love with the underground to ever shed all pretension and simply Glam-out, write some killer anti-establishment pop songs, and ride the booze train into a tree (plus Dennis is straight-edge).

They're way too serious and high-minded for that. But at the same time they'll never be on stage in faded Rites of Spring t-shirts and torn jeans exalting the garage sound and selling out of their trunk. There's no fashion in that. So while both extremes are dead ends, so is the middle ground that T(I)NC occupies. This is their second album and it still feels like the band is in neutral, and outside of "Capitalism..." there's no musical evidence of a progression or expansion or tightening of their sound, just a continuation.

But at least the Noise is continuing with something worthwhile, which is more than can be said for heaps of new bands. The cool artwork, the righteous causes, the cool clothes, the dancing, the numbingly dense essay in the booklet, they're all great, but the air of hipness doesn't bleed into the music compellingly enough. The weather is great, but goes as quickly as it comes.

Mariah goes Greatest again

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

MARIAH CAREY
Greatest Hits
Columbia

If anyone is waiting for the year 2001 to pass it's got to be Mariah Carey. Her hospitalization for "extreme exhaustion" and twin flops of her movie and album Glitter created the most critically and commercially floundering year she has had since first hitting superstardom in 1990.

Now, a whole three years after Mariah Carey released her first hits package #1's, former label Columbia Records releases Carey's Greatest Hits. But Carey was barely, if at all, involved in the production. The photo on the cover sleeve is a recycled shot from the Butterfly shoot in 1997 and the collection contains no new singles and leaves off any tracks from the Glitter album.

Carey insists that #1's shouldn't be confused with a hits package because it only contains No. 1 hits while Greatest Hits contains all of her released singles, a few unreleased tracks and the No. 1 hits. Since 16 of the 28 tracks on the double-disc Greatest Hits appear on #1's one can only wonder why another hits package is really necessary, even if they are "different."

Carey was signed on to Columbia Records (an arm of Sony Records) through Sony Music chief Tommy Mottola, whom she married in 1993. After a very public breakup in 1997 success hasn't been a sweet, sweet fantasy. Behind the scenes, the split sparked angry accusations of infidelity, abusive behavior, and artistic suppression. The man who had overseen every aspect of her career was slowly drifting out of the picture and though Carey eventually took control of her career, the latter claim continues to resonate to this day.

The woman who put the D in diva slowly degenerated into a maniacal pre-2000 phenomenon. When her contract ended last year Carey signed on to a $23.5 million per album deal with Virgin, finally ending any relationship, business or otherwise, with Mottola. One more record, however, was part of her contract with Columbia and the ex-cash cow decided to release this second greatest hits compilation-one that will unlikely rejuvenate her career. Carey, in part, blames Mottola for Glitter's failure, stifling radio airplay and spreading bad buzz about the album.

All six of Carey's Columbia studio albums are represented on Greatest Hits – one last farewell to one of the biggest artists in Sony history. Greatest hits compilations often serve as a rendering of one's influence in pop culture. Unfortunately, Carey's songs have little to no content beyond love and she's had little to no impact in the culture. Trying to name three of Carey's hits off the top of your head is harder than you may think. Even worse, Carey has yet to find her theme song. Whitney Houston's is "I Will Always Love You," Celine Dion's is "My Heart Will Go On," and Madonna has many, most notably "Material Girl."

Placed in chronological order, the compilation is a reminder that Carey remains a teen pop star – a pristine pop persona fashioned from sugary ballads and girl-next-door clothes.

After closing out the 90s as the undisputed biggest selling female recording artist of the decade with 150 million albums and singles sold worldwide, singer/songwriter/producer Carey continues to remain a lightweight to her counterparts, despite her astonishing chart success.

There are many shining moments on Greatest Hits. Carey stylized dramatic pop ballads and straight up urban oriented party tunes in the 90s. "Fantasy" and "My All" stand up as the best pop tunes of the 90s. The relaxed swing of "Always Be My Baby" was a welcome relief to the power ballads of "Love Takes Time" and "Can't Let Go."

Carey isn't famous for conveying attitude or writing lyrics that reflect personal drama but appealing rather through an astonishing five-octave vocal prowess. Stirring and emotive ballads such as "Hero," a timeless classic, "Vision of Love," "I'll Be There" (featuring Trey Lorenz) are esteemed pop reflections. "Emotions," "Dreamlover," and "Honey" also represent some of the best radio hits of the last decade.

Carey clearly likes collaborations as seven tracks are duets. The biggest No. 1 hit in Billboard history with a staggering 16 week running streak, is Carey's duet with Boyz II Men on "One Sweet Day." The song reveals a breezy sexiness that Carey rarely displays. Disappointing collaborations include "When You Believe" with Whitney Houston from the Prince of Egypt soundtrack and "Thank God I Found You" featuring Joe & 98 Degrees. Both are over-emoted and all too inspiring singles that have characterized much of Carey's material. But it's the horrible So So Def Remix of "All I Want For Christmas Is You" that earns the prize as the worst collaboration on the collection.

Greatest Hits showcases Carey's primary limitation, the use of homogenous songs with pop and soul cliches. Butterfly marked Carey's first album without hubby Mottola by her side. But as Greatest Hits proves, Carey never experienced a metamorphosis. Sure Carey's got amazing pipes, but the same pallid songs have defined her career since day one. The only thing that did take wing, however, was Carey's venture into hip-hop. Her first collaboration with the Wu Tang Clan's Old Dirty Bastard not only marked a change in Carey's musical direction but also a milestone in hip-hop and pop. But eventually her excursion to the hip-hop field left her screaming wildly in the background of tracks while rappers nearly controlled the entire song. Making a few hip-hop flavored songs on her albums is fine but that's not why her fans love her. Carey is best when she really sings.

By the time the 90s had to come to a close Carey produced an unbelievable string of 15 No. 1 hits – more than any other female artist ever. Carey has co-written and co-produced all of her albums which is more than can be said about many of today's teenyboppers. In fact, aside from her chart topping cover of Jackson 5's "I'll Be There," Carey co-wrote all of her No. 1 smashes. Carey, 31, is a relatively young star who still has years to convince us she's a credible artist. Carey was named "Artist of the Decade" by the Billboard Music Awards and the Best Selling Female Artist of the Millennium by the World Music Awards. For these merits alone, Greatest Hits is a worthy pop compilation.

COURTESY CAPITOL RECORDS

Mariah Carey attempts to release another Greatest Hits album... but this one's different. She swears.

Your UMass Alumni Association wants to wish you good luck on Finals!

To do that, the Alumni Association will once again be handing out ...

FREE WATER & CANDY

in the W.E.B. Dubois Library Lobby

The Alumni Association and STARS will be there

Thursday, December 13th 2 - 4 p.m.
6 - 8 p.m.
Friday, December 14th 2 - 4 p.m.

We wish you... Good Luck on your Finals!

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS

SPIRIT FINGERS!!

Time is your most precious resource...
Invisible Typist™
is your most valuable tool...

Instantly retype previously typed words
Automatically correct spelling errors as you type
Transform your abbreviations into words or phrases

Works invisibly with any Windows® 95/98/Me/2000 application
Great for word processing, e-mail, chat, instant messaging...

Invisible Typist

Download it now from www.Quolux.com – Only $9.95

Quolux™ ~ Illuminators of Cyberspace

Quolux and Invisible Typist are trademarks of Quolux, Inc.
Windows is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist

Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

Equal Opportunity Employer

OXFORD SUMMER SEMINAR

COURSES INCLUDE
BRITISH LITERATURE & HISTORY
INTERNATIONAL POLITICS AND LAW
CREATIVE WRITING
FILM

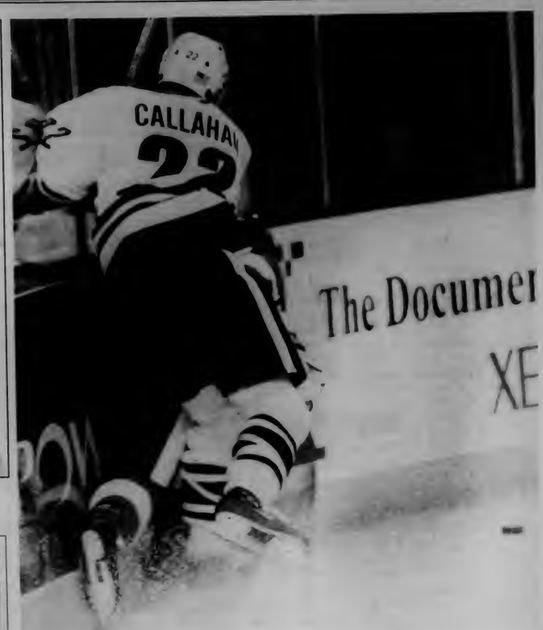
JUNE 30 - AUGUST 9, 2002
INFORMATIONAL MEETING

There will be an informational meeting on Tuesday, December 11 at 4:30pm in the Campus Center room 904-08 concerning the UMass Oxford Summer Seminar 2002. The Oxford Summer Seminar is a residential academic program that offers students up to seven credits for courses taken at Trinity College, Oxford University. The Seminar Fee of $4350 includes room, board and tuition for the six weeks (financial aid is available to UMass students).

545-1914
WWW.UMASS.EDU/OXFORD

MASSMUTUAL GAME

GO UMass BEAT UCONN!



STUDENTS: Look for these signs tonight on your seats, and hold them high when the UConn starting-lineup is announced.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

In your house

Raheim Lamb and the UMass men's hoop team host UConn tonight at 9 p.m. in the Mullins Center in a nationally televised game on ESPN.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Jimmy Callahan crushes a BU Terrier.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

In the third, with the Minutemen clinging to a 2-1 lead, senior captain Toni Soderholm attempted a crossing pass to defensive partner Randy Drohan, but the pass went awry and Brian Collins scooped up the loose puck and juked around Mike Johnson to knot the game.

"It was a pretty simple play," Cahoun said. "It was a bad decision and a bad play."

Just 26 seconds later, Dumont picked up the puck at the right point and threw a high shot toward the net. Senior Jack Baker was crossing in front of the net, and tipped it over Johnson's glove to give BU the 3-2 triumph.

On Friday, the Minutemen were slow out of the gates, and spotted their guests to a sloppy 2-0 lead. In the second, Nick Kuiper made a brilliant play on the man advantage at the right point. With a defender between he and the net, Kuiper patiently skated in on the right side and fed a perfect centering pass to freshman Tim Vitek for the goal.

Under four minutes later, the Minutemen knotted the game when sophomore Scott Horvath took a crossing pass from Peter Trovato and blasted the puck through the five-hole, sending the Mullins Center crowd to its feet.

With less than two minutes to go in the third, Jimmy Callahan was whistled for a retaliation penalty following contact with Frantisek Skladany. With Callahan in the box, Bryan Miller fired a shot from the left point, and on the rebound, Justin Maiser slid the puck to Mike Pandolfo, who notched the game-winner at 19:35.

"We took a lot of stupid penalties," Cahoon said. "And these are older kids who should know better than taking these penalties."

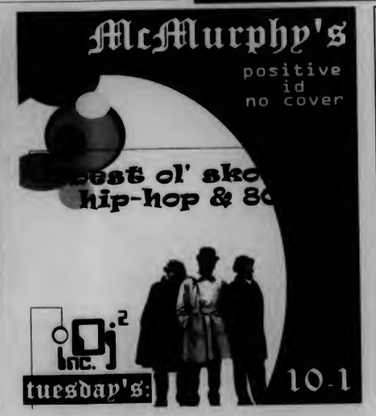
The Terriers added two more goals to ice the victory, but Parker was far from happy with his team's thoroughness in the first stanza.

"I was pretty happy with my team in the first two periods and although we got a some goals, I was really disappointed in my team in the third period," he said. "I thought we played pretty well until the last ten minutes and then I thought we stunk."

For Cahoon, the weekend as a whole summed up what was a somewhat disappointing first half in which the Minutemen suffered tough loss after tough loss.

"I don't know what benefit there is from losing games except making me sick to my stomach."

BE A SUPER FAN. LEAD THIS CHEER.



Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
- Only professional school in Western MA
- Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
- National certification in alcohol awareness
- Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
- Special UMass student discount
- Conveniently located in West Springfield

Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Tickets & Showtimes now on your Pda @ cinemark.com

TUESDAY 12/11/01
Atlantis is located behind Antonio's pizza
21+ drink specials all night

McMurphy's
positive id no cover hip-hop & 8
tuesday's:
10-1

UMass Winter Semi-Formal
Celebrate the end of the semester!
SNOW BALL
Friday, Dec. 14, 2001
7:00p.m. - 12:45a.m.
Peking Garden on Rt. 9
DJ, Dancing, Dinner and Cash Bar!
(Positive ID Required)
Tickets are only $20
$25 at the door
On Sale now...
at the Campus Center Concourse STARS table

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

announcements

The sisters of Sigma Phi Zeta would like to congratulate the Theta Beta class: Jennifer Sun, Xixi Chen, Ruchika Misra, Tanya Yee, Melissa Chan, Dao Nguyen, Mary Grace Gorospe. Welcome to the family. We love you all

GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! INFORMATION SESIONS WEDNESDAYS OR THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 IN 614 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351

Interested in rushing next semester? Come help the sisters of alpha Chi Omega decorate candygrams and see what we're all about. Thursday, December 13 at 6pm. Call 549-8459 if you have any questions

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom 2 Bath apt. Available 1/1 great location. Call 256-4135

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline great location. Available Jan 1. call Adrena 413-397-0978

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Mazda MX6 A/C, CD changer, power windows, sun roof. $2000. Call 219-7730

90 Subaru Legacy Wagon 117k $2000 Call 586-8412

'93 Ford Taurus GL Sedan, auto transmission, front wheel drive, 58,300 miles. AC, excellent tires, power steering/windows/door locks, $3,500, 253-7026

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K. CD player, leather interior. Great Condition $6500 O/B/O. 413-256-1989

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490 $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Administrative Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

Sales Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS
Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 17th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

15 Inch Monitor excellent condition. Asking for $80 price negotiable. Call 6-2536

Klimax Skiboards $100 Salomon Equipe Boots (13s), skis (190s), polls, bag. Call Justin 546-0679

For sale Twin bed & frame $70. Fan w/ remote $20. Call 256-3951

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

Two furnished rooms available in a family house. Starting January,2002. Utilities included. No lease. Call Agnes 253-3670 for details.

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

Furnished Room all inclusive. Price nego. Available now. 253-5066 or 218-7896

Room Available for Jan. 1st walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Lantern Court on bus route. AC, DW, plenty of storage. Call 413-397-0925

TRAVEL

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.intercampus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted Models for art classes. Experience preferred. Holyoke Community College. Contact Frank Cressotti. 413-552-2489.

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

Need To Advertise?

You Have Our Number!!

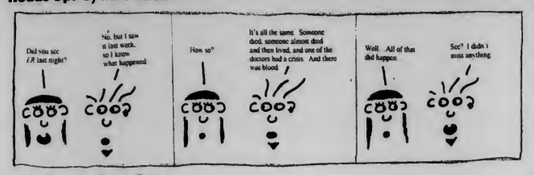
Call Today!!

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • HSCN Bulletin Board
3 • CBS 2 Hartford
4 • CBS 4 Boston
5 • ABC 40 Springfield
6 • NBC 30 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 20 Hartford
9 • HSCN New Movie Channel
10 • NBC 10 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • PBS 24 Hartford
13 • NBC 22 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 • WB 59 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • ESPN2
19 • UMTV (student Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Cable in Classl
23 • C-Span
24 • CNN
25 • CNN Headline News
26 • Lifetime
27 • USA
28 • TBS
29 • TNT
30 • A&E
31 • Discovery
32 • Noggin
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Daystar
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel



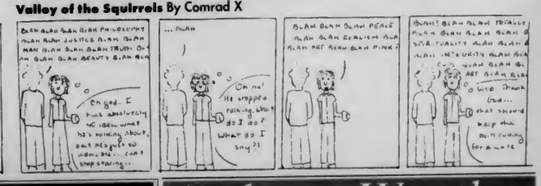
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Under the Sun By Pedro Gomes

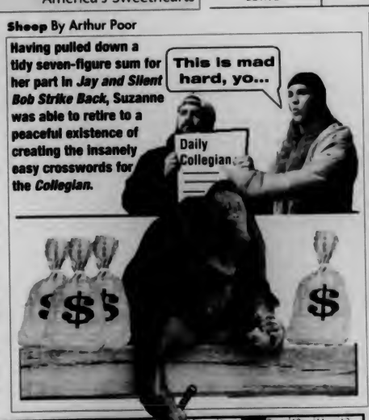
Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"So I hit him in the tray with my face."

–John Cusack
America's Sweethearts



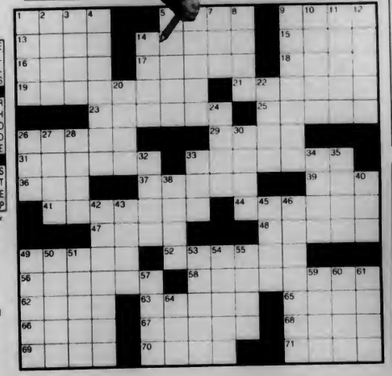
Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 27	HIGH: 49 LOW: 35	HIGH: 45 LOW: 29

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can enjoy the sights and sounds around you today without feeling that you have to be anywhere else. Because you don't. Your friends actually left for the mall without you.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Dole out to others what they need in equal measure to that which they merely want. You're in a position to do what is required in both fashions. Or you could just be selfish, but you do that anyway.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Now is the time for you to stress those things that provide you with personal strength and enjoyment. Have all the sex and drink all the beer you want.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Someone is trying to tell you something that is quite personal, but you've not been receptive. Today, try lending a more sympathetic ear. Or don't.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care that you aren't so busy "feeling" that you forget to think. A combination of heart and mind are essential to your success today.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – What is it that your fear about things that you were used to in the recent past? Nothing has changed that dramatically; get over it!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may have to share the stage today with someone who doesn't do things in a way that meshes with your methods. Motives, too, are different.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can afford to be a little more bold and courageous throughout the day. Why let the same old restrictions hold you back?
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – No one is likely to read you like a book today. You're going to want to remain rather aloof for whatever reason, thinking yourself safer that way.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Others are likely to gravitate toward you all day long. Be sure you know how to channel such attention, or it may prove a burden.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take care that you aren't so free with your opinions that people stop caring what you think. If you speak, you want it to have an impact.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Take care that you don't get so self-indulgent and esoteric today that others don't know what you're going on about. Communication is key.

Sheep By Arthur Poor



ACROSS
1 Frog's home
5 Fly attempt
9 TV hookups
13 Aroma
14 Running late
15 Pavarotti piece
16 Singer Turner
17 Dazzle
18 Mountain passes
19 Highway clearer
21 Fines up, as oncors
23 Setting
25 Distrustful
26 Balks
29 "Rag Mop" brothers
31 Ben Kingsley film
33 Welcomer
36 Tunnel builders' need
37 Aims
39 Big Ben three
41 Globs
44 Overwhelming fear
47 Psychics may see it
48 Red vegetables
49 Bumps on a frog
52 Cowboys' ropes
56 Mystery writer Christie
58 Renovation
62 Fruit or bird
63 Excuse
65 Clothier Strauss
66 Mo. expense
67 Stormed about
68 Were rivals
69 And
70 Flat broke
71 "So what — is new?"

DOWN
1 Food cookers
2 Ymr's defeater
3 Off-limits item
4 Spoke like Miss Scarlet
5 Mead's island
6 Fish net
7 Woodworking tool
8 Brief farewells
9 Sketchiest
10 Box
11 Mellower
12 Brash
14 Baby soother
20 Luxurious
22 Out of the wind
24 — of Greystoke: Tarzan
26 Pvt.'s boss
27 On — : available
28 Division word
30 Webbing
32 Borodin prince
33 — up 'til the tank
34 Patrick's domain
35 Brawl
38 Milky gemstone
40 Treasury dept.
42 Trellis
43 Sumptuous
45 Reed instrument
46 Clear up
49 Rouses
50 Limber
51 Less cooked
53 Friend
54 One-edged sword
55 Warehouse pallet
57 Org. for over 50s
59 Nun's apparel
60 Nights, in classifieds
61 Go on horseback
64 — -Tse

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

E	G	G		S	U	M	O		S	W	E	D	E
W	A	R	P		T	R	A	P		P	A	N	E	L
E	V	E	R	A	B	L	E		I	D	Y	L	L
R	E	G	A	T	T	A		C	E	R	E	A	L	S
			Y	O	U	N	G		N	E	D
A	M	P	E	R	E		R	E	T	A	I	L	E	R
P	E	E	R	S		D	I	N	E		N	O	A	H
A	D	S		O	R	A	T	O	R	S		P	R	O
R	I	C	E		A	M	T	S		T	R	E	N	D
T	A	I	L	P	I	P	E		M	O	U	S	S	E
			E	A	T		D	O	O	M	S
R	E	P	A	S	T	S		L	A	P	T	O	P	S
C	L	I	N	T		K	I	L	N		E	M	I	T
M	I	N	O	R		E	R	I	E		D	I	C	E
P	E	A	R	Y		W	E	E	D		T	A	P

11-23-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Ragout

Potato Pancakes

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan)

DINNER

Chicken Pot Pie with Crust

Cod with Creole Sauce

Vegetable Stir Fry with Tofu (vegan)

California Quiche (vegetarian)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician: Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor: Matthew F. Sacco
Production Supervisor: Mike Kulak
Production Staff: Jess May, Cara Horowitz

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

BORDER WAR

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks battles with Marcus Cox here in last year's MassMutual "U" Game at Hartford Civic Center. Since then, Cox has transferred from UConn to the Minutemen, but under NCAA rules has to sit out this season

Rivals UMass, UConn square off at Mullins

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

This isn't anything new for Steve Lappas.

"I've been in a couple of [rivalry games]," the UMass skipper said last night after his weekly radio show on WHMP. "At Manhattan it was Manhattan-Fordham. At Villanova it was Villanova-St. Joe's. In both cases a lot of the families where some kids would go to Manhattan, some would go to Fordham. Some would go to St. Joe's, some would go to Villanova. And I guess there's a lot of families that had kids go to UMass and kids go to UConn.

"So it's that kind of rivalry."

Coming off its 80-78 heartbreaker at No. 13 Boston College, the Massachusetts men's basketball team hosts Connecticut in the sixth annual MassMutual "U" Game tonight at 9 p.m. at the Mullins Center in what looks to be UMass' first sellout since Feb. 17 versus Temple last season. As of last night, only 900 tickets remained to be sold.

UConn has won the last 10 meetings between these two schools and comes in 4-1, just off an 80-44 blowout of Northeastern Saturday. The Huskies' only loss came last Monday at the MCI Center in Washington, D.C. in a 77-65 letdown to Maryland in the final of the BB&T Classic.

The Minutemen stand at 4-2 after the loss to BC Saturday and their 67-56 disappointment to Holy Cross last Tuesday. But they're ready to get things going again against their biggest rival.

"We're at home and we just lost two in a row, so we need this one bad. It's like a must win to keep us going," said Anthem Anderson who scored a team-high 19 points against the Eagles to boost his average to 9.7 points a game. "It's going to be a big game, it's going to be packed. And we'll be ready to go."

The hitch for UMass in its last two games has been its failure to put together two halves of solid play.

Saturday at Conte Forum the Maroon and White limped into the locker room down 44-21 to BC after shooting a miserable 25 percent (8-for-32) from the floor while hitting only one of its 5-point attempts. But in the second half the Minutemen turned things around, shooting 59.5 percent (22-for-37) from the field while draining 6-of-11 from behind the arc.

Against Holy Cross, UMass led 36-32 at halftime but flopped in the second stanza as the Crusaders outscored the Minutemen 35-20 to pull out the upset.

"Everybody just has to come and play hard," said Anderson, who is averaging 33 minutes a game at the point. "At times when we're not hitting shots, we'll come down and slack on defense. That can't happen. Regardless if the shots are falling or not we have to stay focused and execute."

UConn floors maybe the most athletic team the Minutemen will see all season. The Huskies are like Oregon – who UMass beat 62-58 on Nov. 27 – as far as their dependence in the transition game, but overall they are more athletic and take it stronger and more often to the cylinder.

"They're not quite the 3-point shooters," said Lappas, who is 6-10 all time versus Jim Calhoun's squad. "But they run even faster and they crash the boards even better."

Lappas mentioned that stopping 6-foot-7-inch sophomore Caron Butler will be key to his team's success. On the year, Butler is leading UConn with 17.6 points a game and is pulling down 5.8 boards.

Joining Butler on the blocks is 6-foot-9-inch freshman center Emeka Okafor and the 6-foot-7-inch senior Johnnie Selvie. In last year's "U" Game, Butler and Selvie both netted 14 for the Huskies to lead them to the 82-67 triumph at the Hartford Civic Center, a loss that dropped the Minutemen to 1-6 on the season, as UConn went to 8-1.

The Huskie backcourt is led by junior Tony Robertson who is averaging 13.2 points a game and sophomore native Taliek Brown (6.0 ppg) who will battle with Anderson in the backcourt, for what could be seen as a long-awaited duel.

"I was at Adidas Camp the same year [Taliek] was, but we didn't get a chance to play each other," said Anderson, who will also see one of his old teammates tonight for the first time in a couple years.

"I'm finally get to play against someone that I know," said Anderson about UConn's Scott Hazelton, who played with him on the Mass. Wildcats in the AAU program. "It's going to be fun. I haven't seen or talked to him since our last AAU tournament."

Hoop woes continue for Minutewomen

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

What ever happened to southern hospitality?

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (1-7) found no cure for its disease during this weekend's trip South to Memphis and Arkansas-Little Rock.

Memphis	67
UMass	56
Little Rock	70
UMass	65

A 16-8 run to start the second half and 30 trips to the free throw line propelled Memphis to a comeback victory over the Minutewomen Sunday afternoon.

"A win is a win," Head Coach Joye Lee-McNelis said. "It wasn't a pretty win, but it has been a long time since we were able to pick up a victory. We really needed this to boost our confidence a bit. UMass is a good team, and they have some big players. I think we got a little intimidated by their size early on."

After holding a three-point, 28-25 lead at the half, the Maroon and White fell to the Lady Tigers, 67-56. Junior Jen Butler led the way in the first half, scoring seven points and tallying three steals.

The shooting, rebounding and turnovers were relatively even in the contest. The advantage for the Dixieland squad was that its players took 22 more free throw attempts than the opposition. In games that close throughout, those extra shots make all the difference.

Memphis' Victoria Crawford shot 13-for-15 from the charity stripe and was the game's high-scorer with 19. But it was her teammate, Princess Swilley who set the tone for the Lady Tigers. The sophomore scored 18 points, hauled down six rebounds (all offensive), and dished out three assists in the win.

The win snapped a three-game losing streak for Memphis while extending UMass' own streak to four games, its longest of the season.

*****

The Minutewomen haven't been having any luck in overtime this year. Friday marked the third time in eight games that the team has ventured into overtime, and it has lost each one.

Arkansas-Little Rock's phenomenal freshman, Darci Cassidy, scored 24 points (10 in the extra frame) to lead the Trojans to a 70-65 victory over the Maroon and White.

A three-pointer by Ebony Pegues with two seconds remaining in regulation forced the overtime period. The trey was Pegues' second game-tying buzzer beater of the season. The junior went coast-to-coast to score a floater that sent the Nov. 23 Rice game into overtime. That contest went three extra periods before Rice finally prevailed.

Junior Siiri Liivandi put the Maroon and White up by two early in overtime, but a Cassidy three sparked an 8-0 run by the Trojans. Cassidy scored all but one of Arkansas' points in OT.

Pegues scored a career-high 19 points on the night by taking the term "shooting guard" literally. The Columbus, Ohio native took twice as many shots from the field (23) as any other player on both teams. Pegues also grabbed five rebounds and committed five turnovers.

Sophomore Paige Harris scored six points and grabbed four rebounds in just seven minutes of play. All of No. 11's field goal attempts (2-for-5) were from beyond the three-point line, including one with just four seconds left in the first half to send the Maroon and White into the locker room with a 33-32 lead.

Liivandi and freshman Katie Nelson each scored 10 points in the effort. Nelson played 40 of the contest's 45 minutes and shot 5-for-6 from beyond the arc.

The Minutewomen's free throw woes continued Friday. Butler and Liivandi shot a combined 4-for-15 from the line. The Trojans' free throw percentage (77.8) was exactly two times better than UMass' (38.9).

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Amber Sneed

Terriers run around Mass Attack

Hockey drops sixth straight in Hockey East

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Sometimes it just seems like no matter how much things change, the more they stay the same.

The Massachusetts hockey team dropped a pair of games to Hockey East power Boston University this weekend, falling into a tie for eighth place in conference. UMass now holds a 2-28-0 mark all time against the Terriers, and have not won against them in Boston since 1920. The Terriers topped their hosts at the Mullins Center on Friday 5-2, then used a late comeback to thwart the Minutemen 5-2 on Sunday.

BU	3
UMass	2
BU	5
UMass	2

The weekend pushed the Maroon and White's overall losing streak to four games and conference skid to six in a row going into the winter recess. UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon was beside himself following Sunday's loss.

"If I understood what was going through the minds of my players, I'd be an absolute genius," he said. "I'm trying to have some effect on what's going through their minds. I'm going out of my friggin' mind right now."

Sunday's game was typical of the UMass-BU history, as the Minutemen once again lost a one-goal heartbreaker in a game that they certainly could have won.

"This is more like the games we've played against UMass [than Friday's game]," said BU Head Coach Jack Parker, who coached Cahoon when he played for the Terriers in the early 70s. "It's amazing we've got the record against them we do, because we've had so many one-goal, close games."

The Minutemen looked like they might fall behind early in the contest, while sitting shorthanded following Sami Jalkanen's interference penalty at 5:49 of the first. But freshman Greg Mauldin used his blinding speed to skate around the defense on the left side and tally his second shorthanded goal of the season at 6:56 to give the visitors a 1-0 lead.

The good fortune continued 1:09 later, just after Jalkanen got out of the penalty box. Senior Darcy King grabbed a loose puck in the defensive zone and flipped it off the boards to a streaking Jalkanen, who put a backhander between the pads of sophomore Sean Fields to stymie the Terriers.

But then, it seemed, the ghosts of Walter Brown Arena returned to haunt the Maroon and White.

BU was the beneficiary of four power plays in the middle frame, and on the fourth, senior captain Chris Dyment notched his fifth goal of the year from the left point to move the hosts within one.

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Mike Johnson didn't see the puck when this picture was taken, but he turned around a second later and covered it up.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Incubus. You want 'em, we've got 'em. Or their CD review anyway. Arts: open arms AND open eyes.

ARTS p. 5

The Minutemen kept a packed house entertained but ultimately fell to UConn in last night's annual U Game. Get the score and more in Sports.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVIII Issue 66 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, December 12, 2001

Group has triple bill for Senate

By Emily Quirk
Collegian Correspondent

Students for Sustainability (SFS) are seeking advancement in policymaking and administrative assistance as they prepare for the Faculty Senate meeting on December 13, 2001.

Graduate Student Hwei-Ling Greeny, co-coordinator of SFS, will present the council with three priorities that include the implementation of an environmental curriculum, the physical operations/ faculty planning ad hoc committee and a wallet-friendly purchasing and investing plan.

Greeny, in her proposal to the council, will recommend that the participants for each focus: Faculty Senate members, the president, board of trustees, the chancellor and the department heads, "be a part of the policy making if these efforts are to have a lasting affect."

Efforts toward the acceptance of a sustainable University include an investigation by Walter Bickford, assigned by the Environmental Protection Agency, to assess the practice and level of support for the creation of a "comprehensive Education for Sustainability Program (EFS)" through the University of Massachusetts' four campuses.

EFS, which is funded by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, and the EPA seek to educate all, "graduating future professionals, decision makers, leaders and teachers" to be "environmentally literate and responsible," Bickford said in his executive summary report.

Other accomplishments, materialized through students consist of a survey completed by 150 UMass undergraduates, regarding their knowledge of UMass' environmental procedures. Results disclosed that the majority, about 90 percent, of students knew little to nothing regarding issues ranging from the waste in the dining commons to building and ground maintenance, junior David Hess, who compiled the information explained in his report.

Whether or not the implementation of "green curriculum" will have a positive or negative affect on the University depends on the mentality of prospective students and their parents, said Greeny.

"There are two schools of thought on this subject, where one thinks if we focus our education only on sustainability then we contradict the purpose of higher education." On the contrary, Greeny continued, "the other school of thought feels Education for Sustainability will give higher education a purpose, given that there are so many environmental problems looking for solutions."

Besides the educational factor, this group wishes to address possible long-term goals such as decreasing the consumption of total and per capita energy consumption, namely the amount of coal UMass uses.

The third priority under assessment at the Faculty Senate will be the suggestion of collating the department head of purchasing and SFS, to devise a system to use more recycled paper while keeping in realistic boundaries of UMass' budget.

Senior and other co-coordinator of SFS, Michael Keeny, has been working toward such recognition since the beginning of fall.

In Keeny's original mission statement for the formation of Students for Sustainability, he said, "UMass students are consumers today and leaders tomorrow. In order to create and lead a just and sustainable society, students must study and live in an environment where sustainability is practices in all levels: education, research, campus operations and community engagement."

-Information from this article was taken from the Report on the Status of Education for Sustainability at University of Massachusetts by Walter L. Bickford, and data results of SFS's Sustainable Survey compiled by David Hess.

Fee increase causes hike in concern

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The Graduate Employment Organization is one of many areas on campus where the budget cuts are causing concern.

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Budget cuts and a fee hike are issues that have members of the University of Massachusetts community troubled, following recent approval of the actions by the Board of Trustees.

The board met in Boston Monday for an emergency meeting that would address 25.5 million dollar gaping wound in the budget of the school system in its entirety. All of the University of Massachusetts campuses as a whole will eliminate a total of 270.

For the Amherst campus, they approved a $495 mandatory fee increase effective as of Spring 2002 with a breakdown of a $230 increase in curriculum fees and a $265 service fee increase. The fee will only apply to undergraduates at the University. In addition, they recommended eliminating approximately 60 employees and eliminating 100 positions on campus. Even with this added revenue the campus will still remain nearly 15 million dollars short of its typical revenue.

The University also plans upon implementing long-term plans, which include raising charges for both room and board.

However, it is still unknown as to how this will fully affect the students at UMass in terms of both funding of student organizations and in dealing with the availability of classes.

"We really don't know how the cuts are going to affect student affairs we will have a better idea when we get a chance to sit down and evaluate the cuts," Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos explained. "We are all struggling with this the best that we can, in the end we will get through this."

Cevallos remained optimistic about the situation describing it as both a challenge and an opportunity for the University to sit down and re-evaluate spending.

Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams explained in a press release that the fee increase was a necessity because of the difficult financial times for the campus.

"We cannot continue business as usual in these unusual times," she explained. "While the cuts will be difficult the campus is committed to coming through these times positioned to continue to offer our student access to excellence."

She went on to say that while the fee helped to improve the situation, it would not be the only solution necessary.

"Even after the fee increase, the campus is still significantly out of balance," she said. "We have to consider restructuring, reallocations and substantial cuts to make up this balance."

Others also expressed doubt due to the cuts and pondered what that would mean to the future of academics.

Benjamin Balthaser, a member of the Graduate Employee Organization, a union that supports teaching assistants on campus stressed how this could possibly affect both professors and teaching assistants.

"We (TA's) are temporarily protected from losing our jobs to budget cuts because of our contract," he explained stressing that this may not always be the case. "We fear a loss in TA's and a loss in full time faculty. There is a move towards a temporary status in academic labor."

He went on to explain that the cuts in personnel would simply be bad for the students preventing them from being able to get into classes and forcing them to deal with even larger class sizes.

He did express hope that with impending cuts that the University would take a closer look at the budget situation and try to figure out what they could effectively cut.

"This is bad, but we are hoping that it will force the University reevaluate its priorities," Balthaser said. "Move away from distance learning and high athletics costs."

Aaron Saunders, the Speaker of the Student Government Association and attendee at the Trustee meeting described the situation as ten times worse than

Turn to CUTS, page 3

Budget cuts keep SGA up at night

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Budget cuts, budget cuts, and more budget cuts have taken over the Student Government Association as it looks toward the future of the students at the University of Massachusetts.

An emergency meeting was called by the SGA on Dec.10 in an effort to discuss the future of UMass in direct correlation to the $495 increase that students will face this spring semester.

"We held an emergency meeting from 10p.m.until 2a.m. and we came up with a list of priorities of what could and could not be cut by the administration," Speaker Aaron Saunders said. "We then met on Dec.11 with Chancellor Marcie Williams and the Board of Trustees who held a 15 minute meeting and told us that a $495 fee increase would be in effect next semester."

Members of the executive cabinet, as well as members of the Senate, further discussed what the University could cut in relation to the budget, as well as what can not be touched by the administration as a result of the recent budget.

Members of the SGA broke down their lists of what not to be touched by the administration into three major areas of the University, Student Affairs, Administration and Finance and Academic Affairs.

Within Student Affairs, the SGA pointed out that their top priority was Financial Aid and that its service should not be touched especially due to the $495 fee increase being placed on student fees for next semester.

"Our priority has to ensure that students will have Financial Aid and that it will be available to them," Saunders said. "The University can't afford to lose any students as a result of these fee increases."

Other areas touched upon under Student Affairs was the Escort Service, Diversity outreach programs, the Dean of Students emergency loan program, Child Care, the Leadership Conference for new students and the Student Activities Trust Fund.

"Because of the budget five employees of the Presidents office will be cut as

Turn to SGA, page 3

Black Student Union presents poetry and All That Jazz

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Staff

Like a scene straight out of T Bone's or the Coyote Club in New York City, jazz and spoken word flowed freely throughout the Campus Center Auditorium and into the ears of all in attendance on Dec 10 from 6:30p.m. to 11 p.m.

All That Jazz, an open-mic event hosted by The Black Student Union, featured music, poetry and good vibes.

The night started off with a soul food dinner served to background music from a live jazz band. BSU members Franklin Onuoha and Kara Green introduced senior and secretary of diversity affairs in the Student Government Association, Chris Rue, who asked audience members to hold hands and led in prayer.

The main performer for the night was Stephanie Renee. A poet and jazz artist originally from Washington, DC, Renee now lives and works in Philadelphia. She explained her background in jazz and shared some of her past experiences that influenced her to get involved in the art.

"Incorporating hip-hop energy with jazz is what I try to do," Renee said. "And living in Philly really helped to nurture my artistic self."

Explaining about the poet community of the city, she said, "I would say about 75 percent of the poets I came across were social workers."

Most of these people, she added, used their art to help others and it is a very good outlet for pain and sorrow.

One of her performances was entitled Speeding Bullet, a poem she wrote in remembrance of her brother who had passed away.

"This poetry is like therapy for me," she said. "It helps me deal with my pain."

She also addressed the issue of hip-hop music in general. Describing it as "unsupportive," she voiced her disappointment in some modern commercialized hip-hop music.

"Jazz music, back in the day, talked about hope."

She did, however congratulate some contemporary artists such as Tribe Called Quest and Gang Starr, who use pieces from older jazz music and integrate it into their work.

The next performer, Rachelle Deleveus, was then introduced. She delivered Brown Eyes Blues, a "recently inspired poem," according to Onuoah.

Reflecting on the night's event, attendee Lawrence Waters said, "The show was very inspirational and seemed very well organized."

Former BSU president and psychology major Delicia Tuitt also performed, singing "I Am Ready For Love" by India Arie.

The original poem Intercourse, penned by sophomore Andre Cartwright, was also delivered before a short break.

The night came to a close with a performance of "At Last" by Etta James, sung by Delicia Tuitt and Keisha Hamilton.

Women's Studies class finds diversity on campus

Getting to truly know the community that surrounds any individual is an important step to becoming an active citizen, yet it is not an issue that is typically addressed in the average classroom.

However students of Woman's Studies 187H, a class taught by Professor Alexandria Deschamps, got the chance to immerse themselves in their community and discover the people around them. The project: to interview a diverse member of their community and present them in a creative way.

"We were supposed to speak to people within the University community that we thought were diverse," freshman Biology major Emily Katzman explained. "We needed to talked to someone that was not the traditional white Christian individual."

The 26-person class went out and interviewed a variety of different women on their life experiences, the obstacles that they had faced, what it was like to be from another culture yet living at UMass and any possible advice that they could give to future generations of women.

"We worked well together as a class on the assignment. It was a lot of work, a lot of confusion and a lot of choices to be made," junior astronomy major Stephanie Molak explained. "It was nice that 26 different people from different backgrounds came together and it came to this conclusion."

Following the interviews each class member took pictures of their subject and mounted them on a giant board next to information about that particular person. A sub-section of the class also put the information online so that it would be accessible to anyone that may be interested in reading about the project or seeing the results of the class.

"Everything that you see [at this exhibit] we will put online," senior computer science major Jeremy Caron explained. "Eventually it will all be linked through the woman's studies website."

-Melissa Hammel

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Agua fresca

Puddles of melting snow, formed as the weather warms following this weekend's snow, surround the bus stop at Haigis Mall.

Cultural Events Calendar

PERFORMANCES

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A Klezmer Bash will be held on Wednesday, Dec. 12 at 4:00 p.m. in Pratt Hall's McCulloch Auditorium. The Mount Holyoke Klezmer Band will perform Eastern European Jewish folk dance tunes from a nineteenth century wedding. Food will be served.

SMITH – The Smith College Gamelan Ensemble will perform traditional Javanese music on Wednesday, Dec. 12 at 8:00 p.m. in Sage Hall's Dark Recital Hall. This event is free.

UMASS – A staged reading of Adrienne Kennedy's play Sleep Deprivation Chamber will be performed at the New Africa House's Augusta Savage Gallery on Thursday, Dec. 13 at 7:00 p.m. The play, Kennedy's latest work, deals with the plight of an African American man who is beaten by a police officer. This event is free.

SMITH – Erin McKeown will perform at Davis First Floor on Thursday, Dec. 13 at 9:00 p.m. This event is free.

RELIGIOUS

UMASS – Hillel House will be holding a lock-in on Wednesday, Dec. 12, starting at 8:00 p.m. Events will include the creation of an enormous dreidel.

UMASS – "Light the Menorah" will be held on the front lawn of Hillel House at 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 12 and Thursday, Dec. 13. It will also be held at 5:30 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 14, 5:30 p.m. on Saturday, Dec. 15, and 5:00 p.m. on Sunday, Dec. 16.

UMASS – Chabad House will be holding a Chanukah Family Extravaganza on Sunday, Dec. 16 from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. The event will include music, a quiz game, a special program for kids and potato latkes. The party will coincide with the Kosher pizza and falafel generally available on Sundays.

STUDY HOURS

UMASS – Hillel House will be holding late night study hours on Sunday, Dec. 16 and Monday, Dec. 17 from 8:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. Refreshments will be provided.

PARTIES

UMASS – AASA, VSA, CSA and KSA will present Under the Mistletoe, a dinner and dance on Friday, Dec. 14 from 6:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Tickets can be purchased at HX Unlimited, as well as Amber Waves, Ichiban, and Panda East. Admission is $20 at the door, $15 in advance. Dinner will be served from 7:00 to 8:00.

AMHERST – HCAC/The Amherst Family Center will be holding a silent auction and holiday party on Thursday, Dec. 20 from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. in the Parish Hall of the North Congregational Church at North Amherst. The event will include live music and multi-ethnic refreshments. Bids are being accepted through Dec. 20. Call 549-4969 for more information. The Church is located at 1199 Pine Street, North Amherst.

LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS

UMASS – An ALANA RSO Fair will be held on Wednesday, Dec. 12 at 7:00 p.m. in the Malcolm X Center. Food will be served.

UMASS – Dr. Don Operario, a candidate for the Multi-Cultural Position in the Department of Psychology, will deliver a lecture, "Social Oppression and the Context for HIV Vulnerability: New Challenges for AIDS Prevention" on Wednesday, Dec. 12, at 12:00 p.m. in room 521B of Tobin Hall.

AMHERST – A community forum on the events of Sept. 11 and their aftermath will be held from 5:00 to 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 12, at Bangs Community Center. The Center is located at 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst.

UMASS – Becky Thompson, a professor of African-American Studies, Women's Studies, and Sociology at Simmons College, will deliver a lecture, "In the Interest of Love and Liberation: Multiracial/Antiracist Lesbian Feminist Historiography" in rooms 904-908 of the Campus Center on Thursday, Dec. 13, at 12:30 p.m. This lecture is part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lunch Lecture Series.

UMASS – The Women of Color Leadership Network will present Movers and Shakers with Johnette Ellis on Thursday, Dec 13, at 7:00 p.m. in room 203 of Wilder Hall. "Be a mover on campus; shake up the expected. Let's define or 'undefine' the word activism. Let's analyze what's really holding us down. Let's share ideas and create new ones."

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Odyssey Bookshop Mystery Book Group will discuss Marcia Muller's book Edwin of the Iron Shoes on Monday, Dec. 14 at 7:00 p.m. The Bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Author Sparkle Hayter will read from her mystery The Last Manly Man at Odyssey Bookshop on Thursday, Dec. 24 at 7:00 p.m. She will also sign copies of the novel.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating entirely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, changed its name to Aggie Voice in 1907, the Boston Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1920. Daily Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet since 1971. For more information on our advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiburu Gerczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Shear madness
Get your mane cut at the barber shop located in the Campus Center.

■ sga

continued from page 1

well as 160 faculty members of the University." Saunders said, "I didn't think it [budget cuts] would be this big. Granted the administration appreciates this $495 fee increase, they don't understand it from a students perspective and it's not fair to ask for money and create this kind of confusion for people."

Other areas the SGA is looking to preserve in light of the budget cuts are the physical plant services and campus services. Saunders explained that the University needs to ensure that maintenance and transportation for students does not change students' ways of life.

"Our buildings are in rough shape as it is and we need to make sure that they remain standing," Saunders said. "It's also important to keep things such as the PVTA running so that students who rely on the bus system for school and work will always have access to it."

Class sizes, general education course offerings and academics verse athletics were also stressed by members of the SGA. Aside from what the SGA felt should stay untouched within the University, SGA members also stressed to the administration what they felt could be subject to budget cuts.

"We have 48 police officers working on this campus in the middle of July, that is completely unnecessary," Saunders said. "If we could have contracts for just the fall through spring we could save a ton of money. We also discussed earlier athletic verse academic funding, and although we need to continue to support our varsity athletes, we need to support academics even more."

Members of the SGA further expressed the need for communication and compromise between the SGA and administration when dealing with the budget cuts' toll on the University.

"We made a commitment to the administration that we were going to communicate with one another and work together," Saunders said. "We can't control when the legislature passes their budget, but it's our job to let students know that were not taking this lightly."

As members of the Senate convene tonight for their last meeting of the semester, Paul Page, Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance, will be attending the meeting to speak to the Senate about the budget cuts and what is in store for the University.

After last week's Senate meeting and their approval of the controversial flag motion, the American Flag and State of Massachusetts flag will be flying high as well.

The Senate will be addressing the split of the Public Policy and Relation committee into two separate groups, therefore making a Public Policy committee and Public Relations committee.

Senators will also be looking at a motion proposing that Campus Activities use pro-cards as a method of purchase orders due to their ability to be more cost and time effective.

"Last week's meeting was the best meeting we've had all semester," Saunders said. "Tonight is the last meeting of the semester and we're looking to deal with a lot of stuff and wrap up the end of the year."

Tonight's Senate meeting will be held at 7:15 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center.

■ cuts

continued from page 1

the worst-case scenario. While he expressed his understanding for the increase in fees he explained that the $495 price tag was simply too much for some students to handle.

"We recognize that there is a need for some sort of increase, but $495 is too much for a student to come up with in five weeks during a recession," he explained. "Some students are going to be forced not to buy books in order to pay the fee."

He also expressed some concern that because of the increased amount some students may not be able to come back to school at all because financial aid may not have the resources to help them.

"Financial Aid is going to be hit by those students that just cannot afford the $495," he said going on to say that it may be the students without a full financial aid package that may suffer the most. "The middle class students are going to be the ones who get the bill in the mail from financial aid that says that there is no money left."

Police Log

Monday, Dec. 3

Suspicious Person/Activity
A couple of men were allegedly selling speakers from the back of a jeep on Infirmary Way 9:18 p.m. Upon arrival, responding officers found that the individuals had been checked on a previous occasion and were not doing anything illegal.

Tuesday, Dec. 4

Disturbance
Cashin residents called to request assistance removing a male from their lounge at 12:04 a.m.

Wednesday, Dec. 5

Robbery
Coolidge resident reported at 10:35 p.m. that money, a personal telephone and beer had been stolen from his room. Victim claims that suspects carried weapons and the case is still under investigation.

Thursday, Dec. 6

Annoying Behavior
Minuteman employee called the UMPD at 1:26 a.m. to report graffiti regarding his occupation found in a Brown Dormitory elevator. Reporting person said he was able to remove most of the graffiti himself and Housing was notified.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Report from Whitmore Administration Building at 7:07 a.m. that a white male entered a mechanical room in the building and locked the door behind him. Responding officers found no one on the scene.

Larceny
Faculty member reported that several items have disappeared from the labs and classrooms in Hasbrouck Laboratory, the most recent objects being two tuning forks and two 15-meter measuring tapes. There are no suspects.

Larceny
Professor reported a stolen slide projector from a conference room in the Agricultural Engineering Building. Said he left the room to make a phone call and that the projector was taken within the hour that he was gone.

Friday, Dec. 7

Suspicious Person/Activity
Report of a group of people attempting to take golf carts near Dickinson Hall at 12:02 a.m. Responding officer saw a group of males and females fleeing scene and heading south. One of the males was found with two licenses; one valid and another with an altered date of birth and license number. Person was under 21 years of age and had beer in his backpack. He was charged with possession of alcohol and misuse of a license.

Disturbance
Student security reported at 12:19 a.m. that a male was twirling a fireball outside of Gorman Dormitory and that a group of people surrounded the individual, drinking alcohol. Called again soon after to say group had dispersed.

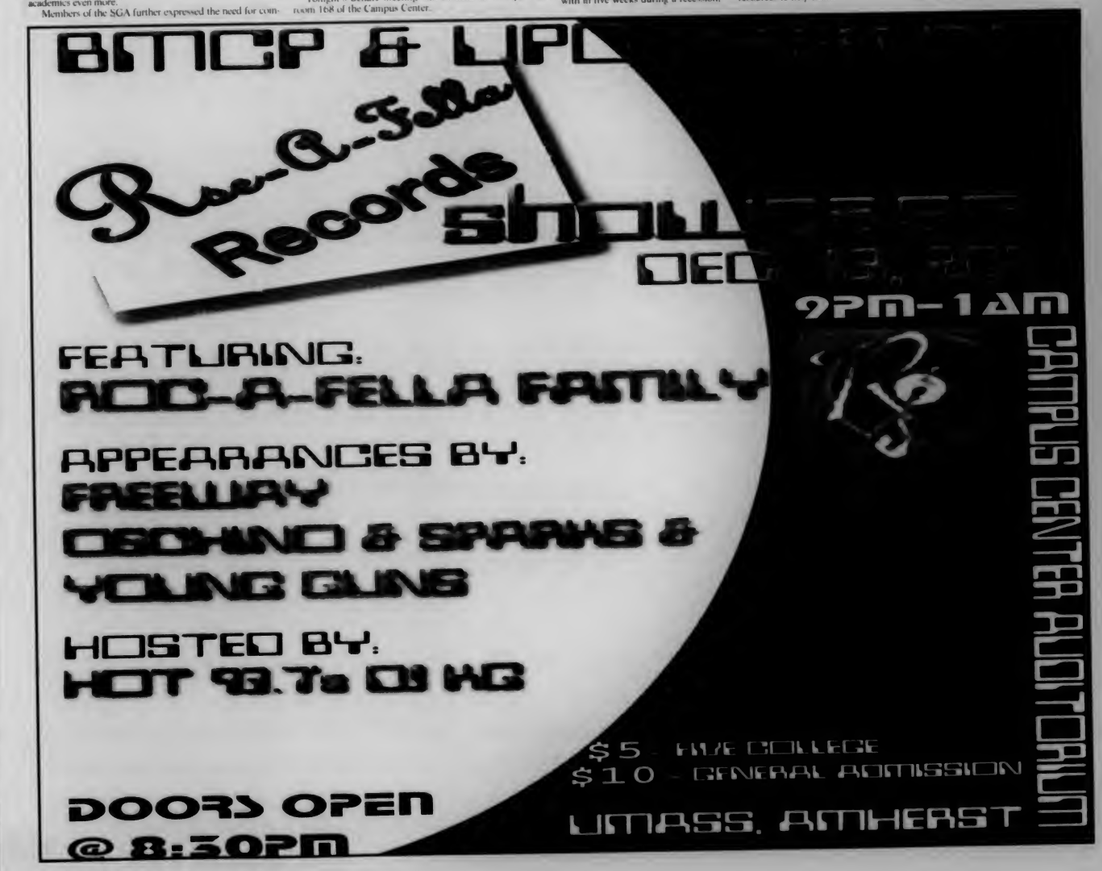
Alarm/Fire
A battery pack overheated on floor 28 of the WEB DuBois Library at 3:11 a.m. Amherst Fire Department and electrician notified.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Maintainer found a powdery substance in bathroom of Hasbrouck Laboratory. Environmental Health and Safety advised and concluded that the white powder was powdered sugar.

Larceny
Female student reported that her credit card was used to make fraudulent purchases. Prior to receiving a call from her credit card company, she was not aware that her credit card had been missing.

Larceny
Minuteman reported a $50-value magazine rack stolen from the Student Union along with old copies of the newspaper. There are no suspects.

Larceny
Pierpont resident reported at 6:18 p.m. that their laundry had been stolen. Male student said his clothes were returned the next day.



Saturday, Dec. 8

Traffic Stop
Officer saw a vehicle make an improper turn onto Lincoln Avenue at 12:23 a.m. Officer could smell alcohol on driver's breath, administered sobriety tests and charged male with operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, possession of alcohol (male is 20 years old), possession of a class D and class C drug (hashish and marijuana), operating a motor vehicle with a suspended registration, no inspection sticker and an improper turn.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Report of an individual with tools removing ceiling panels in Coolidge Dormitory at 1:59 a.m. Housing notified of damage.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Male arrested for malicious destruction of property over $250 at Lot 30 (between Crampton and Prince Halls) at 2:35 a.m. Male was witnessed breaking two driver side mirrors and alcohol was involved.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Person reported from Bodwitch Hall of a suspicious email that asked the individual to sign over the power of attorney and to send in their passport, as well as donations regarding the World Trade Center events.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Feeling the effects of more cuts. Can we graduate in four years?

The University of Massachusetts has done it again, done something once again that will affect the students in a negative way. With an increase in fees being approved at last year's trustee meeting to a tune of $500 this semester with projected increases in both housing and in the standard meal plan for next semester.

The reasoning behind these increases is simple, because of the near 20 million dollar deficit, the students at this school will once again be asked to take a hit for the money that the State doesn't have and isn't willing to pour into the campuses.

Mind you, these budget cuts are nothing that we as students are not used to dealing with. Every semester we spend our time begging to get into classes, not being allowed to take things that are required for us to graduate and seeing our options in terms of courses shrink exponentially.

Bad news has almost become an accepted and expected portion of our college lives. Two years ago, we faced a series of cuts that left each department pared down at rates of one to three percent each. Communications classes became harder and harder to get into, the Spanish department was functioning at 75 percent of their usual capacity and the English as a Second Language was cut to the point of near non-existence. The school went as far as to eliminate apparel marketing as a major and then the entire department of consumer studies.

So where does this leave us as students facing what may be the next round in a series of budget cuts? With promises of impending layoffs of faculty and staff the choice of classes will undoubtedly become even more slim. Couple that with the consistent over enrollment of incoming freshman classes and students are guaranteed to be out of a spot in most classes. What does this mean for a school in which it is already difficult to graduate in four years? Simply put, it makes it impossible.

To allow more students into already packed classes simply jeopardizes the quality of our education. Professors are already dealing with too many students per class while being put in the precarious position of turning students away that need their class to graduate. But with fewer and fewer classes available and higher influxes of students what is the other option?

To put most simply, UMass needs to find another way. Cut athletic spending, something that was found to be astronomically high anyways, or increase the amount to time soliciting donations. Just don't cut academics. For a school that supposed to be founded on a solid educational basis, this is not helping at all. As a school we can and have faced literally anything, however another cut to academics could spell disaster.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

"Once upon a time the world was sweeter than we knew." Frank remembers. Do you? Write to Ed/Op and let us know.

Deep thoughts with Sam Wilkinson

Is there anybody more excited for The Lord of The Rings than the guys in the Campus Center Basement who hit each other with fake swords?

When it comes to organizations forcing audiences into giving standing ovations to shows that don't deserve it, nobody does it better than the University of Massachusetts Theater Guild.

My friends and I started a beer museum because we don't date.

Saturday's snowfall was superb (and alliterative!).

Isn't it strange that professors on campus who claim to hate America and the American government dutifully pay their taxes each year? If they really despise all that the United States is, why fiscally support the government?

I know somebody named Erin Meaney and it always reminds me that I have never read John Irving's A Prayer for Owen Meaney.

Here's a perfect wrestling scenario as played out at UMass. Communications professor Sut Jhally is lecturing about the evils of corporate America. The lights in the hall go out momentarily and when they come back on, Jhally crony Justin Lewis is standing beside him on stage. The legions of Sut-Lewis-ites are going crazy because the terrible twosome has finally reunited to oppose corporations everywhere.

But then Lewis hits Jhally with a chair and announces that he's with the Isenberg School of Management! It'd be great.

My most recent lesson in drinking is that seven beers and seven shots of Jagermeister is a bad idea.

I'm not going to lie about it: I was on a volleyball team called UMassacre.

How about that Ebola outbreak in Gabon?

Cough.

Giving up red meat: tough thing to do.

Sometimes, I really wish that WMUA was more about students and less about making happy all of the old codgers who stole the station from the students.

If I was a performing artist, I wouldn't use Pupa Chubby as my performing name. I think I'd start with something that doesn't involve Chubby.

I wish offending people was a sport: I'd be winning with one Sut Jhally, one Amherst College, one Catholic, one Political Science department, one Intramural official, one Socialist and a partridge in a pear tree.

No matter what he does, UMass Men's Basketball coach Steve Lappas looks like a beaver.

Seriously though, Springfield's WRNX has the worst radio commercials ever.

I hope Santa Claus gives Amherst College some more money for Christmas because frankly, they're running awfully low.

Speaking of money, I really want to write a column wherein I compare a broke college student to UMass itself. Just imagine UMass at the ATM machine, punching in its pin number and praying that there is more than the low $10 withdrawal limit.

Profits from MC Hammer's new album will go to World Trade Center relief efforts – in other words, victims now have access to an additional $1.73.

Hampshire College students wear bananas in their hair and eat fried shoes.

I heard a patriotic song on the radio that turned out to be a commercial for Bob's Discount Furniture and I was reminded that the same Bob had a commercial last year promising he'd give children candy if they'd come to his store. And I remember thinking that I would never take my child to a store run by Bob who offers candy to my kids as an enticement.

Happy Holidays to everyone who celebrates a holiday and if you don't celebrate any of the winter holidays, let's band together to ruin the holidays for everyone else by crying politically correct at every wreath, ornament and menorah.

Giving up dark soda: tough thing to do.

Sometimes, I get the feeling that America is really close to something special, but then I watch Real World 37 and I know, for sure, that we aren't.

I wish offending people was a sport: I'd be winning with one Sut Jhally, one Amherst College, one Catholic, one Political Science department, one Intramural official, one Socialist and a partridge in a pear tree.

Get the shinebox Mitch.

Dan Tamberelli from The Adventures of Pete and Pete emailed me back and was a pretty nice guy about me writing about him. Of course, maybe it really wasn't him.

I think it's ironic that UMass teaches Latin still, as if it is an important language anymore. Catholic conspiracy anyone?

Holiday wishes? Sure. I truly hope that Mikey Eyes, Jimmy the Gent, Spider, Mitch the Killer, and Marie (Julie), Marie (Shauna), Marie (Amanda), and Marie (Jess) have a nice winter.

Oh yeah, and I hope the rest of you do too. Except for Sut.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the editor

To the editor:

From one skater to another: Ken Campbell's not a bad guy, he's just irritated.

I am a "non-moron skater." My skateboard is a means of transportation. Pedestrians aren't forced to dive out of my way. I actually walk at crosswalks so I have the right-of-way. Since I still fall in the ranks of the "nightmare skaters." I'd like to say a few words in our defense.

Mr. Campbell: I am one of those "rejects of healthy society" you see outside the FAC. We have no place to go; there are no skate parks around here, just as there were none near my hometown. No one wants to fund the building of a park because of the high cost of insurance, and we're either kids who aren't old enough to have jobs or college kids who have no money anyway.

There are no signs in the parking lot or the central area and the authorities only ask us to remove ourselves when there is a performance scheduled. People can cut through that specific area, we're not using the whole thing. We're not hurting anyone but ourselves with our constant mistakes and pseudo-injuries. We provide entertainment for those lonely people waiting for the next Peter Pan back to Albany, even if it is by our "follies."

I understand your position as a regular writer must be trying at times, but I don't believe you have any right to make fun of or wish harm upon skaters. We don't mock basketball players for tossing a ball through an inordinately high hoop or hockey players for their puck-shooting ways, so why mock skaters for "trying to flip their skateboards and then land on them again?" Skating is just like any other sport: it looks easy to one who has never tried it. Skateboarding requires a certain amount of concentration and I believe it gives focus to my life and to the lives of my "miniature hellions." It's far better than the alternatives. We may be on the streets and on your campus, but we are not causing trouble. Furthermore, your generalizations and stereotypes are hurtful and out of line.

And a note to my skater pals: There are signs forbidding boarding inside the covered area of the FAC, and there is a reason for that. Those tiles are loose and will catch your wheels; the one time I made the mistake of skating in there I had quite a nasty fall which ended with my head bouncing off the concrete. It should be enough that we can use the area outside the FAC. Mr. Campbell is quite right when he says that we destroy property. I look at what your wax (or Irish Spring, depending on how poor you are does to the surface. It is black and ugly, and we have no right to ruin the beauty of this campus. If you're going to tip over barrels to ollie, put 'em back when you're done. If the authorities ask you to leave somewhere, just go. It's not worth making a scene if you're not supposed to be there or if the person in question is trying to keep you from getting hurt. Remember, only your behavior can help skateboarding become a respected sport.

Teresa Liberatore
UMass undergrad

To the editor:

On December 12, 1915, the world was blessed when a young couple in Hoboken, New Jersey celebrated the birth of their son, Francis Albert Sinatra. Although Frank would become a high school dropout by the age of 15, he was destined for a life of fame and fortune. Sinatra's career took off in 1940 when he began touring with trombonist Tommy Dorsey and his band. He turned solo in 1943 and soon became a singing sensation, spending the duration of his life recording music, appearing in films and touring the world.

Sinatra won an Oscar in 1953 for his role as 'Maggio' in the film From here to Eternity. He appeared in over 50 films, including such controversial pictures as The Man with the Golden Arm and Suddenly. Most of those appearances were with his 'Rat Pack' buddies: Dean Martin, Sammy Davis, Jr., Peter Lawford and Joey Bishop. Together they made, among others, the original Ocean's 11.

Despite his death on May 14, 1998 in Los Angeles, California, songs like "New York, New York" and "My Way" will remain alive in the hearts of people around the world as they remember and reflect on the life of the singer, songwriter, actor and director. The Chairman of the Board. The Voice. Frank Sinatra.

I miss you Ole Blue Eyes.

Collette Wieland
UMass undergrad

www.dailycollegian.com

Listen to the students: Administration needs to pay attention

LAURA KYSER

At the student government meeting last Wednesday, hot topics were bountiful, from displaying flags at senate meetings to RSO funding. On everyone's mind and tongue were the recent budget cuts. Last Tuesday, the Collegian printed an editorial about the cuts to higher education by our state legislature with this message: we can squeeze for now, but we can't squeeze much further.

The student government association addressed the issue at Wednesday's meeting. They voted to raise the student activity fee a few dollars as recommended by a student-wide referendum, to fund more RSO activists and events. And they cut SCERA.

SCERA, "Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy," in the past, has been the organizing and advocacy arm of the Student Government Association. In 1995, SCERA won a $15 million dollar increase for the UMass system. In 1996, SCERA succeeded nationally in securing financial aid when student grants and loans were under attack in Congress. The same year, SCERA also won a one percent increase in the UMass budget through the state legislature. Admittedly, the past year, SCERA has produced little and has had little direction, testified Jason Malstrom, a leader on the motion to hire a new SCERA director with the $8,000 that has already been allotted to SCERA.

Well, answered Gabe Tavarez and most of the SGA, then $8,000 is too much money. We need that money for RSO programs. They felt that we need to cut down now with the budget cuts that the University is facing. We need to squeeze every penny we can, said the student government. We can let the money allocated to SCERA roll over and use the money next year.

The squeezing solution is backward; it's reactive. What are we going to do when the legislature decides to cut the higher education budget again next year, like they've been doing for as long as I've been attending UMass?

"And do we really want the administration lobbying on our behalf as students? Considering the growing administration and the shrinking programs, I wouldn't want anyone but students speaking on my behalf."

What are students who depend on financial aid going to do when the state legislature cuts money again next year? What will happen to the Spanish department and its students as its funding is continually hacked? What are the student groups going to do without funding?

Squeezing, grinning and bearing are not long-term solutions. We need to be working proactively. We need to be in our legislators' faces, telling them how much this University means to us. We need to be more than individual students – imagine the power we could have with an organized effort – 20,000 students at UMass-Amherst, and many more students at other UMass campuses and public schools. The student government says the university administration hires lobbyists "for that."

Legislators aren't interested in administration; they're interested in residents. They see lawyers from corporations all the time. And do we really want the administration lobbying on our behalf as students? Considering the growing administration and the shrinking programs, I wouldn't want anyone but students speaking on my behalf. Can you imagine a day where students from UMass and other public schools went to Boston to talk to their legislators one-on-one about their issues – "lobbying" them? I would be amazed to be a part of that – but unfortunately, I don't know how to lobby. I don't know how to even set up an appointment with my representative. And, no matter how many times I watch the School Bus Specials, I don't even know how a bill becomes a law.

But if we could hire, together, someone who knew all of this and could teach us, someone who could help us make the legislators listen to students – if $8,000 is all it would take to avoid a $20 million cut, I would run to stand in line to pay my $35 activities fee.

Laura Kyser is a UMass student.

Picasso's amusing take on modernism

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

PICASSO AT THE LAPIN AGILE
Student Union Ballroom
Dec. 6, 7, 8

In the moment before something extraordinary happens, a certain electricity is palpable in the very air. Steve Martin (yes, that Steve Martin) tapped into that for his one-act Picasso at the Lapin Agile, performed over the weekend by the University of Massachusetts Theatre Guild.

Martin has devised the encounter of Albert Einstein and Pablo Picasso as young men. The setting is 1904, before the publication of the theory of relativity and the painting of what may very well be the seminal work of cubism, "Les Demoiselles d'Avignon." The moment here is the beginning of the 20 century, in the beginning of modernism.

Martin hasn't consiructed a plot so much as a meeting of minds, and the resulting clash and occasional harmony of ideas. The script is peppered with plenty of accessible in-jokes, revealing both his famous humor and his formidable knowledge of art. For instance, Picasso is mentioned as being fond of blue. When the barkeep just can't believe Einstein is in his bar, the budding scientist tousles his slicked-back hair to become the wild-haired Einstein we all know and love.

Much of the script's humor comes from Martin's ability to jump in and out of 1904, drawing on a contemporary audience's knowledge, while still keeping his story coherent. There is a draw-off between the arrogant Picasso and the confident Einstein. The artist says that his work will change the world, and Einstein, slighted, asks if his won't. This technique is used most hilariously in the form of Charles Schmendiman, played here by a manic Daniel Bloom, who insists that his invention of "a very brittle and inflexible building material" will change the century.

But the reason Picasso is so fun is the same reason that Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure is: the incarnation of famous historical figures. As Einstein, Ryan Murphy is timid at first, but grows into his role as it progresses. He's at his best when really fired up about his work.

Despite the meeting of science and art, this is, finally, an art lover's show. Names and style periods are casually dropped (references to masters like El Greco, Courbet and Velazquez abound, and Germaine and Freddy argue over whether her Romanticism is Post- or Neo-). Martin clearly cares deeply about his subject. He makes Picasso not a caricature, but a person, replete with the necessary subtleties and ambivalence. For instance, the artist isn't as cocky as he might seem: he has both a profound love and obsessive envy of his established contemporary Matisse.

As such a show, it belongs to Picasso. Played by Chamaio Cheyenne-Rindge, he dominates the stage with a suave physical presence and charm. He manipulates the young Suzanne, whom he has hitherto slept with, into forgiving him after he forgets her completely. Suzanne is played by a markedly awkward Franny Murphy. Normally, seeing the famous womanizer in action would be entertaining, but Murphy makes one pray for the end of their affair.

The Lapin Agile is the kind of fin de siecle bohemian dive that artistic types frequent. The eponymous artist doesn't arrive on the scene for a while, though. But in the interim, Picasso is not without interest. Einstein gets the chance to shine without being overwhelmed by Picasso's looming shadow. And the audience can become acquainted with the most charming of the characters: the lovable old French curmudgeon Gaston, played by Michael Carr with a perfect mixture of grouchy and amiable. Gaston's regularity makes the Lapin Agile seem as comfortingly familiar as "Cheers."

The thoroughly anachronistic art dealer Sagot hangs about like a leech, waiting for artists that he might profit on. His entire character seems to be a warning from Martin (an art collector himself) about what happens when a good art dealer grows cynical. Chris Sullivan makes perhaps the strangest acting choice in this production, as his Sagot is as greasy and untrustworthy as a used car salesman. He would need to be art savvy to recognize Picasso's early greatness, but Sullivan makes none of his art acuity apparent.

Freddy is the good-natured bartender and owner. Andy Hobgood is competent in the role, but makes it clear that he's been listening to or watching Martin: his inflection is often an exact replica of the comedian's. Germaine, Freddy's lover and employee, is the more urbane of the couple. Despite the general exclusion of

Turn to PICASSO, page 6

Pablo Picasso's "Les Demoiselles d'Avignon."

Fortunate find mixes songs and styles

Alana Davis will sing her way to your heart on her new album.

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

ALANA DAVIS
Fortune Cookies
Elektra Records

When Alana Davis's first album Blame It On Me came out in 1997, it emerged to very little fanfare. I only caught onto her when I saw her as part of a music festival the summer of its release. I ured in by her warm, rich vibes in concert, the CD captured the same subtly beautiful vocals over its 12 charming tracks.

Unfortunately, though, only one song caught the attention of commercial radio, but "32 Flavors" did not linger long before being shelved, and it was a song that did not fairly display Davis's talent like the other tracks did more clearly. While some people may recall the tune still, it is likely that they don't connect it with the name Alana Davis, it being one of those songs that most likely fell into the haze of the late 1990s girl-rock.

Four years is typically a long time to wait before releasing a sophomore album, and I would be lying if I once thought that maybe I had given Davis too much credit as a musician. However, in the interim between her debut and the new Fortune Cookies, Davis has grown as an artist and created an album that makes the wait well worthwhile, which is more than can be said about many other performers' follow-ups.

Granted, commercial radio is not a fair beacon to judge good music nowadays, but weeks before Cookies was released, they were already playing "I Want You," a quality, effervescent and care-free song with a bubblegum hook that will certainly be among the most well-known refrains from the songs on the album. Davis's serene yet strong voice makes repeating something as simple, yet conceivably annoying, as "You do, you do..." eight times in a row an enjoyable listening experience. The song, written by Third Eye Blind's Stephen Jenkins, is a hearty introduction to the young songbird for the general public who are generally unfamiliar with her.

"I Want You" is only the tasty shell of Fortune Cookies and when you break it open, there's more wealth left inside. Notably, "How Many of Us Have Them (Friends)," a song originally penned by the band Whodini, but one which Davis combines old school rap sensibilities and the accompaniment of an acoustic guitar. Compare the be-bopping style of this song to the track that follows, "I Don't Care (Lonesome Road)," which just like its title suggests, is a striking and melancholic ballad. Davis's immediately adaptable voice gently croons and grooves along with the echoes of the back-up singers and the soothing string instruments from the orchestra underscoring her.

Davis taps into the popular R&B scene with the tune "Bye Bye," where Mary J. Blige and other current megastars set up shop. The erratic, bare-bones feel of this song shows that Davis isn't confined to just the light-rock genre that she has settled into, even though it may be her stronger side. Sizzling and sensual against the hip-hop beats, Davis's voice is more irresistible here than ever before. The song could serve as something being played at a summer backyard barbeque or for intimate encounters (despite the subject being about ditching a lover).

No matter what the topic Davis sings about, she carries off the wide vocal ranges and emotions of each song with great aplomb. The mixture of speak-song with the wide fluctuations between notes is a daunting task that Davis shows very little trouble at pulling off. If she has struggled with it, it's not noticeable.

She is never forceful, or in-your-face with her singing, and she is relatively unaided by backup singers, those that are there only adding to the breadth of the song and by no means trying to support Davis frontline.

Even with these notable tunes, where Fortune Cookies begins to show signs of breaking down is that there aren't as many tracks on this disc that are as radio-friendly as Blame It On Me. That's not to say, though, that the other songs not mentioned here are no good. Many of them are fine examples of Davis's stretch as a musician. Of major concern is the point that since many of these songs do not fit into the "mainstream" of contemporary rock, her name may continue to be filed into the obscure category.

Nevertheless, that's not necessarily a death sentence. Look at the origins of now world-famous groups Phish and Dave Matthews Band, to name just two. Davis follows somewhat in their humbly begun footsteps demonstrating that well-deserved fame, if that is indeed her destiny (as it should be), comes with time and further exploration.

Incubus proves lovelorn, Avalanches sample just about everything

Incubus looks angst-ridden about their new release.

Just tending the Incubus, mother...

INCUBUS
Morning View
Epic

Man, if I had known that Morning View was gonna turn out like this, I would have sent Terry Bradshaw and Chuck Zito over to the studio/house where Incubus was recording so they could detonate some sort of testosterone bomb. This is by far the wussiest album of the year, and keep in mind I like the latest Kings of Convenience record very much. By 'wuss' I don't mean that Morning View is occasionally permeated by some ridiculously sappy romantic lyrics; the album is drenched by them, and weighed down in the process.

"I never thought I could want someone so much/ 'cause now you're not here and I'm knee deep in that old fear." Bland and hopelessly confessional, similar lines of insane yearning are the meat of the album, statements so overpowered by love they can't bother to be artful. I'm a sucker for the sap as much as anyone, but I know from experience that Incubus can be much more creative, as lines this personal might as well include the girl's name and photo.

The music often follows the watered-down path of the writing. Long gone is the forceful funk of S.C.I.E.N.C.E., but even the tight ballads like "The Warmth" and "Drive" from Make Yourself have given way to a much too relaxed and dragged-out pace. There are sparks, though, like the dreamy moonlit bench sing-a-long "Are You In?" and the bouncy "Circles," which features some of the album's most polished, confident writing.

There is something affecting and immediate to Brandon Boyd's incessant catharsis, though the best parts of "Wish You Were Here" aren't the cute descriptions of the sky, but the heart wrenching, crystal clear chorus. It's times like these when it's not so much what he means, but how much he means it (a lot). Incubus is love ridden, for sure, let's just hope their claws don't become too dull to carve out more compelling material. (Michael Delano)

THE AVALANCHES
Since I Left You
Modular Records

There's a place in the middle of media where Australia's The Avalanches exist. Weaving more than 1,000 samples together on its fascinating debut album Since I Left You, The Avalanches has done its part to stake a claim on that hub.

Literally stealing from everywhere, the Australians attempt to bring together as many disparate mediums as possible is incredible.

Fusing so many disparate elements together, The Avalanches music is a pastiche of exploration. The strings morph, from soft Spanish guitars on "Etoh," to a jazzy guitar intro on "Since I Left You" that shifts gears into a swinging single straight out of the 1970's.

In fact, most of The Avalanches sound owes a great deal to disco's generation. Although subtle, no decade's dance music influenced the Australian septet more. That's a blatantly Travolta-ed beat on "Close To You." "A Different Feeling" isn't even subtle; using stripped down computer sounds on top of a bumping beat.

But it's on "Frontier Psychiatrist" that the Avalanches peak. Hoof beats mixed against stock fifties films, a cascading operatic sound mixed countless voices, all telling the choppy story of a boy gone bad. There are horns galore and one voice, quietly mentioning, "frontier psychiatry." The ideas in the song are insane; the song is an aural assault on the brain.

So too are The Avalanches. An endless, merciless assault on the brain, The Avalanches frantic sampling meshes on 18 crazy tracks. Since I Left You is an album that will probably be a bargain binner before it's ever recognized for its demented genius, creating a scintillating stew.

(Sam Wilkinson)

Finding hope by getting lost in an amazing book

By Anna Cohen-Cole
Collegian Correspondent

ISHMAEL
Daniel Quinn
Bantam

Have you ever felt that your life is out of control? Or that the world is falling apart, but there is nothing to do about it? Have you noticed that not only are we waging an undeclared war against Afghanistan, but also against our environment?

What about this New England winter? Not quite a normal one. Pretty nice to be able to wear t-shirts and keep the windows open all night in December. But what about the lurking feeling that global warming might be catching up with us? Have we, as humans, pushed things too far?

If any of these issues stated above interest you or if you're just pondering your life, college, family, grades, etc., then Ishmael by Daniel Quinn is for you.

The book begins by introducing the audience to the main character. We immediately get drawn into his encounter with a personal ad. "TEACHER seeks pupil. Must have an earnest desire to save the world. Apply in person." The reader then gets to follow this young man, as he ponders the idea of meeting this teacher and the subsequent relationship that develops. His is jaded now, and in his college years all he wanted was a mentor to show him how to save the world. Naturally, he had trouble finding this, and decides to take the chance with this belated suggestion from the newspapers personals. He proceeds immediately to the recommended office to encounter an overwhelming smell and to be shocked by the presence of a gorilla.

The narrative continues from this premise; the gorilla he meets is the teacher. Not only was I a bit shocked (even with my understanding of animal intelligence), but this shock was also portrayed in the main character, thus making me curious about whether I was shocked because the character was, or whether it my own feelings. This dual nature of reading the story along with feeling a part of it is one of the greatest things about this book. The writing isn't superb, the character development doesn't happen, but you're pulled into the story like no other. Think of the premise of The Never Ending Story, the boy was needed to be a part of the book. This too is necessary with Ishmael. The more you can identify with the man going through the learning process and allow yourself to contemplate the discussion, the more that is offered.

Like most American stories, this one has a nicely wrapped-up conclusion. There are answers and help and guidance. But it's the guided conversation between teacher and pupil that draws the reader into the story. By the end of the book, it's obvious that we all have a choice about the way in which our culture, society and world are heading. Unlike the idea of fight or don't fight, there are answers that fall between the extremes.

Although I found ultimate realization within myself, it's possible that other readers would not take the chance, the jump, to allow themselves to relate the book to their own life. However, if you are willing to listen to the history of our world and accept your position in it, this book can make a profound effect on the way you think about life. But as they say on Reading Rainbow, you don't have to take my word for it.

■ Picasso

continued from page 5

women at the time, which Martin lampoons more than once. She finds a way into the boy's club. Played by an intelligent and nuanced Beth Cartier, she uses men as tools for vicarious experiences. For instance, she informs Picasso, a famous lothario, that the aim of their affair was not an undeniable attraction to him, as he thinks, but so that she might know what an artist is like.

The play falters near the end when Martin combines too many themes at once (including, but not exclusively: how can a young artist can retain his vision, a muse's inspiration of genius, and modernism as the start of art and science having more influence than government). When the script's cleverness wavers, the holes in the Theatre Guild's production become obvious. Director Jennifer Ishaily's pacing is either lagging or hurried, never just right. This becomes especially detrimental when it compromises the humor. Thankfully, though, Picasso never takes itself too seriously – there is always a wink in the audience's direction. This, along with the strongest of the cast members, is what sustains it through a rough ending.

COURTESY OF SUSAN SATAWAY

Original jazz musical to premier tomorrow.

Maureen Fleming stars in Wrench: An Original Jazz Musical Dec. 13 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Admission is free.

Souls' prove consistent, not innovative

By Craig Tiede
The Leader (Elmhurst College)

(U-WIRE) ELMHURST, Ill. – In a vast and transient musical landscape where artists come and go with their music becoming simply a by-product (the sacrifice because of popularity and trend, it is comforting to know that there is some sense of consistency. That consistency comes in the form of New York City's very own Bouncing Souls, even though their latest effort, How I Spent My Summer Vacation, is wavering.

Forming at the close of the Reagan era in 1989 in New Brunswick, N.J., the Bouncing Souls formed out of an innate desire to create honest-to-goodness punk rock with no pretense. This initial goal was met years ago as the band etched their rightful place in punk rock history with four solid full-length records that have become a staple of the record collections of most righteous punk rockers.

The Souls music is not exactly a mesmerizing and highly innovative brand of punk rock, it is actually quite generic, but it is the sincerity they exude in their delivery that is most appealing about the band. For over a decade they have gained much notoriety as one of punk's most acclaimed acts while staying just below the radar of the mainstream, while at the same time always nurturing their highly regarded street credibility by never forgetting the meager east coast roots that bred them. They call New York City their official home as of today.

As the band grows older and wiser, it is evident that they are grappling with issues of evolution in their music. On their fifth studio album to date, the Souls made sure to keep their pledge of maintaining their steadfast punk rock songwriting formula on the first half of the record. Their trademarked style of relentlessly fast tempos and choppy, staccato guitar riffs, laced with singer Greg Attonito's deadpan vocals is evident on the opening tracks, "That Song" and "Private Radio."

The mechanics of the band seem somewhat improved this time around and that might be why they opted to experiment more in the studio. Attonito's tenor seems more reinforced this time around and when he bellows on songs like "Better Life," it is easy to mistake him for the vocalist of the Dropkick Murphys. As for the band, they are as solid as a punk rock rhythm section can be, but that can also hinder them if they sway from their tried and true songwriting formula of no frills punk rock like they do on the latter half of How I Spent My Summer Vacation.

As the band attempts to diversify by adding some depth and texture to their music on songs like "Lifetime," and "Late Bloomer" with their acoustic introductions, it only accentuates the band's weaknesses. Even on the laid back pop feel of "Streetlight Serenade (To No One)," where the Souls attempt to create the closest thing to a ballad as they can, Attonito's spontaneous and highly literal vocals seem to deflate the infinite possibilities of the song. Unfortunately, Attonito's deadpan tenor does nothing more for the song except make it a cheap bar rock anthem, as the music of the band finally seems to begin to gel without hiding behind the wall of fast noise that is the make-up of their other songs.

These futile attempts to bring dynamics into their music is understandable and sympathetic, because what it all boils down to is that the Bouncing Souls are a punk rock band and nothing more. They are a good punk rock band, if not one of the best in the genre today, especially live. The band's minimalist approach to their music is quite reminiscent of pioneering band and New York City brethren, The Ramones. It is fast, furious, and full of emotion in the way it is played. It is also only composed of a few chords and random lyrics that can be easily sung along by any crowd.

The Bouncing Souls are essentially a modern day Ramones. They are by no means a rock 'n' roll dinosaur that is destined for demise anytime soon. It is certainly forgivable that How I Spent My Summer Vacation is very inconsistent and unlike previous Bouncing Souls records. But it is admirable that the band attempted to break free from the chains that bound them to the rigid songwriting formula they patented for years, but they must realize that the same formula was very consistent and worked very well for them in crafting their own loud and in-your-face brand of punk rock that is unlike any other band.

How I Spent My Summer Vacation is probably going to be a staple for hardcore fans of the band, but for those who simply love the Souls' previous records, you can probably live without this one. If I were the band, I honestly would have just released the first half of How I Spent My Summer Vacation as an EP and trashed the rest as fodder.

Arts is like darts...only without the 'd.'

YOU WANT TO CHANGE THINGS.

Teach for America Information Session
Wednesday, December 12th at 7:00 PM
Honors Lounge in Goodell Hall

TEACH FOR AMERICA IS THE NATIONAL CORPS THAT CALLS UPON OUTSTANDING AND DIVERSE RECENT COLLEGE GRADUATES TO COMMIT TWO YEARS TO TEACH IN URBAN AND RURAL PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND BECOME LIFELONG LEADERS IN ENSURING THAT ALL OF OUR NATION'S CHILDREN HAVE AN EQUAL CHANCE IN LIFE

No previous education coursework required. Full teacher salary and benefits

TEACHFORAMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2002

STUDENT SPEAKER
UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT
Is there something you would like to say before graduating?
If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker.
Who is Eligible? Graduating Amherst campus senior (class of 2002)
Subject Matter: Your proposed speech should be of general interset to graduating seniors as well as to partnes and other guests. It may address your impressions and experiences, both academic and extracurricular.
Format: Submit approximately two word-processed/typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of three to four minutes speaking time. Speeches exceeding this limit will not be considered.
Selection Process: A non-voting staff Person will delete authors' names after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. Three to five individuals will be invited to audition before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.
DEADLINE: TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2002, 4:30 PM
Submit Proposals to:
Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 243 Lederle Lowrise • 545-3464

■ O'Leary

continued from page 8

like the fit."

Both White and Notre Dame President Father Edward Malloy praised O'Leary's deep respect for Notre Dame standards. The Irish were looking for a coach who was a proven winner, who shared a passion for Notre Dame's tradition and who could be a good public representative. O'Leary, White said, was the only person interviewed who fit that description.

"Of all the people we talked to about the job... this gentleman seems to offer, without a doubt, the best combination of those three articulated qualities," White said. "He knows what championship football is all about."

"I do think that I understand what takes place at this school," he said. "It's more than football and it's more than academics, and you don't know it until you arrive."

O'Leary was hired following an exhaustive, nationwide search that took White from California to Georgia. White said he left Monday morning to begin looking for a new head coach. He added that he interviewed four potential candidates, although he would not reveal the names of the other three. However, both Oakland Raiders' head coach Jon Gruden and Oregon head coach Mike Bellotti said they had spoken with White, but removed their names from the list of potential candidates for the coaching vacancy.

"A week ago when we were beginning the search, I said that it would be a thorough, intense national search and that's what it has been," White said. "We traveled literally to all parts of the country and spoke with dozens of people throughout the football community. We interviewed four candidates, and we offered the job to one."

O'Leary was first contacted by Notre Dame officials late Thursday night about the coaching vacancy and sat down with White on Friday for a formal interview. On Saturday, Malloy privately interviewed O'Leary for an hour. Sometime Saturday, after meeting with a 10-member committee commissioned to help select the new head coach, O'Leary was formally offered the job.

"On every account, I sensed very quickly a great rapport and a kind of deep-seeded desire to join our family here at Notre Dame," said Malloy. "When he had a chance to meet with some of the people I invited to be part of the process... he won us over with his sincerity, with his commitment to the task, with his toughness of spirit and with his concern for the student athletes to be trusted to his care."

The story about O'Leary's hiring broke late Saturday night. On Sunday, O'Leary notified Georgia Tech officials and players of his decision before flying to South Bend. Once on the Notre Dame campus, O'Leary met with Gary Godsey and Jeff Faine – two of the three players appointed by White as team leaders – before meeting with the entire team.

"This is a tough school and I think it needs a tough guy at this school," quarterback Carlyle Holiday said. "It seems like he's a real business guy and he just wants to get things done and he won't take anything else other than winning."

During the press conference, O'Leary answered questions cleverly and caused the crowd to break into laughter several times. When a group of students yelled, "We love you George!" he quickly responded, "I hope you feel that way at midseason."

O'Leary's coaching career began in 1968 at Central Islip High School in New York. He spent eight years at Central Islip and three years at Liverpool High School in New York before moving to Syracuse for six years as the defensive line coach. In 1987, O'Leary went to Georgia Tech for five years as the defensive coordinator. In 1992 and 1993, O'Leary was the defensive line coach with the San Diego Chargers before moving back to Georgia Tech in 1994 as the interim head coach. The interim tag was removed in 1995.

During his head coaching tenure with the Yellow Jackets, O'Leary led Georgia Tech to five consecutive bowls and three Top 25 finishes from 1998 to 2000. Under O'Leary's tenure, the Yellow Jackets faced Notre Dame on Sept. 6, 1997 during the rededication of Notre Dame Stadium. Notre Dame won 17-13, but O'Leary would get revenge two years later when the Yellow Jackets beat the Irish 35-28 in the Gator Bowl.

GERALD LING-COLLEGIAN

The pride of the Minutewomen!

Senior Brooke Bartlett was named to the Division I Women's Soccer Northeast Regional First Team.

UCLA's Cummings adopts dad's advice, adds own style

By Christina Teller
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – On a Thursday afternoon, a father and son spend time working out. The father, dressed in tan linen pants, a black turtleneck sweater and black dress shoes, stands behind son, down in a defensive stance. The son, dressed for practice in white UCLA shorts, sleeveless T-shirt and white Kobes, listens as he moves, absorbing the directions his father offers.

While his teammates work out with managers or other team members, sophomore T.J. Cummings has 18 years of NBA experience in his corner.

T.J.'s father, Terry, keeps his directions simple: "Have better balance when you shoot like that... remember what I used to tell you, cut down to just one motion... do it until it becomes second nature."

It's not hard to see why T.J. approaches the game the way he does.

"The way he breaks things down, it just makes it so understandable for me," T.J. explains. "He doesn't sugarcoat things. He lets me know the real deal."

T.J. was in middle school when he wanted to know more. He had been through the football, skateboarding and roller-blading phases. It was basketball that best suited his 6-foot-5-inch, 14-year-old frame.

"I went from 5'10" to 6'5" from seventh to eighth grade, and I was dunking then," Cummings said. "When I started dunking was when I got more interest for the game."

From this time on, T.J. has been hungry – hungry for better balance when you shoot like that... remember what I minutes, hungry for points, but mostly hungry for knowledge of how to improve.

"I feel like when I'm not doing anything, someone else is getting better," Cummings said. "I never wanted anyone to say that I'm someone who's not dedicated to the game or someone who didn't earn it."

So T.J. spent his summer improving his game. His eight-hour day included footwork in the morning, scrimmaging in the afternoon and shooting. He figured that taking 400 shots a day would be a good way for shooting to become second nature for him.

Sound familiar?

The hunger stems from the fact that Terry never forced basketball on him. In fact, basketball was not even a topic of conversation when T.J. was young. He had to go to his dad when he wanted to know more.

And it's rooted in the fact that he saw 29 minutes in his first game as a Bruin. He contributed 25 points, the most ever by a freshman in his Bruin debut, but as the season went on, Cummings saw the bench more than he saw the court.

It was a humbling experience.

"It's the same way for everyone, myself, Michael Jordan, you're coming into an already set situation and you have to find a way to fit in," Terry said. "(T.J.) had to trim down his pride and ego a bit to try to fit in, and he worked all summer to get his game to another place."

It is T.J.'s versatility that makes him tough to match up against, and UCLA head coach Steve Lavin feeds T.J.'s confidence as a shooter. But Cummings is not perfect.

"Our staff has made it clear that we have confidence in his abilities and want to utilize them as a part of our team in order to be successful," Lavin said. "But T.J. makes mistakes in an aggressive, full-steam ahead manner. I'd rather have a player make a mistake in an aggressive way than in a passive way though."

Cummings is a 6-foot-9-inch post player who can shoot the rock. And not just one way.

"I think about it as a chess match. You take what the defense gives you," Cummings explains. "If I get to my jump hook, that's my go-to. If I get to the lane, see a man who's coming my way, I take one dribble, see if he bites. If not, then kick it out to the corner to my fade-away jumper."

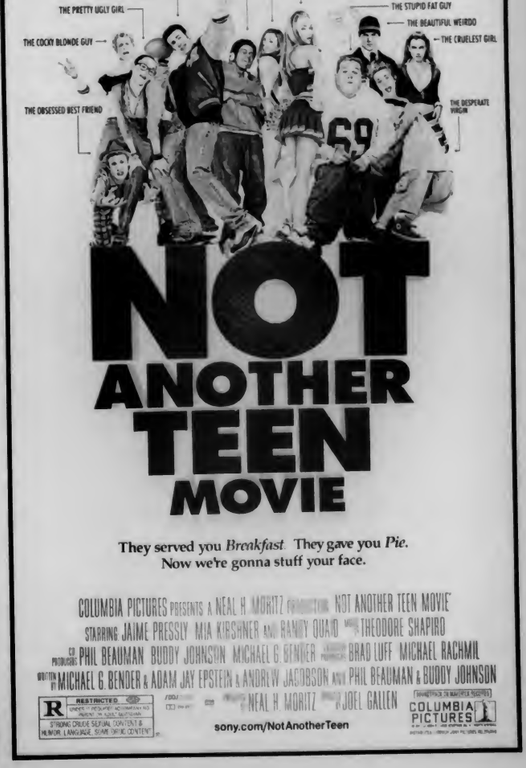
He's got it all planned out, and it didn't hurt that, as a kid, he had a resident basketball advisor.

And now that T.J. is on the West Coast, away from the Illinois basketball cradle where he and his father both grew up, he's making a name for himself, working hard to become a professional at what he's doing, just like his father taught him.

When T.J. made his decision to attend UCLA, it was his first step out of his father's shadow, and looking back, T.J. says coming to UCLA is the best thing he's ever done.

"I'd love for anyone to put me in the shadow of my father because he was a great basketball player, but then at the same time, I had to establish myself as my own player," Cummings explained. "I don't want anyone to ever think that I was getting by off what my father did.

"I wanted to establish myself with my own name."



Terry smiles when asked if his son reminds him of the way he played and answers simply, "It's a joy to watch him do what I used to be able to do. Of course he adds his own elements too."

On Thursday on the floor of Pauley Pavilion, it is clear that the son is taking his turn. Doing what his father used to do – in his own T.J. Cummings way.

STUDENT SPEAKER
UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT
Is there something you would like to say before graduating?
If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as the Student Commencement Speaker.
Who is Eligible? Graduating Amherst campus senior (class of 2002)
Subject Matter: Your proposed speech should be of general interset to graduating seniors as well as to partnes and other guests. It may address your impressions and experiences, both academic and extracurricular.
Format: Submit approximately two word-processed/typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of three to four minutes speaking time. Speeches exceeding this limit will not be considered.
Selection Process: A non-voting staff Person will delete authors' names after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. Three to five individuals will be invited to audition before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.
DEADLINE: TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2002, 4:30 PM
Submit Proposals to:
Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 243 Lederle Lowrise • 545-3464

Work over Break
RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:
Boston 617-484-1788
North of Boston 978-777-2253
South of Boston 508-821-5591
New Hampshire 603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape 508-833-1145
Route 3 South 781-340-6355
Springfield 413-731-6910
Worcester 508-832-8757
Providence 508-336-5658
• Earn $2,000.00 during break
• $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
• Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11
Equal Opportunity Employer

NOT ANOTHER TEEN MOVIE

They served you Breakfast. They gave you Pie.
Now we're gonna stuff your face.

COLUMBIA PICTURES presents a NEAL H. MORITZ production "NOT ANOTHER TEEN MOVIE" STARRING JAIME PRESSLY MIA KIRSHNER and RANDY QUAID with THEODORE SHAPIRO co-producers PHIL BEAUMAN BUDDY JOHNSON MICHAEL G. BENDER and BRAD LUFF MICHAEL RACHMIL
WRITTEN BY MICHAEL G. BENDER & ADAM JAY EPSTEIN & ANDREW JACOBSON and PHIL BEAUMAN & BUDDY JOHNSON
PRODUCED BY NEAL H. MORITZ and JOEL GALLEN DIRECTED BY JOEL GALLEN
R RESTRICTED
sony.com/NotAnotherTeen
COLUMBIA PICTURES

UMass had trouble underneath the basket last night against Connecticut. The Minutemen missed makeable shots and were blocked six times by center Emeka Okafor.

■ UConn

Calhoun about to defend opponent. I don't think there is any question at all. He's Ondrej Pavelka's freshman.

In the Huskies' first game versus Northeastern, Okafor compiled a career high seven blocks. He now has 25 rejections in six games at 4.2 blocks per game average.

"The key is just to keep with guys inside and not let them get deep position," said Okafor, who also mentioned that his coaching staff is going to 2-on-2 post drills every day.

He's a big body, big player, and you have to go along with the game," said Okafor. "You have to out block Rhymer. That's the key. You just go in there expecting to get banged up. You just shy away from it. It's a part of the game."

It wasn't that Rhymer backed down from the challenge itself. Okafor just has a knack for erasing fouls. So don't be surprised the first time he puts up a double-digit night in the category.

"He was blocking my shots," Rhymer said. "He was just down right blocking my shots."

And according to Okafor, there's not a whole lot more to it than that.

"I don't really pay too much attention [to getting blocked]," he said. "Whenever he got the ball, I just tried to block him. Whenever the ball came into the paint, I just tried to block it. You have to analyze the game, but you don't want to overanalyze. You just want to read the play and adjust to the situation."

Final four is fond farewell

Seniors look ahead to life after water polo

By Andy Merritt
Collegian Staff

This reporter will be the first to admit that way back in September, he knew essentially nothing of the sport of Water Polo, more specifically, of the team that Massachusetts fields in Division I play.

That has all changed now.

The men's water polo team finished the season only a few more goals, and maybe a few less raindrops, from the National Collegiate Athletic Association national championship. UMass entered the Final Four as the underdog, the only team that didn't add a "CA" to the end of its home address. The Minutemen played the same solid game it has used all year to beat up on eastern teams, but all was for naught, as eventual champion Stanford first knocked them out of contention for the championship in a heavy rainstorm, and then Loyola-Marymount finished off the job on the visiting Maroon and White in an uncharacteristic wide-margin win.

"I didn't really notice the rain," Trayer said. "We played Stanford really tough, but we don't play that level of Water Polo all year. No offense to the teams we play, but we never saw that level of play until the tournament."

The Minutemen were scheduled to venture out to California to play California State at Long Beach, as well as the Loyola Invitational, but the trip was cancelled after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

"I wish we could have had a better showing [at the NCAAs]," senior Mike Foley said. "I thought we had the team to do it this year, but we played well, and I can't complain about that."

The Final Four represented the culmination of a very successful year for the Minutemen, who notched 20 wins compared to only three losses during the regular season, and an impressive 9-1 record against teams from the Collegiate Water Polo Association. This led to tournament play for the Minutemen, who went on to win both the Eastern College Athletic Conference tournament, as well as the Eastern crown.

The titles sandwiched a sub par showing for the Maroon and White at the Northern CWPA tournament, where injuries handicapped the team. However, as senior Greg Trayer said, "Eastern are the goal for us all year." The Minutemen won the Eastern crown by battling out from the No. 8 position to beat a Queens College team that had been a challenge all year.

The Minutemen had previously lost to Queens in an epic double overtime battle, which the Knights took 6-5. The winning tally came in dramatic fashion, as Queens received a fortunate bounce off of the crossbar back to another Knight shooter, who put the goal home. After the game, head coach Russ Yarworth "stressed team defense" and reminded the squad to focus on the next match. From there on, the defense was the highlight of the season. Even through a mild scoring drought just before tourney time, the defense was solid.

Not that it needed to be. J.R. VanderWall was spectacular in net throughout the regular season, with a solid 4.70 Goals Allowed Average, as well as a spectacular .652 Save Percentage. The senior can certainly be credited with keeping his squad in more than a couple of games this season.

As for the offense, the scoring was normally abundant on a team from which Yarworth said, "you can't pick out a star." The scoring leader was senior Carlos Ramos with 52 points (16 goals, 36 assists). Foley (37 Goals, 9 assists) and Trayer (35 goals, 13 assists) each put up 48 points during the regular season.

For his stellar season, Trayer earned quite a few honors, including CWPA player of the week twice, as well as first team honors for the CWPA All-Conference team. "It was a great honor, but that's due to a great team," said Trayer, who intends to pursue an occupation rather than water polo once he graduates.

Foley also earned CWPA Player of the Week honors twice, as well as being named to the NCAA All-Tournament team with fellow senior Adam Moore. As for his future plans, Foley said "I'm glad polo is over, but if I get accepted to a law school out west, who knows? I may pursue the National Team. It's up in the air right now."

"I'm happy to have played with this team," Foley said. "It was just a great group of guys who came together at the right time."

Now it will be up to the kids. Seven seniors will graduate this year, leaving a big hole that Yarworth has been trying to fill with next year's recruiting class for some time. Juniors Chad Arnold, Ricardo Puig, and sophomores Dave Liebert and Tim Craycraft will all see extended time in the pool next year, and will be expected to lead the Maroon and White.

For now, though, the team is basking in the glow of a season to remember.

Said Foley, "It's been a good time, and I have no regrets about playing here."

"We walked out with our heads held high," Trayer said.

Senior goalkeeper J.R. VanderWall is one of seven seniors the water polo team will have to replace next season.

Notre Dame hires O'Leary as new coach

By Andrew Soukup
The Observer (U. Notre Dame)

(U-WIRE) SOUTH BEND, Ind. — George O'Leary made it very clear what he intends to do as the head football coach of Notre Dame.

"I understand one thing ... he said. "I'm here because I believe we can win and we can win big and make our games out of Saturday afternoon."

Over 1,300 people crowded a press conference in the Joyce Center for the former Georgia Tech head coach was formally introduced as Notre Dame's 27th head football coach on Sunday afternoon. Just one week after former head coach Bob Davie was fired in the same building.

During his speech, O'Leary, who once, O'Leary said, "dreamed of that Notre Dame's a very special place to coach and then to attempt to make Notre Dame a perennial contender for the national championship."

"I'm very happy to be at Notre Dame," he said. "I think the two best jobs in America are the head football coach at Notre Dame and the manager of the New York Yankees."

When reporters Davie's firing was announced, O'Leary never thought he would end up being the man chosen to replace him. While he hoped he was on Athletic Director Kevin White's list of candidates, he said he didn't actively seek the position. For him, Notre Dame represents the pinnacle of college coaching positions.

"If you were a goal I'm the head coach at Notre Dame] because I never thought I could reach it," he said. "If you set goals, they should be realistic. Notre Dame is a job you always look at as a Pacific coaching and would really like to be there. If you get the opportunity, it's something very special."

In his seven-year tenure with Georgia Tech, O'Leary led the Yellow Jackets to a 52-33 record. He was named Coach of the Year in 2000 after Georgia Tech finished 9-3 and was named ACC Coach of the Year twice.

"I love the fact that he's a very seasoned football coach," White said. "On top of that, he represents a great fit at Notre Dame. What do I like more? I

Turn to O'LEARY, page 7

WAIT UNTIL NEXT YEAR, UCONN!!!
Love, Collegian Sports

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

HBO presents
Spring Break in the Winter
sponsored by USA Spring Break 877.460.6077 & urcute.com
Thursday, Dec 13th @
The Pub
15 East Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
2 FREE Spring Break Trips to Cancun will be given away!
FREE HBO Giveaways
T - Shirts/CD's/DVD's all night long!!

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON HEATING OIL
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

Get Cash for your Books
No matter where you bought them,
we'll buy them back for up to 66%*.
WIN A SPRING BREAK TRIP TO IBIZA, SPAIN!
Sponsored by KMX
efollett.com NEW & USED COLLEGE TEXTBOOKS
Order now for next term!
UMASS University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
We're also buying books back the following location:
December 13–December 21 (weekdays only)
9am–4pm
Campus Center and Southwest Dorm
no purchase necessary.
*current market value applies.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Ozzie Osborn/Rob Zombie Dec 15 @ 7:00 Worcester Centrum 6 tickets @ $50ea. 665-2646

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

FROZEN PIPE ALERT! Remember to keep your thermostat turned up to at least 55 degrees while you are away on winter break. Neglecting to do this may cause pipes to freeze or water damage for which you, as a tenant, will be responsible. For more information about landlord and tenants rights and responsibilities come to Commuter Services 428 Student Union or call 545-0865, or check out our website at www.cshrc.org

Interested in rushing next semester? Come help the sisters of alpha Chi Omega decorate candygrams and see what we're all about Thursday, December 13 at 6pm. Call 549-8459 if you have any questions

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom 2 Bath apt. Available 1/1 great location. Call 256-4135

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Mazda MX6 A/C, CD changer, power windows, sun roof. $2000. Call 219-7730

90 Subaru Legacy Wagon 117k $2000 Call 586-8412

'93 Ford Taurus GL Sedan, auto transmission, front wheel drive, 58,300 miles, AC, excellent tires, power steering/windows/door locks, $3,500, 253-7026

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K. CD player, leather interior. Great Condition $6500 O/B/O. 413-256-1989

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Returning to the Greater Boston Area This Winter Break? Want a fun, flexible job working with kids in their homes? Call Parents in a Pinch, Inc. if you have at lease 1 full weekday free and childcare references. Earn $10+/hour. Don't wait, call Joy today! At 617-739-KIDS www.parentsinapinch.com

Need Business Experience? Good Pay! Interested? Spring/Summer Internships/Jobs Call College Pro 888-277-7962

SEE US IN THE CAMPUS CENTER ON WEDNESDAY! Information Session this Wednesday in Room 101 of the Campus Center 6-7P.M. Free Pizza and drinks. Raffling of Play Station 2

Hampshire Fitness Club Janitor beginning January. 2 days per week 8-2. $9.00 plus membership 256-6446

Administrative Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz. CEO. regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst. MA 01002 fred@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS
Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Boulders Apt. avail Dec/Jan. 253-6731 wl1210@student.umass

FOR SALE

TV for sale 13 inch must sell Dec. 17 $50 obo 546-0526

15 Inch Monitor excellent condition. Asking for $80 price negotiable. Call 6-2536

Klimax Skiboards $100 Salomon Equipe Boots (13s), skis (190s), polls, bag. Call Justin 546-0679

For sale Twin bed & frame $70. Fan w/ remote $20. Call 256-3951

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Room in 5 Bedroom House Located near Cowls Lumber near bus rt. Take over lease ending in May. Call Aaron 549-1799

Two furnished rooms available in a family house. Starting January,2002. Utilities included. No lease. Call Agnes 253-3670 for details.

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

Furnished Room all inclusive. Price nego. Available now. 253-5066 or 218-7896

Room Available for Jan. 1st. walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

Room for rent. Pulpit Hill Rd. Need one roommate in three bedroom duplex. Big yard right next to Puffers Pond. Can move in as soon as Jan 1st. Male/Female welcome $340/month. Call 549-8988

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. -Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Lantern Court on bus route. AC, DW, plenty of storage. Call 413-397-0925

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419. on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre. Mexico Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

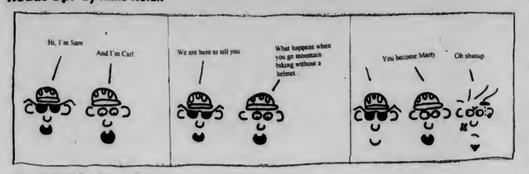
SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.intercampus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted Models for art classes. Experience preferred. Holyoke Community College. Contact Frank Cressotti. 413-552-2489.

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/



WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Here goes...
$10
Thank you... you do too...
Thank you... you too...
Thank you... you too...
Thank you... you

INSIDE: Water polo season wrap-up

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, December 12, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen's U-turn continues

Senior guard Shannon Crooks shot 6-for-19 from the field en route to a team-high 14 points in last night's 69-59 loss to UConn. The Minutemen, as a whole, shot just 32.9 percent from the field in the contest.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Rival Huskies cruise to win

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

All the ingredients were there for a magical night in the Pioneer Valley. A near-capacity crowd at the William D. Mullins Center, the ESPN cameras and the hated University of Connecticut Huskies for the sixth annual Mass Mutual "U" Game. This was to be the night that the Massachusetts men's basketball team snapped its two-game losing skid and returned to the national scene in a big way.

UConn	69
UMass	59

Except nobody informed the Huskies of that plot.

UConn fought its way to a 69-59 victory in a scrappy and at times sloppy game in front of 8,894 UMass faithful despite being outrebounded 46-28. Tony Robertson led the way for the Huskies with 15 points including a trio of three-pointers. The third of those came with 2:56 remaining in the second half to give UConn an eight-point lead from which the Minutemen could never recover.

UConn took control in a mistake-strewn first half by converting on eight UMass turnovers and building a 36-23 lead. Robertson led the way by scoring 12 points on perfect 5-for-5 shooting including a pair of threes. Caron Butler, UConn's leading scoring coming into the contest at 17.6 a game, added seven points in the opening 20 minutes but was just 1-for-6 from the floor, getting five of his seven from the foul line.

While UConn was able to handle the raucous crowd, the Maroon and White seemed to struggle with it, once again shooting poorly in the first half and falling behind early as a result. Senior Kitwana Rhymer struggled to handle the imposing presence of UConn's 6-foot-9 freshman Emeka Okafor. Just as Rhymer had done in the Minutemen's first four games for UMass, Okafor changed the defensive complexion of the game with a series of blocks early in the first half on Rhymer himself. Okafor finished with a career high 13 points, grabbed 11 boards and added six blocks for his second collegiate double-double.

"That's how we got the lead, because they didn't go in the paint anymore," UConn head coach Jim Calhoun said of his freshman's first-half performance. "Even down the stretch, whatever the number says, six or seven [blocks] that's not even close because the tape will show that he probably bothered 14 or 15 and another 20 [shots] were thought about."

Despite their early struggles on the offensive end, the Minutemen came out ready to play in the second half, turning a pair of UConn turnovers into a 6-0 run on a trio of layups that cut the deficit to 36-29 before Calhoun was forced to call a timeout to stop the bleeding.

Despite cutting into the Connecticut lead time and time again, the Minutemen were never able to get the deficit under four. Whenever UMass would go on a mini run, reeling off four or five straight points, UConn would respond with a dagger, usually from either Butler (13 points) or sophomore point guard Taliek Brown (a season-high 13 points.) But no dagger inflicted quite as much damage as Robertson's three with 2:38 to play.

"We know that we have to come back, play defense and try to get stops," Rhymer said. "It's a frustrating thing to put all your effort toward getting stops and they just come down and hit some key shot that just puts them right back up."

With 43.4 seconds left and UMass trailing 62-56, the Minutemen had their final chance to make a game of it. Anthony Anderson was fouled by Brown attempting a three-point shot, but made just one of three, allowing the Huskies to maintain a five-point lead and killing off any positive momentum for UMass. UConn proceeded to hit seven of its final eight free throws to close out the Minutemen

"I thought that was falling as soon as I released it," said Anderson of his attempted three. "But I still should have made the foul shots anyway and that kind of hurt us."

With 7:39 remaining and the Minutemen trailing 48-42, junior forward Micah Brand, who played a major role in holding Johnnie Selvie to a season-low five points and just one rebound, picked up his fourth foul and was forced to the bench. Within a minute the Huskies had the lead back up to double figures at 52-42 and silenced the Mullins Center crowd.

Shannon Crooks and Anderson once again led the Minuteman attack with 14 and 10 points respectively, but were just 9-of-31 from the floor and 1-of-13 from behind the arc. Rhymer also tallied his first double-double under Lappas, picking up 12 points and 12 boards as well as four blocks.

The Minutemen must quickly change gears and begin preparation for their next contest, this Saturday night against Central Connecticut State at Mohegan Sun Arena. UMass will be looking to break its current three-game losing streak and return to its winning ways that saw the squad open 4-0 for its best start in six years.

Okafor a one-man swat team

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

It's frustrating when the heckling backfires. All of the UMass faithful in attendance last night at the Mullins Center will attest to that.

They failed to get inside the head of UConn's Emeka Okafor.

"The students got into it like, 'Emeka, you suck!' but I was just eating it up," said Okafor last night after his Huskies topped the Massachusetts men's basketball team 69-59 in the sixth annual MassMutual "U" Game. "I loved it."

Only six games into his college career, the freshman from Houston, Texas patrolled the paint for the 3-1 Huskies, finishing with 13 points, six blocks and 11 rebounds in front the 8,894 who gathered to watch one of New England's biggest rivalries.

"I'm used to playing in front of 600 [people]," said the 6-foot-9-inch, 240 pounder. "I'm not used to coming into an auditorium and being booed. It was a new experience, but I enjoyed it."

Joining Okafor in the realm of new experiences last night was Minuteman Kitwana Rhymer.

In UMass' first four wins of the season, Rhymer set the tone for his squad by blocking a few enemy attempts early in each game.

But last night, he was the timely victim.

Only 51 seconds into the game, Rhymer made a move to the hoop and was quickly denied by Okafor.

"The first block just sets the tone, lets them know that you're there," said Okafor, who had four of his six rejections in the first half. "It's like, 'hey, you're going to have to work all night to get your points.'"

Okafor swatted Rhymer again a few plays later, and from that point on it seemed like last year's Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year worked with a certain hesitancy on the blocks. Rhymer went 2-for-9 from the floor in the first half, and ended the game 5-of-14 for 12 points.

"His first two or three blocks kind of limited their inside game early," said UConn coach Jim

Turn to UCONN, page 8

Yesterday's near-capacity crowd at the Mullins Center couldn't will the Minutemen to victory after the team fell behind early in its matchup with UConn.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

'I am Batman!'

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

NHL '94, Lovmer to Roenick. It's the one-timer, baby.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVIII Issue 67 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, December 13, 2001

Minorities and HIV linked

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

While doctors and biologists search for a cure for Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), psychologists and social scientists are seeking ways to slow the spread of the disease through education and outreach programs. Don Operario, a recent recipient of a doctorate in Psychology from the University of Massachusetts, works with the Center for AIDS Prevention to influence the behavior of those at risk for HIV.

Operario delivered a lecture yesterday, titled, "Social Oppression and the Context for HIV Vulnerability: New Challenges for AIDS Prevention" in Tobin Hall, in which he described the correlation between discrimination and high-risk sexual behaviors.

"My basic argument is that social factors have as much to do with the epidemic as biological ones," Operario said.

He began his lecture by describing the current state of the AIDS epidemic. He said that while advances in treatment may have led to the perception that the disease is no longer a threat, AIDS continues to decimate certain populations.

"[Deaths from AIDS] are the equivalent of twenty fully loaded 747 jets crashing everyday," Operario said. "And some data shows an increase in HIV infections since 1996."

Infection rates are particularly high, Operario said, among racial and sexual minorities.

"In the past, we tried to stress the point that AIDS is the consequence of behavior, so that we could de-stigmatize certain populations," he said. "But we've seen that AIDS is very much connected to who you are."

Research has shown that gay men, blacks and Latinos, and youth are especially prone to HIV. Operario cited two studies – one focusing on gay Latino men, and another focusing on the transgendered – which sought to explain why these groups may be engaging in high-risk behaviors.

"Infection is more common among those who have felt oppression," Operario said. He pointed out that those who had suffered hardships such as abuse, discrimination and poverty were most likely to engage in unprotected anal sex.

He quoted a participant in one of the studies, a gay Latino man, who said, "You grow up being told that

Turn to HIV, page 3

Chomsky steps up for round two

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

By popular demand, the video of Noam Chomsky's critique of U.S. foreign policy in Afghanistan at MIT's Technology and Culture forum on Oct. 18 was rebroadcast for the University of Massachusetts community last night in a Van Meter lounge.

This time, two Van Meter residents, senior English major Dan Buchalter and senior Computer Engineering major Tom Manula, organized the affair. They personally financed free pizza, chocolate candies, and soda for those who attended. Orchard Hill resident and senior Neurobiology major Arif Suyani, who collaborated on the original broadcast of the video presentation for a large audience in the Campus Center Ballroom on Nov. 7, also assisted with the event.

"I caught only the tail end of the video the first time [it was broadcast]," Buchalter said. "And what I saw I thought was very interesting, and I know other people did too, so I wanted to have this event."

Smith College student Maho Saito said that she, too, had missed the first broadcast, but that the earlier event, as well as what she had heard from friends about Chomsky, had piqued her interest. She also commented that this event had received good publicity—according to Saito, it had been featured recently on a Five College bulletin-site, www.dailyjolt.com.

"Chomsky is my hero," said Neil Nugent, a Radical Student Union member who has been active in organizing the RSU Video Series that has been shown in the Campus Center over the past few weeks. "I think that this video offers both an explanation and a critique of US foreign policy, and it challenges the assumptions of the mass media that [Osama] bin Laden is guilty, or that it is even possible to determine who people responsible for Sept. 11 are."

Since the first airing of the videotape at UMass, many of Chomsky's claims about the dubious evidence against bin Laden have been taken up in the media's continued discussion of the events of Sept. 11. Recently, Insight magazine published information on its website, www.insightmag.com, that a different suspect, Imad Fayez Mugniyeh, a Shiite Muslim from Lebanon, was being scrutinized by US intelligence with regard to his involvement in the attacks. According to the site, Mugniyeh may have been more directly responsible than bin Laden for planning the attacks on New York and Washington.

Chomsky himself remains controversial, even as emotions with regard to Sept. 11 on and off campus begin to cool slightly. Buchalter alleged that hosting staff in Van Meter and in the Central cluster had discouraged his organization of the event in his dorm. He cited several instances of paperwork and requests for funding somehow lost in the shuffle, as well as direct discouragement from officials about the feasibility of planning event.

"My RD told me that vendors would never agree to give me a bill of sale and be paid later if they delivered pizza and sodas to the dorm for the event," Buchalter said. "But when I called Bruno's Pizza, not only did they agree, but they also gave me

Turn to CHOMSKY, page 3

TSUKA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Bee-utiful
Even bees' homes can't withstand the harsh library winds.

Budget cuts dominate SGA meeting

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Frustrations surrounding the recent implication of a $495 increase to students at the University of Massachusetts Amherst headlined the last Senate meeting of the semester.

Members of the Student Government Association gathered to discuss the recent budget cuts with each other, and listen and question Paul Page, Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance.

Page came before the Senate in an effort to explain the recent budget cuts and the toll that the University will be taking. He explained to the Senate the break down of the budget within the University and where $495 student fee increases will be distributed.

Page explained that out of the $495 students will be paying this spring semester $235 will be going to the curriculum fee and $265 will be going to the service fee. He further explained that out of the $265 going to service funds, $65 will go to athletics, and $200 will go toward infrastructure.

Members of the SGA however raised concern over the distribution of funds explaining that they were unaware of the funding allocations to areas at the University.

"When I spoke to Chancellor Marcie Williams just two days ago there was no administrative plan as to where the fee would be split up," President John Sheehan said. "I just wonder why we weren't consulted about this, and why, if they're taking $500 from us, they're not inviting us to the table to discuss this. They say the University is a value, but I'm not sure I think so anymore."

Discussion continued surrounding the time span of when students would be expected to pay the newly approved fee. Page explained that it would not be included in the original bill students will be receiving.

"The increase in fees will not be on students spring bill, but will be noted on the bill that a subsequent fee of $495 will be sent there after," Page said.

When asked about the time period in which the bill of $495 would be sent to students, he estimated a month time span after the original bill would be sent.

"What you need to be concerned about is where these resources are going to be applied," Page said. "Some of the apportionments may not

Turn to SGA, page 3

Design by Jennie 'Harry Potter' Eastwood and Mikey 'Kojak' Kulak

At 2:30 yesterday afternoon, this weekly feature was going to focus on the year that was. It's a bland sort of journalism – recaps of events that have already been recapped – and frankly, it didn't look like it was going to be that interesting.

At 2:50, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian got an anonymous tip about next semester's fee increases. The person on the phone alleged that part of the extra $495 that all students would be paying next semester would be going to build a new student athletic facility. On a day when 160 employees were worried about their fiscal future, news that students might get a new fitness center building was, simply, unbelievable.

At 3:00, we had a new feature. It works that quickly at a newspaper.

Earlier this week, the Board of Trustees increased next semester's fees by $495. The move came in response to budget cuts made by Massachusetts acting governor Jane Swift. According to documents obtained from the Board of Trustees, tuition and fees for in-state residents will increase to $3,101, while out-of-state residents will pay $7,378.

What will the additional money pay for?

It won't really – what it might do is cover existing costs that previous budgets, when combined with the state's budget, covered. Or at least, the extra money will cover most costs. There are the 160 souls who will be out of a job. The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) has reported that while there are employees, most will get some sort of severance pay and two weeks notice.

"The policy is that you can technically be laid off for financial reasons, but if the University was to do that, the GFO contract states that you have to be given up to 20 days notice and 50 percent of what you would have been paid," Chris Vials, a GEO staff member and a graduate student in English, said. He iterated that GEO doesn't want anyone, "to panic. We don't predict any large scale layoffs."

Except for the 60 employees that may be laid off. And another hundred that are becoming victims of attrition.

Specific job cuts haven't yet been made, and they won't be made for several weeks.

So what of the tip on the new building? It must be said: the possibility of a campus-wide recreation facility whets the proverbial appetite.

John Sheehan, the president of the Student Government Association, was present at last Monday's vote on fee increases. He has heard rumors of a new building for campus, but heard nothing specific, before Collegian reporters contacted him seeking further information about the tip.

"I haven't heard a thing about extra money going to a recreation facility, and I'm not really positive on the numbers. I know that $230 is going for a curriculum fee and $265 will pay for student services," Sheehan said. "If they're hiding the cost of the new building in there, they're being wicked harsh about it."

A new building. Iowa State University just got a new recreation center for its students. So did West Virginia University. By most accounts, both are beautiful buildings, expansive in scope and opportunities offered.

Sheehan described the Iowa State facility as the "jewel of their campus."

He said that such a building at UMass would help "with recruiting, with athletics, and it would be used by students."

There has been significant discussion of a possible athletic facility. According to the Faculty Senate's Athletic Council, in August 2001, "the co-chairs of the Athletic Council learned that the Board of Trustees had approved the design program for the construction of a new campus recreation and fitness facility, to be reviewed during the 2001-2002 academic year."

Further documentation goes so far as to suggest a possible location for the facility: McGuirk Stadium. The facility would be part of the football team's proposed jump to Division I-A. No more games against traditional powerhouse American International College's Yellow Jackets apparently.

That's not all – the Athletic Council voted on May 16 to forward a statement to the Faculty Senate stating, "It is the opinion of the Athletic Council that a proposed phased development program for a campus recreation and wellness center become a top priority for the UMass-Amherst Campus." Strong words.

The Trustees knew the faculty was serious when it sat down for its July meeting. They wouldn't have looked toward the Massachusetts Building Authority or the Board of Health. In their defense, all this was discussed in when the budget had not been finalized. In fact, according to timelines set forth by the Budget Office, the state budget should have been through the House and heading to the Senate. But this wasn't a normal year. It is now December. The UMass-

Turn to BUDGET, page 2

COURTESY UMASS ATHLETICS

The Mullins Center is the primary hub of UMass' athletic activity.

■ budget

continued from page 1

Top: Iowa State University's weight room provides students with the latest workout gear.

Bottom: A rock climbing facility stands tall in Iowa State University's newest athletic facility.

Amherst campus does not have a finalized budget – it won't get one until Chancellor Williams sits down in Boston with President William Bulger.

Needless to say, it would seem that the proverbial gears have been turning on a campus recreation facility, well before the Collegian ever received its anonymous tip.

At 3:45, Collegian reporters huddled on the story. The possible new building was definitely a lead, but ultimately a fruitless one as the story's reporters spent the next two hours asking the wrong questions.

Part of the $265 student services fee was a $65 athletic fee. It seemed reasonable to believe that an "athletic fee" would have some connection to our tip about an athletic facility. Not true.

First, Barbara Pitoniak, the University's News Director, confirmed only that she wasn't sure what the athletic fee was for. She surmised that it might cover cuts to the Athletic Department or the cost of student tickets but, again, she wasn't sure.

John Hoey, UMass President William Bulger's Director of Communications, confirmed fiscal facts, but nothing about a building. He said that the fee increase would cover approximately half of the losses incurred by the state University system, but then said that the money raised from fees would stay on each campus. Translated: the roughly 17,000 students on campus, each of whom will pay $495, will generate a total of $8,415,000 next semester. Or about one million less than the total loss incurred by the University.

New building? No mention. When prodded on specific questions of spending, he took the administrative position that how the money would be spent would be up to individual campuses.

These decisions would be made by individuals like Paul Page, this University's Vice-Chancellor of Administration and Finance.

Nudged on the athletic fee, he acknowledged that some of the money would be spent on athletics.

Some portion of the increase is going to athletics. The impact to them needs to be talked about, as they are already being fronted monies. Part of the fee will relieve the institution from providing that money. I don't know, specifically, how all of that will work itself out," Page said.

But what of rumored Camelot, a new building on campus?

"One of the uses of the service fee is for the infrastructure, to pay off bonds and things of that nature," Page said. "Clearly the interest of the Trustees is to take care of our buildings and help us in that regard."

This didn't seem good.

Neither did the stake Pitoniak drove a stake into the heart of the athletic fee lead: "It took me 20 calls, but the athletic fee does go to support men's and women's intercollegiate sports and the operating costs therein: transportation, equipment, clothing and all other costs."

So no building.

Maybe.

So the athletic fee isn't going to pay for a new recreation facility. The athletic fee had been staked like Dracula, but that didn't mean the building was a no-go. Collegian reporters had one more opportunity to make a story out the facts – Page spoke at last night's Student Government Association meeting.

Page stood before the Senate, and with nervous glances toward Sheehan, and walked the Senators through the complex and colorful slides on his overheads.

He spoke to the newspaper afterward.

What about the building, Mr. Page?

"They [Trustees] approved to have a study done for a recreational facility on campus. They're convinced that we have woefully inadequate recreational facilities for students."

No one is going to argue that.

What would it provide?

"It would provide good space, good equipment...dual, multi-purpose facilities for students and athletes, as well as training and other facilities for athletes."

What is happening right now?

"They [the administration] are looking to get an analysis. The analyst will determine the project's size and scope."

So there's the story. UMass has an administration that has identified a problem, an administration that wants to solve the problem, an administration that is looking to hire an analyst to look into the feasibility of a recreation center for the University of Massachusetts.

Who knew?

Which isn't to lessen the impact of the budget cuts. The nicest, newest recreation facility on campus won't create jobs for the 160 individuals who are about to lose theirs. If it is built. And even though the new fee covers most of the loss immediately next semester, there are more budget cuts ahead.

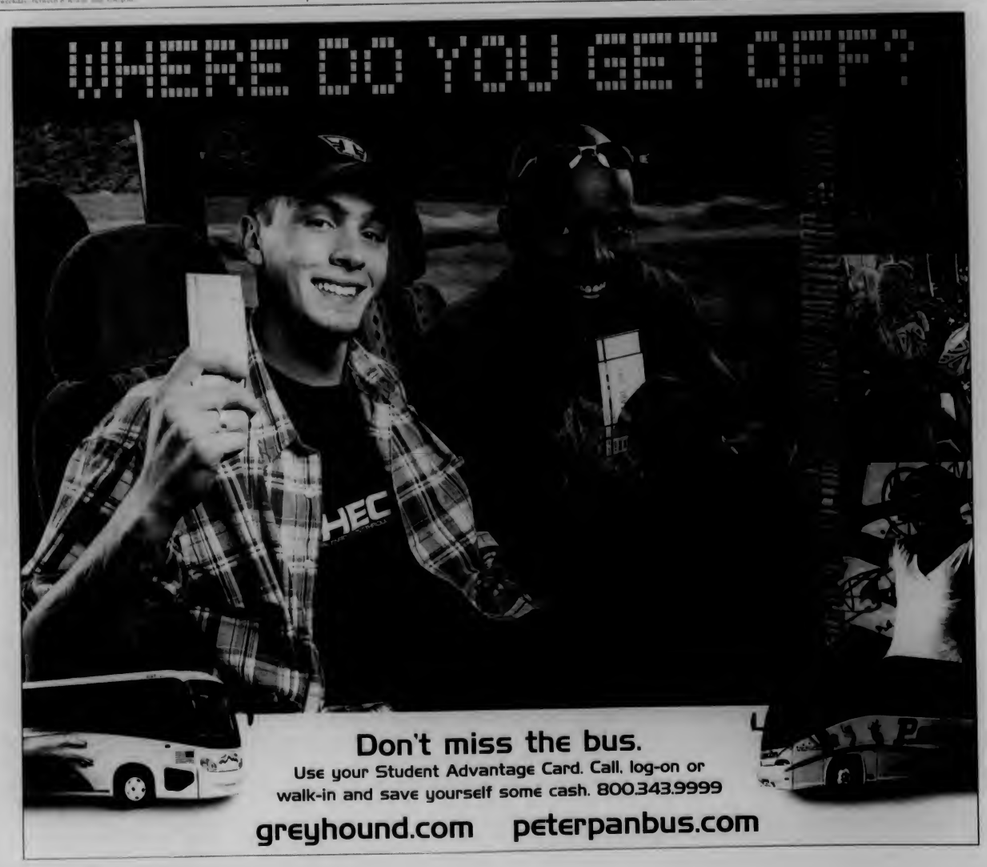
Page, in his skittering around the recreation facility, said that UMass has been asked to prepare for budget cuts in upwards of five percent. Students might have a good time at a recreation facility if its ever built, which would be good in one sense but bad in the sense that they won't be in classes that are no longer offered.

It is 10:55, and the story is finished. This story anyway – the fallout of the budget cuts and next semester's fee increase will be far-reaching. Seven hours ago, this newspaper got an anonymous tip on a possible recreation center that won't dominate the news for the next few years. The anonymous tip was the tip of the iceberg on an issue that will.

- By Sam Wilkinson and Ken Campbell

S.J. Port and Jennifer Eastwood contributed to this story.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts and is entirely supported by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the Collegian in 1906. The Boston Collegian in 1911 and then in 1936 as Boston College Collegian. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargiuntia Business Manager
Shimauti Dave Production Manager
Jake Ellen Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tihora Gliczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

■ SGA

continued from page 1

make sense, but we're trying our best to use all the resources available to us."

Page also addressed issues surrounding the University in regards to the state Legislature, explaining that UMass is facing difficult times in the future. He stated that the University had originally expected an increase in which they are now compensating for.

"Our original budget outlook wasn't expecting a decrease, but an increase of three million dollars. So that's now a three million dollar problem for the University," Page said.

Members of the SGA further expressed their concerns surrounding the current fee implication by explaining that Senators need to take the situation to their constituents.

"We need to wake up," Sheehan said. "We have a big job ahead of us and we need to be ready for it. We should be going to our constituents and the people we claim to support because it's our job to advocate for them."

Another issue discussed at last night's meeting was a motion calling a Police Issues committee. The motion, which was removed and replaced on the agenda, caused debate amongst members who explained they felt the motion to be for personal reasons. The Senate passed the motion.

"This committee will only add to the Senate, not take away," Senator Jason Maelstrom said.

Senate members also passed a motion, which allows student run business to petition for and receive emergency funding from the financial committee.

As the last Senate meeting of 2001 came to a close, members reflected on the semesters events and what is to come in the New Year.

"This has been the most productive semester for the Senate and this winter we're going to have our work cut out for us," Saunders said. "Here in Senate we deal with By-Law changes and motions, but right now we're dealing with real issues that effect the students and we have to let them know the SGA is right behind them."

■ HIV

continued from page 1

being gay, you're going to be punished for it. It's somewhere in the back of your head, that you're going to be punished no matter what."

It was this sort of mindset, Operario said, that may lead to high-risk sexual activity.

In response to these findings, the Center for AIDS Prevention has begun funding support groups and individual prevention management among minority communities.

"HIV prevention shouldn't just focus on condom use, but on homophobia and racism," Operario said.

She's also excited about the student involvement in the center. Currently she has five undergraduates and four graduate students working with her, all from the Operations Management major at the Isenberg School. She hopes to get more in the future if she can find additional funding.

In addition to having more students, Nagurney hopes the center can grow in additional ways as well. She would like to create, "spinoffs of the original network turning it into a supernetwork controlling them."

Nagurney has been hoping to create the network for some time.

"This is something I've been dreaming about for a year," she said. Much of the actual move towards the creation came from a Distinguished Faculty Lecture she gave on April 5, 2000 titled, "Networks for Fun and Profit" as well as a related article, "Navigating the Network Economy" published in the June 2000 issue of OR/MS.

Funding for the center comes form several grants from the National Science Foundation and the John F. Smith Memorial Fund.

One can find the Virtual Center for Supernetworks on the Net at http://supernet.som.umass.edu.

■ Chomsky

continued from page 1

the number of other restaurants who would deliver more food if we wanted it.

"The RD and ARD's stories kept changing," Buchalter claimed. "The ARD seemed to take especial delight in telling me, 'no, you can't have this event'. [But] Noam Chomsky has been censored in other ways and who knows if this was one of them."

Since the speech, however, several of the predictions Chomsky made in the Oct. 18 video have proved false as military action takes its course on the other side of the globe. Among such predictions is Chomsky's warning on the video that U.S. bombing in Afghanistan would threaten humanitarian aid to citizens of the country, resulting in "the silent genocide," by starvation, of 3 to 4 million people.

"According to Osfam's website, their director is 'cautiously optimistic,' that a humanitarian crisis will be averted," said Hieu Nguyen, Assistant Residence Director of Van Meter/Butterfield.

According to Manula, thought it could be argued that Chomsky's presentation was outdated, voices like his have been a rarity since Sept. 11, which is why his speech at MIT has been circulated so heavily.

"The ideas he presents still haven't gotten a lot of emphasis in American media and the more people we can get this out to the better," Manula said. "Even if they don't agree with it, it's something they should still be aware of."

Suyani said he agreed. "That's how activism spreads," he said.

Nguyen pointed out that the aversion of a humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan still does not exonerate U.S. foreign policy in his mind. Nguyen said he felt that the U.S. should have used other alternatives in bringing the perpetrators of the Sept. 11 attacks to justice, including use of the World Court.

"The Taliban offered to exchange bin Laden for evidence, but the U.S. wouldn't do that," he said. "They just bombed."

TIHORA GLICZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

"Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?"

Legendary reggae singer, Michael Rose played at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Monday.

ISOM launches Supernetworks

By Tom Ollila
Collegian Staff

Grab your boards, because surf's up for the Isenberg School of Management as it continues to ride the waves of the future. The School recently announced their creation of the Virtual Center for Supernetworks.

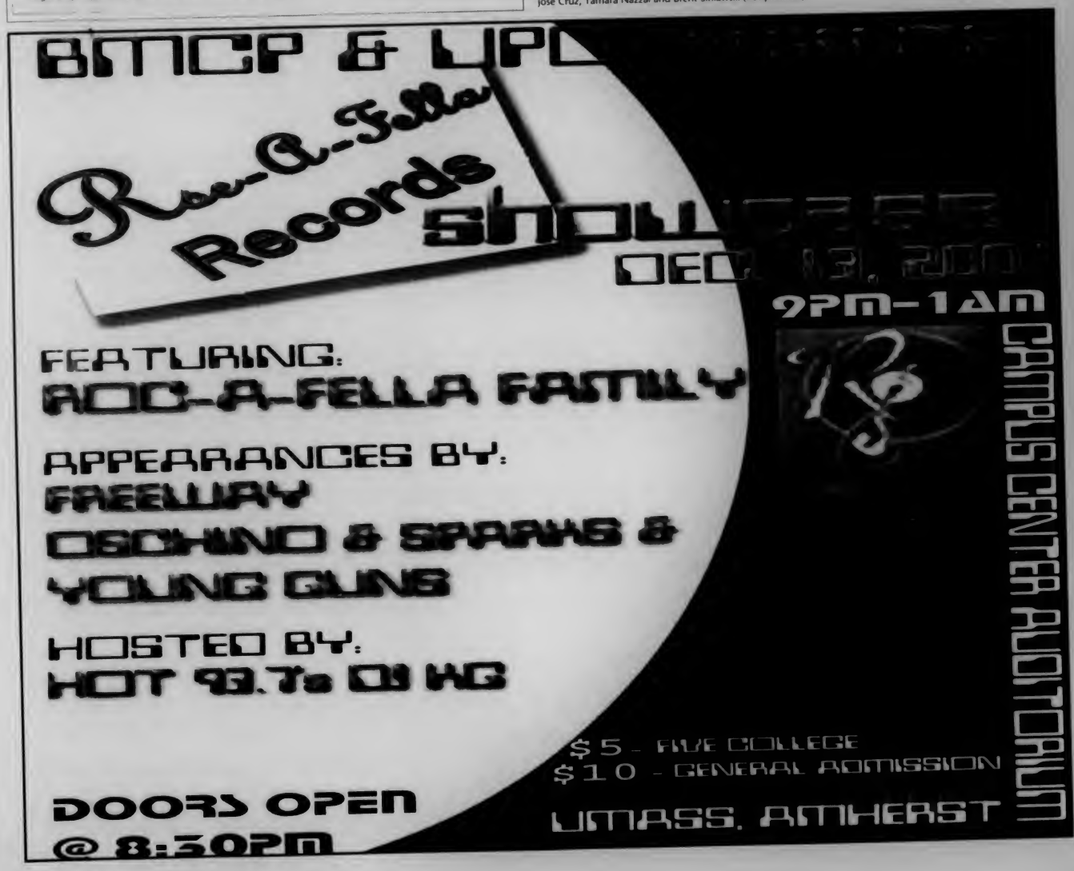
Supernetworks "capture the interaction among networks and their impacts on business today," according to Director Anna Nagurney, a John F. Smith Memorial Professor. "No social or business transaction can take place without such networks." They are large networks that work in areas such as transportation, logistics, finance, economics and social interactions.

"This center was established as a vehicle for the collection, dissemination, and enrichment of information and knowledge surrounding the role of networks and the strategic management thereof in the modern, global society and economy," according to Nagurney. "The focus of the center is on Supernetworks which capture the interaction among networks and their impacts on business today."

The center will study several specific topics including supply chains, telecommuting versus commuting, decision-making, electronic commerce and financial networks with intermediation.

"We're the first to center to focus along the lines of supernetworks," said Nagurney. "We're look at the networks that help decision making in classic networks."

She addressed the relevance of the new center in regards to Sept 11. "These supernetworks show the interactions between transportation, economic networks etc. We can use the networks to address security. While in the future we could look at terrorism networks, these are usually deviant. Instead, we can better understand the current networks to help protect them...this is a very hot topic right now, it's skyrocketing.



"News is spreading about the site," said Nagurney. "We've been receiving hits from all over the world and the journal articles about it haven't even been published yet."

Nagurney shows the creation of a virtual center for several reasons. "I don't want to wait years for papers to come out," commented Nagurney. "I hope to add visualizations and software right on the website."

KRISTEN LADISH NAGURNEY

The Supernetworks crew, left to right: Toyasaki Fuminori, Dmytro Matsypura, Aaron Suprenant, Chris Sullivan, Jose Cruz, Tamara Nazzal and Brent Siniawski (not pictured).

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, December 13, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Cloning for life:
A cause worth our time

An article appearing on Boston.com Tuesday highlighted the on and off again relevance of human cloning, a topic that again rose to the surface of the national conscious a month ago when Advance Cell Technology in Worcester announced it had successfully cloned the first human.

Although that development was terminated after the test reached a stage of six cells, the simple fact that progress was made at all has raised eyebrows and concerns in the scientific and surrounding communities. Parties on both sides of the issue have either doubted the claim itself, come out in support of it, or railed harshly against it.

According to the story, one of the more significant concerns surrounding the issue is not that the cloning has been accomplished, but rather why it has been so energetically pursued.

In the story, Ruth Hubbard, a professor at Harvard University, says, "I believe the motive is not to relieve suffering but to make money. It's simply to stake out a claim."

It's a frightening prospect in addition to the existing fear of the unknown: so few us know anything about the process and what it entails that a particular group with different motives could easily manipulate our own expectations and sights to suit their own purposes. Working behind the veil that is our collective ignorance (for now, at least), that angle can only be an easier route to pursue.

Lawmakers were expected to debate the limitations that should be placed in similar research groups yesterday, in the hope of reaching some consensus that will be followed by any research team. With the goals of those unique groups so varied, however, the possibility of such limitations succeeding is a hazy one.

The Worcester group ultimately plans to harvest stem cells from cloned embryos that can be used to treat a wide array of illnesses. Religious leaders have come out against experimentation to even that extent, while most scientists applaud the forward motion, as long as caution is applied.

We at the Collegian feel that, while the prospects of the project are still largely unknown at the time, the possibility for curing existing illnesses is too great to ignore. We're not talking cloning for the sake of cloning, or cloning on the whim of an individual who wants to, in some way, "preserve" a part of themselves and live on.

What we advocate is the research into the embryos that could potentially hold a cure – the stem cells – that would drastically improve the quality if existing life. Again, the road to this is a long and uncharted one, but the potential promise waiting at the end is too fascinating – and too hopeful – to let slip away.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Information from Boston.com was used in this editorial.

Supremacist labels unacceptable

We write this editorial out of grave concern: anti-Semitism in this country persists, and it is alive at UMass.

The cry of anti-Semites throughout the ages has been that of an international Jewish conspiracy, the idea that Jews, numbering less than 20 million, are at the center of all the world's problems. As ridiculous as this accusation sounds, many publications such as the notorious Protocols of the Elders of Zion and modern Jew haters subscribe to it. Last May, Syrian president Bashar al-Assad clearly demonstrated his belief that the Jews are the world's misfortune, when he commented in front of the Pope that the Jews wish to "assassinate all the principles of all religions the same way they had done with Jesus and tried to kill the prophet, Mohammed." By saying that Israel, as the perpetrator of the Arab-Israeli conflict, is the cause of the world's calamities, contemporary anti-Semites do the same. The problem, however, goes far beyond this and scapegoats all Jews in all communities.

Lri Strauss's article, which was published in the Collegian (Dec 11th), does the work of anti-Semitic propagandists for them. Although we do not accuse him of being anti-Semitic, his words, which are cloaked under the comfort of his Judaism, are nothing less than hate seeped in venom. We thank Mr. Strauss for one thing: allowing all UMass students to recognize what anti-Semitic propaganda is, and that it threatens Jews and non-Jews alike.

In his article, Mr. Strauss claims that Jews who declare themselves in solidarity with the Jewish state without distancing themselves from its ideology are Jewish supremacists. The sickening element here is that this is a blanket statement, asserting that the majority of the Jewish population in the world is racist. Like the propagators of white supremacy and sexual harassment, Jews are now accused of being a part of a modern plague. Making such an accusation in an area like Amherst is dangerous– people have burned themselves and have taken to physical action in the name of eradicating racism.

Traditionally, the notion that Israel is a racist state partially rests on the idea of the Law of Return, which grants every Jew, wherever they may be, the right to come to Israel and become a citizen. What many people selectively choose to ignore is that this is only one way out of four to acquire Israeli citizenship. The other three ways are birth, residency, and naturalization, none of which are based on one's religion or ethnicity, and all of which are comparable to citizenship requirements in other countries. As for the law of return, one needs to look only as far back as the Holocaust to understand that Israel was founded on the idea that Jews everywhere need a safe haven.

Another central pillar in the Jewish supremacy belief is that Israel gives special rights to its Jewish residents. Israel's declaration of independence, however, upholds "the full social and political equality of all its citizens, without distinction of race, creed or sex; will guarantee full freedom of conscience, worship, education and culture." The Israeli Arab population is represented in the Knesset (parliament), and there is also an Arab minister (Salah Tarif) in the national unity government. Anti-Israel activists around the world and on this campus attack Israel's conduct, yet at the same time ignore the plight of Palestinians in Arab countries: In Syria, Palestinians are barred from gaining citizenship, and in both Syria and Lebanon, Palestinians are prevented from working in 75 types of employment. This is base hypocrisy.

ERAN BENEDEK
DAN YAGUDIN

Concerning Israel's Jewish character, how can the rights of Palestinians be advocated for, while those of the Jews are denied? Israel has a right to declare itself as a Jewish state just as Saudi Arabia and Oman have a right (and indeed have) declared themselves Muslim states, and the Holy See (Vatican City) is a Catholic Christian state. The majority of Israelis, including Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, have expressed support for the creation of a Palestinian state. And as one UMass student, Dawn Singer, has stated, what movements like the HAMAS and Islamic Jihad need to understand is that self-determination will not be achieved by self-detonation. In other words, no negotiation under fire.

To understand Israel's security concerns is to go beyond the immediate threat of the Palestinian police force and terrorist organizations. Imagine this: having given up strategically invaluable land to the Palestinians, they use this as a platform for an all-encompassing Iranian, Libyan, Iraqi, Syrian, and Sudanese attack on Israel, which, due to territorial concessions in the name of peace, would be nine miles across at its narrowest point. Statistics indicate that there are 22 Arab countries, with a population 50 times that of Israel, with territory 800 times as big, not even mentioning the absolute advantage of controlling the world's oil. Given this backdrop, it is unconscionable to call for a one-state solution that would leave the Jewish people without a homeland while establishing a neighboring Palestinian state.

The accusation that the Palestinian-Israeli conflict is the nucleus of global turmoil has not skipped UMass. Some students and professors have assigned blame for Sept. 11th on this very quarrel. The dangerous link is that supporters for the state of Israel will by extension be seen as colluders in bringing about the world's troubles. The vigil held at the Hillel House (Dec. 6th) was created as a stance against terrorism, in solidarity with the State of Israel, but mainly in the hope that these victims of terrorism are the last. Some of the bombings' victims were not Jewish, and we were extremely careful not to include any anti-Palestinian or anti-Arab rhetoric.

We must return to the most pressing and disturbing precedent: Jewish scapegoating. As visible Jews on the UMass campus (one kippah bearing, the other an outspoken advocate for Israel), we fear that an atmosphere unfit for education has been created. We are being labeled as racist supremacists simply based on our religious upbringing, our ethnic and cultural affiliation, and our Zionist philosophy (i.e., the right for a Jewish state to exist). This incitement for hatred is unacceptable to people of all faiths, races, and cultures, and it transcends far beyond the Arab-Israeli conflict. Calling the Hillel House, its staff and student affiliates, a racist supremacist organization is tantamount to the demonization of all Jews nationwide and worldwide. All campus groups must unify against this provocation and label it for what it is: a basic hatred for Israeli Jews and for all Jews that stand by Israel regardless of political nuance.

Eran Benedek and Dan Yagudin are UMass students.

Misreading the Middle East

The inflammatory essay by Lri Strauss, "Calling Out Jewish Supremacy," is as distasteful as it is blatantly inaccurate. Setting before him/herself a mythical target, he asserts that Israel is a supremacist racist state that draws its inspiration from the Jewish religious tradition. Were this essay written by a person who is not Jewish, one would undoubtedly brand it as anti-Semitic, and it is highly unlikely that the Collegian would have published it. With its preposterous claims, its native reliance on gross generalizations and stereotypes, and its utter disregard for facts, the Strauss essay is a transparent canard filled with ugly invective.

Typical of the weakness that plagues this essay is a reference to an exchange in a bakery that the author takes as evidence of Jewish supremacist thinking. How an innocent comment made to him supports this unsubstantiated allegation is very odd indeed. It also exposes Mr. Strauss' unfortunate tendency to misjudge the world around him. Repeatedly, his essay reveals a fundamental misunderstanding of the origins of the Middle Eastern conflict, of the Palestinian refugee problem, and the nature of Israeli society, and as a result he adopts an exceedingly simplistic view of these and related issues. Historians have shown that Palestinian refugees were not "driven out of their land by Zionist Jews," but in most instances sought to evade warfare or were encouraged to leave by Arab leaders. Many of them expected to soon return to their homes after Arab armies succeeded in pushing the Jews into the sea. Having successfully repelled these attacks, Israel offered to reunite broken families and to permit 100,000 additional refugees to return, but this was turned down. Fearing that a solution to the refugee problem could have been construed as an acceptance of the State of Israel, Arab countries – including the oil-rich among them – exploited the refugees as political pawns and remained unresponsive to their plight.

JAY R. BERKOVITZ

Arab efforts to destroy the fledgling State of Israel were part of an historical pattern that began in 1920 and repeated itself throughout the twentieth century. The unwillingness to accept the existence of a Jewish state in the Middle East resulted in a refusal to consider the partition of the land in 1937, and culminated in the rejection of an offer by the U.N. to create an Arab state alongside Israel in 1947. At Camp David in July 2000, the Palestinian leadership decided to turn down an Israeli offer that would have given Palestinians 95% of their demands. Refusing to present a counter-proposal, the Palestinians embarked upon a program of violence and murderous terror.

The real problem is that the Palestinian leadership has refused to take the necessary steps toward peace. Under the Oslo accords, signed in 1993, Israel agreed to trade land for peace on the condition that the PLO renounce those portions of its charter calling for the dismantling of the State of Israel. From the inception of Oslo, however, Hamas and Islamic Jihad have relentlessly tried to thwart these efforts through the use of terror. But even Yasir Arafat's own Fatah party has never accepted the legitimacy of the State of Israel. Its constitution still calls for Israel's destruction, and the organization brazenly posts its true intentions on the Internet (www.fatch.net/epublic/constitution.htm). It unabashedly calls for "the complete liberation of Palestine, and the eradication of Zionist economic, political, military and cultural existence."

This objective, the charter continues, is to be pursued through nothing less than an "armed public revolution." An "armed struggle is a strategy and not a tactic, and the Palestinian Arab People's armed revolution is a decisive factor in the liberation battle and in uprooting the Zionist existence, and this struggle will not cease unless the Zionist state is demolished and Palestine is completely liberated." If this were not clear enough, it states plainly that Fatah's goal is to "oppose any political solution offered as an alternative to demolishing the Zionist occupation in Palestine."

Although the Oslo agreements call for an end to incitement against Israel, the Palestinian Authority continues to foster anti-Israel and anti-Jewish images. Mr Strauss is evidently not familiar with the anti-Semitic diatribes contained in textbooks such as The New History of the Arabs and the World, or with the fact that the U.S. State Department confirmed in February 1999 that PA textbooks are filled with "anti-Semitic characterizations." Furthermore, senior religious authorities appointed by the PA have gone on record as denying the existence of the Jewish Temple in Jerusalem, the holiness of the Western Wall, and the Holocaust. Worst of all, Muslim sermons glorifying suicide bombers continue unabated.

Created with the full backing of international law, the State of Israel has provided refuge for Jews with no other place to go, including Holocaust survivors, those who suffered persecution in Arab countries, and refugees from Ethiopia and the former Soviet Union. There is also an Arab minority of roughly 20% in Israel that enjoys full citizenship. Mr. Strauss's allegation that Israel is an apartheid state is absolutely ludicrous. While it is true that there is still some regrettable discrimination against Israeli Arabs, this is a social phenomenon that is a direct result of the political conflict between Israel and its Arab neighbors. But as is widely known, Israeli Arabs participate in democratic elections, are represented in the Knesset, and enjoy greater freedom than Arabs in any other country in the world.

The substitution of slogans for sophisticated analysis will advance nothing. Far from offering illumination, Mr. Strauss's repeated misuse of terms such as "supremacist," "apartheid," and "racist" only serve to confuse the issues. Implicit in his remarks is the suggestion that the intentional slaughter of Israeli civilians can be understood as a reasonable reaction to this purported "supremacism." No one should fall for such distorted thinking.

It is most troubling that Mr. Strauss appears willing to embrace radical Islam's tendentious reading of history uncritically. Considering the historical attachment of the Jewish people to the land of Israel, and in light of the persecution that Jews have suffered, it is astonishing that he cannot bring himself to acknowledge Israel's right to exist as a democratic Jewish state. Israel, on the other hand, accepts a two-state solution to the conflict. Unfortunately, the Strauss essay does nothing to advance the process of peaceful coexistence and mutual respect we all so desperately seek.

Jay R. Berkovitz is a professor of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies.

The sad tale of a reindeer Christmas

Merry Christmas to all. But is it? Someone isn't happy those days it appears. And if that someone has his way, Christmas will be very different this year.

The reindeer is pissed, all right? Donner has had enough, and he's not keeping quiet anymore. You don't believe me? Call him. He taken interviews these days. He's that ticked.

"I'm sick of this crap," the furry behemoth said to me in a bar yesterday. His antlers quivered as he shook with anger, and I could see the fire in his eyes.

I didn't want to tick the reindeer off any further, but the attitude perplexed me. Reindeer? Hate Christmas? How can this be? The whole notion seemed ridiculous. Carefully, I voiced my confusion to the large furry beast.

Donner slammed his glass of brandy down. Shaking the table as his hoof crashed onto the table with irritation, he began to outline all that was wrong for Christmas for him and his fellow...reindeer.

"You think it's all fun and games, don't you," he accused me. He snorted, his nostrils flaring. "Christmas sucks for us. Think about it. THINK about it. While everyone around the world is receiving Christmas cheer, we're carting Santa's fat ass around in a freakin' wooden sleigh! It's horrible! On Dasher, on Dancer, on Prancer, on Vixen? The guy's a slave driver! The only ones that has it worse than us are the elves!"

I blankly blinked back at the reindeer, not knowing what to say. In all the interviews that I've done, this was quickly turning into the most difficult. What do you say to a disgruntled employee working for the jolliest many in the whole wide world? My mouth opened, but no words came out.

"Shocked, aren't you." The reindeer read me perfectly. "Think about it from my point of view for a minute. I'm getting old. I'm not the young buck that I once was. I want to retire. Graze in pastures. Eat carrots. Start a family. But I'm trapped. Santa knows we're not happy, he just doesn't care," Donner said, finally beginning to calm down.

His voice dropped to a whisper. "Little Saint Nick? Hardly. There's no consideration anymore. Santa used to keep himself in shape, but things are out of hand now. He's pushing four hundred pounds, yet he's still pounding the milk and cookies and eggnog. Every year the sleigh gets heavier. Every year the reindeer get a little older. I don't know how many more Christmases we can pull off before something changes. I love tradition as much as the next deer, but I just don't know how much longer I can do this anymore," Donner said. I tear rolled down his dark furry face, and my heart broke for him.

I bought another brandy for Donner, and I listened intently as he went on. "There's two sides to every story, right?" he asked me.

"Absolutely," I agreed. My mind was blank. The tales of a reindeer were much sadder than I ever had an anticipated.

"That's my side," Donner said. His antlers swung down as he rested his head on a hoof.

"What if the reindeers unionize?" I asked. If it worked in corporate America, why not at the North Pole, I reasoned.

"We've tried!" Donner cried out. "There were so many problems. There's dissension among the reindeer, too. No one wants to be the leader; everyone is the follower. Think about it – think about the names: Dancer, Prancer, Vixen, Comet. They don't strike fear in the hearts of many. Even the names are girly. The fact of the matter is, Santa's got most of the other reindeer right under his fat thumb. As soon as Santa raised his voice, they cowered."

I brainstorm came to my mind, or so I thought. "Where does Rudolph stand on all of this?" I asked. I figured if there was a leader among the reindeer, he had to be the one.

"Rudolph is a damned joke," Donner spit. "Do you remember the story? We wouldn't let him join in any reindeer games? The dude is horrific. Totally uncoordinated. He's useless. No one respects him. To make matters worse, Santa gave him a shot on that one Christmas, and they made that stupid song and then the stupid movie about him. Totally went to his head! He thought he was the best! That's the one and only Christmas he was in on the work. He's too weak to actually pull anything. He gets no props up here from the other reindeer. He just loafs around all day, with that damn thing glowing on his face."

That ruled that out. "Donner, then It has to be you," I said. "You have to make the difference up there."

He smiled a reindeer smile, if there is such a thing. "I can give it a try," he said. "And talk to Santa. If I had my way, Santa would be flying a Huey every Christmas. It's about time he got with the times."

"You should," I said. "It is the giving season. Work out a compromise."

Such is life for a reindeer.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Up to my nuts in the spirit

I love Christmas. I love everything about it.

I loved buying my tree last weekend. I love the fact that it's seven feet tall and barely squeezes in under the ceiling in my living room. I love the way it fills up my apartment with that Christmas tree smell. I love the Wal-Mart and hand-made ornaments that make it so sweet, especially the AC/DC one that my father got me for Christmas in 1997. I love the fact that the guy who sold me my tree was probably Canadian, based on the fact that he wore a red flannel shirt and said things like "Four inches is a dusting... in snow country."

I love buying presents, like the bottle of Mr. Boston vodka that I got from Liquors 44 for my 19-year-old sister who doesn't know any better. I love the fact that 750 milliliters of Mr. Boston is less expensive than a sixer of Sam. I especially love the fact that a brand of booze called Mr. Boston is made in Kentucky and Georgia.

I love working in a mall toy store during the holiday season. I love the joyless middle-aged women who derive only misery from everything good. I love the cheap old people. I love the blissfully unaware people who, upon walking by the display of oversized Toy Story dolls, innocently exclaim "That's the biggest Woody I've ever seen!" I love all the bewildered parents trying to figure out the difference between B.I.O. Bugs and Bionicles, between Rumble Robots and BattleBots, between Tickle-Me-Elmo Surprise and Classics Series Three Medieval Spawn with Brutal Axe of Gore.

I love eggnog. I love booze. Do the math.

I love remembering the time when, sometime in middle school, my ancient great-aunt Clara (whom I have never met but who sends me a funny yet terrible Christmas present every year) mailed me a square green bottle of Brut brand cologne for Christmas. Which I then wore to school the first day back. Which I never, ever wore again when I stank so bad that Jeremy Scarth asked the teacher if he could move to a different desk because my reek was giving him a headache. Ah, how I love Brut!

I love still sitting at the kids table with most of my 22 cousins because, even though a lot of us are now drinking beers instead of milk, us boys still throw mashed potatoes in the girls hair, and they still scream "Auntie Colleen! Make Bobby and them stop!" I love that my tiny little Irish mom still slaps us all upside the head and tells me just to eat my goddamn food, it's good food and I'm wasting it, I should be ashamed, and on Christmas even. Lord help us and save us. I love knowing that I will never, ever leave that table until I get one of my own with my own family. I love passing these holiday traditions to my younger cousins, who will someday become royal wiseasses in their own right.

I love sledding. I love the thought of hopefully getting to do some soon, if global warming will stop.

This isn't really related, but I love the thought of George Bush and John Ashcroft having a glass of brandy by a window in the Oval Office when a meteor suddenly crashes through and injures them both. Just thought I'd mention it.

And I'm not ashamed to say that I love receiving presents. "Gimme gimme gimme gimme!" I often love to say this time of year. I love knowing that, even though some of you are shaking your heads at my unChrist like greed, you all share the same feelings, you hypocrite bastards. You won't get crap from me, that's for sure.

I love being Catholic and having never, ever gone to Church on Jesus' birthday... or even once at all in the past six or so years. I'm going to love burning in hell for every Christmas after I die.

I love wishing you all a very, very merry Christmas with filled with stuff you want, people you love, and fine, fine alcoholic beverages. Enjoy the season! For me, at least, it'll be a year too long before It comes again.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian's
Best of 2001

At the movies

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

As of this writing, the top ten movies contain approximately two good films, two films featuring animals, one film that brainwashed the children, one film that made an American tragedy neat, one film that featured a brain being eaten, one film starring a wrestler, and one film that was remade because the original featured ... pastry poking.

Look, it wasn't a good year.

If last year was a barren desert creatively, god only knows how to describe this past year. Where subtleties might have been better, Hollywood again elected to go with overproduced crap. Enough amorphous talk though – aren't specific insults better?

#7 – Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone made $16 bajillion dollars to take first place at the box office this year. In the last three seconds, it made an additional $75 quintillion. Because Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone is the most important movie ever made, it made far more than any of its domestic competition.

Oh sure, it's just a rehash of every other fantasy movie ever made, but this one stars a prepubescent British kid! Does it get any more brilliant?

In a word, yes.

For instance. Lord of the Rings will hopefully adhere to Tolkein's exacting world of hobbits and elves. Directed by creatively insane Peter Jackson, LOTR might be what a fantasy movie should be ... more than a game of Quidditch.

#2 – Family fare was super popular this year – Shrek took second place with $267.7 million. But Shrek just isn't easy to make fun of. Sporting a perfect blend of kids humor mixed with adult guffaws, the loveable ogre voiced by Michael Myers was a smashing success.

Featuring a hilarious song and dance sequence, Shrek was a film that appealed because everyone could come out of the theater with a smile on their face.

#3 – Rush Hour 2 inexplicably made $226 million.

A quick retelling of the plot: Chris Tucker's black and Jackie Chan's Asian and witness the supposedly hilarious interaction of the two. This time, Tucker's in Hong Kong and everyone is shorter than he is. And they eat skinned chickens. Will the hilarity ever end?

Apparently not, as Hollywood plans to cash in on the relative humor of the first two with a third installment, hopefully starring an aging Tucker driving a decrepit Chan around in a film called Driving in Rush Hour.

#4 – Monsters Inc. took fourth with little fanfare – because it came right before the most important movie of all time, Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone for who dared to forget.

Featuring the voices of Billy Crystal and John Goodman, Monsters Inc. was a hit with kids who were sick of sitting outside the theater waiting for the opening of Harry Potter. Having already read the insufferable Brit's books twelve hundred times, children figured they needed a breather and they got it in Monsters.

#5 – The Mummy Returns made $202 million at the box office, thus indicating that the American public still supports Brendan Fraser's inexplicable career. Has anybody made worse movies and continued to have success?

Monkeybone? Dudley Do-Right? Blast from the Past? Has Fraser no dignity? Airheads? Encino Man? George of the Jungle?

Stop it Fraser! Dear god, stop it! The Rock also starred in Returns, setting up his major movie debut in The Scorpion King. Thus, America has again neared the precipice to hell.

#6 – Pearl Harbor reduced the worst military attack against America into a three-hour drama designed to remind Americans that, yes, Josh Hartnett is a cutie. Dear lord, do Michael Bay and Jerry Bruckheimer have any tact?

Pearl Harbor is to war movies what Gone in 60 Seconds is to decent movies: a horrible abomination against man and God. Pearl Harbor did earn an astounding $198.5 million...of money that

Turn to MOVIES, page 7

My Top Five Musicians of 2001

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

2001 didn't necessarily bring the listening public the best material when compared to other years. For instance this year backed the dominating presence of one rapper named Eminem, who sunk so fast into obscurity when promoting D12, that you can bet that in his next album he'll be looking for more groups to offend (so look out gentlemen over the age of 35 who like cats, your next on his hit list). And although Britney, N'Sync, and the Backstreet Boys had marginal hits (most notoriously being "POP" and "Slave For You" respectively) but even the "pop craze" is slowly dying out.

But there were some stand out artists from a rock icon to the new "punk" movement.

5) SUM 41- It's amazing what a year can do for a band. Last year, stuck in Canadian obscurity this year idealized by teen age girls and punk "wannabes" thanks to two things: The wonder that is TRL and ... well...TRL. Now to give credit where what credit is due, they have very catchy and fun songs. From making homemade music videos that included "Jackass" like vignettes and have since been nominated for MTV Video Music Awards and their songs have been used in video games and in some of the biggest movies over the summer. Plus the fact that they shaved a girl's head in one video and relived "the Triple Lindy" in another, and you might not like their music, but if you are measuring success you can't miss them.

4) Ja Rule/Nelly – Tied for number four these two rappers have made sure that they are not forgotten among emerging acts like Bubba Sparxxx and Petey Pablo. Nelly, although did not release an album of his own, made his presence known by starring in the Super Bowl Half-time show when he free-styled to walk this way. Nelly then went on to put together other friends and St. Louis rappers to form the group St. Lunatics and helped them produce and put out their first album, despite that it had limited success. He also contributed a hit song ("Number 1") to the Training Day soundtrack.

Ja Rule co-starred with Latina sensation J-Lo, who had a cameo in the Vin Diesel action with a heart film The Fast and the Furious, and put out a gold selling third record. Not to mention he came to the Summer Jam at the Tweeter Center (or Great Woods for you purists). Both of these artists made their names readily available this year in the music world, and survived.

3.)Incubus – A band that has changed more times than a Tazz catch phrase. But at long last they have become popular, call it selling out or discovering their true musically calling, Incubus has become extremely

Turn to MUSIC, page 7

Grand Theft Auto 3 a steal

By Ian Beck
Collegian Correspondent

I was stoked to get Metal Gear Solid 2. It was the most fun I'd had with my PS2 in quite a bit. Too bad the game lasted all of 7 hours, and his bad, most of all, there was no replay value, unless of course you get your kicks shooting guards in the crotch, or looking for easter eggs. If that's the case though, I think you may have missed the point of what MGS2 was about. I don't want to talk about MGS2 however, because that sort of blasphemy only makes me angry. My point then, and I do have one: is that if you're into sadism and being just plain mean, Grand Theft Auto III is the game you're looking for.

Rockstar Games have really outdone themselves with this one. GTA III is not about plot; in fact it has MGS2 on its knees begging for forgiveness. You know that Microsoft slogan, "Where do you want to go today?" Well, it perfectly describes the idea behind GTA III. The only linear aspect of the game is the order of the missions you take, and even that is open-ended. Plot is minimal, it's only use is to propel gameplay, so that way, you don't spend three hours watching cut scenes waiting for a five minute break in-between to be able to play.

That being the case, the open-endedness knows no limits. Can't beat a mission? Go run some people over, go on a rampage, go on a "vigilante shooting rampage, go on a "vigilante mission," or play medic. If there are certain gangs that you're not to fond of, why not try seeing how many you kill before you incite a riot? The point is you don't always have to be running missions: the setting of the game, Liberty City, is so huge and vast that there's plenty to do.

Here's how it all works: there are basically two modes to the game, mission and non-mission. When you're on a mission you have one objective, usually marked by a green or purple dot on your radar. You can basically do whatever you want on a mission as long as you meet certain objectives without screwing things up. When you're not on a mission, you're free to roam the city, steal

Turn to GTA, page 7

Tube Notes wish list

With the end of the year and the holidays season now upon us, it's time to usher out another year of television and another year of "Tube Notes." With the holiday spirit in mind, here is my wish list for 2002 in the world of television.

- No more ill-conceived sitcoms with no chance for survival. Even the densest television viewer could see that shows like "Inside Schwartz," "Bob Patterson," and "Emeril" were dead on arrival; why can't executives making millions of dollars see the same?

- Get Chris Rock back to host the MTV Music Awards in September. Last year's show was so boring and poorly paced that even Britney stroking a six foot snake couldn't save it.

- Not to air "Making the Band." MTV has announced plans to continue the cancelled ABC band O-Town (Will Ferrell's favorite band by the way). Sure, "We Fit Together" is a funny song, but there is nothing funny (or entertaining) about watching these five guys wallow in their difficult lives of being rich, famous and a national joke. Last season one member of the group actually cried when his solo was given to another group member. About the only positive to this show is that since these guys act like five schoolgirls it pretty much gives the middle finger to the traditional gender roles portrayed in the media.

Please, for the love of god, no more "Dismissed!"

- Speaking of Will Ferrell, I wish for "SNL" to feature him in every skit. He's hilarious.

- And while we are at it, for NBC to move "Saturday Night Live" to a different night and put it on in primetime. That way the segment of the population that actually likes to go out and have fun on Saturday nights could see the show. NBC would get more bang for their buck by putting it on during primetime. Maybe the late night Saturday timeslot could be used for repeats just to keep the tradition alive.

- No more useless awards shows. "The People's Choice Awards," "VH1 Fashion Awards," "The American Music Awards," is there any prestige attached to any of these?

- For ABC to give Bill Mahar his job back and bring back "Politically Incorrect." This is a guy who lost his job because he said something that was "offensive." Aren't we supposed to have freedom of speech?

- For Carson Daly to stop saying "very cool" every time he interviews somebody.

- For "Larry King Live" to be cancelled. This guy lets his guests get away with saying anything, no matter how ridiculous. He's probably the most ill-informed nuck up in all of "news."

- No more reality shows where contestants compete for a cash prize.

- No more Big Brother. (see above)

- Last but not least, no more Jay Leno!

Kurt Polesky is a spin-free Collegian staff member.

Best of 2001

Nicholas Pizzolato
Favorite Quote:
"What?!" –"Stone Cold" Steve Austin
"A.J. (from the Backstreet Boys) has decided to change his name to Long Island Iced Tea" –Jamie Foxx at the MTV Video Music Awards
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Chop Suey" –System of a Down
"Raise Up (original and USA remix)" –Petey Pablo
"Alive" –P.O.D.
"Izzo (H.O.V.A.)" –Jay-Z
"Everywhere" –Michelle Branch
Favorite Movie:
Memento
Top 5 Things that should have been:
VMA Best Video—"Weapon of Choice," Academy Awards Best Picture—Traffic, Emmy for Outstanding Supporting Actor—Michael Imperioli from The Sopranos, Grammy for Best Dance Songs—Moby, MTV Movie Awards for Best On-screen team—George Clooney, John Turturro and Tim Blake Nelson in O, Brother Where Art Thou?

Shauna Billings
Favorite Quote:
"Whoever said orange is the new pink was seriously disturbed." –Legally Blond
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Family Affair" –Mary J. Blige
"Drops of Jupiter" –Train
"Southern Hospitality" – Ludacris
"Everywhere" – Michelle Branch
"Fallin'" – Alicia Keys
Favorite Movie:
Serendipity
Tie:
Favorite New Sweet, Sweet Soda Creation: Diet Coke with Lemon (sigh!)
Favorite Male Scent:
Andy Vogt (sigh)

Dave Siegel
Favorite Quote:
"Politicians got lipstick on their collars, the media started holler. I don't care who they screwin' In private. I wanna know who they're fuckin' in public." –Michael Franti
Favorite Movie:
Amelie
Most missed band of 2001:
Phish

Catherine "C-Munny" Turner
Favorite Quote:
"You know how we hate Connecticut? Yeah, well we hate central Pennsylvania now too." –C Munny to DJ Suds during a Ben & Jerry's road trip.
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Music"- Eric Sermon
"Family Affair"-Mary J. Blidge
"Clint Eastwood"- Gorillaz
"Gone"- N'Sync
"Last Night"- The Strokes
Favorite Movie:
Save the Last Dance
Worst state ever:
Connecticut

Eric Soderstrom
Favorite Quote:
"That's incredible...then don't eat it." –Don Taylor and Jim Hughson from NHL 2002
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Glitches" –The Roots
"No More Drama" –Mary J. Blidge
"Pop" –N'Sync
"The Sun" –Ghostface Killah feat. RZA and Slick Rick
"Smash Sumthin'" –Redman
Favorite Movie:
Rat Race (but only with four particular 20 second scenes)
Most Hyped Unreleased Single:
"We Not to Be" by DJ Suds feat. C-Munny

Andy Vogt
Favorite Quote:
"I know what I believe. I will continue to articulate what I believe and what I believe – I believe what I believe is right." –George W. Bush
Favorite 5 Songs:
"How You Remind Me" –Nickelback
"Fat Lip" –Sum 41
"Bleed American" –Jimmy Eat World
"Alive" –P.O.D.
"I'm Real" –Ja Rule/ J-Lo
Favorite Movie:
Ocean's 11
Worst Song of the Year:
"Lady Marmalade"

Johnny Donaldson
Favorite Quote:
Normally, I would find something hip or clever for this category. But this year, I think John Mellencamp's song "Peaceful World" is more appropriate—we do need a peaceful world.
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Everywhere" – Michelle Branch
"How You Remind Me" –Nickelback
"Edge of the Ocean" –Ivy
(tie) "All the Stars" and "I Tried To Rock You But You Only Roll" –Leona Naess
"Wherever You Will Go" –The Calling
Honorable mentions: "5/4" and "Clint Eastwood" –Gorillaz, "Hard to Explain" –The Strokes
Favorite Movie:
Shrek, with an honorable mention to Ginger Snaps, unfairly sent directly to video.
Favorite TV Moment:
The South Park kids take on the crisis in Afghanistan. Some of the funniest political humor in a long while.

Kurt Polesky
Favorite Quote:
"Caution: You're about to enter a no-spin zone" –Bill O'Reilly
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Izzo (H.O.V.A.)" –Jay-Z
"I'm Real" –J-Lo/Ja Rule
"Every Other Time" –L.F.O.
"#1" –Nelly
"Pop" –N'Sync

Turn to BEST, page 6

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Ptzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – Photo artist Anne Ross will be exhibiting Digital Photography in an exhibit called "A Space Odyssey 2001." Already an accomplished color photographer, Ross believes that the endless possibilities involved with computer manipulation are "a natural transition." Her show will be at the Smith College Alumnae House Gallery through January 12, 2002. The gallery hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday – Friday.

NORTHAMPTON – A collection called "Virtual Tea Party" will be on display and for sale at P!NCH in Northampton. The pieces are designed and produced by American Studio Artists in ceramics, glass and metal.

THEATER AND DANCE

NORTHAMPTON – The Hooked on Swing Society will be sponsoring an afternoon of west Coast swing workshops with national champions Blake Hobby and Bill Cameron on Saturday, December 15, at the Northampton Center for the Arts, 17 New South Street, Northampton. The workshops run from 1 to 6 p.m., and are followed by a dance at 8:30. The cost of the dance is $8, and includes a basic swing lesson at 7:30.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The Student Society for New Works will present its first project, Wrench: An Original Jazz Musical. It is the creation of Crescent Productions Company, a non-profit collaboration of UMass writers and designers. The performance will be in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, December 13 at 8 p.m. The show is free to the public.

UMASS – Fifty high school students from across Massachusetts and New Hampshire will arrive at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall for a tribute to the twentieth century music for winds. The event will occur on Saturday, December 16 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for students, elders and children under 18.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

AMHERST – Author Becky Thompson will read and sign her new book A Promise and a Way of Life: White Antiracist Activism on Thursday, December 13 at 7 p.m. at Food For Thought Books.

AMHERST – Author Sonia Rivera-Valdes reads from her new book The Forbidden Stories of Marta Veneranda at Food For Thought Books. The book deals with the comforts and discomforts of bi-cultural co-habititation of Anglo and Latino Cultures in the form of a Latina woman acting as a confessional for people. The event will take place on Tuesday, December 18 at 7 p.m.

ICE PERFORMANCES

UMASS –On Saturday, December 15 at the Lil' Mullins Center (a.k.a. The Practice Rink) there will be a performance of the UMass Figure Skating classes. Come see and support the young performers who will shine in their two and a half minute vignettes. The event starts at 1 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

■ best

continued from page 5

Favorite Movie:
Tomcats
Top 6 "Lil' " Rappers:
1. Lil' Romeo 2. Lil' Bow Wow 3. Lil' Kim 4. Lil' Wayne 5. Lil' Zayne 6. Lil' O

Mike Delano
Favorite Quote:
"She turned and said 'are you alright?' I said 'I must be fine 'cause my heart's still beating'" –The White Stripes
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Pagan Poetry" –Björk
"Fell In Love With A Girl" –The White Stripes
"Lipstick Vogue" –Gaza Strippers covering Elvis Costello
"All In Your Head" –Machine Head
"I Tried To Rock You But You Only Roll" –Leona Naess
Favorite Movie:
Not Tomcats
Favorite People at the Collegian that want to beat me up:
Night Graphics Staff

Justin Pearson
Favorite Quote:
"Hello, my name is Dave Gorman." –Dave Gorman
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Walk On" –U2
"Pop" N'Sync
"Flowers in the Window" –Travis
"Trouble" –Coldplay
"Clint Eastwood" –Gorillaz
Favorite Movie:
American Pie 2
Who is Your Favorite Dave Gorman?
–Dave Gorman #5

Nicolas Markantonatos
Favorite Quote:
"The Backstreet Boys and N'Sync are getting together to hold a charity concert. The money raised will be used to help victims of the concert" –Craig Kilborn on "The Late Late Show"
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Rock the Boat" –Aaliyah
"Family Affair" –Mary J. Blidge
"Pop" –N'Sync
"You Rock My World" –Michael Jackson
"Again" –Lenny Kravitz
Favorite Movie:
Shrek
Favorite Concert:
Madonna's Drowned World Tour 2001

Ken Campbell
Favorite Quote:
I'm not going to fire a $2 million missile at a $10 empty tent and hit a camel in the butt" –President Bush
Favorite 5 Songs:
"How You Remind Me" –Nickelback
"I Miss You" –Incubus
"Out of Love" –Five For Fighting
"Drops of Jupiter" –Train
"I'm Real" –Ja Rule/J-Lo
Favorite Movie:
Shrek
Most Hated Group:
Creed

Jim Pignatiello
Favorite Quote:
"Since the Counting Crows released "August and Everything After" in 1994, lead singer Adam Duritz has dated Courtney Cox, Jennifer Aniston, Lara Flynn Boyle, Monica Potter and Nicole Kidman. I will now light myself on fire." –Bill Simmons
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Smooth Criminal" –Alien Ant Farm
"Hero" –Enrique Iglesias
"My Sacrifice" –Creed
"What?!" –Andy Vogt
"Rock Show" –Blink 182
Favorite Movie:
Shrek
Worst Fat Suit in a Movie: tie between Gwenyth Paltrow in Shallow Hal and Julia Roberts in America's Sweethearts

Sam Wilkinson
Favorite Quote:
"If you want to be the man, you've got to beat the man, and I'm the man" –Ric Flair
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Sing" –Travis
"Clint Eastwood" –Gorillaz
"Island in the Sun" –Weezer
"Frontier Psychiatrist" –The Avalanches
"Like Humans Do" –David Byrne
Favorite Movie:
Heist
Best Return of the Nature Boy:
Ric Flair on Raw, Woo!

Dan Lamothe
Favorite Quote:
"King Kong ain't got nothing on me!!" –Denzel Washington from Training Day
Favorite 5 Songs:
"End of the World" –Cold
"Take It" –Staind
"In the End" –Linkin Park
"Blurry" –Puddle of Mudd
"Too Bad" –Nickelback
Favorite Movie:
Training Day

Matt Despres
Favorite Quote:
"Free Ray Bourque! Free Ray Bourque!" – Bono, Boston 4
Favorite 5 Songs:
"I'll Take the Rain" – REM
"Walk On" – U2
"Bayleaf" – Stone Gossard
"Celtic Frost" – Sonic Youth
"Mississippi" – Bob Dylan
Favorite Movie:
Elevation 2001: U2 Live in Boston
Best rhythm guitarist in Pearl Jam:
Stone Gossard

Jake Lewis
Favorite Quote:
"Bung!" –Jay & Silent Bob Strike Back
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Superman" –Five For Fighting
"So Right" –Dave Matthews Band
"Morning After" –Howie Day
"How You Remind Me" –Nickelback
"I Want Love" –Elton John
Favorite Movie:
Moulin Rogue
Coolest Jake L at Collegian:
Jake Lilien

Jake Lilien
Favorite Quote:
"I'm sorry, but we don't have any bagels to spare." – manager of a store called "The Holy Bagel"
Favorite 5 Songs:
"Cocoon" – Björk
"Letter From an Occupant" – New Pornographers
"Mississippi" – Bob Dylan
"Walk On" – U2
"Stuck in a Moment" – U2
Favorite Movie:
Mulholland Drive
Best Lesbian Sex Scene:
The two chicks in Mulholland Drive

■ music

continued from page 5

popular outside the twenty fans of WBCN's Nocturnal Emissions and WBRU's "Screamer of the Week". In 1999 they released the popular and eclectic Make Yourself and then accompanied it with the acoustic/live album When Incubus Attacks. Within their last two months, following the same formula they released Morning View (which if you watched MTV "Cribs" you would have seen the house they worked in). They are also releasing soon their first DVD When Incubus Attacks 2. Definitely a winner of the year.

2. Alicia Keys – Every year there is one (usually female artist) that stands out heads and shoulders above the rest. In recent years Macy Gray and Lauryn Hill have taken this award, and last year Nelly Furtardo became an a multi-national recording artist. This year the mantle has been passed down to Alicia Keys, her Songs in A Minor has been hugely popular and widely received by critics and fans alike. Already a front-runner for a number of Grammys her "Fallin'" video won Best New Artist on the Video Music Awards. Without a doubt, a true highlight of the year.

1) U2 – U2, you ask, "Why are they here if their last album was released last year?" Well, not only was All that You Can't Live Behind a fantastic testament to the band and rock 'n' roll itself, they have been extremely busy, and as usual very charitable. Their song "Elevation" was connected to one of the biggest summer blockbuster films; they also fronted the largest concert of the year. Selling out every venue across the country, it was described as their greatest and most intimate tour ever. After the tragic events of September 11, the band spearheaded plans to help and support those affected by the terrorist attacks. As if you needed a reason other than the ones listed, the lead singer's name is just Bono and the guitarist goes as Edge.

COURTESY TIM CAYLORD

Michelle Branch was "Everywhere" with everyone in the Best of 2001.

■ movies

continued from page 5

could have gone to orphans!

#7 – Jurassic Park 3 made $181.1 million.

The dinosaurs in this one are totally different. Ok, they aren't. In fact, Jurassic Park 3 was considered a way to cash in on the previous success of some marginally ok films. And by marginally ok, it is implied that terrible is meant. Terribly awful.

#8 – Was that "Ape"raham Lincoln at the end of the Planet of the Apes?

Tim Burton can't make a good movie. He can make a visually stunning movie, but he cannot tell a story to save his life. Was Planet of the Apes any different? No.

The only thing Apes really accomplished was breaking up Tim Burton and his psychotic girlfriend? The perpetrator was, as usual, Helena Bonham Carter, the star of Fight Club, Wings of the Dove, and the end of Kenneth Branagh's marriage!

#9 – Hannibal ate a brain. He ate a brain!

He made $165.1 million eating a damn brain!

#10 – American Pie 2 made $145.1 million. Somebody drank urine in the film, which is pleasant. And Jason Biggs was sexually deviant...and what was the actual difference with American Pie?

Typically, there weren't any.

The top ten movies this year sucked. There's no other way to say it. And next year isn't going to be any better.

COURTESY ROBERT ZUCKERMAN

Ethan Hawke wards off Poison Ivy (Uma Thurman) in Batman Part 6 this winter.

■ GTA

continued from page 5

cars, kill people, and so on. Watch out for the Liberty City Police Department, though because they'll be watching your every move.

They're everywhere, and it's pretty easy to get caught with your pants down, as certain actions will get you a wanted level. If you do get a one, you can run away from the cops as long as you don't have more than a star. There are six levels of wantedness in GTA III, as you start off as a statistic before shortly reaching level not unlike Osama Bin-Laden's. When you get up to five stars, the FBI will show up, and at six, the National Guard will be brought in. And, ironically, the only way to reallyh get your wanted level up is to kill cops, which (duh) is much more taboo than offing civilians.

Whadda'ya think so far kid? The concept of the GTA series has from the beginning been crime and mischief, and #3 isn't any different from the first two. Oh wait; in case you weren't aware, GTA III is completely three-dimensional. The camera isn't limited to an overhead view anymore, and what a spectacular difference it makes. The graphics are less detailed than other PS2 games, but that doesn't even matter compared the sheer size of the game. There are three sections to Liberty City; you start out in Portland, and as you progress, Staunton Island and Shoreside Vale will become available. The game is so huge, that it'll probably take about 75 hours to complete (that's about 7.5 repeats of MGS2).

That's quite a dish. I'd also like to take a moment before I wrap up to touch upon the sound in GTA III. Something that's always been unique about the game series has been the radio station feature, where whenever you get into a car you get the option of listening to the radio. In GTA III there are around seven or eight stations, with anything from eighties music to a dub-reggae station. My personal favorite is Chatterbox 109, the game's hilarious talk radio station. Each station has somewhere from 20-30 minutes of audio excluding commercials, and features original songs, etc. for each.

This is quite a game we've got here, and I've only touched the surface. I'd say it outranks MGS2 in every category except for graphics and plot. Who needs plot, though, when you just want to have fun? That's the whole point of Grand Theft Auto III, so be a Mafioso, be a homicidal monster, and be a bad driver. Just don't take it too seriously. This is without a doubt THE PS2 game of 2001.

SATURN™

Get service at Saturn of Hadley, no matter what year, make or model... foreign or domestic!

Oil & filter change only $19.95. Change oil & filter; top off all fluids; adjust tire pressures; hand wash & vacuum; up to 4 quarts of oil; cannot be combined with any other offer.

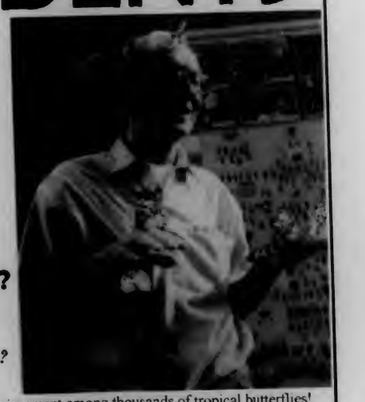
Cooling System Service - $39.95. Flush and fill antifreeze; pressure test system for leaks; inspect belts & hoses; hand wash & vacuum; up to 2 gallons of antifreeze; cannot be combined with any other offer.

Mass State Inspection - $29.00. Mon- Fri 8-12 1-5, Thurs 8-12/1-7; first come, first served appointments.

Free 25 Point inspection upon request. Includes checks on steering, suspension, tires, brakes, belts, hoses, lights, wiper blades and more

Who else will wash and vacuum your car…

while you eat jelly donuts?



10% Off All Orders With A Student Or Faculty ID.

Call our service department today at (413) 584-6066 to schedule an appointment, or just stop by Monday-Friday 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Thursday 7:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. and Saturday 7:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. We are conveniently located on Route 9 in Hadley at a PVTA stop and have direct access to the bike path. We also offer a courtesy shuttle service within a 15-mile radius (must call to schedule). All offers are valid with any student or faculty ID at Saturn of Hadley.

STUDENTS

Has Winter Got You Down?

Stuck on Campus for the Break?

Well, why not go South?

South Deerfield, that is...
and walk in a tropical environment among thousands of tropical butterflies!

Magic Wings Butterfly Conservatory & Gardens

See a moth with a 12" wingspan...metallic blue morphos, swarms of Julias and Zebra butterflies, lush flowering plants, a mini water fall & thousands of tropical butterflies dancing around in our climate-controlled glass conservatory.

Gift Shop / Garden-Holiday Shop / Cafe & Plant-filled Atrium with fireside dining / Exhibits & Displays

Admission is $4.50 with your student ID

Open Year Round* - 9:00 AM - 5:00 PM
*except Thanksgiving Day & Christmas Day

Directions:
2 miles north of Yankee Candle on Rts 5 & 10
91N - Exit 24, Right, 3 miles on Left
91S, Exit 25, Left, Left at Light, 1 1/2 miles on Left
Plus, we're on the Peter Pan Bus Lines Route

281 Greenfield Road
South Deerfield, MA 01373
413-665-2805

BRING A FRIEND
COUPON
Clip this Coupon
Present it when you visit MAGIC WINGS between December 13, 2001 & January 31, 2002 and receive a "BRING A FRIEND" pass

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

Equal Opportunity Employer

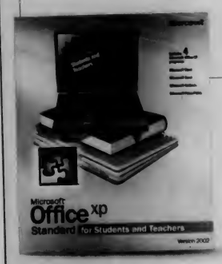
BUFFET
$4.95 All-You-Can-Eat buffet after every hoop and hockey game

EVERY TUES
Pub Trivia Night 9pm-10:30pm Win $$ and Prizes

BEER
12 Great Import and Microbrew Drafts

THE HARP
IRISH PUB

OCMP accepted
All Credit Cards Accepted
Full Menu
From Burgers to Lobster
Never a Cover
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 548-6900



THURS 12/13
9:30-close
Burning Valley Session
All Star Jam
(R&B/Reggae/Punk)

SAT 12/15
SuperKart

"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

17. Office XP is now available at almost 70% off, for only $149.
You buy it because:

A) It can help students stay ahead in school..... ☐
B) It comes with full versions of Microsoft® Word, Excel, Outlook®, and PowerPoint®..... ☐
C) It's a limited offer..... ☐
D) All of the above..... ☑

Microsoft® Office XP Standard for Students and Teachers is now available at a special low price. With all the tools to help students get more done, faster and easier. It's a no-brainer. Buy it today at one of the retailers below.

microsoft.com/office/forstudents

Microsoft

Office DEPOT · COMPUSA · BJ's · Fry's · STAPLES · BEST BUY · OfficeMax · TARGET · GameStop · MICRO CENTER

*Reseller prices may vary. To use this product, you must be a Qualified Educational User (QEU). See product box for details. Good in the United States only, while supplies last. Limit one copy per QEU. Not for business or commercial use. © 2001 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved. Microsoft, Outlook, PowerPoint and the Office logo are either registered trademarks or trademarks of Microsoft Corporation in the United States and/or other countries. The names and logos of actual companies and products mentioned herein may be the trademarks of their respective owners.

Pac-10 brings back postseason hoops tourney

By Greg Schain
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – In a controversial move, the Pac-10 CEO Group/Council elected in 2000 to reinstate the conference tournament for the 2001-02 season to determine which team receives the conference's automatic berth into the NCAA Tournament.

The tournament, which will take place Thursday, March 7, through Saturday, March 9, at the Staples Center, will be the Pac-10's first conference tournament since 1990. Until this season, the Pac-10 has been the only major conference in the country not to have a conference tournament to decide who gets the conference's automatic berth into the NCAA Tournament.

Arizona head coach Lute Olson and Stanford head coach Mike Montgomery have both spoken out against the tournament. They say the Pac-10's past success in the NCAA Tournament is attributable to the lack of a conference tournament, because its teams are refreshed while other conferences' representatives are still recovering from the grueling competition of intraconference play. They also hate the idea of the extra traveling and the fact that students are missing extra classes in March.

"I hate the idea of a conference tournament," Olson said. "The kids are already missing several weeks of classes because of the NCAA Tournament. They shouldn't have to miss an extra week because of the conference one."

However, others argue a tournament is healthy for the conference because it will create more excitement in the regular season. The Pac-10 will only take the top eight regular season finishers into the draw, so teams having bad seasons will still have a reason to practice and play hard despite being out of the race for the conference championship.

"There'll certainly be some action towards the end of the season in the bottom half of the conference," said Jim Muldoon, assistant commissioner of the Pac-10. "Teams are going to be fighting to get in the tournament."

It is unclear whether having a conference tournament will help or hurt the number of Pac-10 teams that get selected for the NCAA Tournament. If teams that are on the cusp of getting selected get knocked out in the first round of the conference tourney, the selection committee would certainly take notice.

However, if a seventh or eighth seed makes a surprising run in the conference tournament, it might propel them to a NCAA berth even if they lose in the finals to a top seed.

"If anything, the conference tournament will help the number of teams selected to the NCAA Tournament from the Pac-10," Muldoon said. "It might help them get a couple of extra wins."

UCLA won't be affected greatly by the reintroduction of the tournament. The Bruins normally have a schedule of Pac-10 games the week before the NCAA Tournament anyway, and since it will be at the Staples Center, they won't have to travel.

In fact, UCLA head coach Steve Lavin is looking forward to the tournament.

"The tournament will give us national media exposure that will help our visibility and with recruiting," he said. "It'll be three days of great basketball."

Lavin speculates that UCLA might have a slight edge in the tournament, because of the home crowd.

"We'd like to believe that playing close to our campus and in front of Southern California sports fans will be a positive," he said.

Tickets for the tournament have already sold out, although more might become available in the future.

The Pac-10 previously had a conference tournament from 1987-1990. UCLA captured the first tournament title and Arizona captured the final three.

The Staples Center has signed on to host the tournament through 2007. The quarterfinal and semifinal rounds will be on Fox Sports Net, with the finals airing on CBS.

■ acl

Continued from page 9

ligament. There are various methods of reconstruction. Some use an allograft, or a piece of tissue donated from someone else. Others use a piece of the patient's hamstring or Achilles tendon.

The most popular method is the patellar tendon autograft, which is often considered the most reliable. In this procedure, doctors use a piece of the patient's own patellar tendon and take with it a piece of the kneecap and a piece of the tibia. It's preferable for a number of reasons.

Doctors don't have to operate on a different part of the body as they would if they used a piece of the hamstring. Also, in order for the graft to be strong, it needs to bond to the femur and tibia. Dr. Peter N. Ove of Orthopedic Sports Medicine in Annapolis said bone bonds to bone very well much better than tendon bonds to bone.

Because the patellar tendon is already attached to bone on either end, doctors can simply take a chunk of bone on either end of the patellar tendon graft, solving that particular problem.

"It's right there," said Ove. "It's the same operative site. It's probably the strongest of the grafts... You can get the bone to heal to the bone tunnels and it makes for a very good graft. It's probably still the gold standard."

Grafts other than the patellar tendon autograft tend to reduce recovery time and reduce the risk of tendonitis, which is fairly common. Also, if an athlete tears both ACLs and uses a patellar tendon autograft both times, he or she will not be able to use the same method again since only so much can be taken from the patellar tendon.

WHAT NOW?

So the questions remain. Does the research that's been done constitute enough to warrant preventative measures and if so, what preventative measures are there to apply?

As for the way in which athletes use their leg muscles, steps are being taken now. Athletes can be trained to use their muscles differently and this may reduce risk.

Athletes often do strengthening and balancing exercises to help prevent knee injuries. With improving technology, they should be able to take even greater strides.

Additionally, doctors have considered oral contraception as a way to even out estrogen levels in female athletes.

However, many doctors say they believe the research is minimal and are hesitant to prescribe oral contraceptives. Estrogen levels seem to affect ligaments, but they may also affect other things, including muscles and the nervous system.

"There's a lot of little things people are looking at," Curl said. "There's no one variable or cause that's been singled out as the number one factor. It's probably that in any individual, maybe one or two of these things come together at a bad time."

"I don't think we'll ever completely eliminate ACL injuries. The question is, can we minimize the risk?"

■ Miljko

continued from page 12

Miljko remembers. "I figured that with all the young defensemen we've got it might help. He gave me a shot and so far it has worked out," as he has totaled three power-play points.

Miljko's on-ice vision and poise – both products of his experience – simply complete him as a player, but his shot is what has him highlighted on opponent's scouting reports.

"It's so quick, so pinpoint accurate and he gets it off his stick so fast, it's nearly impossible to control as a goalie," says Mike Johnson, the man on the wrong end of Miljko's in-practice sniping.

Growing up in Etobicoke, Ontario, Miljko, like most Canadian youngsters, had a makeshift rink in his backyard. Though his was a little more confining than most.

"We had a little rink in the back," he recalls. "It wasn't big at all. The only thing you could do is shoot." And shoot he did.

Snapshots, wrist shots, snapshots; his arsenal began to take shape at an early age. Thanks to a lot of practice and a little help from Papa Miljko.

"My dad created this little brick weight that he put on the end of the stick when I was younger," Martin says of father Slavko. "That really helped develop my wrists and forearms."

Miljko picked up his heavy shot during his childhood, but it took him until now to achieve the focus and determination that was necessary to complete his game.

So now that Miljko has all the tools, mental and physical, what can the rest of college hockey expect?

Says Johnson, "I feel bad for goalies."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

He shoots, he scores !

UMass defenseman Toni Soderholm demonstrates what a one-timer is supposed to look like.

Running out of time? Run into Zanna.

ZANNA

Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women

Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

www.zanna.com

Time is your most precious resource...
Invisible Typist™
is your most valuable tool...
Instantly retype previously typed words
Automatically correct spelling errors as you type
Transform your abbreviations into words or phrases
Works invisibly with any Windows® 95/98/Me/2000 application
Great for word processing, e-mail, chat, instant messaging...
Invisible Typist
Download it now from www.Quolux.com – Only $9.95
Quolux™ ~ Illuminators of Cyberspace
Quolux and Invisible Typist are trademarks of Quolux, Inc.
Windows is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

HBO presents
Spring Break in the Winter
sponsored by
USA Spring Break 877.460.6077 & uncute.com
Thursday, Dec 13th @
The Pub
15 East Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
2 FREE Spring Break Trips to Cancun will be given away!
FREE HBO Giveaways
T-Shirts/CD's/DVD's all night long!!

Write 4 sports

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-8, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs '01 8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8871
www.silverscapedesigns.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

Most women prove to be susceptible to ACL tears

By Brendan Glaccum
The Diamondback (U. Maryland)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE PARK, Md. – Vicki Brick was simply playing pickup basketball last fall when her entire 2000-2001 season ended before it even began. The Maryland Terrapin guard was looking forward to her sophomore season after leading the ACC in steals as a freshman.

But a week before the ceremonial start of the season Midnight Madness she tore the anterior cruciate ligament in her left knee. She injured it the same way many others do – quick stop, pivot and change of direction.

"I planted and spun really fast," Brick said. "My foot didn't move and the rest of my leg kind of buckled."

Brick briefly experienced what she described as "unbearable" pain, but not until the results of an MRI came in a few days later did she realize the severity of the injury.

"The first thing I thought was 'I can't believe this happened to me,'" Brick said. "My second thought was I worked so hard for this and I felt like it was for nothing. I knew I was going to be out the entire season."

Some in the medical community have dubbed the ACL injury an epidemic for female athletes. Doctors across the country and representatives from the NCAA have conducted surveys specifically regarding the problem for many years.

The results have been consistent – female athletes suffer the injury far more often than male athletes do. The numbers are lopsided even in sports like soccer and basketball, where the rules and playing surface are the same. It has been estimated women in organized sports will suffer in excess of 30,000 serious knee injuries per year.

Baltimore Ravens and Terrapin team doctor Leigh Ann Curl said the ACL injury rate for women is anywhere from four to six times higher than it is for men, especially in basketball and soccer. Some estimates have it as high as eight times.

Nineteen athletes on the campus have injured an ACL at least once; 14 of the 19 are women. The women's soccer team alone had five players this season who were either out of commission because of the injury or had been previously. The Terps enjoyed the return of sophomores Jen Biscoe and Lindsay Givens from ACL tears, but suffered the loss of defender Carly Viher and top recruit Kimmy Francis to the same injury.

Several factors are considered to contribute to the rash of ACL injuries among women. Among them, the two most widely studied involve hormones and muscle use.

A few questions arise from these studies. First, has there been enough research to conclude these factors are truly significant? Second, if the factors are indeed significant, what steps can be taken? Can the risk of injury be reduced for at-risk athletes?

What is the ACL?

The knee is made up of tendons and ligaments that enable motion and provide stability. The ACL is one of four major ligaments in the knee. Its primary purpose is to provide stability.

Two of the ligaments run along the outside of the knee; the other two, the ACL and the posterior cruciate ligament, run through the middle.

The PCL runs high in the front to low in the back and sits behind the ACL. It keeps the tibia (shin bone) from moving back from the femur (thigh bone).

The ACL is low in the front and high in the back and prevents the tibia from moving forward from the femur. This provides stability when a person stops suddenly or changes direction.

THE INJURY

When the ACL undergoes too much stress, it becomes more susceptible to tearing. More often than not, the injury occurs without contact. Athletes simply land the wrong way after they jump, hyperextend the knee or place too much torque on the knee when they stop and change direction.

Though it often happens without physical contact with another person, such contact can increase the likelihood of the injury occurring.

Generally, a person who tears an ACL will feel a great deal of pain for a few minutes. Depending on the amount of additional damage to the knee, particularly to either the medial or lateral meniscus (cartilage), the pain will almost completely subside after a short time.

Some athletes said the pain ebbed so much and so quickly as soon as a few minutes after the injury, in some cases they felt as if they could return to action. Others had swelling and pain for several days. Either way, they experience a significant amount of instability in the knee.

"It's incredible pain [at first]," said Givens, who tore her ACL twice. "You can never express in words. [It hurts] for like two minutes straight and then it goes away. There's nothing. So you feel like you can play again, but you really can't. You can't pivot. You try and move to the side, but you can't."

Once the ACL tears, it doesn't heal or regenerate. It disintegrates and can only be repaired via reconstructive surgery. Without an ACL most people can participate in everyday activities such as walking or even running. Without the ACL, however, there isn't enough holding the knee together for most athletes to do all the things necessary to compete in a sport.

Movements like jumping, pivoting or changing direction become limited because the tibia will move forward from the rest of the leg. Instead of moving as a single unit, the tibia and femur will move in slightly opposite directions.

The more often this happens after the initial injury, the greater the risk of damaging other parts of the knee.

There are several factors noted for contributing to the injury, including speed of the sport, training technique and playing surface. The increased number of injuries can also be attributed to the rising number of athletes, especially female athletes. The most interesting among these causes, by many doctors' standards, involve biological and mechanical differences between men and women.

MENSTRUAL CYCLE AND ESTROGEN LEVELS

It is widely accepted that higher estrogen levels weaken ligaments and that looseness may also increase the probability of injury. This is evident primarily in childbirth, during which a woman's ligaments tend to become loose. Numerous studies have demonstrated a link between the menstrual cycle and ACL injuries.

"Estrogen levels are very high right at the mid-cycle, which is where there is an estrogen surge right before the point [of] ovulation," Curl said.

"If you look at the hormone cycle, there's been evidence that shows in some populations that the looseness or stiffness of the ACL fluctuates over the cycle. With the estrogen surge, it may be at its loosest or most lax point.

"That there is a little bit inconsistent, but nonetheless, if you survey a population of athletes who have torn their ACL, there seems to be a cluster of them, more than just random chance that would tear the ligament in mid-cycle."

A study by Dr. Edward M. Wojtys and colleagues at the University of Michigan involved 65 women who had torn their ACLs. They discovered nearly three-fourths of the women were ovulating at the time of injury.

Though several studies support these findings, the researchers contend the data is still minimal and warn against rushing to take preventative action.

QUADS VS. HAMSTRINGS

The other factor garnering a lot of attention is the way females use their leg muscles as compared to the way men use theirs. Significant research has shown women tend to rely on their quadriceps more during a particular physical activity then do men, who use their quads and hamstrings more evenly.

Women use their thigh muscle much earlier and harder than men, Curl said. The more an athlete uses the thigh muscle, the more likely it is he or she will pull the shin bone forward, putting additional pressure on the ACL.

Studies have also shown women tend to have their knees slightly straighter during physical activity, particularly landing from a jump.

"If you took a video camera and videotaped men and women performing the same skills like how they jump, the jump-stop in basketball, how they cut and change directions women do that a little differently," Curl said.

"[The knees] are supposed to be in more of a squatted position. So there's some physiological differences as to how women execute certain maneuvers that may put them more at risk."

So why do women use their muscles differently? Some doctors have kicked around the idea that because women have wider hips and a wider pelvis, it makes them more knock-kneed (inward curving of knees). Others have suggested improper training as the root. The answer likely lies somewhere between the two.

SURGERY

Doctors repair the ACL by inserting a graft into the void created by the torn

Turn to ACL page 8

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Going up strong

Raheim Lamb and the rest of the men's basketball team will try and end its three-game losing streak this Saturday against Central Connecticut at the Mohegan Sun Arena.

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-9025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9
AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.
TUESDAY: KARAOKE/80'S NIGHT HOSTED BY DJ STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY: MAGNIFIED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: ENHANCED W/ CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, AND JTB
THURSDAY: W/ DJS OOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES Ladies Free Before 11pm
FRIDAY: GROWROOM RECORDS PRESENTS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs NUSH, SIMI AND BON BONS
SATURDAY: HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY: DRUM & BASS W/ DJS COMPLEX AND ORION QUEST
COME CHECK OUT OUR SUNDAY JAZZ BRUNCH, AND ENJOY OUR CREATIVE MENU ALONG WITH SOME ATLANTIS BLOODY MARYS AND MIMOSAS

THE SNOW BALL
UMass Winter Semi-Formal
Celebrate the end of the semester!
Friday, Dec. 14, 2001
7:00p.m. - 12:45a.m.
Peking Garden on Rt. 9
DJ, Dancing, Dinner and Cash Bar!
(Positive ID Required)
Tickets are only $20
$25 at the door
On Sale now
at the Campus Center Concourse STARS table

THANK YOU STUDENTS!

UMass basketball

DEAR STUDENTS,
I WANT TO THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT AT THE HOME GAMES THIS SEMESTER. GOOD LUCK ON YOUR FINALS & HAVE A WONDERFUL HOLIDAY. GO UMASS!
STEVE LAPPAS

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Ozzie Osborn/Rob Zombie Dec 15 @ 7:00 Worcester Centrum 6 tickets @ $50ea. 665-2646

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom 2 Bath apt. Available 1/1 great location. Call 256-4135

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

93 Mazda MX6 A/C. CD changer. power windows, sun roof. $2000. Call 219-7730

90 Subaru Legacy Wagon 117k $2000 Call 586-8412

'93 Ford Taurus GL Sedan, auto transmission, front wheel drive, 58,300 miles, AC, excellent tires, power steering/windows/door locks. $3,500. 253-7026

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K. CD player, leather interior. Great Condition $6500 O/B/O. 413-256-1989

EMPLOYMENT

The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its After School Programs operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $7.80-8.60hr. 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or Call S. Basniak @ 256-4065

Childcare Mon, Tues, Thurs, Fri. 1-5pm. 4&5 year old in our Downtown Amherst home. Housing option for the right student. Car & references. 256-1543

Returning to the Greater Boston Area This Winter Break? Want a fun, flexible job working with kids in their homes? Call Parents in a Pinch, Inc. if you have at lease 1 full weekday free and childcare references. Earn $10+/hour. Don't wait, call Joy today! At 617-739-KIDS www.parentsinapinch.com

Hampshire Fitness Club Janitor beginning January, 2 days per week 8-2. $9.00 plus membership 256-6446

EMPLOYMENT

Administrative Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

Sales Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS

Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 31th – January 28th. you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Boulders Apt. avail Dec/Jan. 253-6731 wl1210@student.umass

FOR SALE

TV for sale 13 inch must sell Dec. 17 $50 obo 546-0526

15 Inch Monitor excellent condition. Asking for $80 price negotiable. Call 6-2536

Klimax Skiboards $100 Salomon Equipe Boots (13s), skis (190s), polls, bag. Call Justin 546-0679

For sale Twin bed & frame $70. Fan w/ remote $20. Call 256-3951

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

Room Available in Belchertown $350+ washer & dryer for $5/month, smoking ok, 21+, no pets. 15 mins. from Amherst Center. 323-0578

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Large Bedroom available in Hobart Lane to be shared by 2 girls. Rent neg 549-9192

1 Room in 5 Bedroom House Located near Cowls Lumber near bus rt. Take over lease ending in May. Call Aaron 549-1799

Two furnished rooms available in a family house. Starting January,2002. Utilities included. No lease. Call Agnes 253-3670 for details.

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

Room Available for Jan. 1st. walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate Needed for 3 bedroom apt. Take over lease until May. Call 413-446-3472

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

ROOMMATE WANTED

Room for rent. Pulpit Hill Rd. Need one roommate in three bedroom duplex. Big yard right next to Puffers Pond. Can move in as soon as Jan 1st. Male/Female welcome $340/month. Call 549-8988

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Lantern Court on bus route. AC, DW, plenty of storage. Call 413-397-0925

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419, on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre, Mexico. Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.intercampus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

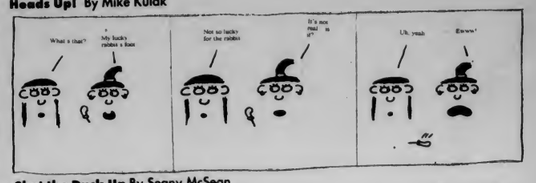
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

What are you waiting for?

Advertise today!

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

NO TV LISTINGS AVAILABLE

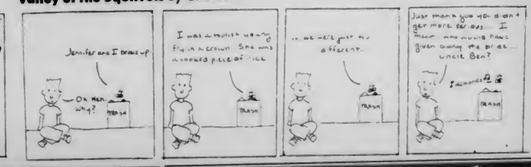
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Under the Sun By Pedro Gomes

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"... who is the old guy that Sam is playing pool with?"

– Amanda Cooke, talking about Adam White

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 44	HIGH: 49 LOW: 30	HIGH: 47 LOW: 23

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Are you an open book today? If not, you're going to have to make things a little more clear to those who have to work closely with you.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may have to take on more responsibility and do more hard work than you had planned on. Remember for whom you're doing it for.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may not be able to provide assistance today, but the very least you can do is get out of the way. Avoid being an unconscious obstacle.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – A little peace and quite will go a long way today and allow you to get more in touch with your feelings in a way that is most productive.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – A small pleasure can lead to greater pleasures today – provided you are honest with yourself and others about what really satisfies you.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Despite the odds, you are likely to come out on top today. Frustration can be kept at bay simply by keeping busy and solving little problems.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The anticipation is killing you today, but you must be willing to wait your turn before having a go at something that could offer dramatic rewards.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The attainment of a major goal depends in large part today upon your willingness to be flexible. This road takes you in many directions.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – There is no reason to thing that this day will bring anything different from what you expect – though the afternoon will offer an interesting choice.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may be quite restless today and prone to brooding and depression. That person you count on to cheer you up may not be able to do so today.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A matter of official policy may have become rather complicated at the workplace. By avoiding a "political" solution you can work wonders.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – A problem left to you by someone who has given up may prove to be something of a headache all day long. You can conquer it, however!

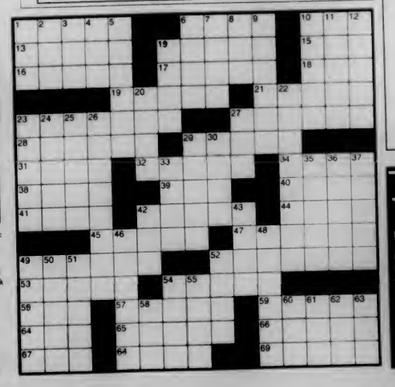
Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
Chicken Quesadilla
Ham & Potato Casserole
Szechuan Chicken with Sticky Rice
Vegan Black Bean Quesadilla
Garlic Eggplant Stir Fry (vegan)
IW Basics:
Pasta Bar
Sausage
Grill Station
Captain's Catch Sandwich
International
Teriyaki Beef
Pork Fried Rice
(Wonly)

DINNER
WINTER WONDERLAND
Gorgonzola Beef
Chicken Breast Mignon
Cape Cod Filler
Corn Pizza
Acorn Squash with Quinoa Filling (vegan)
Pasta Bar
Deep Fried Cheese Ravioli
Grill Station
Captain's Catch Sandwich

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
+
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!
Thursday Karaoke with Cloud Nine Productions $2 cover
Saturday Mentos & The New Horizon Reggae $3 cover
Sunday Joe LaCreta Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst
413 - 253 - 4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 Quarter member
6 Slapstick projectiles
10 Lynx or panther
13 Licorice-like flavoring
14 "Sour grapes" corner
15 Type of trip
16 Remove errors
17 Tex-Mex dip
18 Isaac Newton's title
19 Semblance
21 Say over and over
23 Quarterback Joe
27 Dragon slayer
28 Accustomed
29 Damp
31 Actress Garr
32 Not yet paid
34 Hardens, as cement
38 Soften
39 Picnic intruder
40 Cure
41 Snow coaster
42 Deluge
44 Whale like Shamu
45 Willow shoot
47 Sunroof or tape deck
49 Take for granted
52 Biggest as a shot
53 Get together
54 Abounds
56 Cram
57 Quit napping
59 Oglling
64 Sci-fi craft
65 Send elsewhere
66 Hoarse
67 Heat source
68 Small earning
69 Colony of bees

DOWN
1 Smidgen
2 Capt.'s heading
3 Bird beak
4 Buckeyes sch.
5 Jamaican music
6 Early vegetables
7 Ocean sighting
8 Aurora, to Socrates
9 Blanks
10 Labor activist Chavez
11 Mellowing, as whiskey
12 Rich cake
14 Orient
20 Reverse
22 Show-offs
23 Small amounts
24 NBA's Shaquille
25 TLC provider
26 Auditioned
27 Musician's job
29 Child
30 Is — suspects
33 Corduroy rib
35 More than odd
36 Tortilla treats
37 Lean
42 "For shame!"
43 — and gloom
46 Smudges
48 Tough questions
49 Cookery term
50 Big mix-up
51 Playwright Neil
52 Suggestive look
54 Soy product
55 — out: made do with
56 Sodden
60 Swerve, as a ship
61 There — tide
62 PBS relative
63 Fitness center

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

M	O	B	I	L	E		A	G	A		C	A	P	P
A	N	I	M	A	L		B	R	A		A	L	A	I
R	O	B	I	N	S		B	I	N		S	I	T	E
		T	E	A	R	O	N	E	S	H	A	I	R
V	I	S	A	S		E	R	S		P	E	S	O	S
E	D	I	T		G	A	S		B	I	D
R	E	N	E	G	E	D		K	A	N		M	O	T
S	A	U	S	A	G	E		A	N	E	M	O	N	E
A	L	S		M	I	R		B	E	S	I	D	E	S
		F	E	N		B	U	S		N	E	A	T
S	P	A	R	S		Y	A	K	S		S	I	L	L	Y
N	E	G	O	T	I	A	T	I	O	N	S
A	D	O	S		R	H	O		R	O	T	T	E	D
P	A	R	T		I	O	N		C	R	E	A	T	E
S	L	A	Y		S	O	S		A	E	R	I	A	L

11-29-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Jess May
Production Supervisor	riki Akid
Production Staff	Mike Kulak, Frank DiMeglio

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Wildcats migrate south to take swipe at struggling Minutewomen

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Standing at the podium in the middle of yesterday's sports luncheon, Massachusetts women's basketball coach Joanne O'Brien admitted that, after a tough 1-7 start, her team needed to start thinking ahead toward the Atlantic 10 games coming up later in the schedule.

"I think our preparation for January and February is going to be our biggest thing now," O'Brien said. The Penn. St. alum was quick to reassure the crowd that her team would still be trying to win the games coming before conference play began.

No doubt about that, as O'Brien's raspy voice at the luncheon showed that she isn't taking it easy on the Minutewomen.

"It's been a struggle," O'Brien said to open her speech, "as you can tell from my voice."

The comments O'Brien made at the luncheon should reflect onto the court in tonight's game against New Hampshire (3-5). But any changes in how the team plays and how the coach instructs her team are still up in the air.

For instance, will freshman Katie Nelson play fewer minutes in an effort to keep her fresher for the big run after the New Year? The starting point guard is averaging a team-high 38.4 minutes per game.

Giving Nelson an extra breather or two in the game would also give her classmate Monique Govan some more playing experience, something the team needs to instill upon its best ball handler, who is averaging just under 10 minutes per contest.

Another change may be to hold junior Nekole Smith out of the game against the Wildcats. Smith, who is recovering from a devastating knee injury suffered during last year's preseason, continued to have some trouble with her sore legs on the team's trip down south this weekend.

"When we were in Arkansas-Little Rock, [Nekole] looked like an old women. We backed her down a bit," O'Brien said.

New Hampshire has struggled this season almost as much as the Maroon and White. In its five losses, only one – its last game against Providence – was decided by less than ten points. That contest went into overtime after UNH senior Colleen Mullen sunk an off-balance, desperation three-pointer at the buzzer. The Friars beat up on New Hampshire in the extra frame and won the game 79-70.

The Wildcats pose a balanced scoring attack with four of their starters averaging better than eight points per game.

UMass, meanwhile, has just two players averaging better than eight points per game, juniors Jennifer Butler (11.3) and Amber Sneed (9.4). Both players have struggled from the field in the team's first eight games. The top two in shots taken, Butler is shooting just 40 percent from the floor while Sneed is shooting just 37.5 percent.

"We've lost some games because we missed some easy shots," O'Brien said.

With one eye on the future and the other on the basketball court, Coach O'Brien and the Minutewomen will take to the hardwood for the last time until the PNC Classic on Dec. 29 in Philadelphia.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen need to put their heads together in order to come up with a way to improve on their disappointing 1-7 record.

Focus and firepower spell sniper

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Don't bother Martin Miljko; don't even go near him. Don't ask for a minute of his time; don't try to divert his attention. Because he's locked in on competing. And winning.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Martin Miljko's lethal shot has bolstered the UMass power play.

Right now Miljko is piloting his four-wheel drive dune buggy through the 82-bit landscape of the Mullins Center practice rink's Off-Road Challenge arcade game. His vision is steady and his hands shift and steer with the utmost precision. Miljko is focused.

Just wait until he jumps on the ice.

Focus was a problem for Miljko last year. He missed three games as a healthy scratch and was too often relegated to the pine in the waning moments of close games.

"I guess I got a little too relaxed with the new coach [Don Cahoon] last year," Miljko recalls. "I wasn't working to my full capability and I got a little too complacent and he let me know about it."

A player with Miljko's polished talents should not be rear-bolted to the bench when it matters most, especially on a team in dire need of a scoring touch. Still, it wasn't a rarity for him to be excused from his power play duties or his place on the first line due to a dwindling focus.

But fast forward one calendar year and you'll find a player that grew tired of being on the wrong side of the boards.

"He is a lot more focused this year than ever," Cahoon says. "He's really come back in the best shape I think he's ever been in."

The difference between the 2001 Martin Miljko and last year's version is two-fold. For the first time in his collegiate career he came into the season in good health.

"It helped not having an injury to rehab in the off season," Miljko concludes. "I've had a couple knee surgeries that have been tough to deal with but this summer I was pretty healthy."

With a clean bill to work with he took his summer workouts to a new level. Weight gain was not an issue as the 5-foot-11-inch Canadian already tipped the scales at a solid 200 pounds. Miljko instead used his summer days in the training room to brush up on the physical limitations of his game.

"He's had some knee problems so his upper body has always been the strongest part of his frame," says UMass assistant coach Mark Dennehy. "But where he really made improvement was in his lower body and his leg strength. He's finally healthy."

Health is an obvious issue in a physical sport such as ice hockey, so it helps his game and his focus that Miljko finally has all the kinks worked out of his body. But senior captain Toni Soderholm surmises that there is another factor that lights the latest fire under his classmate.

Soderholm says, "As seniors we sort of have a feeling that this is our last real go at it."

"All our upperclassmen came back really focused and in great shape," echoes Dennehy. "Martin especially looked hungry."

In this, his fourth year, Miljko has yet to experience the thrill of victory in the Hockey East tournament. UMass as a team is 0-4 in a pair of sweeps against Maine and Boston University. Then there is last year's disappointing last place finish, sealed by a final day loss to New Hampshire in Amherst. None of this sits well with Miljko.

"It was really tough being home while the rest of the league was playing," he recalls. "We don't want to go through that again."

If the Minutemen are going to compete in conference and lay claim to one of the eight playoff spots, they will need Miljko (four goals, nine points in 13 games) and his talents in the lineup on a regular basis. As far as the fusion of shooting, skating and playmaking, few who wear the maroon and white even come close to the senior forward.

Cahoon says, "He's got one of the best shots I've ever seen on any level." But Dennehy believes that as good as his shot is, "it sometimes overshadows his other skills. He can skate, he's got poise, he has great vision and he can really make plays," all traits that have landed him on the point of UMass' top power play unit.

Last year, with Miljko playing either bench or half boards, the Minutemen were dead last in the league with the man advantage. But thanks to a preseason experiment, the UMass power play is ascending towards the top half of the conference.

"Before the season started I went to coach and asked him if I could play the point on the power play,"

Turn to MILJKO, page 8

Fear the one-timer

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The goal-scorer stands in the slot. His blade resides three inches off the ice, coiled back and at the ready. His body swivels, staying square to the puck as he follows the play. The puck is coming to him, he knows that. The goalie has no idea what's coming, he knows that too.

Suddenly the puck enters the slot, and there's no time. Split second, one timer, shelf.

"Before you even move to cover the pass the puck is in the net," says UMass goalie Mike Johnson. Thus is the effectiveness of the one timer.

Having a player who can one-time the puck, or shoot the puck off the pass, is a top priority for teams hoping to garner success in the goal-scoring department.

Players who are consistently effective at firing one-timers are a rare breed, especially on the collegiate level. Guys like Colin Shields of Maine, Frantisek Skladany of Boston University and Martin Miljko of our own Minutemen, are Hockey East players that Johnson sites as skilled one-touch shooters. So, because these freakishly skilled shooters with soft hands are so hard to find, they become that much more lethal.

"It is maybe the hardest thing to do in sports," UMass Assistant Coach Mark Dennehy says. "But when you get a guy that can do it, your offense becomes that much more dangerous."

A well struck one-timer is only as good as the pass that accompanies it. "You want it between your skates," Miljko says. But even if the pass is perfect, you still have to rear back and fire – a feat not so easily accomplished.

"The main thing is not a big wind up. You see some guys really going for the big wind up, but I think that throws off your rhythm," Miljko says. "Bring the stick about halfway up your body and from there on you just swing hard and it's all timing.

"If you keep it compact and tight you'll get better results."

And just like hitting a baseball or swinging a golf club, you know when you got it.

"You can feel when you got a piece of it and you know when you didn't," Miljko says. "You can tell by the way the puck flutters and if it doesn't go where you want it to go."

The lethality of the one-timer comes from both a quick release and sheer velocity.

"It's so tough for a goalie to stop," Johnson says. "When the puck is moving side-to-side, point-to-point and I have to follow the play, a one-timer can just eat you up as a goalie.

Most of the time you don't even see it coming and even when you do, it usually comes at you harder than any other shot."

For a one-timer to be successful, everything needs to be perfect. The pass has to be accurate, the windup compact, the swing needs to be strong and the contact flush. And just in case you were wondering – it's a lot harder than it looks.

"I think Ted Williams said the hardest thing to do is hit a round ball with a round bat," Dennehy says. "I'd like to see him try and one-time a puck."

Hot Damn! We had dinner with Dave Gorman. Read all about it in Arts.

I AM NOT DAVE GORMAN ARE YOU?

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen play CCSU this weekend at Mohegan Sun.

Dueces wild!

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVIII Issue 68 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, December 14, 2001

Arrests and robbery top weekend police log

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department arrested three male students last week on alcohol-related charges and are continuing a high-profile robbery investigation involving weapons that occurred in the Southwest residential area.

The robbery was reported to the UMPD on Wednesday, Dec. 5 at 10:35 p.m. from Coolidge Dormitory. The reporting person alleges that the perpetrators carried weapons and stole money, a personal telephone and beer, according to UMPD spokesman Jim Lyons.

UMPD Lieutenant Robert Thrasher said the investigation is very delicate and little information can be presently released regarding the case. However, Thrasher did say that the individual has hired an attorney and the UMPD's inquiry into the matter has produced a few suspects.

The first arrest came on Friday, Dec. 7 at 12:02 a.m. in a parking lot near Dickinson Hall. The report reached the station as an attempted larceny; that a group of people were trying to take the golf carts parked in the lot. The responding officer witnessed a group of males and females fleeing the area and heading south.

The officer stopped the group and asked one male, later identified as Phillip Defeitas, Jr. of Melrose, Mass., for a form of identification. Defeitas produced a valid Massachusetts license, but the officer noticed another license in Defeitas' wallet that was found to have an altered date of birth and license number. Defeitas is 18 years old and was charged with possession of liquor for the beer in his backpack, as well as misuse of a driver's license.

The following day, Saturday, Dec. 8, officers patrolling Massachusetts Avenue around midnight saw a blue Toyota Corolla make an improper turn onto Lincoln Avenue. The police report said that the turn was executed at high speed and not in the marked lanes.

The driver, identified as 20-year-old Ramon Gonzalez of Amherst, Mass., was stopped and the officers, one of whom was Lieutenant Thrasher, reported that Gonzalez smelled of alcohol. Gonzalez stepped out of the car and underwent sobriety tests including the preliminary breath test.

The first arrest came on Friday, Dec. 7 at 12:02 a.m. in a parking lot near Dickinson Hall. The report reached the station as an attempted larceny; that a group of people were trying to take the golf carts parked in the lot. The responding officer witnessed a group of males and females fleeing the area and heading south.

"The proof for drunk driving is not drunkenness per se, but how impaired they are to operate a motor vehicle," Thrasher said.

After administering the tests, Thrasher said marijuana and hashish was in clear view in the backseat of the car. Gonzalez was booked for possession of liquor (beer), possession of a Class D drug (marijuana), possession of a class C drug (hashish), operating a motor vehicle with a suspended registration, no inspection sticker and the improper turn he was originally stopped for.

Gonzalez was arraigned in Northampton on Monday, Dec. 10.

The UMPD received a suspicious person/activity report at 2:33 a.m. that day in Lot 50 near Prince and Crampton Dormitories of two males damaging vehicles in the parking lot. Reporting officers found two vehicles missing the driver's side mirrors, valued at $300 a piece. A male who matched the physical description of the report was stopped and a witness confirmed his role in the crime.

Lyons said the individuals were, "basically uncooperative" and that alcohol was involved. James Henderson, a 20-year-old from Scottsdale, Ariz., was charged with malicious destruction of property over $250.

That evening, the winter's first snowfall came to Pioneer Valley and the UMPD received seven reports of annoying behavior due to noise from snowball fights in Southwest, Central and Sylvan residential areas as well as snowballs thrown at vehicles and a broken window in Patterson Dormitory.

SGA faces budget issues; ends semester

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

A judicial case and a fistfight are just two of the semester-long highlights in what has been heralded as one of the most productive sessions that the Student Government Association has seen in many years.

As the Senate moves into its winter special session, the SGA's Coordinating Council will take over all responsibilities and act as the Senate until the 2002 session begins on Jan. 30. With recent knowledge of a $495 student fee increase, the SGA has a number of projects going on at once and plans on working for the student body over the break.

Issues that have been a top priority thus far for members of the executive cabinet have been Parking Services and opening up Your Campus Meal Plan (YCMP) to sophomores at the University.

"I've been talking to Ken Toong, Director of Dining Services about incorporating the People's Market into the YCMP meal plan," President John Sheehan said. "Ken's on board and now he's checking out the situation with his supervisor and we'll be meeting next semester to talk about the final changes. I think it's important to incorporate student businesses as well as give the sophomore class more options when it comes to dining."

Another area that was addressed this semester was the ongoing problem of a lack of elections commissioners during this semester's Senate elections. The election that took place this past fall lacked the appropriate number of commissioners, an incident that ultimately resulted in a judiciary case against Speaker Aaron Saunders, President John Sheehan and Chancellor of Elections Sam Balasiak. The petitioners submitted a photographed copy of a very similar case filed just last fall against former Speaker Jim Eltringham on the same grounds.

The case went before the judiciary committee on Nov. 13, and a decision has yet to be presented. The committee has 30 days in which they can respond, but have left members of the Senate as well as petitioners Steve Castillo and Steve Morin without a decision.

"It really doesn't bother me that they haven't responded to the case," Saunders said. "If they don't deliver an opinion it won't matter to me because there was not basis for the case in the beginning."

Other Senators expressed more negative opinions surrounding the case, explaining that they felt it was irresponsible on behalf of the judiciary committee.

Turn to SGA, page 3

BY SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Holiday cheer

Even the Durfee Conservatory is getting into the holiday spirit with some lights.

Teach for America helps schools in need

By Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

"Teach for America" held a general information meeting on Wednesday in the Commonwealth Lounge in Goodell for anyone who was interested in education as a career or just a post-graduate option.

This meeting and the organization could be especially valuable for seniors who will be looking for work after graduation, according to Farley Griner, the campaign coordinator.

"I like what this [program] stands for," Nate Waddicor said, a senior Exercise Science major.

Waddicor heard about this organization three years ago and is applying this February so he can start teaching the following September if accepted.

Current president of Teach for America, Wendy Kopp, founded this nationwide organization in 1989. A graduate of Princeton University, she wanted to make a difference in the existing gaps in the educational system.

Now a team of 7,000 corps members in 16 different urban and rural areas, the organization continues to recruit more than 1,000 graduates each year.

Their main goal is to make higher education and opportunities a reality for all children and their mission statement read, "One day, all children in our nation will have the opportunity to attain an excellent education."

Griner said people are rewarded by the experience they get from new perspectives and reevaluation of what is important.

"There are disparities and inequalities that exist in America's education," Griner said. "That's not the way it should be and we can change that."

The organization recognizes the urban and rural areas that lack the resources in order to keep up with more affluent areas. The schools are a victim of the lack of resources and services and can further the gap if not dealt with.

Teach for America wants to make palpable changes by providing classrooms with competent teachers to directly help individuals during their two-year commitment.

Recruits should have certain qualities that meet the standard of what the organization calls for. They are looking for highly organized individuals who can carry out various responsibilities while respecting others.

These two years call for commitment and a devout willingness to make a difference while participating in the organization, with hopes to prolong the effects with the individual's impact.

Long-term goals are also imperative in their agenda, which deals with problems outside of the schools as well as inside the classrooms.

This means curving the gap through economic and social adjustments. Better health care services are also necessary for improving the quality of the different areas.

"We need to give them the tools that we've been given," Griner said.

It is the first year that Griner's position as campaign coordinator has existed at the University of Massachusetts and her position is open for next year.

"I would like to see awareness increase and interest in the internship so we can have a better team," Griner said.

On the Net: Teach for America: www.teachforamerica.org.

BY SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Going up ... or down?

The escalators finally get a rest after being ridden by students and staff all day.

Downed bomber's crew rescued safely in combined U.S. military response

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The commander of an American bomber is grateful his crew was rescued after his plane went down in the Indian Ocean 30 miles north of Diego Garcia on Dec. 12.

The U.S. Air Force B-1B bomber crashed at approximately 11:30 a.m. Eastern Time. Rescue efforts were immediately started, Central Command said. An Air Force KC-10 circled the crash site and saw the rescue strobe. The USS Russell, a destroyer, made its way to the crash site. A small boat was launched and the four crew members were recovered. No serious injuries were reported.

Pilot and mission commander Capt. William Steele commended the rescue crew.

"I'd like to say I'm thankful that the entire aircrew got out safely, are all doing well," Steele said. "Next, I'd like to thank the aircrew of the KC-10 that helped recover us safely and the crew of the USS Russell.

"Everybody did an outstanding job," Steele added. "It was by the book."

Naval Commander Hank Miranda, the Russell's commanding officer, agreed that the mission went according to regulations.

"I just wanted to say that the crew of USS Russell did everything by the book. We were here on our deployment mission," Miranda said. "And when we heard that the aircraft was missing, we did all the proper procedures and went to the area that we thought it would be – around the area that we thought it would be located. And we had our boat to the water as soon as possible.

"We made best speeds to the location and we picked up the pilots," Miranda added. "Like Captain Steele said, everything worked like clockwork."

While details on Steele's mission remain unclear, the pilot did say that it was a routine mission.

"I was flying a normally-scheduled mission in support of Operation Enduring Freedom," Steele said. "And as far as the aircraft malfunctions, we had multiple malfunctions. The aircraft was out of control, and we all had to eject."

Steele said the malfunctions were not caused by enemy fire. The ejection was rough, Steele said.

"I will say that going through an ejection like that is about the most violent thing I've ever felt," Steele said. "We're all pretty bruised up and have some cuts, but overall we're doing very well."

Steele said that his training made the difference during the crash.

"At that point, my mind was racing, and really trying to go through all my procedures to prepare to land the parachute and prepare for my recovery. It is a very scary – very scary to eject from an aircraft, I'll say that," Steele said. "So I had a lot of adrenaline going. But as soon as I got over that, it was right back to trying to remember my training and do all my procedures correctly."

Lieutenant Dan Manetzke commanded the rescue craft that launched from the Russell. He commented on the mission.

"When we arrived on the scene and met up with the pilot, our first response, obviously, was to make voice contact with them and make sure that they're okay medically, and everything looked good there," Manetzke said. "You know, we needed to get them in the small boat – gathered up and in the small boat. Basically, I think they were just as happy to see us as we were to see them."

"I have to say, I've got to disagree a little bit on that last part," Capt. Steele said. "I think we were much happier to see them than they were to see us."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

STAFF SGT. DOUGLAS C. BRUNELLE/U.S. AIR FORCE

A B-1B Lancer soars over Wyoming. A B-1B went down over the Indian Ocean. All four crew members were rescued safely.

Campus Perspectives

What is number one on your holiday wish list?

By Jeff Swartz

"Penis reduction surgery."
Doug Tsbarski
Senior
Communications Major/Film Studies

"I want to meet Enrique Iglesias. He's so sexy!"
Christen DeHaas
Senior
Communications Major

"To get some ass before I leave UMass for good."
Justin Bates
Senior
Communications Major

"To spend Christmas in Puerto Rico, driving a red Ferrari with the license plate NI CA17, with Antonio Sabato Jr. sitting in the passenger's seat."
Maria Rivera
Senior
Communications Major

"I hate Christmas! When I was young my dog Fluffy died on Christmas. All I want is Fluffy back in my arms."
Mark Lawson
Senior
Communications Major

"An egg salad sandwich."
Nicole Gottwald
Senior
BFA Major

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the Collegian Index in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gitczye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
Yo! Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS!
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com
ENJOY THE HOLIDAYS
HAPPY HOLIDAYS

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(Ten Rods Worse)

Student Parking Notice

Exam Week Parking 12/17 - 12/21

During the week of 12/17 - 12/21, students who do not have a parking permit may park in Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow while taking exams.

If you possess a valid parking permit, please use the lot you purchased to enable others use of these lots. Use Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow ONLY during exam week), otherwise you will be subject to ticketing/towing.

Brought to you by UMass Parking Services (413) 545-0063. Please visit our website at www.parking.admin.umass.edu for further information. The University community appreciates your cooperation in parking legally.

UCard The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN Coca-Cola
Is This Your Smile?

If so, YOU just won $25 on your UCard, redeemable anywhere on campus! Just go to Daily Collegian Office in the basement of the Campus Center, with your UMASS ID for proper verification.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM THE UMASS UCARD AND COCA-COLA!

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

UMass graffiti

Drawings like these can be seen on the greenhouses in the Durfee Gardens.

Williams addresses Faculty Senate

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate wrapped up the semester yesterday by hearing Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams' comments on the 2002 fiscal year budget.

Williams began her presentation by clarifying several pertinent issues that have been scrutinized by the campus community in recent days. Williams explained that the Board of Trustees had indeed raised the mandatory fees for undergraduate students by $495 starting with the spring semester of 2002. The $495 would be divided between the curriculum fee and the service fee. As it stands now $230 of the $495 will go to the curriculum fee while $265 will be added to the service fee. The fee increase is an attempt to mitigate the $25 million deficit the University of Massachusetts system faced following the state's budget cuts.

The Amherst campus bears the brunt of these cuts absorbing $12 million of the deficit, compounded by an additional three million shortfall resulting from commitments made and spending this year based upon the year's original fiscal planning.

"A quick calculation will make clear that the fee increase only addresses about 40 percent of our budget deficit," said Williams. "Nevertheless, it will be difficult for some students to pay. Financial aid for each student will be recalculated and appropriate adjustments will be made."

The curriculum fee is used by the University to pay for the cost of education not covered by tuition fees.

Tuition fees for the University go into the state's general fund, while the curriculum fee stays on campus.

Service fees pay for activities students do not pay for on campus such as exhibitions or events at the Fine Arts Center, the campus transit system, athletic tickets and infrastructure.

The $265 designated for the service fee will be split so that $65 will go to the athletic department and $200 to infrastructure needs. The $65 allotted to the Athletic department will not, according to Williams, increase the department's budget. By garnering the additional $65 per student under the title of "Service Fee" the campus will be able to utilize the monies for general institutional purposes. Williams did not specify as to what these general purposes might include. However, the additional money will relieve a large portion of the cuts taken by the Athletic department.

Rumors had begun to circle that the fees where a covert way of paying for the construction of a new fitness and recreation center near McGuirk stadium since progress on the project had been stalled by budget cuts.

According to Williams, the hike in mandatory fees will in no way assist the production of a new campus recreational facility.

"Regarding the rest of the $200 increase in the service fee: As with the $65 to Athletics, other monies added to the service fee will free up funds that can be used elsewhere to support the central mission of the campus," Williams said. "There is talk about this money being set aside for a Recreation Building. This is not the case with the spring semester increase."

Williams elucidated that plans for a new campus recreational facility have been in the works for several years but that it will take several more years before actual construction can commence.

"It is an interest of the Trustees for all campuses to have a recreational facility," said Williams explaining that the interest in a new recreation facility is not purely based in the Athletic department.

The $200 provided for "infrastructure needs" will, according to Williams, go to improving what facilities the campus already offers students.

"An increase in the infrastructure fee now has as its longer-term goal the construction of student recreation center...meanwhile, we are able to use those monies to enhance the overall experience of students on this campus," said Williams.

After addressing the rumors of surreptitious plans to pad the Athletic budget, Williams focused the rest of her commentary on how she predicts the University will cope with the deficit, and what actions are being taken to expunge the deficit.

"To reduce our expenses, therefore, we must look to our programs...decide what we can do differently, and what we can do without," Williams said.

Williams has asked the deputy and vice chancellor in charge of each executive area to develop a scenario for a five percent reduction in their area.

She explained that there would absolutely be program reductions across the University and in all areas, including but not exclusively academics, athletics and academic support programs. In addition the University will eliminate approximately 100 positions through attrition, and 60 through layoffs.

Williams drew her presentation to a conclusion by reminding the Senate that was the administration and the UMass campus' responsibility to develop solutions to the crisis at hand. In addition she announced that this was a responsibility she did not take lightly, nor was she afraid to make unpopular decisions.

"We can speak in euphemisms to soften the words, but we have to face this situation squarely. There is nothing gentle about the impact of what we are undertaking: we have a $15 million dollar deficit in the current fiscal year; some programs will end; some programs will change; some jobs will be lost; many faculty vacancies will not be filled," she said. "But we can do what we must do with care; we can do it with the best of our integrity; we can do it with the best of values."

■ SGA

continued from page 1

"A case was brought up and the judiciary has not released a decision to any of the participants," Mike Taugher, Chair of Ways and Means said. "The Chief Justice hasn't been to a Senate meeting in weeks, and it will be interesting to see if a decision eventually comes out."

Moving on from the past, SGA members have been consumed with issues surrounding the student fee increase of $495 for this coming spring semester. Members of the SGA have expressed disappointment, concern, and mixed points of view regarding the fee increases and what they hold for UMass.

President Sheehan explained Wednesday in a previous Collegian story that he had lost hope in the University as a result of the budget increases and felt insulted that the SGA was not consulted about financial allocations within the University.

"I just wonder why we weren't consulted about this, and why, if they're taking $500 from us, they're not inviting us to the table to discuss this," Sheehan said. "They say the University is a value, but I'm not sure I think so anymore."

Other members of the Senate agreed with Sheehan's concerns, but also expressed different viewpoints. Taugher explained that although the fee increases were large, that ultimately they would benefit the University in the end.

"I don't think that people realize that these fees are going to have to happen if we want to keep the University running as it is right now," Taugher said. "We're suffering a 25 million dollar loss right now, and $500 is only making up for eight million of that."

As members of the Senate move into the winter session, issues surrounding potential outcomes of the budget cuts and fees will be on the table. SGA members expressed the need to step up as an organization and let students know they are working for them.

"We need to let the University know that they can't drop the ball like the state did on us," Sheehan said. "We need to wake up because we have a big job ahead of us and we need to be ready for it."

The Senate will be meeting again on Jan. 30, 2002 for their first Senate meeting of the new year in Room 168 of the Campus Center.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Video frenzy

One way to get finals off your mind, or just to get a breather, is to play the video games in the Concourse.

Correction:

Hieu Nguyen was misquoted in yesterday's news story on Noam Chomsky. The Collegian regrets the error.

Funeral unites community

By Dawn Moore
Collegian Correspondent

A family specialist that was stabbed to death at Springfield High School was laid to rest today in Holy Family Church.

Over a thousand mourners came to pay their respects to Rev. Theodore Brown, including busloads of students and teachers from the school system. Pastors and clergy came from as far away as Florida and New York to preside over the service.

Brown was killed on Dec. 4 in Springfield High School when he was stabbed in the abdomen, allegedly by 17-year-old Corey Ramos.

The reverend's affinity for ministry began with the Teaching and Counseling Ministry in 1977. He also served as pastor at the church of God By Faith's Family and Friends Mission in Springfield, Mass., was the assistant pastor for the Church of God by Faith in East Hartford, Conn. and served as president of the Springfield Parent Advocate Network (SPAN) for two years.

In addition, he served in the Air Force Reserve. His ministry practice focused upon providing support to families for at risk children. According to friends and family, he was passionate about each student he encountered.

Lt. Col. Robert Sousa, a friend and colleague of his from the Air Force Reserve, spoke about Brown's humility.

"He never asked for any recognition," Sousa said. "He gathered people together. This tragedy has brought us to a new level of consciousness."

Springfield School Superintendent Dr. Joseph Burke discussed Brown's dedication to his students and his giving heart.

"He was always available no matter what time of day it was," Burke explained. "He always made time for his students or anybody, no matter what."

Charles Armstrong, a student at Springfield High, called Brown one of the best counselors that he had ever had.

"You could talk to him about anything," Armstrong said. "He was a mentor to me and to all of us. He was always talking to us about not quitting school and about how important it was to get an education.

"We will all miss him," Armstrong continued. "He will never be forgotten."

Vernon Welch, a school bus driver and mental health worker shared his memories of Brown. He explained that Brown had given him support in the past and had assisted him in his attempts to quit smoking.

"This is truly a sad day and it's a tragedy that didn't have to happen," Welch said. "He was truly a hero."

Since this incident, a bill has been introduced in Boston to release the records of any children who have been in trouble with the law. Those records are currently sealed for anybody 17 and under. The law would make it mandatory for teachers and counselors to be able to view these records.

A private burial will take place on Friday at the Massachusetts Veterans Memorial Cemetery, in Agawam, Mass.

SPRING BREAK
Sun - Surf - Activities
up to 7 night room package from Only $79 Per Student Packages for Spring Break starts
SUGGESTED POOL DECK PARTIES
FREE INTERNET CAFE 24 Hours
Tropical Beaches of Florida
FREE Video, Brochures & Reservations
LIVE WEB CAM OF DAYTONA BEACH
Toll Free 1-877-257-5431
www.springbreak2.com

REDUCE CHRISTMAS STRESS WITH A DAY OF BLISS!
Women-only $75 (a $100 value)
• 1 full manicure hour design
• 1 organic hair gloss rx treatment
• 1 mini facial
• 1 eye cosmetic rx
• 1 professional makeup application
Men-only $40! (a $75 value)
• 1 perfect haircut
• 1 executive manicure
• 1 back & neck rx massage
Shear Bliss Family Day Spa
253-2122 • 479 West St.
(on Rt. 116 So. Amherst-U Mass/Hamp Pass Rt.)

Work over Break
RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:
Boston 617-484-1788
North of Boston 978-777-2253
South of Boston 508-821-5591
New Hampshire 603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape 508-833-1145
Route 3 South 781-340-6355
Springfield 413-731-6910
Worcester 508-832-8757
Providence 508-336-5658
• Earn $2,000.00 during break
• $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
• Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

The Mercantile
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Sweaters India Print Bedspreads
Candles Chains Toys
Incense Baskets Merry X'mas Mugs
Paper Lampshades Cards
Gloves Chinese Shoes
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
Dec. Hours Mon-Sat. 10 am-9 pm-Sun 12-6
Amherst-11 E.Pleasant-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

Running out of time? Run into Zanna.
ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown
www.zanna.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

A semester ends
Our new lives begin

The final months of 2001 are not once that will be forgotten anytime soon. Just as our parents will never forget where they were when they heard that President Kennedy had been shot, our generation will never forget where we were when we heard that a plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. Some of us were at home, preparing for what we expected to be another routine day of academics, while others were in the middle of classes that suddenly seemed meaningless.

While this has been a difficult time for us all, it must be exceptionally different for the Class of 2005 - this year's freshmen. The beginning weeks of college are always stressful, and for the worst terrorist attack in our nation's history to occur six days into the semester was surely harrowing for many incoming students. Yet the University of Massachusetts has proven resilient, and many who were present at the post-Sept. 11 vigils have said that they were among the most touching moments of campus-wide unity in our history.

Students waited in line to donate blood, collected money for relief funds, and held moments of silence for the victims of the attacks. A general dialogue about the validity of our nation's military response has occurred on campus, and UMass is indeed one of the few places in the United States that has allowed anti-war protestors a voice.

Throughout the rest of America, there have been many positive responses. The rescue workers of Sept. 11 have been rightly hero-ized, and many politicians, particularly Rudy Guiliani, have performed beautifully. Outbursts of patriotism have occurred in all corners of the United States, and residents of New York say that the city has a newfound sense of politeness and hospitality.

There has, however, been a much darker side to our response to Sept. 11. Muslim-Americans have been subjected to all sorts of discrimination, including editorials in leading newspapers suggesting that they should "endure the angry stares" they receive from passers-by. Immigration policies have come under attack, and the rate of anti-Arab hate crimes has soared.

The actions of Americans in the wake of the attacks have highlighted both the positive and negative attributes of human nature. We have found a new sense of togetherness, and an understanding of what is truly important. Interest in international relations has greatly increased, and we are finally beginning to recognize the importance of other nations' views toward America. But we have also become increasingly willing to abandon our civil liberties, and to blame racial and ethnic groups for the actions of individual terrorists.

The cliche that we "will only be letting the terrorists win" if we don't resume our normal lives has been repeated time and time again in the wake of the attacks. But in many ways our pre-Sept. 11 lives were banal, and unfocused. Gary Condit and Chandra Levy were the top newsmakers in the summer of 2001. In our response to terrorism, we should go out of our way not only to try to resume peaceful lives, but also to concentrate on important issues.

In 2002, let us make sure to understand the world around us, rather than assuming an "America is always right" posture. And let us not forget that appreciation for civil liberties is what sets us apart from the world's dictatorships.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Drive through, please
Replacing people with technology just doesn't work

BILL LARKIN

Doing any shopping before exam week? Looking to stock up on ramen noodles, chocolate, and coffee?

If so, visit the Stop and Shop in Hadley alongside Route 9. I'm sure you know where it is. They have an interesting new feature: self-service checkout lanes. Customers can simply scan their own purchases – cameras watching – pay for their groceries, and leave.

Seems simple enough, right? Quick, painless, and efficient, this innovation will earn you a few extra minutes to devote to your studies.

Well, I'm a journalism major, and I don't have exams. I don't need any extra time, and this precedent scares me.

Why? Events in Washington.

It took seven years, two presidents, and an attack on the United States, but it appears that the American, pro-globalization corporations have finally reached their Olympus.

While construction crews labor to clear rubble from the streets of Manhattan, and the media reports on the war in Afghanistan, the Bush administration, congressional Republicans, and a small faction of Capitol Hill Democrats have nearly passed the Trade Promotion Authority bill.

The House of Representatives barely approved it, 215-214, after the president and the Speaker of the House, Dennis Hastert, pressured key legislators for support.

Hastert urged lawmakers "not to undercut our president at the worst possible time." In addition, the president told Congress that they needed to approve the bill to demonstrate cohesion with foreign leadership, especially during wartime.

"Every argument has its context, and the context of this one was a war in which we clearly need the help of developing nations around the world," a White House official said.

Having used the patriotism trap to force politically aware, self-serving lawmakers into supporting the bill, the president has now placed control over multinational trade agreements into the hands of the executive.

After the Senate – which supports the bill – and the president, authorize Trade Promotion Authority, Congress will have lost the ability to alter future trade deals. They will not be able to inject clauses into agreements that demand foreign nations improve labor or environmental laws before tariffs on trade will be lowered.

China and Vietnam have just entered the World Trade Organization. Now, these and other nations that care nothing for the rights of their workers and everything for the profit of their businessmen can expect quick trade deals with the United States, unhindered by the scrutiny of Congress.

> "The government has not extended unemployment benefits to those fired after the attacks, so that they can wait out the storm. Therefore, if retail outlets, restaurants, and supermarkets begin replacing their workers with machines, how will they feed their families or pay their bills? "

The Bush administration, like the Clinton-led regime before it, continues to erode the constitutionally protected right of Congress to "regulate commerce with foreign nations." But unlike Clinton, Bush has succeeded in extending the global trade net overseas. And as the legitimacy of foreign laborers is relegated to the back of America's priorities, so does that of domestic workers.

Over the past 50 years, American manufacturers have moved production overseas, to countries with loose labor and environmental laws, with increasing frequency. The North American Free Trade Agreement, an older, less potent cousin to the Trade Promotion Authority, has ushered the loss of more than 750,000 United States jobs and lower wages for Mexican workers.

If global trade can wreak such havoc on a nation's people, why would America allow this?

The power of democracy lies untapped in many foreign nations. Unionized labor, worker safety codes and environmental rules, while affordable, pinch the profits of corporations. Therefore, CEOs will locate their production plants in the countries with the fewest cumbersome laws. Our citizens have already demanded such protections, making the United States unfavorable for greedy businesses.

However, many governments, desperate for domestic industry, will not insist on costly protections for the working class, and now, neither can the United States. Unless of course, you believe a 21st century American president would hinder global trade accords.

Now, back to Stop and Shop. In the past, those citizens who cannot afford the collegiate track to affluence have retreated to the service sector. Certainly, deals like NAFTA and Trade Promotion Authority, have made a career in the near-invisible manufacturing industry an impossibility.

In addition, as you read this, the national unemployment rate is climbing at a dizzying pace. American businesses, reeling from the windfall generated on Sept. 11, have cut workers from their staffs in numbers not seen since the early 1990s.

Where do all of these workers turn? The government has not extended unemployment benefits to those fired after the attacks, so that they can wait out the storm. Therefore, if retail outlets, restaurants, and supermarkets begin replacing their workers with machines, how will workers feed their families or pay their bills?

In many cases, technology is a great resource, capable of lifting human potential to previously unattainable heights. But this is not such an instance. In the digital age, we should limit technology to the industries where human capabilities are limited, such as information trading and medicine. We should not sacrifice the already shadowed fate of our workers for convenience.

Information from The New York Times and The Nation was used in this column.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the editor:
"Supremacy" and U Pride

To the editor:

I am writing in response to Uri Strauss' column, "Calling out Jewish supremacy," which appeared in the Dec. 11 issue of the Collegian.

There is no such thing as "Jewish supremacism." There are Jews, who, like too many other people around us, may believe they are racially or religiously superior to others. But sometimes Christians and Moslems also believe such nonsense. When they do, we take care to distinguish between their identities as Christians and Moslems and their racist views of the world. If we don't make this distinction, we risk libeling an entire people or religion by assigning it an essentialist quality, like racism or supremacism, or greediness, or laziness. This is a racist premise, and it is the premise on which Uri Strauss bases his entire self-defeating argument ("Calling out Jewish supremacy," Collegian 12/11/01).

To infer from his experience with a dolt who walks into a bakery and chastises a hard-working, fellow-Jew for not holding a better job that this schmendrick was somehow representative of an essentially Jewish ideology suggests that Mr. Strauss doesn't know that the very notion of "Jewish supremacy" was concocted by the non-Jewish authors of "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion," a classically anti-Semitic tract. In fact, Mr. Strauss' entire premise is an amazingly obtuse re-hash of the "Protocols," in which he seems to have swallowed the anti-Semitic article of faith that "Jewish supremacy" is a Jewish invention. It's a short slip from here, of course, to the anti-Zionist notion that the Jewish state itself is founded on "Jewish supremacist" ideals.

As a left-wing Zionist myself, who by definition believes in the Palestinian right to national self-determination and statehood no less than I do the Jewish right to national self-determination and statehood, I wonder how someone like Mr. Strauss can conceive of any people's right to national self-determination. There must be, and will be, two states for two peoples: Palestine and Israel. Yaslr Arafat and his Palestinian Authority know this, as does even the right-wing government of Ariel Sharon. Unfortunately, neither Hamas, nor Islamic Jihad, nor Hezbollah, knows this. And neither, it seems, does Mr. Strauss. Why does the Collegian print such nonsense? What's next? "Islamic supremacism?" Holocaust denial? I guess we'll have to stay tuned.

Professor James Young
Chair of the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the poor behavior of UMass students at sporting events, particularly the recent men's basketball games. I would like to voice a reminder that we as students are not the only people attending these games.

As a kid growing up on the UMass campus, I have positive memories of the proud and enthusiastic student body at sporting events. It is wonderful to see the enthusiasm demonstrated by students, however it appears that vulgarity, bitterness, and poor sportsmanship have replaced UMass traditions.

With a crowd of UMass students who have changed a traditional UMass chant into "hey...you suck!" and "fk them up! Fk them up! Go UMass," I see students would instead prefer to follow a path of immaturity. My father happened to be attending the men's game on Dec. 3 not far from where I was sitting in the student section and it was embarrassing to sit with students participating in this type of behavior as if it was completely acceptable. I think it is important to remember that we as students are not the only people attending these sporting events. Children and adults in the community are just as enthusiastic and supportive as UMass students themselves.

Personally, I am somewhat shocked that the campus and the Mullins Center have ignored this situation. For the sake of the image of the school and respect for Amherst and area residents, I think it is time for the student body to think of others and demonstrate positive and constructive sportsmanship. People do not want to be associated with the types of behaviors that seem to have become predominant and accepted. I know I do not want to part of such activity. The question is, how do you wish to represent UMass?

Michaella C. Morzuch
UMass undergrad

ADAM WHITE

The luckiest man on Earth

"Today I consider myself the luckiest man on the face of the Earth."

Now before you start in with the "Yankees suck" chants, understand that I am borrowing Lou Gehrig's famous line only because there is no other way to describe where I am right now. I am exactly three 25-page papers away from being done with college classes for the rest of my life. In just under four hours I will wedge myself into a tubular steel desk/chair combination for the last time and sit through my last lecture. I am like a rally car driver who must squeeze one more fistful of fuel into his tank before hitting the wide-open road at full throttle.

I am lucky because of what lies ahead of me on that very road. In a few weeks I will begin an internship at the absolute pinnacle of my profession, in a position that I have dreamt of having for practically my entire conscious existence. The proverbial pieces are all in place.

But there is so much more to it than that. Opportunities like the one before me don't just materialize out of thin air; they are the culmination of a long and arduous process through which there are no shortcuts. Yes, things do get handed to you in life from time to time; they're just not the things that you really, really want. To get those, you need to do three things: work as hard as you can, surround yourself with the right people and stay true to what you really believe in. I have been lucky, even blessed if you will, to have all three things come to fruition here at UMass.

The hard work part is the simplest. I poured everything I had into this publication from the minute I first signed on. I guess that's what happens when you finally find the one job that sparks your inner passion for what you really want to do in life. For me that passion is writing, and the Collegian has afforded me the grandest of stages on which to develop and hone my skills. This may be hard to imagine, but I have a love for this newspaper that transcends the mere medium or its content. I have often used the metaphor of the Collegian as my child; when the paper hits the stands every morning I watch people pick it up and read it, and I can't help but beam with pride. There is an old adage down here that the newspaper will always live on despite changes in staff; I know in my heart that I will miss the Collegian a hell of a lot more than it will ever miss me.

The people part is where the luck, the blessing, is really evident. As a veteran of the U.S. Army I know what it is like to have a brotherhood with coworkers, to form unbreakable bonds with others through shared hardship and perseverance. That camaraderie is exactly what I have with the staff of this newspaper, and I will never forget the experiences that we have racked up while getting this thing out every day. There are way too many of you to list individually, but three of you need to be mentioned.

Sam, we shared a vision from Day One that we never wavered from and that has blossomed into nothing short of a rebirth for the Collegian. I have never clashed so hard or so often with a coworker, but offhand I can't think of too many coworkers I've respected as much for sticking to their ideals.

Catherine, this may not make sense to anyone else on the planet, but whenever I look at and listen to you, I see and hear myself. I think you know exactly what I mean by this, and anyone else who knows me knows that I couldn't possibly give you any more of a compliment than that.

Melissa, you are my biggest supporter and harshest critic; you are also my best friend. Your companionship has been the most valuable part of my entire UMass experience.

I must also give a tip of the proverbial cap to the members of the sports staff, who have been my second family for the last few years. As caught up as I have gotten in the bureaucracy of the Collegian, I have still, day-in and day-out, always flipped to the back page first. And believe me, I'm far from the only one.

As far as the third part of the formula for success, staying true to what you believe in – that may be the most difficult part of the whole equation. No matter how focused you may be on what you consider your chosen road, there will always be a million side streets waiting to send you off in a totally different direction. Two years ago, I passed up a job with a six-figure salary because I believed my route to true happiness lay elsewhere. Just this summer, I had to say no to another job with seemingly unlimited earning potential, a job that I knew I could excel at. And I have zero regrets about either.

I could pass these opportunities by because I truly believed that I could get what I want, and eventually I did. I never settled, and in doing so I learned that as long as you stay true to yourself, you never have to. In a few short weeks I will step off an elevator in New York City as the newest reporter at Sports Illustrated, and the biggest reason why is that I refused to be anything less. Is it wrong to be proud of this? No one gave me anything; I saw what I wanted in life and I made it happen. Where's the shame in that?

There are still a few final details of my post-UMass life to get ironed out, things like finalizing my living accommodations and so on. Speaking of that, I got an interesting response back this morning from one of the dozens of housing inquiries I have sent out:

"We got your email and yes, the room is still available. It's funny, because my husband is a professional athlete. You guys would have tons to talk about."

I'm moving to the city to become a sports-writer. I respond to an anonymous classified ad and one of my potential roommates happens to be a pro athlete.

"How lucky can one guy be?"

Adam White is a staff member and the former Editor-in-Chief of this newspaper.

Are you Dave Gorman?

Calling all Dave Gormans

By Justin Pearson (not Dave Gorman)
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK – Tequila often leads us all to do things that we often look back and wish we hadn't. For Dave Gorman however, tequila led him to find his true calling in life, finding other Dave Gormans.

It all started auspiciously enough – Gorman and his roommate Danny Wallace drunkenly hopped a train from London to Edinburgh and then a connecting train to Fife in northern Scotland for a soccer match between East Fife and Brechin City. You see, the assistant manager of East Fife was a man named Dave Gorman. Gorman wanted to meet this man, take his photo, shake his hand and prove Wallace wrong as to the existence of other Dave Gormans.

That trip cost about $700 and was repeated a short time later to meet more Dave Gormans in the Edinburgh area. This time the trip was made, not under the influence of tequila, but deadly sober.

"That's when you know it's taking over a bit," Gorman said of his first sober voyage. "In reality [Danny and I] both know there must be lots of Dave Gormans out there. But if he says to me, 'you're right there are,' he's admitting he's wrong. He requires proof. It's like we're locked in a starring contest where neither of us will back down ever."

Since those initial voyages to Scotland, Gorman (usually with Wallace in tow to act as the witness and photographer) has traveled nearly 50,000 miles meeting 101 fellow Dave Gormans. He has been to Norway, Ireland, Germany, Italy, France, Israel, the United States and throughout the United Kingdom on his journey finding Dave Gormans of all shapes and sizes.

There is a gay Dave Gorman, Jewish Dave Gormans, female Dave Gormans, a star named Dave Gorman and even a fictional Dave Gorman – actor Larry Pine, who played Dave Gorman in the film The Ice Storm. He has paid five people to change their name to Dave Gorman and as a result there is even a couple who both share the name Dave Gorman.

His story was told on Page 3 of the Sun, one of London's trashiest tabloids, right next to a topless coed. He was also front-page news in the biggest newspaper in Denmark. Dave Gorman has never been to Denmark.

But Gorman's Magical Mystery Tour has not been without its slight potholes. Early in the journey Gorman received a suspicious email from an alleged Davey Gorman who lived in Hawaii. However, after doing some background investigation it was discovered that this email came from none other than roommate Danny Wallace who simply wanted to get a free trip to Hawaii out of the deal. There is also the Dave Gorman who lives in Royal Lemington Spa, who is to this date the only Dave Gorman who refuses to meet Dave Gorman and as a result becomes the hated enemy of all the show's patrons and its host. Gorman has even had to convince fans to not harass this lone dissenter who Gorman still hopes to one day meet.

Through it all, the comedian turned Dave Gorman-hunter has had quite a fruitful voyage. He held a party in London after hosting his special on the BBC with all 50 guests sharing the same name. He has met people whom he never would have talked with if it had not been for the coincidence of sharing a name. Lifelong friendships have been made between Dave Gormans as a result of Dave Gorman and his quest, something that leaves him feeling quite warm inside.

However, Gorman's latest run at the Westbeth Theatre in New York has not proved to be a complete success. In order to remain within his 300-500 mpdg (miles per Dave Gorman) comfort zone, Gorman needed to find and meet 15 namesakes. He has only met seven leaving him short of his intended target and just outside "the Golden cone of Gorman-ness."

But the quest is not over yet. Gorman's run in New York has been extended into the new year. If you know any other Dave Gormans or would like to become one yourself, send an email to dave@davegorman.com and let him know how you can help.

"Someone in London did name their dog Dave Gorman – they told me they did. So myself and Danny, we're going to go kidnap their dog, and hide in their local park, behind the bushes with the dog. And if they walk around that park, going 'Dave Gorman, Dave Gorman, where are you?' Then they were telling the truth..."
– Dave Gorman

COURTESY THE JACKSONA COMPANY

Hot Damn! Since beginning of his quest to find fellow namesakes, Dave Gorman has found 101 other Dave Gormans, sadly leaving him outside the "golden cone of Gorman-ness."

A night on the town with Mr. Dave Gorman

By Eric Soderstrom (not Dave Gorman)
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK – It's about 10:15 on Wednesday night and there are four of us sitting together at Nadine's – a small, refined restaurant situated on a street corner in midtown Manhattan.

We're waiting for Dave Gorman, who is cleaning up after making his audience at the Westbeth Theatre Center laugh for more than an hour and a half – something he's been doing since Oct. 4, when the 30-year-old bloke from England first brought his ongoing anecdote to the American public.

"It's a true story," said Gorman, now sitting comfortably with a glass of Pinot Grigio wine. "And I can only work with the facts I've got, so you can decide for yourself, whether the story's that good, or I'm that good a storyteller.

"It doesn't matter which is which."

And he's correct. When you're sitting with Dave Gorman, stuffing your face with some of New York's finest cuisine, you learn quickly not to squander your bites. It's genuinely difficult to finish your plate when you have a storyteller of such brilliance sitting on the other side of the table, disseminating honest tales of such astonishing absurdity.

"I had a very odd day in London a while ago," Gorman began, as he readied to unleash another of his many stories in his typical British accent.

"I was in a club and this woman came up to me and said, 'It's your fault!'

"'What is?'

"She said, 'my son has named his bike Dave Gorman. It's your fault...'

"Then I walked into the street and this very, very drunk guy from Newcastle came up to me and was just like hugging me and said, 'I'm just about to go and sleep with a prostitute. And I'm going to dedicate it to you.'

"So within the space of ten minutes, I have an 11-year old boy naming his bike Dave Gorman, and like a 26-year-old drunk dedicating...just an awful thing. Just how extreme can that be?"

Printed words don't do his delivery justice, of course, but the wonderful eccentricity of his language and personal deliberation surely emerges when you see him in action.

His story is quite simple. He has an obsession with meeting other people named Dave Gorman and documenting those encounters. It's kind of like collecting coins, or stamps, or baseball cards. Except he's turned it all into a book, a BBC television series and now an Off-Broadway show.

And when he's on stage delivering his monologue, Gorman takes his audience along for one crazy adventure. Accompanied by an overhead projector (which he uses to show us his boarding passes) and a slide show reel (mostly of him shaking hands with other Dave Gorman's) he has a hilarious fixation with almost making you feel bad that you're not a Dave Gorman – and Wednesday, when the people gathered in the Westbeth found out they were indeed Dave Gorman-less, he reminded them how weird it must feel to actually be disappointed that a Dave Gorman did not exist among them – because they were.

And it's his fault for making it seem so damn cool to carry his name.

I am not Dave Gorman. Are you?

COURTESY DANIELA FEDERICI

Harry Connick, Jr. visits the music of childhood with Songs I Heard and ages gracefully with 30.

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

HARRY CONNICK, JR.
Songs I Heard and 30
Columbia

Those of you who were wondering where Harry Connick, Jr. has been these past several years will be pleased to know that he has released not one, but two new albums of music. They are about as dissimilar from each other as you can get. Songs I Heard is full of timeless children's tunes, like "A Spoonful of Sugar" and "Ding Dong! The Witch is Dead." 30 is Connick at a lone piano, tickling the ivories to songs such as "If I Were A Bell" and "Chattanooga Choo Choo."

Connick is a nonstop machine of music making, turning out a new CD every year. In 1996 and 1997 he gave us She and Star Turtle, respectively, a vast departure from his typical Dixieland jazz into contemporary light rock. That met with very little applause, so also in 1997 he rushed out a collection of ballads on the CD To See You. In 1998 he brought forth the refreshing Come By Me and then in 2000 was the obligatory Christmas collection, When My Heart Finds Christmas. For a while he took on some minor acting roles, wrote a Broadway musical called Thou Shalt Not (which, despite the direction of Broadway hot-shot Susan Stroman has failed to win any rave reviews), and now cranked out these two albums. Suffice to say, he has been one busy guy.

But the latest CDs leave one to think that his constant barrage of works has stretched his talent a little too thin. There is so much of his music to consider over the past four years that it blends together and nothing stands out. It is a nearly impossible feat to wow audiences as often as Connick may hope with all these CDs, and instead of releasing so many, it might have been wiser to condense them to one or two really superb albums.

On both CDs he displays his versatile charm as a musician, offering up new and at times exciting takes on standards that are classic and some that aren't as well known. Songs I Heard is arguably the more enjoyable of the two new discs, as far as pure fun goes. Connick's arrangement of "Pure Imagination" and "The Candy Man" (both from Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory) into one medley is exquisite. He preserves the sacred memories of the song to children of my generation who know it from the movie, but lends his warm vocals and java jazz "oomph" so that it may be an update for the youngsters of today. More than likely, though, the song will most ring sentimental with the former, people like me and my brother who grew up on the Frank Wildhorn tune and will be pleased to hear Connick's rendition, which humbly honors the classic. He also cites other Willy Wonka songs "Golden Ticket" and the "Oompa Loompa" chant.

No kids' album would be complete without a Disney song or two, so he brings forth the Mary Poppins standards "Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious" and "A Spoonful of Sugar." The rollicking jazz instrumentations and Louis Armstrong-like vocalist backups give the song the bouncy "coolness" and funk trademark of Connick's home state, Louisiana. Also covered on the CD are three songs from the musical Annie (no, not "Tomorrow" thankfully), two from The Sound of Music and a couple of The Wizard of Oz numbers. It's all very enjoyable, with the small exception that it would have been a real treat to hear him take on a more recent Disney tune (post-The Little Mermaid), but I digress.

30 is a completely different effort altogether. Just like 1992's 25 and 1988's 20, Connick is at his most vulnerable, playing the piano and singing the songs with very little, and often nil, accompaniment. It's not until the fifth cut, Frank Loesser's "If I Were A Bell" that a bass finds its way into the background. It's a much more low-key and honest exhibition of Connick's talent as a musician, and a more mature album at that. The boogie numbers like the Fats Domino's "I'm Walkin'" and Cole Porter's "Don't Fence Me In," maintain the traditionalist goal that Connick sets out to do.

Connick, most likely isn't planning on winning any new listeners from the under 40-year-old age group with this (unless they are already fans, such as myself), therefore this CD would settle better with folks in the older age groups. It would be unfair of me to pan this CD due to my lack of appreciation for this music with in, but one thing is clear – Connick is a gifted musician, and he knows what he's doing.

It's no coincidence that Songs I Heard and 30 are released at the same time. On the one hand, they show Connick's diverse talents at two extremely opposite forms of musical performance. On the other hand, one album shows the kid that's still alive and well inside Connick and his appreciation of magnificent music, while the other collection shows that he is still growing as a musician after all these years. In both cases, he pays homage to the ones that came before him, a musical thank-you letter to the masters who inspired him to play.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The sisters of Sigma Psi Zeta would like to congratulate the Theta Beta class: Jennifer Sun, Xixi Chen, Ruchika Misra, Tanya Yee, Melissa Chan, Dao Nguyen, Mary Grace Gorospe. Welcome to the family. We love you all

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

FROZEN PIPE ALERT! Remember to keep your thermostat turned up to at least 55 degrees while you are away on winter break. Neglecting to do this may cause pipes to freeze or water damage for which you, as a tenant, will be responsible. For more information about landlord and tenants rights and responsibilities come to Commuter Services 428 Student Union or call 545-0865, or check out our website at www.cshrc.org

Ozzie Osborn/Rob Zombie Dec 15 @ 7:00 Worcester Centrum 6 tickets @ $50ea. 665-2646

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 1 Bedroom Apartment $525/month. Call Tony (413) 863-9627

4 Bedroom 2 Bath apt. Available 1/1 great location. Call 256-4135

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Mazda MX6 A/C, CD changer, power windows, sun roof. $2000. Call 219-7730

90 Subaru Legacy Wagon 117k $2000 Call 586-8412

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K. CD player, leather interior. Great Condition $5500 O/B/O. 413-256-1989

EMPLOYMENT

Administrative Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its After School Programs operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related coursework in Elementary Education preferred. $7.80-8.60hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk , Amherst or Call S. Basniak @ 256-4065

Childcare Mon, Tues, Thurs, Fri. 1-5pm. 4&5 year old in our Downtown Amherst home. Housing option for the right student. Car & references. 256-1543

Returning to the Greater Boston Area This Winter Break? Want a fun, flexible job working with kids in their homes? Call Parents in a Pinch, Inc. if you have at lease 1 full weekday free and childcare references. Earn $10+/hour. Don't wait, call Joy today! At 617-739-KIDS www.parentsinapinch.com

Hampshire Fitness Club Janitor beginning January. 2 days per week 8-2. $9.00 plus membership 256-6446

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant Wanted for software firm. Contact Fred Trayz, CEO, regional economic models Inc. 433 West St. Amherst, MA 01002 fred@remi.com

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Boulders Apt. avail Dec/Jan. 253-6731 wl1210@student.umass

FOR SALE

TV for sale 13 inch must sell Dec. 17 $50 obo 546-0526

Klimax Skiboards $100 Salomon Equipe Boots (13s), skis (190s), polls, bag. Call Justin 546-0679

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

Room Available in Belchertown $350+ washer & dryer for $5/month. smoking ok. 21+, no pets. 15 mins. from Amherst Center. 323-0578

ROOM FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Large Bedroom available in Hobart Lane to be shared by 2 girls. Rent neg 549-9192

1 Room in 5 Bedroom House Located near Cowls Lumber near bus rt. Take over lease ending in May. Call Aaron 549-1799

Two furnished rooms available in a family house. Starting January,2002. Utilities included. No lease. Call Agnes 253-3670 for details.

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate Needed for 3 bedroom apt. Take over lease until May. Call 413-446-3472

Room for rent. Pulpit Hill Rd. Need one roommate in three bedroom duplex. Big yard right next to Puffers Pond. Can move in as soon as Jan 1st. Male/Female welcome $340/month. Call 549-8988

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Lantern Court on bus route. AC, DW, plenty of storage. Call 413-397-0925

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419, on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre. Mexico Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.intercampus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

Happy Holidays From The Collegian Classifieds

Enjoy Your Break!!!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Under the Sun By Pedro Gomes

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Every idiot who goes about with 'Merry Christmas' on his lips, should be boiled with his own pudding, and buried with a stake of holly through his heart."

–A Christmas Carol

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 48 LOW: 38	HIGH: 41 LOW: 20	HIGH: 44 LOW: 26

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) – Everyone is going to have to chip in today in order to get things done. Many hands make light work.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) – You may be surprised by a domestic development today. Or the raging serial killer in your closet. Either way, much surprises.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) – You may try to "get away with something" today. But you'll be "convicted."
PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) – Beware the carnies. Shifty eyes, small hands. They are not to be trusted.
ARIES (March 21 – April 19) – You're in no mood to hear "no" from anyone, especially since you already paid. Whatever happened to "the customer is always right?"
TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) – Don't take your eyes off the target today. And remember to take into account the cross breeze. I don't care if you're using 250 grain Nosslers; bullets are affected by wind.
GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) – Raining frogs. Jeez, Magnolia sucked.
CANCER (June 21 – July 22) – Take care not to be oversensitive today. Lashing out at the Pope won't win you any friends.
LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) – You gonna bark all day, little doggie, or are you gonna bite?
VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) – What?
LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) – I said, "You gonna bark all day, little doggie, or are you gonna bite?"
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov 21) – Your horoscopes this semester have been brought to you by the letters J, K and the number 151.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Shepherds Pie

Fish Nuggets

Lentil Chili (vegan)

Vegan Nuggets

DINNER

Veal Marsala

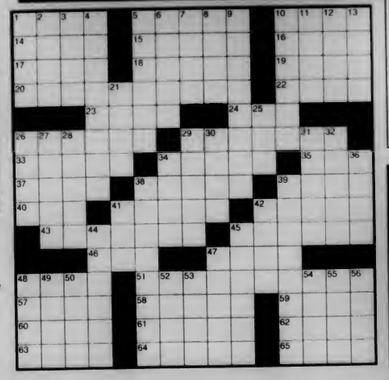
Sweet & Sour Shrimp

Potato & Mushroom Delight (vegetarian) (W Basics)

Sweet & Sour Tofu (vegan)

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E. HAMPTON 413-586-8766
E. LONGMEADOW 413-781-5142

ACROSS
1 Pupil's reward
5 Savory jelly
10 Killed
14 Wanderer
15 Kiosk
16 Distinctive air
17 March 15, in Rome
18 Pasta covering
19 Stop working
20 Remarkable
22 "The Mammoth Hunters" author
23 Calcifies
24 Drop the ball
26 Commuter origin
29 Summer flowers
33 All kidding —
34 New days
35 Wedding-announcement word
37 Teases
38 Wish granter
39 Hayseed
40 Long, long —
41 Sautes
42 Dives of old films
43 Forbids
45 Bug
46 "Woot!"
47 Information
48 Leeway
51 End of the race
57 Light brown
58 Presses
59 Exit
60 Dance move
61 Seedless orange
62 British boys' school
63 Pitch
64 Catch
65 Copenhagen native



DOWN
1 Climb a rope
2 Commotion
3 Help a burglar
4 Valentine flowers
5 Soak up
6 Goes hang-gliding
7 Mope
8 Tingle
9 Buffalo hunters of yore
10 Expedition
11 Hula feast
12 Pennsylvania port
13 Barrier
21 Merchandise
25 TLC providers
26 Painstaky of mysteries
27 Custom
28 Enthused about

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

T	E	N	O	R		P	I	E	S		C	A T
A	N	I	S	E		A	E	S	O	P		E G O
D	E	B	U	G		S	A	L	S	A		S I R
			G	U	I	S	E		C	H	A	N T
M	O	N	T	A	N	A		G	E	O	R	G E
I	N	U	R	E	D		M	O	I	S	T
T	E	R		O	W	I	N	G		S	E	T S
E	A	S	E		A	N	T		H	E	A	L
S	L	E	D		F	L	O	O	D		O	R C A
			O	S	I	E	R		O	P	T	I O N
A	S	S	U	M	E		L	O	O	S	E	S T
U	N	I	T	E		T	E	E	M	S
J	A	M		A	W	O	K	E		E	Y	I N G
U	F	O		R	E	F	E	R		R	A	S P Y
S	U	N		S	T	U	D			S	W	A R M

11-27-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

29 Territories
30 Pupil's place
31 Ekberg or Bjork
32 Cuts
34 "Meet — — St. Louis"
36 — out: uses thriftily
38 Fabled monsters
39 Ushered in
41 Dedicated to
42 Shower, maybe
44 Traffic snarls
45 Dispute
47 Cheap restaurant
48 Take a snooze
49 Eight, to Caesar
50 Adalyers' samples
52 Iraq neighbor
53 — Scotia
54 Least bit
55 Midday
56 Ocean bird of prey

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Ken Campbell
Photo Technician	Jeff Swarts
Copy Editor	Matt Brady
Production Supervisor	Adi Huseinovic
Production Staff	Alicia Upano, Mike Kulak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Nowhere to be found

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Ebony Pegues and the UMass women's hoop team are 1-8.

Minutewomen can't escape losing ways

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

With the score tied 25-25 at the half of yesterday's contest against New Hampshire, the Massachusetts women's basketball team should have just considered it a moral victory and gone home.

After all, the Minutewomen didn't show up for the second half anyway.

It was not that the Maroon and White played all that well in the first frame, but the second session was absolutely atrocious from start to finish, as it did not even scratch the scoreboard until Jen Butler hit a layup with 13:42 remaining.

UNH	66
UMass	44

By that time, however, the Wildcats already had a lead they would never relinquish, beating up on UMass in all aspects of the game, on their way to a 66-44 victory.

"I thought we quit, and that makes this one of the most disappointing losses I have ever had in my career," distraught Minutewoman coach Joanie O'Brien said after the game.

"I don't know if we have a listening problem or what," the 11th year coach added. "But sometimes we look like we have no idea what we're doing out there."

With the loss, the Maroon and White dropped to a woeful 1-8 on the season, while New Hampshire improved to 4-5.

"We're going to have to do something different," O'Brien said. "But [my players] have got to decide what they want to do. They have talent and they have potential, but potential is one of those crazy words you don't like talking about, because they haven't done anything with it yet."

Throughout the contest, UMass was making the same mistakes it had struggled with all year – most notably an inability to shoot from the field or from the line, an abundance of turnovers and little to no clutch play while it was still a close game.

Yesterday's shooting performance was especially hideous, as the Minutewomen shot a lowly eight percent (1-for-13) from three-point range and 46 percent (5-for-11) from the free throw line.

Leading the brick brigade were starting guards Katie Nelson and Ebony Pegues, who managed only two points on 1-for-18 shooting combined while simultaneously committing nine turnovers.

Nelson and Pegues also failed to do much on the defensive end.

"Every time someone made a mistake on defense, and our guards made plenty of mistakes, they made us pay for it," O'Brien said. "We made very ill-timed plays and we had too many guards take too many poor shots."

Jen Butler was one of the only bright spots for the Maroon and White, scoring 15 points and hauling down 15 boards, but she once again could not buy a foul shot, as her 3-for-8 performance from the line, sadly enough, actually picked up her season average.

For UNH, guard Heidi Plencner led her team with 17 points on 6-for-8 shooting, including 4-for-6 from behind the arc.

UMass now has two weeks off before traveling down to Philadelphia to compete in the PNC Wildcat Classic.

After rough beginning, UMass eyes New Year

Halftime is usually a time for a team to regroup and think back on what it has done, but most of all to look ahead at what it can do to improve in the second half.

That is exactly the situation facing the Massachusetts hockey team over the next two weeks, as it is on its end-of-semester break before a pair of games at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute's Christmas tournament.

The Minutemen stand at a seemingly disappointing 6-10-0, with a 2-7-0 record in the Hockey East conference. But in retrospect, the only reason for disappointment in the first half of the season was the fact that the Minutemen were only a few plays away from winning more games than they did.

The fact is, of the Maroon and White's 10 losses, nine came to teams ranked in the Top 15. The one loss that it suffered to a team outside of the Top 15 was a 3-2 loss at Providence, Nov. 2.

MATT BRADY

The only reason that the Friars were outside of the rankings is that they fell to the Minutemen earlier in the week in Providence, on the short end of a 4-3 score.

UMass has won all of the games that it was "supposed" to win going into the season, with victories over Niagara, Northeastern, Connecticut and Vermont. Additionally, the Maroon and White won two games that they were not forecast to win – the aforementioned victory against Providence and a 4-0 pasting in paying visit to preseason Top 15 member Dartmouth over Thanksgiving.

True, Head Coach Don Cahoon has far higher expectations of his team, but UMass has one of the toughest schedules in the nation. UMass' schedule is the sixth toughest in Division I in terms of opponents' winning percentage. All in all, the Minutemen are showing significant signs of improvement over last year's team that went 8-22-4. But had a few bounces gone another way, the Maroon and White certainly could have been on the winning end of the four one-goal losses it suffered, which would have left the team 6-3 in conference – good enough for second place in the league.

GERALD ING/COLLEGIAN

Don "Toot" Cahoon

But taking positives away from what was in truth a subpar first half of the season is not what will bring this team to the next level in college hockey. What may bring the team to the next level is a successful January – a month that is vital for the Minutemen as they enter the heart of their conference schedule.

January brings seven Hockey East contests, one with Boston College, two with Merrimack, two with New Hampshire and two with Northeastern. Those four teams had a combined 5-5-2 record against the Maroon and White last year, but UNH (against whom UMass was 2-1-0) is greatly improved, and two wins against the Wildcats again would be quite a challenge.

As for the players, nearly every man who took the ice for the Maroon and White had his up and down moments. The most pleasant surprises have been freshmen Greg Mauldin and Craig MacDonald, as well as sophomore defenseman Nick Kuiper.

Mauldin and MacDonald have teamed up with junior Tim Turner to form one of the more offensive lines for the team. The two have combined for 13 points, and are tied for second on the team in goals with four. Mauldin leads the team in both plus/minus (plus-5) and shots (38).

Kuiper arrived midseason last year as one of the most highly touted prospects on the team. This year, he has combined strong defense with an offensive knack to become one of the team's best blueliners. His six assists rank him second behind fellow defenseman Toni Soderholm.

Matt Brady is a Collegian Columnist.

Defense key to reversing bad fortune

GERALD ING/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Anderson (No. 12) watches Shannon Crooks go up for a hoop against UConn Tuesday.

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas may not be a gambling man but he will be looking for a little luck on Saturday afternoon at Mohegan Sun in Uncasville, Conn. to change his team's recent fortunes.

The Minutemen go into tomorrow's encounter with Central Connecticut State at the Mohegan Sun Arena in the midst of a three-game losing streak. The Blue Devils however, come in on a three-game winning streak and stand at 7-2 overall.

In order to knock off the Blue Devils, UMass (4-5) will need to redouble its efforts on the defensive end of the floor. In their first four games, all wins, the Minutemen held their opponents to under 37 percent shooting from the floor. However, in each of its three losses, UMass has allowed teams to shoot above the 37 percent mark including on Tuesday night, when UConn hit almost 48 percent of its field goals and 57 percent of its threes en route to a 69-59 victory at the Mullins Center.

The primary focus of the Minuteman defense will have to be CCSU senior center Corsley Edwards. Edwards has notched four double-doubles this season and leads the Blue Devils in both scoring (19.3 points per game) and rebounding (10.3 per contest). He will be matched up with senior Kitwana Rhymer; UMass' leader in rebounds and blocked shots. Despite scoring 12 points against the Huskies, Rhymer struggled at the offensive end, making just 5-of-14 field goals and having four shots blocked in the first half.

If Rhymer is able to contain Edwards, something no opposing big man has been able to do so far in 2001-02, the Blue Devils will need to look to their backcourt duo of Ricardo Scott and Damian Battles. The pair are averaging more than 25 points per game and hitting better than 35 percent of their long range attempts.

Those numbers are almost identical to those of their backcourt counterparts, Anthony Anderson and Shannon Crooks of the Minutemen. Crooks is having his best season to date in Amherst after sliding over to the two-guard, averaging a team-high 15.3 points and 4.1 assists. His backcourt-mate Anderson has twice been named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week for the way that he has efficiently run the UMass offense.

At the other end of the floor UMass will need to get on the board early and often, thus not falling behind in the game's opening minutes. It took UConn just six and a half minutes to open up a double-digit lead on Tuesday night and it took Boston College even less time to do so four days earlier. In both cases the Minutemen could not recover, went into halftime down big and proceeded to lose.

Another key will be the reemergence of sophomore small forward Willie Jenkins. After winning the starting small forward job at the beginning of the season, Jenkins averaged almost eight points in 20 minutes over UMass' first four games. However, Jenkins has failed to score in each of the three losses, seen his playing time drastically reduced and lost his starting spot to Raheim Lamb.

With eight days off between this game and their next on Dec. 23 against Maine, the Minutemen will be looking to get back to their winning ways, put this recent slide behind them and pick up some positive momentum as they head toward the start of the A-10 schedule.

GERALD ING/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks and the UMass men's hoop team have lost three straight and are looking to bounce back versus CCSU.

Open Your Eyes
Arts Section B

Join The Collegian
Ed/Op Page A4

Attack has hit a wall
Sports Section C

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

WEDNESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SIXTY NINE ☆☆☆☆☆ 1.29.02

The faces of budget cuts

...While on Winter Break...

...these parents learned...

...that the University's Child Care Program...

...had been eliminated due to budget cuts.

ALL PHOTOS COURTESY OF GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Vice Chancellor or Student Affairs Javier Cevallos listens to the concerns of parents at a contentious meeting last week.

While these children...

...continued to play...

...their parents began the fight...

...to save the Program.

University Child Care to be closed

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will close its five full day care classrooms due to budget concerns on May 25, 2002. Two flexible-schedule classrooms will continue to operate until May 2004. Both are mandated in the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) contract.

The announcement was made to University Child Care (UCC) staff members at an after-hours meeting on Jan. 17 with program director Maryanne Gallagher, director of Housing Services Michael Gilbert, and Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos. The twenty-two employees were told that the classrooms would be closed and that they would be laid off. Gallagher and Clerk III Penelope Gagnon will retain their positions.

The closing notice came as a shock to employees.

"I had to walk out [of the meeting] and get some fresh air," Andrew Coler, an employee at UCC for 18 years, said. "I think what was done was wrong. I'm not so concerned with keeping my job as to doing what is morally right."

"It's very surprising," teacher Karin McDonald said. "It seems very unfair."

Josh Mason, the GEO Secretary of the Treasury heard about the meeting and rushed to Clubhouse Drive classrooms.

"The three of them [Cevallos, Gilbert and Gallagher] did all the talking," Mason said. "People were very upset. Several people left in tears. People were stunned."

Parents were informed on Jan. 18 when they dropped off their children. A letter explained the decisions to the parents.

"[The closing] is necessary because projected fiscal resources for Fiscal Year 2003 are not sufficient to continue this program," the letter read.

Wilhelmina Humphries, a sophomore and mother of four, thought the move was more than just surprising.

"I thought it was sneaky," Humphries said. "It's one more stone put on me — one more tug to put graduating further down the line."

Exercise Science Professor Barry Braun's five year old son attends the center was shocked by the letter.

"I was really surprised. It's not that there isn't enough pain to spread around," Braun said. Likening the decision to a nature documentary, he continued, "it seems like the leopard is picking out the weak and infirm. This is a disproportionate hit to student families."

UCC is one of the best in the country, staff and parents say. One parent said she signed her child up when she discovered she was pregnant. The program is a deciding factor for some faculty.

"When it comes to faculty hiring, people are going to want to know that there is some place their kids can go," Braun said.

Turn to CHILDCARE page A3

Meeting addresses closure

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

"What we have here is a failure to communicate..." Cool Hand Luke

Packed into a tight room in the Campus Center Basement last Wednesday, parents stood with their children while Javier Cevallos tried to explain that the University no longer had the money it needed to run the University Child Care program.

When pressed on what parents were supposed to do – especially considering the total lack of childcare in the Valley – Cevallos could only say what he had said many times previously.

"If the state gives you the funds, then ok, but we don't have the money anymore."

The University's Child Care program will be almost entirely eliminated in June. It is estimated that some 107 families will be affected by the cancellation, which will save the University some three-quarters of a million dollars. Or maybe more than a million. It depends who answers the question. Regardless of that specific, last Wednesday's meeting was the first opportunity for

Turn to MEETING, page A3

Dreams of greatness? Football's Robinson nears NFL

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Jeremy Robinson's eyes twitch open, and for a few seconds he's not exactly sure where he is. But the blur soon dissipates, and the red numbers on his bedside alarm clock come into focus.

He is quick to sense the cold sweat sliding down his forehead and begins to recall the nightmarish visions that just flickered within his skull.

Even though the image that remains is an apparition of himself.

In this hallucination, Jeremy the high school quarterback met up with Mr. Robinson the All-American free safety.

Jeremy is the high school shooting guard turned quarterback who started playing football his junior year for Craig Reopell's Nottingham High squad in Syracuse, N.Y. He's the kid who never failed to frustrate a defense.

"I remember in a game against Oswego, Jeremy made a move that reminded me a little of Donovan McNabb," recalls Reopell, offering a comparison to the Philadelphia Eagles' starting quarterback. "We ran a sprint pass to the left, which is his non-dominant side. But they closed it down real quick and he just turned around, spun back around toward the middle of the field and hit a diagonal pass to our fullback who ran 35 yards to the 1-yard-line and set up our winning score.

"I'll never forget the athleticism Jeremy needed in order to make a play like that."

Mr. Robinson, however, is the high school signal caller turned Massachusetts free safety who owns a Division I-AA National Championship ring and a First Team All-American plaque. He's the guy who picked off two passes this season in a game against Delaware with a hard cast on his broken right thumb.

So there's no reason to ridicule little Jeremy for his apparent actions in football's parallel universe. Making quarterbacks wince is one of Mr. Robinson's specialties.

"I was a quarterback in high school so I kind of know what tendencies they have," Robinson says. "Whether they're looking toward the guy or looking off of him, I kind of know where he's going to go. Like if a guy's shoulders are pointing one way and his eyes are looking the other way, you know he's coming back. Always the body is going to tell you where the ball is going."

When SUNY-Buffalo visited UMass' McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Sept. 26, 1998, Chad Salisbury, the quarterback for the Bulls made the mistake of using an excess of body language before releasing his pass to standout Drew Haddad, who was running a slant deep in the UMass backfield.

Robinson saw it all the way. He stepped in front of Haddad and dashed 62-yards down the sideline to the 3-yard-line, setting up an eventual Minuteman score.

"I read [Salisbury's] eyes and went and got it," the freshman Robinson told The Collegian after that game. "I saw him look my way, and I debated on whether to go deep or not, but I came up and got the ball."

That pick, in fact, was his first interception in a Maroon and White uniform.

"That was one of the best moments for me," he says. "It was overwhelming. It was like, did I just do that?"

He did. And a few possessions later,

Turn to MR. ROBINSON, page C9

Infastructure plans face budget ax

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Falling on the heels of recent campus wide budget cuts and layoffs comes new plans for improvements to infrastructure at the University of Massachusetts.

At a joint meeting of the Amherst town Planning and Select Boards and University officials last week, the fate of a number of slated projects were discussed in terms of necessity and available funds.

Listed among the plans are a lab for civil and chemical engineering majors that is already in progress on the north end of campus at the price tag of 25 million dollars. The project is nearing completion in the year 2004 and by all accounts will progress as planned. The 60,000 square foot three story building has been in the planning stages for nearly fifteen years and is currently being built by the Fontaine Brothers.

Another project currently under consideration is a 43 million dollar science hall for chemistry and life science students north of where Skinner Hall currently rests. The project is considered a top priority and already has a portion of the necessary funding in place.

A 10.8 million nursing building is also being considered as well as the possibility for a new hotel and conference center across from the Mullins Center. Plans for these projects are still being discussed.

The University also proposed in 1995, the possibility of changing the heating system from the current coal driven heat to that of oil and natural gas. The University Building Authority is currently funding the 63 million dollar project and completion date for the task is tentatively set for 2005.

The University did build a new plant that could heat the University with coal heat in the 1970's but due to problems related to the building it was useless.

The University did put on hold proposed updates to Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium that would allow the UMass football team to move from their current Division 1-AA to Division 1-A the highest echelon of college football. The upgrade could cost in the neighborhood of 100 million dollars to make the changes necessary.

The proposed measure was met with a great deal of controversy in November of 1999 when the issue first hit considerable opposition by the Faculty Senate. The University had chosen to hire a consultant at that time to determine whether or not the move to division 1-A was academically or athletically feasible.

Previous Chancellor David K. Scott expressed concern about the division move explaining that it could only be done if it benefited students both academically and athletically.

"If UMass does this, it must be part of a bigger package, students must soar academically and athletically," Scott said at the meeting. "It will be a decision on the whole future and nature of our sports program."

The issue of funding came up again at a faculty senate in November of 2001 in which the issue of general cuts to the athletic department remained a major issue.

Although the possibility for Division 1-A is still on the table pending both funding and the increased standards surrounding the teams, the measure remains postponed indefinitely.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this story.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The School of Management has been an ongoing infrastructure project.

Foreign Language Center eliminated

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

The Foreign Language Research Center (FLRC), is scheduled to permanently close on June 30, 2002 due to budget cutbacks.

Irene Starr, director of the FLRC, was notified on Jan. 20 she would be laid-off upon the Center's closure. She was told that this action was decided upon due to budgeting cutbacks but was not given any further details.

"I would have liked an opportunity to restructure our services by perhaps closing during the summer, reducing our hours to weekdays and letting me work half-time," explained Starr. "This could have cut our already small budget, flat for several years, considerably. Then we'd be ready to expand when the economy improves, but I wasn't given the opportunity."

Starr is unsure as of now as to whether she will officially bring forth her budget reducing, yet not closure, ideas to the attention of the deans in an attempt to change this decision. She did however note that phone calls and e-mails have been streaming into the FLRC in support of them.

The closing notice comes as a shock to employees.

"I don't understand why they'd close the FLRC when we're supposed to be globalizing," Allison Pusey, a graduate assistant who has worked for the FLRC for the past four years, said. "I have to wonder if they're going to get rid of the language requirement, and this is just the beginning."

Starr agreed with her belief in that the center will ultimately lessen the quality of the University as a whole.

"My impression is that most schools are improving their [foreign language] centers, for this is a time when multi-lingual communication with other countries is important," she added.

Starr noted her hopes to see the vital services provided by the FLRC to those in the languages and humanities continue even after the center is gone.

However, she feared that other campus departments would not be able to absorb all of the services, having to deal with their own budget cuts and reduction of staff. The FLRC, in operation over ten years, provides staff assistance, classrooms and a computer lab for classes, individual projects and conferences.

The FLRC oversees the International Television News through satellite, available at the Center and on Channel 14 of the Housing Services Cable Network. It also provides online audio lessons in mp3 format in six languages and helps faculty and students design web pages for their courses or class projects.

Starr suggested that the Academic Instructional Media Services (AIMS) or the Office of Information and Technologies (OIT) might inherit some of the FLRC's equipment and responsibilities.

"Some of the work we do is audio, so there is some overlap of what we, OIT and AIMS do," said Starr.

Turn to FLRC, page A6

GERALD UNG/COLLEGIAN

Like the Foriegn Language Resource Center above, this classroom at the Child-Care Center was closed.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Signa Lehr, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gircsyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Sinlawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Food for gratis, kostenlos, gratuito, FREE.

Get two free meals on campus when you purchase a YCMP

Everyone loves a good deal. So when you buy one of our Economy or Commuter YCMP meal plans, we'll give you extra meals to be used either in the Dining Commons or the Campus Center. This is a great deal in any language, but do hurry, this offer ends February 8, 2002 and is valid to use through May 23, 2002.

For more information, visit our Meal Plan Office at Franklin Dining Commons or visit us on the Campus Center concourse
January 28 through February 8, 2002.

UMASS FOOD SERVICES

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
www.oit.umass.edu/dining/services

Exchange student found dead in dormitory room

Domestic exchange student Matthew P. Mark was declared dead on arrival at Cooley Dickinson Hospital on Dec. 19.

There is no evidence of foul play in conjunction with the death however the incident still remains under investigation. Mark's roommate found the unresponsive sophomore Sociology major, at approximately 7:30 a.m. in their dormitory.

Mark was on domestic exchange from the University of Washington last semester.

Melissa Hammel is a Collegian Columnist

Sophomore dies in fall

Eighteen-year-old Gregory Thompson of Plymouth, Ma plunged to his death early New Years Day when he fell from a five story apartment building near Fenway Park in Boston.

Thompson was a freshman premedical student at the University of Massachusetts.

The incident, which occurred at approximately 1:15 a.m. on 204 Hemenway Street, is still under investigation. Thompson was rushed to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and was pronounced dead at 2:00 a.m.

Police believe that Thompson was attending a New Years Eve party in the apartment building when the celebration moved to the roof. Thompson then fell from the fire escape.

There is no evidence of foul play and there are no charges in connection with the fall.

A similar incident occurred in April of 2001 when Thomas Degnan a 20-year-old sophomore Natural Resource Conservation major fell 35 feet off of the slate roof of Butterfield Dormitory. He was exiting the building from a fourth story bathroom window when he slipped and fell; he was attempting to reach a pirate flag on the roof of the dormitory.

He was in the intensive care unit of Baystate Medical Center for serious injuries and was released several months after the incident.

Melissa Hammel is a Collegian Columnist

Information from the Boston Globe was used in this story.

■ meeting

continued from page A1

parents to address University officials over the cancellation.

Barry Braun, a professor of Exercise Science, was frustrated that the entire child care program was getting hit.

"You're asking us to take the hit and share the pain and we're willing to do that," Braun said. "But this isn't sharing the pain, this is us taking it all."

That pain is being felt in different ways. Little childcare is available in the Valley, with most daycares having long waiting lists. With modest hope for spots, parents indicated that they'd be forced to choose between families and careers.

"This affects more than the 100 plus families. I feel like I've returned to my mother's time, when she worked without having childcare," an unidentified woman said. "I can't be a woman leader on this campus if I'm home with my son. And as for local waiting lists, I've had him on waiting lists since before he was born. There is nothing available."

Telling personal stories wasn't the only tact employed by the crowd. Laurie Bartling told Cevallos dead on that he wasn't listening.

"You are ignoring this meeting, the people here and the kids being affected. I want to know who is in charge and I want to speak to them," Bartling said.

"That's Marcie," Cevallos said, referencing the absent interim Chancellor, Marcellette Williams.

"Then we need to speak to her," Bartling finished. She was loudly applauded for her words and her direct challenge to the Vice Chancellor.

Some didn't make specific comments though. Instead, some parents spoke in quiet generalities, mentioned to friends and colleagues sitting nearby, rather than standing to question Cevallos.

"He's stonewalling."

"He doesn't have any answers for us."

And quite honestly, Cevallos didn't. He acknowledged after the meeting that he entered being able to promise nothing. He optimistically hoped that people had heard him though.

"I think that people heard me, but that the reality is very hard for them to accept. That's a very normal part of human nature and of course this is going to be very hard for them," Cevallos admitted, adding that he had children too and he knew how hard it could be. He quickly returned to his business-like approach.

"Child care is a wonderful thing, but in our current situation, we need to make tough choices. I have to address the needs of 18,000 students versus the needs of this small minority of parents." Cevallos said.

Here is where the story will diverge. Both sides are passionate, although in different ways. Parents fight for what they've had and lost; University officials fight for what they see as necessary, if painful, cuts.

When Cevallos advised Marcellette Williams to cancel the University Child Care program, he also advised that other programs be canceled including the Foreign Language Resource Center. Williams took some of the suggestions to heart, axing both the UCC and FLRC. Other unspecified recommendations weren't followed.

The cuts had to come somewhere – in this case it was Child Care. Anybody's guess is what could be next.

For Braun though, he is concerned that parents are being played against students.

"I'm disappointed that he sees this as a competition between parents and students, because parents are faculty and students, and I don't see those as separate things," Braun said, optimistically adding that he hopes "to find a way to close the gap. If everybody is going to have to share the pain, lets find a way to reduce the cost."

Braun is hopeful. Answering questions, he seems one of the few parents at the meeting with hope. While others were angry, he sounded cautiously confident a solution could be found.

"The important thing I saw at that meeting is that, if there is a way to reduce the cost to the University, then there may be a way to save the center," Braun said. "If we could cut the Center's deficit in half from where's it's currently at [$650,000 in the past year], would that be enough?"

In an interview after the meeting, Cevallos would make no promises.

Instead, he says only that the "issue brought up will surely be discussed again this semester." He adds that, "I can't speculate on what meetings we may have in the future."

***

To suggest that there are two sides in this isn't accurate. At the meeting and afterward, it was clear that a second approach was being prepared. Being hopeful wins few battles and it seems the parents there will be willing to mix meetings with action.

Even Braun's optimism hints at warning. He suggests that the advice given to hikers don't get between a mother and her cubs applies in this situation.

"Cutting a program where parents have to defend their children is a very tough fight to be involved in," Braun says. His comments are staid compared to others.

Liz Krause, an assistant professor of Anthropology, suggests that parents will bring their children to class.

"We'll teach with them on our hips," she said to Cevallos at the meeting.

During the meeting, another mother asks Cevallos if he can hear the commotion in the back of the room "that's what your classrooms are going to sound like with our children in them," she says.

A third woman promises to bring her niece into class in a show of solidarity with the other parents.

Others attempted to outmaneuver Cevallos.

Jane Kent Braun, also a professor of Exercise Science, asked Cevallos how child-care could be considered expendable if athletics wasn't. And she supports athletics.

"I ask that question as a way of contrast," she said. "If they are going to narrowly view the University's mission, then athletics doesn't fit into that. But nobody's going to make that argument."

Indeed, now that the cuts have come, criticism of the University's other pursuits has begun.

Cevallos wouldn't address those though – he said only, and cryptically, that "very tough decisions have been made in the past few weeks and I fear this will only be the beginning."

***

Is it a sign of a thaw? The day after the first contentious meeting, Marcellette Williams promised to meet with concerned parents. Provided they don't bring their children.

■ childcare

continued from page A1

A lack of child care in the area and specifically toddler care in the area means that many of these parents will have no place to leave their children while they work or learn at the University, Jennifer Martin, the GEO Family Issue Coordinator explained.

"The need far outweighs the resources," Martin said. "They [the parents] can't afford it."

Carolyn Herzig, a graduate student in molecular and cellular biology, is glad that her daughter will be attending kindergarten next year, but is outraged by the decision.

"This should never have happened," Herzig. "I do understand [the budget issues] but to start at child care is outrageous."

One hundred and seven children attended UCC last semester. Seventy-three of those were enrolled in the full day program. Thirty-four are the children of University employees, 13 are graduate students' children and 19 are the children of undergraduates. One child's parent is a member of the Five-College system.

Twenty-five spaces are available in the flexible-care classrooms. The waiting lists for the program is over one hundred names long. Director Gallagher had expected an increase in the numbers for this semester.

Parents were told to inquire at other daycare centers.

"But every center has a waiting list," Humphries said.

Professor Braun questioned the wisdom of the decision. In the long run, the lack of childcare will do more to hurt the University than help it, Braun said.

"How can you have a major state university without childcare?" he asked.

Several childcare programs started at the University in 1971, and were supervised by the School of Education. In the 1980's University Child Care was formed, caring for 78 children. In the 1990's UCC was recognized as a model program, and accredited by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs. The flexible schedule classrooms opened in 1999. UCC is funded from several sources. The campus contributes $627,595, and there is a $613,199 trust fund for the program.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Solidarity?

Students gather to protest a $495 fee increase at the end of last semester.

Atlantis
THE ONLY ALL VINYL CLUB IN AMHERST
THE BEST DJS
LOCAL BREWS
FULL BAR
TUE 80'S HIP HOP
WED DOWNTEMPO HOUSE
THU HIP HOP, R&B
FRI HOUSE
SAT HIP HOP, REGGAE
SUN DRUM & BASS
VOTED BEST NEW RESTAURANT 2001- THE VALLEY ADVOCATE
DINNER SERVED 5 PM TILL 9 PM
TUESDAY THRU SUNDAY
BAR SERVICE AND DJs UNTIL 1

Thinking About Teaching
Five College Science and Math Pre-Ed Program
Explore teaching as a career while you study science, math, engineering or education
• Reformed science and math courses
• Introduction to theories of teaching and learning
• Experience in K-12 classrooms
• Information about scholarships
For more information contact:
STEMTEC Director of Student Services
217 Hasbrouck
st-ss@k12s.phast.umass.edu
(413)545-0734
http://k12s.phast.umass.edu~stemtec
NSF
STEMTEC

Daisy's
From the owners of Bueno y Sano
RESTAURANT IS OPEN!
Homemade Breads and Muffins, Buttermilk Pancakes, and Challah French Toast!
Open for Breakfast and Lunch, 7am - 2pm Tues. - Fri.
Serving an elegant buffet brunch from 8:30am - 3pm Saturdays and Sundays.
413-549-4085
1185 North Pleasant St. in Amherst
Next to House of Teriyaki

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 1.29.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

It's never too late
join the Collegian

Another semester is here. The room is unpacked, the textbook annex is a zoo, and you're reading the Collegian right now.

So when are you going to get involved? The Collegian is the newspaper of, for, and by the students of the University of Massachusetts campus. The staff of the Daily Collegian wants as many people involved with the process of putting our newspaper together as possible. We feel that the more students that participate in the production of our newspaper, the more representative and outstanding our newspaper will be.

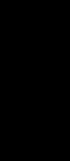
That is the ultimate goal. Since we as a university have a very balanced and diverse population of students with a broad range of ideas, opinions, and feelings, it follows that our newspaper should also have a balanced and diverse core of staffers as is possible.

Anyone willing to try is welcome. We as a staff want to impress that upon anyone with even a passing interest. We want, welcome, and desire people of all creeds, sexual orientations, political persuasions, and races to consider contributing to the Daily Collegian in some fashion. Every opinion matters, and every voice has the right to be heard. Your voice can be read on these pages anytime you're ready for it.

There are opportunities to write for any and every facet of life with the Collegian. Do you enjoy music or other forms of entertainment? Review albums, concerts, plays, movies, and other shows for our Arts department. Sports? We've got you covered. Do you have a passion for politics and current events? Write for news, and nurture that interest. And of course at any time, one can submit to our Editorial/Opinion page. Any issue that has sparked enough of an interest to get a student to lay pen to paper and write about has some merit, and most likely needs to be heard.

One of the biggest fears that students express to Collegian staffers is their fear of committing large amounts of time to this newspaper. But honestly, any student who takes the time to write will appear in the Collegian as often or as little as they are willing to write, with no aggravation or unreasonable expectations.

Articles can be submitted at any time by regular UMass students, and are then printed as often and as soon within space constraints on our pages allow. A student can submit once in a while as their schedule allows, often as a regular writer, or all the time through things like assigned beat reporting. It's all up to the individual student how much or how little they plan on doing for the paper. We're all for it one way or the other – because frankly we can use all of the help we can get to make this paper the best it can be.



And we need more than just writers! If you like to draw, we love printing your cartoons. If you enjoy business, perhaps you would make a good ad representative. Those with creativity find themselves at home in our graphics department, designing pages and advertisements.

Think about it. It's your chance. We'll be happy you did. More than likely, so will you.

Staff editorials are the majority opinion of the Daily Collegian editorial staff.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE [illegible] AUTHORS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF THE COLLEGIAN.

What happened to Walker?

DAN TAMOTHE

Ah, John Walker. What the heck happened to you? Where did it all go wrong?

As the profiles roll out on this man, every red-blooded American is shaken their head at this guy's story. Should we be angry with him for the decisions that the American born, California-raised Walker made in becoming a Taliban fighter in Afghanistan?

Without a doubt. More than anything else, though, I'm confused. I'm confused how a 20-year-old can be so unsure about his own self-identity that he would disown his own country so completely. I'm confused how someone who had been described as your basic wanna-that-gets-high-school-slacker by those who knew him could show the courage to take up arms like he did for a cause he believed in – even if I don't believe in that cause.

I'm confused how anyone who knew Walker as a person could really be surprised with the choices he made. Walker became a Muslim at 16, with the blessing of his Catholic father and his Buddhist mother. His father openly admits that he thought the conversion was good for him and was proud of his son's commitment to the Koran. There's nothing wrong with that. I admire him for his dedication.

But I'm surprised how no one could read the writing on the wall with Walker. Soon after his conversion, he began openly criticizing the Jews population of the Palestine/Israel region. He filled Internet chat rooms and forums with his ideology and caustic criticism. He looked to others for answers to spiritual questions and advice. And that's where the unraveling of Walker began. He sought advice from some very wrong, very evil people.

When you're young and impressionable, too many things sound good. This probably sounds funny coming from me, because I myself am the same age as Walker: 20. But it's true. It amazes me how at 18 years old, Walker could pick up shop and move to Yemen and then to Pakistan. Without exaggeration, Walker was questing for the meaning of life. Walker was so unsure of himself that he began to believe all that he was told. All of it. And that's where the secret of Walker lies. With no concept of country and no realistic religious vision, Walker became another one of the thousands of pawns that the Al Qaeda deploys.

In that way, he is no different than the pot heads girl who latches onto the pimp because of the promises that he makes her. He's no different than the confused children who buy into the empty promises of a cult following just because it just sounds good. He's a lost man in a lost world. His religion is NOT to blame for it. The Muslim faith has nothing to do with him sitting in cold damp trenches with a Kalashnikov gun in his hand. Or with him openly being quoted as approving of the September 11 attacks. The Muslim faith is not about those things, and if Walker had sought advice from the good people in th, faith, he'd have realized that. His poor choices and confusion landed him where he is.

We've seen plents of people right here in our own country make those same kinds of choices. No, they didn't fly to Yemen. They didn't have to. They found other empty promises and latched onto those the same way that Walker latched onto the Al-Qaeda's. They got involved with things like gangs and drugs and greed. They hit rock bottom just as hard as Walker ever did. There are people like this hiding in every corner of our country. Confused. Scared. Empty. Some of them make it back, and some of them don't. That's how it is.

Walker, in the technical sense I guess, is a traitor. He's being brought up on four criminal charges, including providing material support or resources to a terrorist organization. But that's not what I see first when I see him. First and foremost I see a basket case. He's a wreck without a clue. To the best of anyone's knowledge, he's never harmed another American being, even now. His combat experience involved Pakistani battles against India and surviving a prison riot that began as the "mistake of a handful of people," as Walker called it.

Nothing excuses what Walker has done and said just as nothing excuses the attacks on our country last September. John Walker is guilty by association now, and that association is with the very group that has changed all of our lives forever. He's made some horrific decisions. Walker's beliefs and values are now such that they should scare the American people. But perhaps we can try to understand him. Perhaps we can get into his head. Perhaps it's not too late to postpone crucifying a confused twenty-year-old and get him the help he needs instead. Perhaps we can forgive stupidity.

Dan Tamothe is a Collegian Columnist

Cutting child care? Unreal

SAM ROBINSON

Both devastating and shocking, last month's budget cuts could have been handled by the University with a measure of class and tact. With solemn vows to keep the programs that UMass needs, with solemn vows to find the money, with solemn vows to tighten the belt, Chancellor Marcie Williams, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos and the rest of University leadership could have led us all into a new era of damaging fiscal constraint.

Instead, they decided to save money, excising almost the entire child-care program from the budget, effective June. Where once there was daycare, it is soon replaced with a void.

If UMass is recognized nationally for nothing else, it can still consider itself the nation's leader at poorly made administrative decisions. Where some institutions would put thought and careful consideration into the cuts they make, UMass finds the program that will bring the University the worst possible press while negatively affecting the most helpless group in the United States, children.

What, were the elderly not available? Couldn't find any physically/mentally challenged funding to eliminate? (Note that while some people are offended at even the accusation that UMass would deprive the elderly or the handicapped, members of our administration are slapping their heads in disgust that they forgot to cut the money-costing programs that benefit both...)

How galling is the elimination?

Student parents of children are being asked to pay $495 more per semester (a fee that came out of left field) for an education that is fundamentally under-funded by the state while having their child-care eliminated, thus making it almost impossible for them to take classes. Employees are being asked to find child-care in a community that, quite frankly, isn't large enough to justify a wide-scale childcare industry (the newest Yellow Pages lists nine daycares in Amherst, most who report extensive waiting lists for care).

Marcie Williams and Javier Cevallos have stabbed the University community in the back, apparently more willing to gut a program for families than legitimately challenge any of this institution's excessive largesse.

Where, for instance, is the elimination of funding for the Isenberg School of Management's new, and totally undeserved, addition?

Where, for instance, are the pay cuts for the UMass professors who make more than $100,000 per year for teaching a single class?

Where, for instance, are the budget cuts for an Athletic Department that rarely creates winning teams (as of this writing, our basketball team is a unsturdy 7-8 and our football team finished 3-8) and never creates profitable teams?

Never even considered.

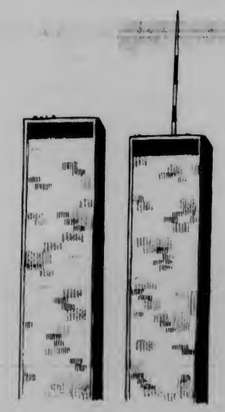
The Isenberg's funding won't ever be challenged because it comes from one of the University's flagship programs; asking them to give a little is just an unconscionable act around here. As for Business types voluntarily sacrificing for the good of the community? Please.

Marcie Williams and Javier Cevallos have stabbed the University community in the back, apparently more willing to gut a program for families than legitimately challenge any of this institution's excessive largesse.

Does anyone really expect the University's richest professors to voluntarily give their uncarned money back? Considering that our University is dumb enough to dangle hundreds of thousands of dollars before professors without requiring them to do any substantive teaching in classrooms, there is no way they'd ever ask for, or take, the money back. Instead, we're left with the bloated contracts of John Edgar Wideman (a great writer, no doubt, but one that makes more than $140,000 to teach one class, once per week, for graduate students only).

As galling as the first two are, the continued funding of our sports teams is questionable en extremis, especially considering our current financial constrictions. As if the extra $495 (money that won't be paying for the child-care center) for student-parents wasn't bad enough, some of that money is going to prop up a failing Athletic Department. Already engaged in a financially risky business – most athletic departments around the country lose money – UMass can hardly justify paying for a football team that can't beat Richmond and a basketball team that can't beat Holy Cross.

But rather than challenge the inherent inequality of funding that plagues our University, rather than find a creative approach to the shuck of our new budget, the UMass administration simply began a focused and specific excision. Targeting the weakest links, the ones least like to fight back – what resources do local struggling families really have? – the above joke about the physically/mentally challenged and the elderly don't seem so unreasonable.



In the last few years, we've seen Apparel Marketing eliminated (a major available at approximately zero other New England public schools), Spanish classes cut, the dental clinic closed and now, the University's childcare program is getting the axe.

Few convincing arguments could be made for the elimination of those programs then and few can be made now – that hasn't stopped the University. Instead of promoting learning, even through a budgetary crisis, UMass mismanagement has prompted a paranoid perspective: who's next?

Who knows.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

TWO REASONS WHY MISSILE DEFENSE WON'T WORK

BOSTON GLOBE-LAC 1/9/01

The color of a hero

Ideas for the proposed monument to the fallen firefighters of the New York City Fire Department have been scrapped. We as a nation are back to fighting about ridiculous issues. The picture that the statue is based upon was of three white men, dressed in full fire-fighting regalia, erecting a flag at the scene of the World Trade Center disaster. It would've been a fine monument, a loving dedication to the heroes that fell on September 11, but the sculptors decided that they'd like to insert a Hispanic and a black firefighter into the sculpture as well. All hell let loose.

Okay, not all hell, but the Hackensack Record, which owns the photo objected to this proposal because it altered the original photo, which was of three white men.

Originally, the fire department didn't have an objection to the layout, but they changed their minds too. A lawyer representing the three firefighters said, "Moments such as this should not be used to make political statements."

There is the issue of political versus historical context. We could argue to the death, ethically, about altering a photo that is a documented historic moment. We could go on and on about the issues of private control over public art, which is what this monument also falls victim to. But I feel that the issue here is that people are arguing about nothing and completely forgetting the event that lead us to creating a memorial to fallen heroes.

I usually don't side with political correctness. I don't like it. I never have. It causes social representations to look engineered and its arguments are often based on the need to whine. But this time it's different. This time political correctness takes a back seat to the implications of such an event as the World Trade Center bombing.

People were in a tizzy, with thoughts like, "Hey, what are they gonna do next? Pat Johnnie Cochran on Mt Rushmore?" Personally I think he'd look good right beside Andrew Jackson.

In the proposed 18 ft tall sculpture one man is white, one man is Hispanic and one man is black. Have we forgotten what has gone on since September 11? I think we have. I think we're neglecting the implications that we're one nation here. If a statue was placed with the "incorrect" version of the firefighters, will upset white folks explain the statue to their kids differently? "See that son, that statue's a lie. Those men were white, not black and Hispanic."

I should hope not. I should hope the message is that some great men died saving the lives of others during this epic disaster and that they were all colors, all creeds, and all Americans.

But I have to ask: if a statue is put up in New York City and one of the guys is white and the other dudes are black and Puerto Rican, does it make a freakin difference? Does it? Seriously. Are we crazy honkies so into ourselves that we're going to piss and moan until we get our way? For chrissakes! We have better jobs. We make more money. Every monument in the Western World is dedicated to a dead white guy. Let them be included, ok? What harm's it going to do? What does Martin Luther King Jr. have? That bird thing in front of Boston University? Please. I've created monuments more incredible than that with play-dough and used Popsicle sticks.

Are the white people that are arguing upset that they have to admit that Hispanics might do something a little more rewarding than cleaning their bathrooms or serving them fast food? There are twelve black firefighters and twelve Hispanic firefighters in New York City's fire department. Don't they deserve to be represented too?

The argument that you can't change this moment in history, is, to me, absolutely irrelevant in regard to what happened September 11. Those who object are comparing the statue to Iwo Jima, but the moment was not a mument in war, it was a moment in human triumph when those firefighters asserted that we are one and we stand together.

I think we all know the real solution to this problem. Ladies I'm sure you'll all agree. What we need is to have the firefighters wearing only their boots holding the American flag. We all know that firefighters, no matter what color, are jacked. What better way to show our appreciation to our heroes but by showing them in their most glorious form in just hats and boots? Shown as simple, yet strong, a naked firefighter's someone we can all be proud of. I hardly see what the big deal is. They're all going to be bronzed anyway.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

Harvard professor's death ruled accidental

By Dawn Moore
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Memphis coroners ruled last week that the death of Harvard professor Don C. Wiley was accidental.

Wiley, a Biochemistry professor at Harvard, was found floating in the Mississippi River on Dec. 30, 45 days after he was reported missing.

Memphis police Lt. Joe Scott said in a televised statement that the body, carrying a wallet with the identification of Don C. Wiley, was found at 10 a.m. snagged on a tree near a hydroelectric plant in Vidalia, La.

Wiley was last seen Nov. 15, when he attended a banquet at The Peabody hotel in Memphis, Tenn. The infectious disease expert was at a two-day annual meeting of the scientific advisory board of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital, on which he has served for 10 years.

Four hours after Wiley left the hotel, police found his rented Mitsubishi Galant five miles away on the Hernando DeSoto Bridge over the Mississippi River. The car, police said, had a full tank of gas and the keys were still in the ignition.

Fears of bio-terrorism prompted newspapers in Boston to raise suspicions that Wiley was the victim of a terrorist-related kidnapping, given his expertise in working with deadly viruses like HIV and Ebola. Another theory investigators in Memphis considered was whether Wiley, a married father of four children, committed suicide.

COURTESY HARVARD.EDU
DON C. WILEY

"It does fit the profile of a suicide for people who use one of our bridges here in Memphis to take their own life," Walter Crews, director of the Memphis Police Department, said on "Good Morning America." "The personality, the background, of Dr. Wiley, from what we've been able to learn, does not. But the car on the bridge, with keys in it, the full tank of gas is typical of someone who would do something like suicide."

Wiley's family however never believed that the professor had killed himself, stressing that he did not have any financial or personal problems. The coroner's report supports this due to the fact that Wiley hit into the bridge's support beams and broke his chest. If he had committed suicide, the report states, he would have jumped to clear the beams.

His colleagues also released similar statements regarding his positive attitude and his brilliance in his field.

"Over the last thirty years Don has been a vital force in our Department. His combination of energy, boyish enthusiasm and sharp intellect has played a major role in all of our activities," Andy McMahon

Chairman of MCB at Harvard University said in a statement that circulated across the campus. "His absence leaves a great void. Our thoughts are with his family at this sad time."

The hypothesis put forth by the medical examiner was that Wiley had pulled his vehicle over following a minor accident at which time strong winds blew him off the bridge. The report also said that Wiley's seizure disorder or the possibility that he could have been drinking might have had something to do with the incident.

There are other unanswered questions though. Why, for example, was Wiley's vehicle found four hours after he left The Peabody Hotel in the opposite direction of his father's home. The explanation given by police was that there was heavy construction going on in the area and that Wiley may have simply taken a wrong turn and got lost.

However Wiley's father, Bill Wiley, who lives in Memphis, refuted this saying that his son knew the city well and would not have likely gotten lost driving.

Harvard University has established a memorial fund in Wiley's honor that will support graduate research and education in the field of Microbiology.

Information from The Harvard Crimson was used in this story.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Class project

This Stegasaurus relaxes on campus. Scary, huh?

POLICE LOG

January 16

Lost and Found Property
A caller to the police station reported missing a set of car keys.
Another individual reported losing keys.

January 17

Suspicious Person Activity
An individual called to request a check on the well being of a student.

January 18

Suspicious Person Activity
Police received reports of an intoxicated individual running around Sunset Ave. with a knife. Searches of the area around Lincoln Apartments turned up nothing.

January 20

Medical Emergency
The police received a call from an individual in front of Herter Hall complaining that he was sick. The police station sent an ambulance and the individual was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Missing Person
A father called the police to explain that his son had left for school two days before and had not been heard from since. The police made several calls to a variety of locations but could not find the individual.

January 21

Assist Citizen
The student missing from the day before was found.

Suspicious Person Activity
An officer was called to check on the well being on an individual sitting for a long period of time in a car in lot 22. The officer reported that the individual was studying and that he would check back later.

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!

LOOK

at what's happening this semester!!

CAMPUS-WIDE CAREER FAIR
Wednesday, February 13, 2002
Campus Center 1st Floor * 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

NURSING JOB FAIR
Wednesday, February 13, 2002
101 Campus Center * 3:30 - 6:30 p.m.

ALANA JOB FAIR
Wednesday, February 13, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium * 5:30 - 8:30 p.m.

EXERCISE SCIENCE CAREER DAY
Wednesday, February 13, 2002
163 Campus Center * 4:30 – 7:30 p.m.

CO-OP JOB FAIR
Thursday, February 14, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium * 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

CIVIL & ENVIRONMENTAL ENGINEERING CAREER FAIR
Thursday, February 22, 2002
Gunness Student Center * 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

LIFE SCIENCES CAREER FAIR
Tuesday, February 27, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium * 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

SOCIAL AND BEHAVIORAL SCIENCES CAREER DAY
Wednesday, March 13, 2002
Student Union Ballroom * 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

SUMMER CAMP EMPLOYMENT DAY
Thursday, March 14, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium * 11 a.m. – 5 p.m.

EDUCATORS FAIR PREPARATORY WORKSHOP
Thursday, March 14, 2002
Campus Center * 3 - 6 p.m.

EDUCATORS FAIR
Wednesday, March 27, 2002
Campus Center * 3 - 6 p.m.

STAFFING AGENCY FAIR
Wednesday, May 1 , 2002
Campus Center Auditorium * 11 a.m. – 4 p.m.

Brought to you by the Campus Career Network.
For more information, call 545-2224 or go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Campus Career Network

FLRC

continued from page A2

"But I don't think it's fair to ask them to take on more work."

Other materials at the FLRC, such as the videotapes professors often provide for their courses, may move to the Reserve Section on the third floor of the W.E.B. DuBois Library. Starr informally spoke with librarians at User Support Services to see if this was a realistic possibility.

"We've made some informal contacts, but we still need to do some fact finding," said librarian Betty Brace. "We need to see how large the collection is and how much space it will need, but it does seem logical."

Brace explained how the Reserve Section currently harbors some audio/visual tapes for other departments across campus. She feels confident that the library will be adaptable to the new materials, should that be their choice in action.

"I can't speak for the whole library. We have our own budget concern," she added. "It seems at least the library is looking into it as a real possibility."

Brace noted that if possible, she would like the library to take on the equipment in conjunction with the materials. An example of such a piece of machinery would be a multi-standard VCR designed to play European tapes.

"This is new to us, and the fact that it [the FLRC] isn't closing till the end of the semester gives us a little bit of planning time," she said. "I'm sure the students will have access to the [FLRC's] information one way or another."

Starr's current plan is to continue the FLRC's services to the best of the staff's ability until the closure date.

One semester's record showed that 65 courses related to language, literature and culture used the Center. Sixty hours of classes each week used its computer labs, and 250 film screenings and individual appointments were scheduled. Over 25 thousand visitors have connected to the FLRC's website since March of last year.

On the Net: The FLRC http://www.umass.edu/langctr

WWW.
DAILYCOLLEGIAN.
COM

Layoff notices leave 95 employees out of work

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ninety-five employees at the University of Massachusetts received layoff notices on Jan. 18, 2002. The layoffs were necessary to continue the academic mission of the campus in the face of decreased budgets, the University said.

"These layoffs do not reflect on anyone's performance," interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams said. "[They] were based on the programmatic needs of the University. This was an operationally driven process."

The layoffs will save approximately $3 million. Another hundred jobs were eliminated through attrition, which will further save approximately $4 million, the University stated.

Layoff notices were distributed with paychecks. The first employees will lose their jobs on Feb. 9. Others last days of work will vary, depending on their contracts.

Vice-Chancellors and department heads were instructed to review their sectors and determine what, if any, cuts could be made. The final decisions to eliminate jobs and programs were made by Williams.

"The economic downturn in the nation and in the Commonwealth has greatly affected the University," Williams said in a released statement. "This is an extremely difficult time for the University and its employees, and the future continues to cause us great concern. We will do all that is possible to assist those who are losing their jobs."

Human Resource staff will provide and personal counseling to any employee who was laid off.

The layoffs are in all sectors of the University. Nineteen security personnel were laid off, as well as three graduate students. Twenty-two staff members at University Child Care were told their last day of work would be May 25. The Child Care program will also be eliminated.

"The University has taken a number of steps to address its $15 million operating budget deficit and we must be mindful of any future budget shortfall," Williams said. "We had to make decisions for the current fiscal year. We had to cut millions from the budget now."

Graduate Employee Organization Secretary

Turn to LAYOFFS, page A9

GERALD LING/ COLLEGIAN

Closed for the day, and maybe forever -- different offices on campus face the looming threat of budget cuts and in some cases, total elimination.

THE MONKEY BAR
BISTRO 63

Thursday — The Return of Elements w/ DJ Fooz — $2.50
Friday — DJ Menace — $2.75
Saturday — Guest DJ — $5.00 / $4.00

Featuring weekly drink specials, outdoor patio, and upscale microbrews

Available for private parties
Call for information

The Monkey Bar
63 North Pleasant St.
Downtown Amherst
259-1600

DUNKIN' DONUTS

In the UMass Mullins Center Ice Rink
Welcomes you back to Campus
WITH FREE PRODUCT COUPONS!
Come down and try our new Warm Apple Pie!

DUNKIN' DONUTS — FREE DONUT! with the purchase of any medium or larger beverage. Valid only at UMass Dunkin Donuts. Not to be combined with other offers. Tax not included. Expires 2/28/02
DUNKIN' DONUTS — FREE BAGEL!* with the purchase of any medium or larger beverage. *cream cheese not included. Valid only at UMass Dunkin Donuts. Not to be combined with other offers. Tax not included. Expires 2/28/02
DUNKIN' DONUTS — FREE APPLE PIE! with the purchase of any medium or larger beverage. Valid only at UMass Dunkin Donuts. Not to be combined with other offers. Tax not included. Expires 2/28/02

2nd ANNUAL Boston Jewish community expo presented by Combined Jewish Philanthropies Israel Programs and Hillel Council of New England

It's About You!

GET CONNECTED

To the Boston Jewish Community!
The Expo is a free event for college students and young adults (18-26) who have participated in an Israel Experience or are interested in going. Explore the opportunities in Boston and in Israel!

For more information, contact Rachel Grandberg at the CJP Israel Programs Desk, (617) 457-8755, e-mail rachelg@cjp.org or check out www.cjp.org

Directions: Take the Green E line to the Northeastern stop or Orange Line to the Ruggles stop.

Transportation to and from the Expo will be provided from the following locations:

	Pick Up	Depart
UMASS Amherst (Hillel)	11:00 a.m.	4:00 p.m.
Tufts (Campus Center, Prof's Row)	12:30 p.m.	3:00/4:00 p.m.
Harvard (Hillel)	12:45 p.m.	3:00/4:00 p.m.
Brandeis (Rabb steps)	12:45 p.m.	3:00/4:00 p.m.

Sunday, February 3
1:00 – 4:00 p.m.
Curry Student Ballroom
Northeastern University

COMBINED JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES
126 High Street, Boston, MA 02110-2700
617.457.8500 www.cjp.org

birthright israel

Made possible by grants from CJP, UJC and birthright israel with additional support from Northeastern University Hillel

GERALD LING/ COLLEGIAN

The UStore re-opened this week with a brand new look.

UStore re-opens following asbestos removal; store has whole new look

By Jennifer Eastwood
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University Store will reopen after months of asbestos removal.

The UStore's merchandise had been separated among four temporary locations since last summer: a section in the Textbook Annex, the Games Room, the Reading Room and the cage on the Campus Center concourse across from its original location. The locations at the Games Room and Textbook Annex have been closed and their merchandise moved to the main store once again.

"We'll probably stay at the Reading Room location briefly. We've got some merchandise we want to put on sale in hopes that it will sell quickly," Phillip Olson, a UStore manager, explained. "We'll always have the [cage] concourse store, but as soon as we can get out of the Reading Room, we will."

As of press time, Olson had high hopes of receiving the store's "temporary certificate of occupancy" and reopening by Jan. 27, the same date many students return to campus.

"All of the new systems are working well, and we know the space is clean [from the asbestos removal]," he reported.

New "state of the art" fire alarm and phone systems headed Olson's praise. He added that a new "point of sale registers system" should be operational later in the semester. It will feature faster-working equipment, which he claimed would allow store employees to more efficiently tend to customers.

The removal of store's center walls left the space as one, open room. Changes in the store's layout included the books and periodicals' transfer to the back of the store and the apparels' relocation from the back to the side wall. The computer, art supplies and quick snacks sections regained their approximate original positions.

The same number of cash registers has been placed around the store, all in their former locations (the front and the side wall by the art supplies).

"If we need more [cash registers], we have plans where we can put up more temporary stations during rush times," said store manager John Kuusisto, adding that it will have to depend on the crowds.

The UStore now features new cherry-wood shelves and tables. One significant style change, Olson noted, was that more clothing items will lay flat and folded on these tables rather than hang from racks as they previously had.

Each of these layout changes derived from the Follett store-planning department. Follet, a private company, operates the store for the University. Follett employees brought to the store estimated plans and worked with the managers to agree on something functional and attractive.

"A retail store changes all the time, so it may even look a little different a year from now," added Kuusisto.

He disclosed that his favorite change is the store's new lighting.

"It's bright. There's more light," he said. "It's just a nice looking store."

Both Kuusisto and Olson are pleased to see the construction and temporary store locations come to an end.

"It's been interesting from my perspective to see how the staff is getting excited," said Olson. "The store looks beautiful. It's a very impressive change for the better."

Admitting the move has been hard on the staff, Olson related how he looks forward to getting back to the main store to see each employee on a more regular basis and better serve customers with one-stop shopping.

"Everybody is looking forward to getting back to one store," Kuusisto agreed. "Both the staff and customers have understood we're going through a tough time and doing the best we could."

UStore hours of operation will be Mondays through Thursdays from 8:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Fridays from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. and Saturdays from 11:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Annual Martin Luther King Day celebration held in Amherst

By Jake Lilien
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Martin Luther King Day was celebrated in the Pioneer Valley with Amherst Regional Middle School's Eighteenth Annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Commemorative Breakfast. The event, held on Saturday, Jan. 19, included the distribution of scholarships to college-bound seniors at Amherst-Pelham Regional High School, and featured a keynote address by University of Massachusetts Professor Sonia Nietos.

Dr. Nietos, a professor of Language, Literacy and Culture in the School of Education, delivered a lecture titled, "Social Justice in Hard Times." She asserted that, despite the progress made in civil rights, children should not be taught that the "dream" mentioned in King's most famous speech has been fully realized.

"As a nation we've made great strides this past century in terms of social justice," Dr. Nietos said. "We'd be blind not to see it. People of color, women, gays and lesbians, people with disabilities, and non-English speakers have all made advancements – and we've all reaped the benefit."

As an example of the way that minority enfranchisement benefits the community as a whole, Nietos cited "curb-cuts" on sidewalks – spots in which the curb has been cut away to allow easier access to pedestrians.

"Curb-cuts were demanded by people in wheelchairs," she said. "Today, they're as common as curbs themselves. But they've benefited countless other people – kids on bicycles, the elderly, parents with baby carriages and people who are simply tired at the end of the day."

Nietos also described affirmative action as a program that has been beneficial to all citizens. She mentioned a study done in Houston public schools that showed that a diverse teaching faculty, brought about by affirmative action policies, benefited the learning of students from every racial background.

"The impact on white students was greater than the impact on students of color," she said. "So much for the argument that affirmative action hurts whites."

"We've come a long way," she continued. "Our society is different than it was in 1950. But I persist in maintaining that these are still hard times for social justice."

Nietos listed ways in which she feels that the United States has failed to live up to King's ideals.

"In the aftermath of Sept. 11," she began, "rights of immigrants have been quickly eroded. Our civil rights are quickly lost if we are not vigilant.

"The dream of integrated schools is far from a reality," she continued. "Latino students are now more segregated than African-American students. Most segregated of all are white students."

She also added that bilingual education programs have begun to disappear, particularly in public schools.

"It's fitting to place my remarks in an educational context," Nietos said, "because all of us are powerful models for our children...and we have a long way to go to make sure that all of our children benefit equally."

She told of a letter she had read in the Amherst Bulletin, in which a Puerto Rican graduate of Amherst-Pelham Regional High School angrily recounted the lack of references to Puerto Rico in the curriculum.

The student stated that the only time she had seen Puerto Rico mentioned in a textbook was as a leading importer of Cheese Whiz. This, Nietos said, was an example of how the affairs of minorities are neglected by modern schools.

Nietos also expressed concerns that educational programs were leaving students of color behind.

"Black and Latino students are over-represented in special education classes, and under-represented in honors classes," she said. "We still have a long way to go to make sure that all children benefit equally."

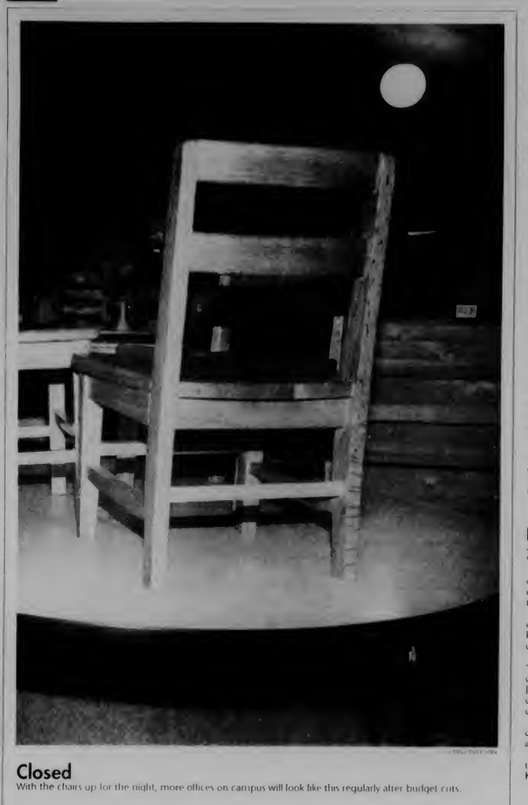
She added that most of the teachings of Dr. King have gone ignored by school curricula. While students know about King's commitment to racial equality, Nietos said, the rest of his ideology is rarely mentioned.

"Dr. King condemned the Vietnam War, as well as crass consumerism...and the excesses of capitalism," she said. "But when do we [hear about] that?"

Nietos also said that the contributions of Rosa Parks have been misrepresented in textbooks and in history courses.

"Rosa Parks has been portrayed not as a staunch civil rights crusader," she said, "but rather as a tired old woman.

Turn to KING, page A8



MOM'S TATTOO STUDIO
15 North Pleasant St. #25
Amherst, MA 01002
Fine Tattoos and Body Jewelry
City Licensed and Inspected
(413) 256-3900
www.momstattoostudio.com

RING IN THE NEW YEAR WITH
GREAT CONNECTIONS! GREAT VALUE!
3500 FREE Minutes for LIFE!
That's 3200 Night & Weekend and 300 Anytime home airtime minutes every month!
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up now for one year and remain on a SingleRate℠ East Plan.
— PLUS —
UNLIMITED Nationwide Long Distance
When calling from your home rate area. Airtime charges apply.
GREAT CONNECTIONS! The whole family can stay connected with the Family SharePlan℠. Activate a primary line on any SingleRate East Family SharePlan℠ $35 or higher and add up to 3 lines for only $20 a month for each additional line!
GREAT VALUE! Buy one digital phone, get one phone FREE! Available on select phone models with annual contract.
HOLYOKE MALL • (413) 533-2500
HADLEY • 322 Russell Street • (413) 587-3248
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.
verizon wireless Authorized Retailer
Offer valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plans. $30 activation fee per line. $17.75 early termination fee per line. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. All calls subject to taxes and other charges. Requires digital service and certain CDMA equipment. Phone model may vary. While supplies last. For Family SharePlan℠ only, one user can be on a primary plan and others must be on secondary plan. All lines must be activated on the same billing account. Night & Weekend hours: Mon-Fri 9:01pm-5:59am. Sat 1:01am-Sun 11:59pm. Some restrictions apply. See store for details.

UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
Convenient Hours and Campus Location CALL 577-5244
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services at UHS."
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
My name is Frederick Bloom. I graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1971 and the New England College of Optometry in 1975. I am very proud of the University Health Service Eye Care Services and the high quality of eye care delivered to more than 80,000 individuals over the last 26 years.
I have been on the teaching faculty of the New England College of Optometry and co-authored an article with Dr. Abel, a UHS physician, that was published in a national optometry journal. In addition, I am credentialed in diagnostic and therapeutic ocular pharmaceuticals by the Massachusetts Board of Optometry.
EYE CARE SERVICES INCLUDE:
- Routine eye examinations
- A new onsite eye glass service
- Emergency eye care
- Full service contact lens care
- Co-management of laser refractive surgery

Our staff takes great pride in being able to fit many people who have had difficulty in the past wearing contact lenses.
Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Services over the years has been consistently excellent.
UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
577-5000 (main), 577-5244 (eye care)
UMASS

Closed
With the chairs up for the night, more offices on campus will look like this regularly after budget cuts.

Amherst principal resigns as harassment claims loom

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amherst Regional High School Principal Stephen Myers offered his resignation last week following allegations of sexual harassment by a freshman male student.

The incident was brought up at an Amherst-Pelham School Committee meeting in conjunction with a letter that Myers wrote to the boy's mother, denying claims that he had asked the boy to expose his nipple and invited him over to his home to use his hot tub.

Myers denied that the incidents were sexual in nature in a statement released by his attorney. Myers explained that some of the allegations came about because of a parental approved car ride to the store to get art supplies with the boy. The alleged incident took place in November.

"He said that other students made fun of his breasts, which he said were too big. I said words to the effect, 'So what are they talking about? Do you want to show me?'" Myers said. "He raised his shirt for a moment. I glanced across at him and said, 'You don't have anything to worn about.'"

In the letter, Myers also explained that the mention of the hot tub only came about in a conversation with both the boy and his mother and that he did not invite either one to his home.

"I mentioned that I had a hot tub. I did not invite the student to visit my home," Myers said. "I did, however, say that I take my son to the movies sometimes and that he (the student) would be welcome to come along if he wanted."

Following the resignation, the Amherst Regional High School faculty and staff issued a letter condemning the actions of both the school board and the superintendent. The signers of the letter explained that Myers had been discriminated against and that he should not have to step down until there is a full investigation.

"We are saddened and shocked by the events of the past few days, in which our principal's career and life have been damaged and a student's esteem has been further compromised through the power of rumors and the media," the letter said. "We live in a country where people are to be considered innocent until proven guilty, and where we are asked to reserve judgment until all of the facts have come out."

The document, signed by 88 members of both the faculty and staff at the high school went on to say that Myers deserved his job back.

"As members of the Amherst High School staff, we ask that the community reserve judgment until the investigation has been completed," the letter stated. "If charges are substantiated, the legal system will take appropriate action. If charges are unsubstantiated, our principal deserves his career back and we deserve our principal back."

There was also a letter signed by nearly 575 students, approximately 40 percent of the student body, offering their support for Myers.

"For us, the news of your planned resignation has come with great disappointment. Although we realize that at this point there is little else you can do, we wish you did not feel the need to resign," the letter stated. "The least we can offer for your zealous efforts as a leader is our signed support of your privacy and civil rights, both which have fallen victim to rumor and gossip in recent days."

The letter also went on to wish Myers the best of luck in the future.

"The treatment you have received throughout this ordeal has been both disgusting and unfair, and though some community members have been eager to condemn you, we assure you that we still stand behind you as both an educator and a person," the letter stated. "We wish you the best in the future, and hope that your bold spirit serves you well wherever you may end up."

The incident is still being investigated by the Amherst Police Department and the Northwestern District Attorney's Office.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this story.

■ King

continued from page A7

"She was the secretary of [her chapter of] the NAACP," Nietos continued. "She was prepared for the actions she was about to take."

Parks, she said, had received civil disobedience training, and had been planning her protest with others.

"School curriculum," she said, "needs to address this issue! As we commemorate Dr. King's birthday, [we need to realize] that teaching children well means going beyond convention."

Nietos went on to explain that children needed to know more about King's vision.

"Children need to know more than the fact that Martin Luther King had a dream," she said. "Presenting his entire life through one speech...gives the impression that we've accomplished his dream."

Nietos concluded her speech by explaining that well-educated children know not to believe everything that they hear.

She praised Mary Cowhey, a Northampton elementary schoolteacher, for the lessons she delivers in her second grade class.

"She always teaches her students to ask, 'Where's the evidence?' after they read something," said Nietos. "Imagine second graders asking this!"

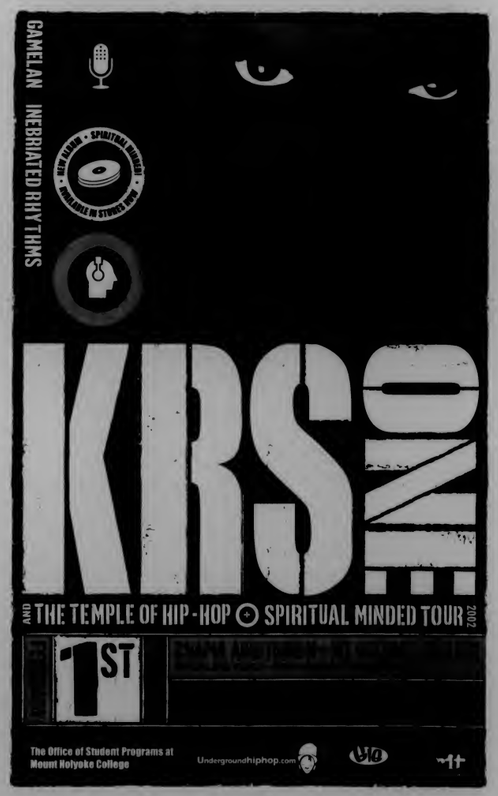
In addition to Nietos's speech, the event featured the presentation of the scholarships to its recipients, local students Hannah Robinson, Awad Brown, Violette Cornati, and Antonio Lewis. The students were all described as being "deeply affected by the legacy of Dr. King," with outstanding contributions to their school and community.

Past recipients have included many UMass-Amherst students, as well as graduates of Harvard University, Princeton University, and Williams College.

In addition to the student scholarships, Mary Custard, Dean of Students at Amherst-Pelham Regional High School, received the 2002 Citizen Award, in honor of her "strong and unwavering advocacy for social justice." Barbara Love, a professor of Education at UMass, presided over the breakfast.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CAMPUS BOOKSTORES LIKE TO STICK IT TO YA.



Shopping for textbooks shouldn't be a sore subject.

You'll find what you need and you'll get it up to 50% OFF. Plus, you'll experience convenient online shopping 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. No lines. No waiting. Plus, ecampus.com has one of the largest selections of used books in the world!

Want more cash back? Sell your books to ecampus.com and watch for the check in the mail.

FREE T-Shirt with $100 purchase
Enter coupon code "t100" at checkout.

eCampus.com
Textbooks and Stuff. Cheap.
Shop online at www.ecampus.com or call toll free 1-877-ecampus

GERALD DING/COLLEGIAN

Lonely Bear
Who is going to play with all these toys?

Microbiologists make mud power

By Dan Lamothe
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A team of University of Massachusetts microbiologists led by Derek Lovley published the results of their groundbreaking research in last week's Science magazine.

Their research could lead to several breakthroughs in technology.

According to a UMass press release, the breakthrough holds the interest of several groups, including interests in industrial and military sectors. Potential scientific developments from Lovley's team's research include the decontamination of polluted water and the powering of electronic instruments with marine microbe technology. Another possibility for the research is the development of military equipment with the ability to alert soldiers to the presence of toxins and biological warfare agents in their surrounding area.

The team began by determining the scientific basics of a sediment battery, a battery made up of water, mud, and some sort of anode. Using water and mud from Boston Harbor, masonry jars, electrical wiring, and graphite electrodes, they discovered that there are certain microorganisms that "even using a primitive electrode made from graphite, it is possible to produce enough current to power basic electronic instruments," Lovley said.

The Lovley team's breakthrough revolved around the study of a family of energy-harvesting microorganisms called Geobacters. Geobacters grow in environments that lack oxygen by using the iron naturally present in soil instead. Their research proves that the Geobacters can also substitute an electrode for the iron in the soil, making it possible for them to conduct electricity.

"In the mud, a community of microorganisms cooperate to break down larger, more complex organic compounds to acetate," Lovley said. "Geobacters then transfer electrons from the acetate to tne electrode generating the electrical energy."

The research group also found that some Geobacters that have the ability to take basic carbon-based toxins and turn them into electricity. Lovley sees hope for the research in developing technology that could clean up subterranean environments contaminated with organic matter. This would especially come in handy in cleaning up petroleum.

Cleaning up these toxins could soon be possible.

"Once we know more about the genome of Geobacters, we will be able to manipulate these organisms to make them receptive to a variety of organic or inorganic contaminants," he said. "Theoretically, when they begin to degrade the contaminant, they will throw electrons on an electrode, and that could set off a light, a sound, or some other form signal."

That is the area in which the development of military equipment could come into play. "

An understanding of how this phenomenon operates has a number of extremely timely applications," Lovley said, "Especially in developing technologies to recognize toxins and contaminants."

The research group was funded entirely by the Office of Naval Research and included one researcher from Naval Research Laboratories, Leonard M. Tender. The rest of the team is UMass-based, made up of leader Lovley, Daniel R. Bond and Dawn E. Holmes.

Professors' union waits for contract approval

By S.J. Port
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts Society of Professors' continues to await a decision from the Massachusetts Legislature concerning funding for their contract.

University of Massachusetts President William Bulger sent the MSP's contract to Acting Governor Jane Swift in late September. Swift had forty-five days to either push the request through to the State House legislature for consideration or to reject the contract. Swift did move the contract forward to the legislature, where it has remained there since November.

The contract is for three years and would ensure a five percent pay increase to faculty for each of the three years. Among other things the contract will allow parental leave for all men or women who have a natural or adoptive child, and establish a joint MSP/administrative committee to rebuild and enlarge the faculty.

Currently the pay levels for UMass professors are slightly below the nation average causing the University to lose prospective employees to other institutions. In addition the recent budget cuts have left the University with fewer positions for professors, and pressure to "do more with less" according to MSP president and History Professor Ron Story.

The MSP is a union for professors, librarians, and faculty that are affiliated with the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) and the National Education Association (NEA).

Story explained that if the contract is not funded not only will faculty suffer, but also students will feel the pinch in several ways.

"There will be fewer of us (faculty) than before. Hence less mentoring, less innovation in preparing new classes, less ability to conduct smaller classes, less ability to offer large classes," Story added. "Faculty, moreover, in spite of themselves, are likely to be grumpier, more bitter, less charitable. The entire educational enterprise will suffer accordingly."

At the same time that the MSP is working to ensure funding for their contract the administration and legislature has approved new early retirement packages for UMass employees. The new early retirement packages allow faculty members to chose whether to stay with the University and accept whatever future budget cuts and pay decreases arrive, or to take early retirement and maintain some financial stability.

"State fund early retirement programs, generally speaking, are ways to move people off the employment rolls without firing them. It's a more humane way than layoffs to achieve reductions in force," Story said. "That's the case here, too. This will of course result in fewer faculty."

In the Jan. 5, 2002 MSP Bulletin Story's message reemphasized that there is indeed funding available for the contract. Funding for the contracts, according to Story's statement, amount to around $20 million.

Story reported in the MSP Bulletin that speaker of the House Thomas Finneran had said that if the funding bill were not enacted now, it would carry over into the new legislative session.

However, Finneran then reversed his position saying that a new bill must be introduced for the new legislative session, which would have sent the MSP back to work at the bargaining table. Finneran has now reversed himself again so that the bill will in fact carry over, which according to Story President's Message in the Jan. 7 Bulletin, means that the MSP should expect funding sometime soon.

The next month should tell whether the MSP's contract will indeed be funded, and in effect how that will affect the UMass campus and community.

■ layoffs

continued from page A6

of the Treasury Josh Mason claimed that jobs were also being eliminated in what he described as "stealth layoffs." Mason explained that many contracts just will not be renewed.

"If they [employees] haven't already signed their contract, it gets cancelled," Mason said. "This has been happening. We have an ongoing problem with the University."

An unknown number of employees will take advantage of the state' new early retirement plan. Savings from that may not be known until June, the University said. According to the University, any fiscal advantage that program offers will be considered in next year's budget.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

■ grades

continued from page A10

"We tend to get a lot of traffic early on when students register for classes or have initial reactions to professors and also at the end of the semester when students are looking for new professors," said Kerber. "There was a big spike that occurred in the first week of December, but then it really plummeted."

He attributed this drop to students being concerned with finishing their semesters, looking forward to taking a break from school and not concentrating on their opinions of professors.

Around mid-January, traffic once again began to pick up, having a tremendous response from students in the south who, Kerber has noticed, have taken to the program very well.

Promotional offers are another way Kerber hopes to attract visitors to the site. The Calls & Condoms Contest is featured in hopes to entice weary cyberspace surfers to stop by MyProfessorSucks.com and possibly win either condoms or pre-paid calling cards with an advertised "1:3 odds."

Kerber's personal favorite promotional idea though was only recently enacted: the Flier Contest.

"We go to schools and hand out flyers [advertising the site]," he said. "On the back of the flier is a prize code. Students go to the site and type in the code to see if they had won anything."

Unfortunately, the project was delayed a few months, inadvertently due to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. He explained that the fliers were printed and ready to go. The airline ticket arrangements for he and his colleagues to fly to eastern schools had been made through his sister, an airline stewardess.

After Sept. 11, those arrangements fell through as airlines everywhere struggled to deal with the disaster and its long lasing effects. Now the project has (or will soon) come to pass in the west, where Kerber is located, and in schools in the south (specifically Georgia and Floridat, an area where two of his technicians live. The rest of the country just has to wait a while longer.

As this little look into the world of MyProfessorSucks.com ends, you're left with that same old question of whether or not you'll jump out of bed that early winter morning and get to class or simply roll over and get some more sleep. You'll lie there and think about the professor who awaits you, but at least this time, you'll know what others claim you'll be in for should you choose to get out that door and work.

And of course as Kerber pointed out, the more evaluations each professor has listed for you to read, the more opinions (not forgetting to include your own) you'll have as a basis for your decision.

Minuteman Volkswagen

College Graduate and First Time Buyer Programs*
Outstanding Selection of Volkswagen Certified Pre-Owned Vehicles
Drivers wanted
CHECK OUT OUR WEB PAGE AT: WWW.MINUTEMANVW.COM
SALES SERVICE PARTS

25 Central young hip clothes

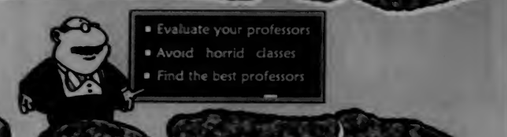
cool shoes
downstairs
Thorne's Marketplace
Northampton, MA
(413) 586-8017
visit us @
www.25central.com
Art by Lee Day



Elijah Boltwood's Tavern
at The Lord Jeffery Inn
Banchee Beer Promo Night
Friday February 1, 2002
6:00 to 8:00 pm
Sample Paper City Brewing's newest brew
Banchee give-a-ways: t-shirts, glasses, cool stuff, and a raffle
Bring this ad for 1/2 price appetizers, burgers or sandwiches
413-253-2576
30 Boltwood Ave.
Amherst, MA 01002

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
EARN 1–2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2002 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 4 (Mon) •Feb. 5 (Tues) •Feb. 6 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Feb 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries; YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

growroom
GRAND RE OPENING! NOW 2 FLOORS OF URBAN APPAREL, TAPES, CDs, AND LOTS OF DJ VINYL.
STILL LOCATED AT 233 NORTH PLEASANT STREET (AT THE CARRIAGE SHOPS) IN AMHERST, MA
PHONE: 549-9296

www.dailycollegian.com

GRADING the GRADER

Story by Jennifer Eastwood
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's morning. Early morning. Soon the alarm rings.

You roll over and do just what many sleep-deprived college students do every day: hit the snooze button.

Just let me lay here five more minutes, your body groans over and over. However, you know very well that you really only have just enough time to get ready and get to class. Does this thought motivate you to leap from your bed, not wanting to risk being late? Or does it make you roll over again and catch your extra five or 10 minutes in slumber land?

For the most part, we've had really positive feedback.

-Kasey Kerber

The answer of course depends on several factors. One is naturally the subject matter of the class itself. After all, how can you be enthusiastic about a class that bores you so? Another may be how far you'll have to travel this early morning to get to the classroom. Is this class indeed worth a bitter cold trek on a winter morning? Yet another factor, but by no means the least important, is your attitude about the professor teaching the course. For how can you be expected to wholeheartedly dive into course material if the person teaching it is off in another world completely?

It is about this last factor, about professors and the opinions students harbor towards them based on their actions, attitudes and teaching approaches, that prompted Kasey Kerber, a graduate student at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, to found the website MyProfessorSucks.com.

The site gives college students a chance to grade their professors and evaluate their teaching efforts, thus allowing fellow students one more way to access information about professors currently unfamiliar to them but who might eventually become one of their most hated or adored teachers.

An overall rating as well as three other grades in the categories of coolness, ease and worth can be submitted. Based on these marks, a list of standard comments appears on the professor's evaluation. At the end of the assessment, students can opt to include further comments of their own.

BEGINNING WITH THE BASICS

Work began on MyProfessorSucks.com in February of 2001. A beta form of the site was launched on June 3 of last year, but it was not until August 1 that the site had its official grand launching, presenting the site as it is today.

"What we were doing [in-between that time] was working out the bugs," Kerber said. "[The site] was out there to be tested."

And the testing paid off. After its completion, Kerber and his team were left with 5,800 visitors who came to view the site that August alone. What's more, over 30,000 unique visitors to the site have been recorded since its beta launching.

"Basically, I just wanted to put together a site where students could get some information... a site that would become a stable resource," Kerber said, explaining how word of mouth has long since been one way students hear about professors' teaching styles but that it is simply not reliable enough. Students who have the most experience with a school's professors graduate, thus taking their opinions and tidbits of information with them.

Word of mouth can also change as time progresses, he added. With MyProfessorSucks.com, Kerber hopes to see the amount of information compound each year and keep a steady record on professors. If, for example, a professor is acting a certain way and students are grading him or her to reflect those actions, that information will appear on the site. Later, if that same professor changes his or her actions and teaching styles, the site's grades would likely reflect that transformation.

There is no limit as to how many evaluations can be posted for one professor. Thus far, the number of evaluations for one person has not reached exceptionally high numbers, certainly nothing in the realm of the hundreds.

However, if the number of evaluations did greatly increase, Kerber said the technicians would not delete old entries but instead break the list up onto different pages, so as not to make loading time for the web page too long.

"The more evaluations posted, the better," he added. "The evaluations are posted in chronological order, and you might just find some of the later comments are better."

WHAT'S IN A NAME, ANYHOW?

So why call the site, "My Professor Sucks?" Why call attention to students' opinions using a negative connotation? Kerber said it was done to give the site a "catchy" name. Doing so would have demanded the site's name have some slant to it, positive or negative. The alternative, he pointed out, would have been to title it something boring and generic.

"I was looking for something that would be easy to remember, but also have a bit of a bite to it," he noted. "Besides, all of us have had at least one professor that just plain sucked."

All of us, huh? Well, Kerber did after all make his assessment based on personal experience. The idea for the site hit him one day after attending an exceptionally bad class that left him wishing there was a way he could have known what that professor would be like before signing up for his lecture.

But Kerber stressed that regardless of the site's name, MyProfessorSucks.com is completely unbiased. He reported that the site's staff, a four-man team of technicians including Kerber, don't see a lot of student-ragging on professors.

On the contrary, the site has its equal share of both praise and complaints. Its line of grades reflecting an "A+" straight across the evaluation for someone like History professor Loren I. Samons at Boston University balances with an assessment like that of the one for Pam Duda, an Illinois State University Education professor who received an overall grade of an "F" in three student evaluations.

PLAYING BY THE RULES

As to allow everyone to share his or her own opinions, each visitor to the site has free reign when deciding what to type into a professor evaluation form, and as such, some abuse has occurred.

"We've had someone put in an evaluation for a 'Mr. Donald Duck' and 'Roy G. Biv,'" said Kerber.

Actions such as these, he explained, have led the team to send all posted names through the "professor screener" program, in which a technician manually reads through the names to determine if it is a legitimate entry or not. Clearly illegitimate ones, such as that for the famed Disney Duck, are deleted right away.

On the other hand, some entries are not so cut and dry, for as Kerber noted, there have been instances when two professor listings for the same school appear as though they might be the same person. (He cited the example of one school with two listings for a "Marshall" and a "Marshal.")

In this case, the technicians attempt to determine the correct spelling and replace one with the other by searching the school's online directory. If a correct spelling cannot be found, the team will "air on the side of caution" and simply delete the entry.

"We try to be very careful when we go through them," he added.

A prime example of this screening system can also be seen with a now-deleted entry posted under the University of Massachusetts. Someone had identified a professor at UMass as "Mr. Judaic Studies 101 dude" instead providing a name.

Kerber logged on the University's website and attempted to find if there was only one male professor who taught Judaic Studies 101. Upon being unable to confirm the name, he deleted the entry, leaving UMass with only one posted evaluation as of Jan. 23 (Biology professor Alby Reiner, rated "F").

So what's the feedback saying about MyProfessorSucks.com then? Are the majority of professors insulted or upset with the idea of potentially receiving a negative rating? Kerber, even a bit to his own surprise, said no.

"We were expecting quite a bit of negative feedback, but it's been pretty minimal. For the most part, we've had really positive feedback," Kerber said, defining such feedback as objective criticisms filled with suggestions. "One professor suggested that the subject name appear next to their [the professor's] name," he provided as an example of such a suggestion, one he and his technicians followed and can now be seen on the site.

Student feedback has been very positive as well, Kerber reported. Even some students help out with providing useful information.

"We categorize schools by size [on the site]," Kerber began in identifying one such example. "If their school is in the wrong size [category], a student will tell us. We mostly get constructive comments, and we're still in our infancy stage, so any help we can get at this point is great."

The site also includes a hall of fame section, called the "A+ Club," for those professors who receive an overall rating of a "B+" or above.

The site wrote the question I'm sure you're asking right now: "Why B+ on an A+ page?" The posted answer: "We grade on a curve baby!"

However, Kerber reported that such a simple answer doesn't quite capture the whole story.

He explained that each grade a professor receives equals a certain number, and the "A+ Club" program is designed to tally those numbers. Early on, the technician team discovered that for a professor to get into the club, they would need to get all grades of an "A+" in every category in every evaluation. This, Kerber noted, would be a very high standard indeed.

"If someone got four As and a C, then they would be unable to make it," he explained. "We thought this was more fair to professors. It meant a lot more of quality professors to be there."

GETTING CROWDS AND MAKING CASH

Through advertising, the site has the potential to turn a profit for Kerber and his co-workers. However, it has yet to do so.

"I've put in a couple thousand [dollars] for some advertising so far," said Kerber. "The amount of money [the site has made] has been minimal. We hope to be [profit-making] in the future, but a this point, we're just covering our costs."

No money? Do not fret though, for Kerber takes on the position of the optimist. He and his associates look at the situation as if they initially put forth a quality product out there in cyber space, then visitor traffic will increase. Later to ensue from that will be more advertising offers, which is the gateway to making money on a website.

The more evaluations posted, the better.

-Kerber

So what's the daily traffic like right now then? It fluctuates, reaching as high as 700 people on a high-traffic day. Yet, 300 unique, daily visitors (this does not include anyone who visits the site more than once a day) is the estimated average.

Turn to GRADES, page A9

Design by Jennifer Eastwood and Mike Kolob
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ARTWORK IN TITLE COURTESY MyProfessorSucks.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 1.29.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Helicopters, Hobbits, and hatred

(When is this column from? The weekend before this past weekend. Dig it!)

Helicopters and Hobbits and Horrible films! Oh my!

Black Hawk Down received critical acclaim. The film features helicopters crashing in Somalia and the subsequent firefight between stranded American soldiers and enraged Somalis. Lest anyone think the movie is for the lighthearted, viewers can expect the same gorefest that accompanied the first horrifying half-hour of Saving Private Ryan. Apparently though, Ridley Scott, the film's director, excited Ryan's second part: the immensely contrived and stupid plot.

AT THE MOVIES

with Sam Wilkinson

Aside from critical claim, which, quite frankly, don't pay da' bills, Down made mad money. Raking in $33.6 million, Down took a stunning first place in its first week of widescreen release.

Second place was reserved for the Lord of the Rings, the tale of Frodo and...what? Rings didn't take second place? What did? Harry Potter? Ocean's Eleven? Well what then?

Snow Dogs.

Somewhere in this country, people were willing to spend a whopping $23.7 million on dogs that talk! Cuba Gooding Jr. should just get it over with and burn himself alive: nobody has squandered an Oscar win more than Gooding. There is nothing more to write about the atrocity of Dogs second place.

Rings did take third place, ringing up (get it?) $15.3 million. The film has made $248.2 million to date, and will easily pass the $300 million mark. Despite the financial success of the film, Elijah Wood can pretty much start signing autographs as Mark Hamill from here on out. Or

Turn to MOVIES, page B4

Tom Cruise as David Ames in Cameron Crowe's critically maligned Vanilla Sky.

PHOTO COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Crowe's ambition overcomes narrative flaws

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

VANILLA SKY
Directed By Cameron Crowe
Starring Tom Cruise, Penelope Cruz and Jason Lee

There's a scene in Being John Malkovich when Malkovich himself slides down the chute into his own mind and sees nothing but his face and hears nothing but his name. In this warped reality women, men, even babies all look exactly like him and utter only his name in different tones. It's the ridiculous climax to a ridiculous movie, but a brilliant one that exploits the visual medium for all it's worth. Sure, a written description of the scene captures some of its looniness, but it's something that simply needs to be seen to fully appreciate its twisted beauty.

Cameron Crowe's Vanilla Sky, for all its flaws, is a film that visually bombards the viewer, screaming movie movie movie every frame. This isn't a flaccid literary translation or paint-by-numbers drama. Like Baz Luhrman's similarly ambitious (and troubled) Moulin Rouge, Vanilla Sky aims to stretch storytelling a bit further; using all the tools, old and new, that cinema affords.

He'll have Tom Cruise drive a Ferrari into a Times Square that's completely silent and empty. He'll have characters comment on philosophy, autonomy and consumerism on the top of a skyscraper during a sunset. He'll use frames to recreate album covers that reflect characters' moods (Dylan albums no less, but Crowe's music savvy isn't stuck in the period when he was Almost Famous, just peep the killer soundtrack). Crowe does all this and more to explode the dream/reality hopes/fears structured/chaotic fantasy he has going on in his head omo the screen. Maybe that's why the film is bookended by two big ol' eyes opening and a voice keeps repeating 'abre los ojos,' or 'open your eyes,' the same name of the 1997 Alejandro Amenabar picture of which Vanilla Sky is a remake.

So the question becomes: is Crowe's ambition and derring-do enough to outweigh a plot that becomes impossible to follow and downright silly as it unravels? It's hard to debate that the narrative gets loose in the last half hour until Crowe eventually collars under the weight and we're left with a film that is still visually arresting and extremely intriguing, but hopelessly beyond comprehension. You might feel a little cheated at the lack of resolutions to the romance, revenge and mystery that was built up for the better part of the film, but from the Times Square scene on, it was clear that Vanilla Sky, like Cruise's character, would always be reaching for more, not content with simply an examination into the fabric of waking or even present-day life.

But to spiral off the page you've gotta start with a dot in the middle, so we meet David Aames (Cruise) in the middle of his kick-ass life: included on the menu is helming a successful men's magazine (very Maxim-chic), being filthy rich and powerful, casual sex, casual rebellion against old guys in suits, and posh parties. At one such party, he meets la guapisima Sofia

Turn to VANILLA SKY page B5

What's in this Section?

Page 2: Facts and Fictions, CD reviews...

Page 4: Resolutions for the New Year and Talan's talents

Page 5: Not Another Teen Movie

Page 6: Lostprophets, Impostor, The Majestic, A Beautiful Mind

Page 8: Amazons -vs- Convent, Aaliyah

Page 9: Kate and Leopold, and photo galore

Page 10: -- Lord of the Rings, Black Hawk Down, The Royal Tenenbaums, and the Golden Globes.

Necco the Candyman cometh...to MassArt fashion?

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

2002 SWEETHEARTS "LOOK WHAT'S IN FASHION" SHOW
Massachusetts College of Art Auditorium
January 16

Nothing says lovin' like a fashion show dedicated to Necco's little conversation heart candies. After a year of heartache and surprises, Necco announced its new line of conversation heart phrases on January 16 at the Massachusetts College of Art in a corporate-sponsored fashion show.

To keep up with changing times and to keep their 136-year-old candy classic hip to the new generation, Necco (the New England Confectionery Company) selects new conversation heart phrases each year. This year, the corporation included a line of fashion forward sayings, such as "Vogue" and "In Style."

To celebrate the new stylish sayings, Necco sponsored a design competition for MassArt sophomore and junior fashion design majors.

Students were each given one of the eleven new sayings and were asked to create a design that exemplified the statement. All students competed in an internal MassArt competition, judged by Necco representatives. The winning designs for each saying were showcased Wednesday afternoon at the nationally covered event.

"MassArt students are trained for the fashion industry. Today, for Necco, our students were inspired to create fashion-art," said MassArt professor Sondra Grace. "After many hours of research and lots of candy sampling, the designs came together."

Hosting the fashion show was Leon Hall, co-host of E! Entertainment Television's Fashion Emergency. Hall expressed his delight of the designs.

"You all are the creme de la crème," said Hall. "Or should I say the crème de la Necco."

Designs by students included a peach satin one-shouldered cocktail dress by junior Nancy Barry, with coordinating pastel heart cape, beaded with the saying "Two Hearts." Junior Martha Pratt designed a pale pink and lavender satin-spiraled gown with a red sequined "Diva" scripted across the chest.

Necco awarded prizes totaling five thousand dollars to the top four designs. Most Creative was clinched by a pink ball gown appliqued with sequined "That Smile" pastel hearts. Third prize went to a black and sky blue two-piece gown design. Second place was awarded to a dress and pocketbook ensemble made entirely out of bags of candy hearts.

Student designer Melissa Tuoxy won first place for her red-hot "Te Amo" inspired creation of a red and pink one-legged pantsuit. The ensemble boasted choker necklace with pink roses blooming forth from it, as well as a flamenco skirt paring a white lace-surrounded "Te Amo" heart.

The Cambridge, Mass. based Necco, which creates eight billion conversation hearts each year, will claim all the designs for future use. The ten new sayings for 2002 are "Look Good," "In Style," "Vogue," "Tres Chic," "Dress Up," "Diva," "What's Up," "That Smile," "Two Hearts," and "URA OT." The eleventh saying used in the competition, "Te Amo" is part of the Spanish language conversation hearts line being launched nationally for the first time this year.

"The true herald of Valentine's Day is when you get a bag of those conversation hearts and you start reading them," said Hall, "I always thought that they should make some X-rated ones. But the CEO said 'No.' Oh well."

Models strut at the Sweethearts show.

Jacko's wacko? Fact or fiction?

False allegations, rumors, controversies, splits and plain wackiness were all the rage in entertainment over the past few weeks. We learned Paula Zahn is "just a little sexy," "The X-Files" has been X-ed, and Destiny's Child aren't going anywhere anytime soon. What's the scoop on some of the biggest stories? Here's a little game of fact and fiction on some of the biggest (and strangest) headlines of the past month and a half.

Where There's Jacko, There's Plenty of Wacko

FACT — Accusations of sexual harassment against Grammy president Michael Greene wasn't the only thing to cause of a headache for the beleaguered organization in January. Dick Clark, producer of the American Music Awards, accused Greene of telling Jackson that he couldn't appear on both the AMAs and the Grammys. The spat led Clark to file a $10 million lawsuit against Greene for engaging in unfair competition—a practice he alleges has been going on for years. In the end, Jackson appeared at the AMAs to accept his Artist of the Century award but a tape of Jacko performing "Man in the Mirror," which was supposed to air during the three-hour ABC telecast, was yanked at the last minute. Reps for the King of Pop reportedly demanded that show producers pull it at the last minute. Insiders speculate that Jacko's camp feared airing the tape would have jeopardized his chances of performing at next month's Grammys.

Virgin Dumps Mariah Carey

FICTION — After Mariah Carey's Glitter was released last September to sluggish sales, rumors swirled that EMI's Virgin records tried to dump the sexy songbird. Such plans never materialized but those same rumors (only stronger this time around) re-surfaced in early January. Both Carey and EMI denied the reports that Virgin was trying to buy Carey out of her multimillion-dollar, multi-album contract after the resounding flop of her first Virgin dive, the Glitter soundtrack. Virgin wooed Carey away from Sony (run by Carey's ex-husband, Tommy Mottola) last April with a deal worth $20 million per album for four or five records.

But Virgin supposedly tried to buy her out of the deal for $50 million after Glitter sold a dismal 2 million copies (a tenth of what some of her Sony albums have sold), and after new EMI CEO Alain Levy went on a cost-cutting spree. "EMI wishes to make clear that it has made no such payment or agreement," the label said in a statement. "There were inaccurate reports in the media that the recording agreement between Mariah Carey and Virgin Records has been terminated," said a statement from Carey's people. "EMI has correctly stated that the contract remains in full force."

FACT: Carey's contract was later bought out for some $28 million, leaving the singer without a job, but without financial worries.

'N Sync Lands Cameo in Star Wars

FACT — 'N Sync did indeed land a cameo as doomed Jedi extras in this summer's Episode II—Attack of the Clones. But 'N Sync's scenes may not end up on the final edit of the Star Wars film. Joey Fatone told a Tampa radio station that fan outcry sent their scene to the cutting room floor. "I'm going to make it officially known that they dropped it because people made a big deal about it," Fatone told WFLZ-FM. "We're not going to be in it, and I'm not going to comment on it any more." Those "people" include some 800 Star Wars fans that signed an online petition urging Lucas to drop the boyband from the flick.

However, a Lucasfilm spokeswoman insists that director George Lucas is impervious to fan criticism and that he has yet to make any decision on the 'N Sync scene. "The 'N Sync guys were shot as extras, and whether they're in or out won't be determined until the final edit," she said.

CNN Airs 'Sexy' Ads

FACT — CNN aired provocative ads promoting Paula Zahn's morning news show with a voiceover that said, "Where can you find a morning news anchor who's provocative, super-smart (and) oh, yeah, just a little sexy?" The word "sexy" was accompanied by the sound of a zipper. CNN execs pulled the spot and blamed an in-house promotions team led by a woman for the commercial's questionable taste. "It was a major blunder by our promotions department," CNN chairman Walter Isaacson said. "I was outraged and so was Paula, who has spent more than 20 years proving her credibility day in and day out."

"CNN management has apologized to me and has assured me that a mistake like this will not happen again," Zahn said. The 20 year news veteran, ironically working out on her Stairmaster when she first saw the promo, was offended. "It was offensive. I've worked in this business for more than 20 years proving my credibility and what you want to hear promoted is the strength of your journalism," Zahn told Access Hollywood. Bill O'Reilly, outspoken Fox News Channel chatter, isn't buying Zahn's politically correct reaction to the embarrassing ad, saying: "If Paula Zahn doesn't think she's there partly because she's a good-looking babe, then she's in never-never land."

Black Crowes to Split Up

FACT...or fiction? — The band issued a statement saying that they're "on hiatus." with frontman Chris Robinson "pursuing a solo career," and drummer Steve Gorman quitting the band for good. A report in the New York Post, however, suggests that the "hiatus" is permanent, that Robinson's marriage to Kate Hudson a year ago means he isn't hanging out with his bandmates anymore, that the band was discouraged by the poor sales of 2001's Lions, and that the sibling rivalry between Chris and guitarist Rich Robinson made the split irreversible.

Then again, the Post quoted the band's publicist as saying the Robinson brothers spent Christmas together in Aspen. He also denied rumors that Chris Robinson had broken up the band, which remains a top touring attraction.

Carson Daly Misses His Opening Vigil

FACT — Ohmygod! Like, how could this happen? "Total Request Live" fans that stayed up past their bedtimes to catch the premiere of Carson Daly's late-late NBC talk show "Last Call" on Monday, Jan. 7 must have been pretty miffed to see a rerun of "SCTV" instead. Daly's much-hyped debut was reportedly scrapped at the last minute over a contract dispute. As of Jan. 7 Daly still hadn't signed, and his lawyers wouldn't allow the show to air. The incident was embarrassing for NBC, which, in promoting the premiere, had gone so far as to call Conan O'Brien to come in on his day off Monday to tape a new episode and plug Daly's chatfest so that "Last Call" wouldn't have a rerun as a lead-in.

At the Television Critics Association winter press tour in Pasadena days later, NBC honcho Scott Sassa blamed the network for the unsigned-contract snafu that bumped the scheduled premiere of the chat fest at the last minute. "We made a mistake and our mistake was we should have put our foot down on a contract when he did the test shows [last month]," Sassa said.

It's the Last Season for "The X-Files"

FACT — After nine seasons as one of Fox's biggest shows, creator Chris Carter has decided to pull the plug on the "The X-Files." The decision was probably made after a fall in ratings this season with the loss of main attraction David Duchovny.

"It's the ninth inning. We want to go out on top," Carter told Variety. "We wanted to go out as a strong show." It's Carter's hope that Duchovny will reprise his role as Fox Mulder opposite Gillian Anderson's Dana Scully for the show's two-part series finale. But don't expect Carter to resolve the show's complex mythology once and for all given that a second "X-Files" movie is in the works. "The show's afterlife will be strong," Carter said. So the truth will probably still be out there.

Destiny's Child to Split

FICTION — R&B trio Destiny's Child is not splitting up after all. The group's manager issued a statement clarifying comments made earlier this month by lead singer Beyonce Knowles that the trio were "going to take a little break" to pursue solo projects for the near future. What Knowles really meant to say was that she, Kelly Rowland and Michelle Williams would focus on individual projects during 2002, but would record as a group again in 2003. What's more, they will proceed with plans for a Destiny's Child world tour this spring.

Vikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian staff member.

■ royal

continued from page B10

brought back into the story. His positioning of characters, items and cameras provide shots that seem simple, but upon further inspection are deeply complex. Anderson, in some ways, is the anti-Kubrick. Where Stanley made the tracking shot with simply set background famous (and a part of his legacy), Anderson often sets his camera like a 35mm, centering the actors and capturing everything in the background, and everything that we see is part of the story.

Anderson also tells the family's story through how they live. The film makes it clear that it takes place in the year 2000, but yet the family and everything associated with it seems it belongs in the late seventies or early eighties. From the clothes they wear, to the computers and phones they use, to the cars they drive. There is'not one CD to be found in the film, just old vinyl records. And although some people may see this as just one quirkier attribute to this family, the meaning is actually quite deeper. You see Royal left his children at an early age, in the late seventies, their clothes virtually don't change from what they were wearing that day. The equipment that they use don't change from what they were using in those days. They even fall for people that seem stuck in that time period. Ben Stiller is perpetually in a red sweat suit, and dresses his two sons the same. Gwenyth Paltrow is not only always depressed but also in a cotton jumper with a fur coat (like the kind she had as a child) and Richie wears the Fila tennis wear (now virtually extinct). The absence of their father has had a tremendous impact on their lives, whether they vocalize it or not. It's yet another way how Wes Anderson tells his story.

The cast of the film is also fantastic in shaping their wildly eclectic personalities into a dysfunctional family that not only we laugh at but also identify with at the core. Gene Hackman adds to his career with the role of Royal as a crass, politically incorrect man looking to get his family back. He tells his children that although certain sacrifices were made when he wanted children, the separation was not their fault. While talking to Richie about the last game he played and lost (with 72 unforced errors), he tells him that he had a lot riding on that game both financially and personally. He tells Margot at her first play at age 10 wasn't believable and her characters were just kids in animal costumes ("But that's just one man's opinion"). And when he shows his grandsons what living is all about, he shows them how to shoplift, ride garbage trucks for free transportation and the correct way to throw water balloons at passing motorists. His character is sensitive but flawed, and Hackman portrays both parts brilliantly, playing the comedy and drama so well that they flow seamlessly into each other.

The Tenenbaum children; Paltrow, Stiller, and Wilson perform their unique characters well. Academy Award winner Gwenyth Paltrow is brilliant as the depressed and misunderstood adopted daughter, her humor is subtle and never is out of character. Ben Stiller continues to play his jittery, anxious character well. Although his superficial performance is typical Stiller, the depth of his character is seen in those moments where he becomes soft-spoken. Luke Wilson is quiet as usual, and that his is gift as an actor. Much like Hackman, he combines drama and comedy very well.

The performances by Angelica Houston, Danny Glover, and Bill Murray are equally well played and this is probably one of the best ensemble casts in a film I've seen in a long time.

The Royal Tenenbaums is without a doubt Wes Anderson's best film to date and shows great performances by the all the actors. The film is very enjoyable utilizing the comedy and drama that comes with a dysfunctional family.

COURTESY KEVIN STURMAN

Shannon McNally's singing and songwriting is enough to get into her favorite thing -- a jukebox.

Hot New Talent – Steppin' Out

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

SHANNON MCNALLY
Jukebox Sparrows
Capitol

Some artists use music to get as far away from themselves or their lives as possible, singing about far off places or how love takes them to where they've never been before. Shannon McNally, however, is comfortable right where she is: at the bar with a pint, waiting for her favorite song on the jukebox to cue up.

The song "Jukebox Sparrows" from her debut of the same name is a lot like the free verse storytelling of "May Street" from Shea Seger's The May Street Project. McNally's at the jukebox, talking to her imaginary friend, searching for the right song, and wondering what it would be like to pick the brains of some of the musicians that flip by. The music is sparse, and like much of the album is too reluctant to develop its own personality, instead often acting as simply emphasis or atmosphere for McNally. This is most apparent on the weaker second half of the album. The haunting narratives of "It Could've Been Me" and "Colorado" are well served by unobtrusive instruments, but much of the time a little spark here and there would have done wonders for the continuity of the disc.

The first half is much more complete and satisfying, with confident compositions bouncing right along with McNally's smoky, strident love songs, that recall Shelby Lynne in style and execution. She also feels looser and more adventurous here, welcoming a chorus of back-up singers on "Now That I Know" and even scatting some "ba da bas" on "Bitter Blue." Not one note is rushed, and her approach becomes characteristically interesting, as her vocal delivery becomes something entirely unexpected and refreshing. The songwriting is solid throughout, save a few painfully trite stumbles like the comparison of her and her lover to Adam and Eve. And while McNally doesn't corner herself into solely writing love songs, they contain her smoothest thoughts ("and then there you are in your jeans of blue/ makin' it all seem so easy/ you make the gale winds nothin' more than breezy"). Jukebox Sparrows has just enough spunk and personality to earn a spot in the jukebox of today's better singer/songwriters.

STARSAILOR
Love Is Here
Capitol

Norway's Kings of Convenience declared that Quiet Is The New Loud almost a year ago, and apparently someone is listening, as the UK music press hype machine and its American counterparts are revving up England's Starsailor to be the spiritual descendent of Coldplay's "Yellow." Unlike KOC, however, Starsailor's debut Love Is Here doesn't have enough variety to be a consistently engaging album, and the aching sincerity of singer/guitarist James Walsh is unavoidably grating over the course of eleven tracks.

Their bare-bones approach is apparent in the album's title. Love is, apparently, here. "Good Souls" boils down to the fact that the band likes good people. No lyrical trickery or any kind of song structure experimentation is on display. Contemporaries Badly Drawn Boy or Doves offer much more lyrically and musically respectively. But as with Coldplay and, recently, Incubus, there's a certain charm in such honesty and simplicity. Forget the crap about this is the kind of record people need right now, since this kind of record has always been around and people have always needed it, just as much as musicians have always needed to make it. But it's been made better and much more compellingly before, so it comes down to whether or not you need this competent spin-off or you can wait for a more accomplished evolution.

Starsailor works very well on singles, however, a format that provides just the right dose of the band's strengths. "Good Souls" will refuse to dislodge itself from your head, in the best way. More 'aggressive' ("cough") songs like "Poor Misguided Fool" and "Talk Her Down" stand out not only because of their pace but because they are simply more gripping and substantive than the rest. Walsh displays a welcome forcefulness on both, and the inclusion of piano fills out the sound nicely. For an album that has an overwhelming sense of melancholy, the moments when Starsailor "rocks out" ("Back, wheeze") provide Love Is Here's most lasting moments.

COURTESY CHRISTOPHE RIHET

Starsailor are moody, talented but try to look like they are angst-ridden in its photo. Grow up guys.

■ Black Hawk

continued from page B10

as night vision goggles. What results is a 15-hour gunfight between thousands of Somalis and just over a hundred US soldiers. Two Blackhawk helicopters are shot down by rocket-propelled grenades (RPGs), a cheap but effective weapon. They stream across the screen, making you duck in your seat as you await the explosion. Watching helicopters spin out of control, and hearing the same audio that CNN rebroadcast many times following the October 3 battle is chilling.

Ridley Scott has done a fine job portraying the confusion, fear, and surrealist moments that make up a fight.

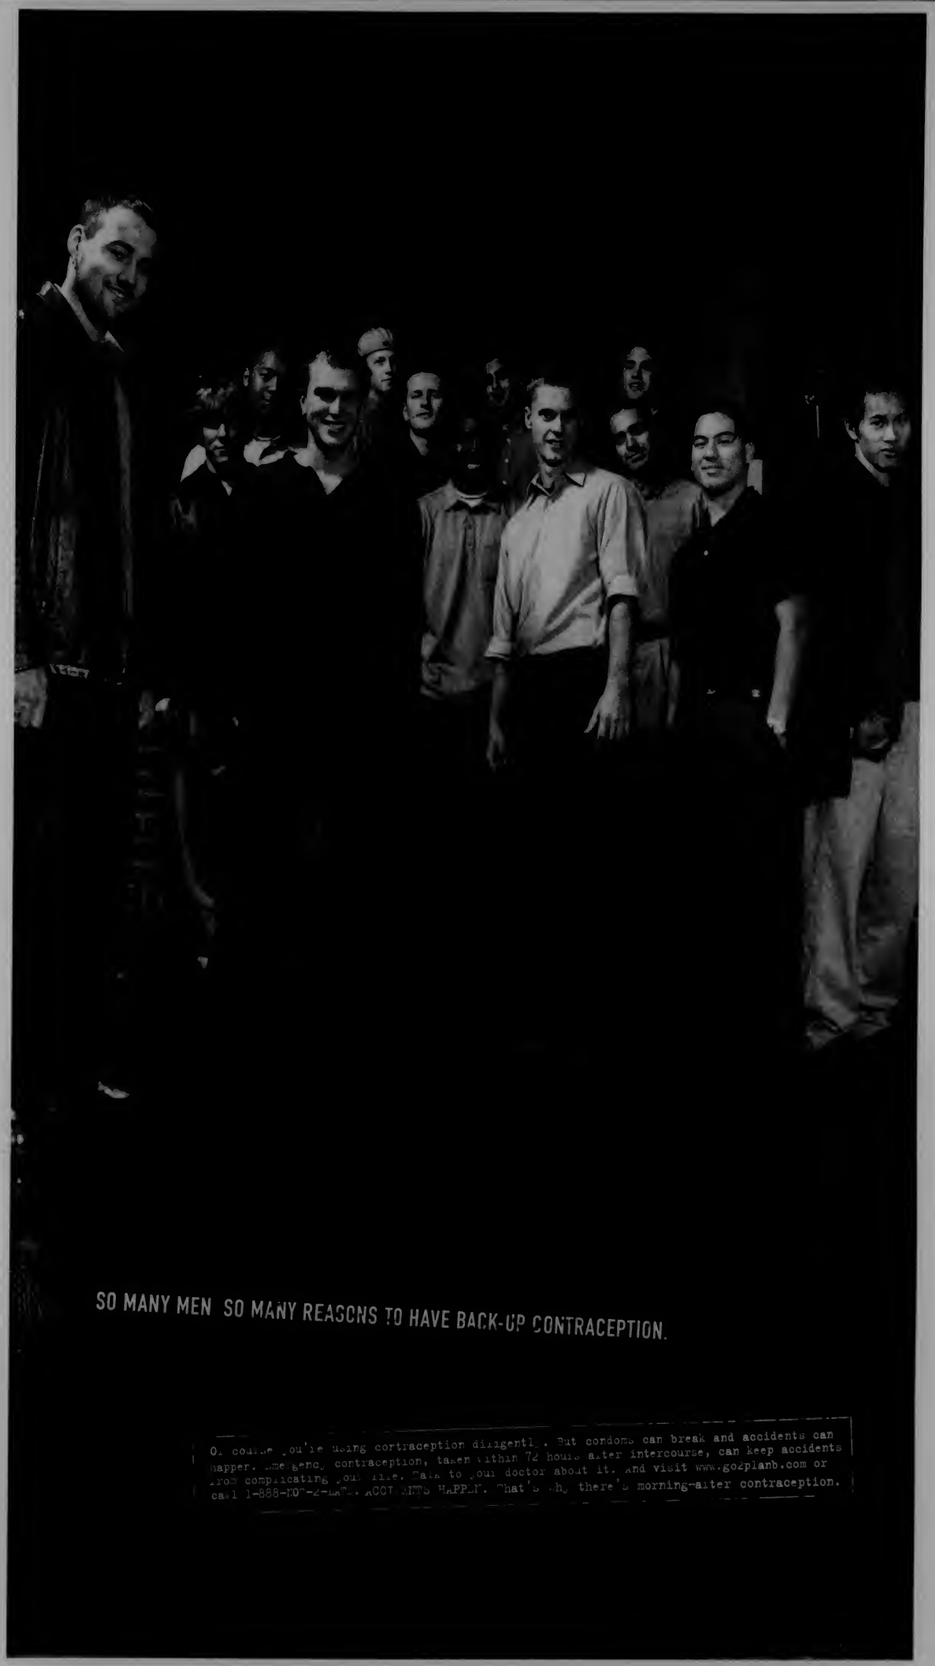
What? Isn't this the guy who made White Squall, and (shudder) GI Jane? Yes, but it's also the same guy who made Blade Runner and Legend. Scott has wisely chosen to let the story tell itself. Instead of soul-searching scenes where characters are fully fleshed out, we only learn a little about each. Added to that all the Rangers have regulation haircuts, and it's hard to tell who's who. But it really doesn't matter too much. In the battle, now known to the Somalis as the Day of the Rangers, there were only two sides: the Americans, and everyone else.

So the big names in the marquis matter little. You forget the names, and instead concentrate on little things to differentiate between the characters — what type of weapon they are holding, if they are wounded or not, rank badges, etc. It forces you to pay more attention, and as you do, you are sucked into the hot, dry, dusty hell that was Mogadishu.

And the world is so real — Scott took a page from Steven Spielberg's book, washing out the colors and using certain camera tricks that make the scenes stand out. Particles of dust and dirt fly through the air, kicked up by bullets and grenades.

Speaking of grenades, whoever did the military advising to this picture finally got a director to listen. Contrary to popular belief, a fragmentation hand grenade does not explode with the force of a small nuclear warhead. Frag grenades go off all over the place in Black Hawk Down, and are barely noticed because of the small explosion they produce. The film also shows other kinds of grenades: high explosive grenades — these canisters are the ones that will turn a room into a fireball. You never see something like that used in a film. You just rarely see things done right; Black Hawk Down does them right.

The question is: did they sacrifice the story for the accuracy in effects?



No.

The story, taken from real life, is like a memory. Scenes of a body being dragged through the streets on CNN, dredged up from our own memories, make it much more real.

It portrays the general confusion of battle perfectly. Nobody knows what's going on, bullets zip around you, there's noise, smoke, people are yelling, and you don't have anything to rely on but your training and the guy next to you. It comes across wonderfully on the screen — everyone is shooting, but you're never really quite sure at what. And forget Hollywood's usual portrayal of women and children as non-combatants. They pick up guns, too, and they mean to kill.

The dialogue, at times, is a little strained — probably the only real obvious sign that it is just a movie. Josh Hartnett, who plays Sergeant Eversmann, a squad leader, has several reflective and melodramatic moments that even the real Eversmann agrees aren't like him at all. But words matter little, because it's the emotion that carries the film. Soldiers, young men from all over the country, in far away land, not knowing exactly why they are there, but knowing that they have a job to do. They've been told they're the best of the best, and that Ranger patch on their shoulder reminds them of it. To suddenly see your friends die, to see not one but two seemingly invincible helicopters spin out of the sky and to then realize that there's nobody else to help you, is a weight that is visible on the actors' faces. Not in their words, but just in the demoralized and beaten look on their faces, as they slam yet another clip of ammunition into their weapons and protect the crash sites.

It's an exhausting movie, for the characters, for the actors, and for the audience. You walk out of the theater, look around, and wonder why you're out of breath. It's because you've been holding it for two hours, wondering what's going to happen next, and kicking yourself for not paying more attention to the news in 1993.

SO MANY MEN SO MANY REASONS TO HAVE BACK-UP CONTRACEPTION.

Of course you're using contraception diligently. But condoms can break and accidents can happen. Emergency contraception, taken within 72 hours after intercourse, can keep accidents from complicating your life. Talk to your doctor about it. And visit www.gozplanb.com or call 1-888-NO-2-PLAN. ACCIDENTS HAPPEN. That's why, there's morning-after contraception.

Hollywood resolutions

Who should resolve what?

Stars may seem to have everything, but looks can be deceiving. In fact, a bevy of stars need to invest some time and energy improving themselves this year. Here's what some stars should promise themselves in 2002:

Britney Spears resolves to ditch her increasingly tramp look.

Michael Jackson resolves to bring his cryogenically placed 1980s brain into the year 2002.

Columbia Pictures resolves to stop writing their own great movie reviews.

Mariah Carey resolves to ditch her hip-hop ventures and stop making movies.

Hollywood resolves to produce more animated classics a la Shrek and Monsters, Inc.

Stars resolve to come out more often and donate to charities.

Sean John/Puff Daddy/Puffy/P. Diddy resolves on deciding a permanent name.

All "Weakest Link" contestants resolve to talk back to the acerbic Anne Robinson.

Robert Downey Jr., Ben Affleck, Aaron Sorkin, Matthew Perry and Al McLean resolve to ditch their drug and alcohol problems.

Networks resolve to cancel meaningless reality TV programming.

Hollywood resolves to stop making big-budget war movies that fail to capture actual war facts.

J.Lo resolves to realize that taking on the load of becoming an omnipresent force through court appearances, weddings and designing a fashion line doesn't a great entertainer make.

Sharon Stone's hubby Phil Bronstein resolves to stay away from toe-eating lizards.

'N Sync resolve to never again make another movie.

Tom Green resolves to never again make another public appearance.

Studios resolve to stop making any more movie spoofs (at least for 2002).

Music stars resolve to limit collaborations as duets to avoid a complete ocean of vocals.

1-800-Call-ATT resolves to ditch their annoying pitchman Carrot Top.

Levi's resolves to stop making any more annoying commercials like the singing butt buttons.

Mandy Moore, Jessica Simpson, and 98° resolve to realize their fate and fade away – now.

Bjork resolves to do herself a favor and dress appropriately at public outings.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian staff member.

www.DailyCollegian.com

Artistic Talan's Something Burning haunts

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

DEB TALAN
Something Burning

"Something about your eyes/ something that might melt the winter in my heart/ like a tongue touching snow/ and the way you move is dancing/ while your mouth says funny things/ I'm staring at your neck thinking/ could I rest my faith in there and stay awhile?"

Deb Talan is an artist. While she creates laid-back beats and gentle guitar melodies, her true talent lies in her ability to put into words raw human emotion. In "Whetstones" she sings, "Something about these words/ something I like/ moss and an old man's beard/ dripping rain from a branch in the fading daylight." Her words are true poetry. But sometimes that isn't enough.

In about half of her songs, Talan achieves the balance of passion, rhythm and melody that her beautiful lyrics require. But in the other half, there is something missing. Sometimes the lack of beat, or an insipid melody deteriorates the strength of her words. And sometimes, she proves her own worst enemy.

Talan's voice is an original. Her raw and natural tone is simultaneously gravelly and whiney - which in most songs works to her advantage. But occasionally, her voice becomes intensely irritating, as in "The Gladdest Thing" where her whining voice negates the lyrics. "I will be the gladdest thing under the sun."

Most of Talan's songs are laid back and transport one to a coffee house - sitting cozily on a sofa, sipping a latte, while Talan's voice mingles with the clatter of the barista. The songs tell of love found, love lost, and love forgiven. In "A Good Day's Work," she sings, "Time is a healer... just not yet." She sings life as it is.

But Talan triumphs when she breaks from her casual strummings, and adds a beat to her passionate musings. "Whetstones" and "Something Burning" are her greatest victories. "Something Burning," for which the album is named, possesses a solid drum line, with lyrics that define the emotions around a relationship deteriorating because it's just not the right time. "I have faith in you/ I have trust in me/ I feel the pull of/ the river now and I wanna go/ I hope you find your river soon/ and you meet me/ when we have both followed our rivers down/ to the sea."

The last two songs of the CD fittingly talk about leaving and letting go. In "The Darkest Season," Talan sings, "The last few golden leaves are/ clinging tightly to their branches/ like they don't want to let go/ like they don't trust what they don't know/ it's not quite winter/ and it's not quite fall/...why must we into the darkest season?"

Excepting two headache-evoking tracks, Talan's Something Burning is a CD of passion and poetry. Talan sings in "Whetstones" "Something about your mind - different, clever, kind. Maybe we offer each other other." That's just what she offers to her listeners - the other that is so sorely lacking on pop radio.

■ movies

continued from page B1

North.

A Beautiful Mind took the story of a math stud, left out his homosexuality – because Hollywood is afraid to have truly brilliant gays in its films – and rode the leftovers to a fourth place, $14.7 weekend. Starring the insufferable Russell Crowe, a man who has more Oscars than Ed Harris despite starring the terrible Gladiator, Mind is directed by Ron Howard, notable only for his brother Clint. Clint starred in Silent Night/Deadly Night 4: Initiation. It's the worst movie ever made.

Orange County took fifth place with an underwhelming $10.5 million. Read it here first: Jack Black is not god's gift to comedy. I set it is believed otherwise, one only has to watch the mind-numbing The Jackal. Furthermore, his stint on "Saturday Night Live" wasn't much to write home about.

As usual, if the top five were bad – and they weren't really – the bottom five are worse.

Ocean's Eleven blandly continued to be super-cool in sixth place, swiping $6.8 million from the wallets of repeat attendees. Bernie Mac Ed Harris despite starring the terrible Gladiator. Mind is directed by Ron Howard, notable only for his brother Clint. Clint starred in Silent Night/Deadly Night 4: Initiation. It's the worst movie ever made.

The Royal Tenenbaums fought their way to a $5.4 payday, not bad for Wes Anderson, especially considering that he's a filmmaker whose brightest moments seem to be used to balance out the boring ones in-between.

Jimmy Neutron, Boy Genius thought its way to $4.5 million and eighth place. It's a kids' film about a Jimmy Neutron named Boy Genius.

Gosford Park, Robert Altman's British masterpiece, made $4.2 million, reminding the world that more people want to see Jimmy Neutron, Boy Genius than want to see boring British actors being incredibly stuff. Now, the ironic thing is that those same British actors are supposedly the creme de la creme of the acting world. Yet more people want to see an animated boy. Something isn't working out...

Kate and Leopold cuted their way to a $4.1 million payoff. How cute – Wolverine loves Goose's wife. Also starring: Cotton Weary, the killer from Scream, who will be the highlight of Scream reunions for years to come.

What's the bottom line? That its Oscar time – expect theaters to be deluged with supposedly interesting art-house fare that doubles as "trash."

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian staff member.

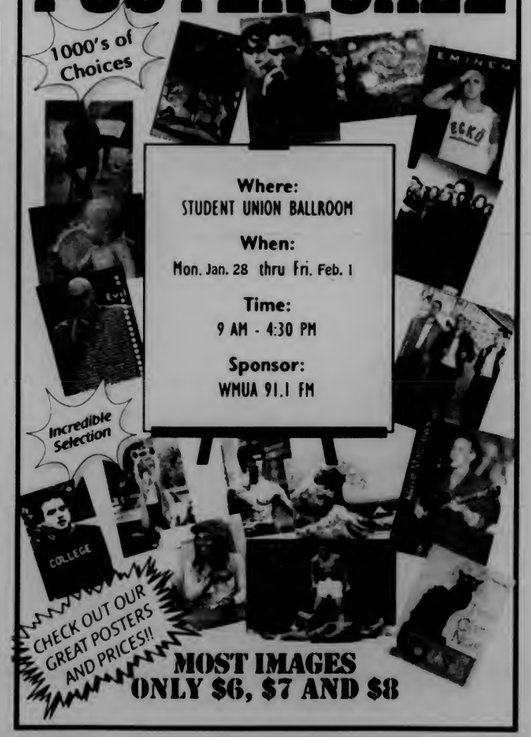
Cold Days...
Hot Bargains!

Winter Sidewalk Sale

(indoors, of course)

Steve Madden Mavi
Urban Outfitters Buffalo
To the Max Mia

Tuesday January 29th thru Sunday February 3rd



ZANNA

Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

1000's of Choices

Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Jan. 28 thru Fri. Feb. 1
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM

Incredible Selection

CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!

MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8

■ Vanilla Sky

continued from page B1

(Penélope Cruz), who likes him much more, than her date/David's friend Brian (Jason Lee). They hit it off, exchange witty banter, and admire a painting with a "vanilla sky," all to the chagrin of Julie (Cameron Diaz), the casual sex part of David's life. Julie then goes into full Fatal Attraction mode and drives herself and David off an overpass, (presumably) killing her and leaving David's face disfigured.

The film then shifts into a darker mood with flashes of David's interrogation for the murder of Julie and his own depression and drinking trying to cope with his new face and similarly striking blank latex mask. What keeps him going is his love for Sofia, which is reciprocated all the way through a procedure that gives David his original superhunk face back. At this point the story threads of David and Sofia's love, David's recovery, and Brian's jealousy are enough for a decent flick, but Crowe warned ya early on that it was going to burst, and so it does. Julie returns (in David's mind or for real?), David is informed he is a god, David's life after the crash is supposedly all the workings of a resurrection/dream fulfillment futuristic company and the whole thing becomes about as easy to comprehend as gralskhdoisidhlskdhfeohr.

The performances are excellent. Cruise has always seemed supremely cocky but with a trunk load of dark secrets, so David becomes convincingly self-absorbed in the beginning and convincingly disturbed and confused in the scenes with the mask. But most importantly, the chemistry between him and Sofia feels (as it apparently is off camera) real, and Cruz gives Sofia a wide-eyed curiosity and playfulness, but maintains control and restraint. So even when Crowe drops the love theme to go berserk, it's still there as a believable anchor.

In another Cameron Crowe movie, Tom Cruise asked, upon his departure, "who's comin' with me?" When making such an adventurous leap as Vanilla Sky, Crowe can't expect everyone to be on board. You might leave the theater dumbfounded or enraged, but, like David Lynch's inferior (send those letters now) Mulholland Drive, you'll leave the theater with a loosely connected collection of incredible images burned into your mind, and the incomprehensible, fascinating blueprint of a director's vision, uncorrupted.

Want to write for the Collegian's Arts and Living?

Come to our office and tell us you do.

Or call-- 545-1361

Not another stupid satire

PHOTO COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES

By Kurt Polesky
COLLEGIAN STAFF

NOT ANOTHER TEEN MOVIE
Directed by Joel Gallen
Starring Chris Evans, Chyler Leigh, Mia Kirshner and Jamie Pressly

This past holiday season, some went to the movie theatre in search of some sorcerer's stone or a magic ring. Others went to laugh, and laugh they did if their movie choice was the wickedly raunchy and rude parody of teen movies Not Another Teen Movie.

From The Breakfast Club to American Pie, the film takes aim and fires away at the countless array of teen movies from the past twenty years. The parodies manage to be witty and smart, while at the same time providing a heavy dose of toilet humor (literally). The film takes the route of Scary Movie with its laugh-a-second strategy. Still, it doesn't get out of control and feel like a bunch of R-rated "SNL" skits made into a film like Scary Movie 2. There is actually some semblance of 'plot,' one that parodies the Freddie Prinze Jr. flick She's All That, in which the four-eyed laughing stock of the school, Janey Briggs (Chyler Leigh), is asked out by the 'popular jock' Jake Wilder (Chris Evans), to the prom. Miraculously, when she takes off her glasses, she becomes the hottest girl in school.

The laughs in Not Another Teen Movie come at such a rapid-fire rate that certain jokes become lost in the shuffle. Still, several jokes and characters manage to be memorable. 'The Foreign Exchange Student' (Cerina Vincent) titillates some big laughs as she chooses to take the nudist route for the entire film. 'The Desperate Virgins' (Cody McMains, Samm Levine and Sam Huntington) participate in the ultimate gross-out scene as the three of them sneak into a vent above the ladies bathroom to watch a young lady...well, you know. The scene is crosscut with a teacher preaching against the crude and vile humor of the young generation. Somehow 'The Desperate Virgins' crash through the vent onto the female, with the result being an exploding toilet (in mid-use) crashing through the floor onto the teacher ranting in the classroom below.

Several other scenes and characters stand out, particularly the Grease-inspired music number prior to the prom, 'The Cruelest Girl,' (Mia Kirshner) has her Sarah Michelle Geller impersonation down to a tee, and 'The Football Coach' has his Jon Voight, Varsity Blues impersonation down also...goddammit, Jamie Pressly is perfect as the snobby cheerleader. 'The Token Black Guy' (Deon Richmond) was a witty and funny element as well...bling bling. Randy Quaid as a shell-shocked Vietnam vet of a father was tasteless, but hilarious. Quaid tells his kids (Leigh and McMains) as he drops them off that "he'll probably be too drunk to pick them up after school." His daughter is pleased, as "at least you won't be driving drunk daddy." Quaid clarifies the situation by saying, "Oh, I'll be driving, I'll just be too shitfaced to remember to pick you guys up." He later encourages his daughter to go out with popular Jake Wilder, "because she could use the popularity points."

Not Another Teen Movie is also heavy on subtle jokes put into the background scenery or thrown in for nostalgia. For instance, the high school where the film takes place is aptly named John Hughes High School after the maker of Ferris Bueller's Day Off and The Breakfast Club (watch out for a Breakfast Club cameo in the film) among other films. Read the sign on the hot dog stand in the cafeteria and you'll see that the hot dogs are being sold "for practicing oral sex." For the Pretty in Pink fans, Molly Ringwald makes a cameo appearance.

A film like Not Another Teen Movie will quite predictably be attacked by critics and high falutin' moviegoers as "stupid" or "tasteless." What these people don't understand is that by its very nature the film has to be stupid and tasteless for it to work. After all, the film is parodying a bunch of movies that are either a) stupid b) tasteless, or c) both. Regardless of what the culture snobs have to say, Not Another Teen Movie succeeds as a hilarious parody of teen movies.

■ Golden Globes

continued from page B10

classic and elegant, neither stood out when amongst the black sea. However, Angelina Jolie - another of the midnight lackeys - stood out in the crowd for the sole fact that she looked like death. She took Goth to a disturbingly realistic level with her simple black gown and colorless cheeks.

The men of the Golden Globes fit right in with the reserved women. Very few men took up the challenge of the men's fashion gauntlet that was thrown long ago. Famous guys, as a breed, are boring. They each own about thirty tuxes, and each one is identical. Oh, excuse me, I forgot about the whole exciting single breast and double-breasted variations. Silly me. As mundane as the classic tux is, however, it is still a classic that no man looks bad in. Unless you pair the tux with a newsie cap like Billy Bob Thornton did, or you sport a bright red tuxedo ala John Cameron Mitchell.

The one look that the men do get a little crazy with is hair. Brad Pitt and Russell Crow both looked like hairy half-wildebeest half-mountain men. And I mean that in the least flattering way. David Arquette seems to be morphing into hairy Backstreet Boy Kevin - the artist formerly known as the Uni-Brower.

A few women spiced up the lackluster crowd in colorful creations. Some, such as golden girl Kate Hudson in a deep v-neck gold Versace gown, sparkled. While others, such as Sex in the City's Kim Cattrall created horrific visions of pumpkin slaughter in an orange halter dress and Calista Flockhart wore pink yet again. A stylist must have told her that pink makes you look a little less "on your death bed"-esque.

Giving props to UMass-pride, maroon was the big color of the rather bleak Globes, worn by several actresses, including Christina Ricci and Carrie-Ann Moss.

Best Crackwhore – Cameron Diaz. Crackhead, crackwhore... whichever term you'd prefer and would be less offended by - Cameron Diaz was it. Her maroon and sky blue striped strapless dress looked as if she had fished it from a Salvation Army clothing drive bin under the cover of darkness. Ugly doesn't even begin to describe her ensemble.

Best Dressed Australian – Cate Blanchett. Competition would normally be tough, but with a trashy looking Kidman and a furry Russell Crow, Blanchett in an elegant navy pinstriped Christian Dior pantsuit had no trouble clinching the title.

Best Black Dress – Jennifer Connelly. With so many of those black dresses sauntering around, the hue needed it's own category. Connelly looked timeless in a stunning yet simple long sleeved black gown with a white blossom pinned at the decolletage.

Worst Dressed – Sarah Jessica Parker. Why this women frequents the best-dressed list is beyond me, but her outfit – if it can even be called that – was truly hideous. Parker donned a black tulle tube top "thing" that hung down to her ankles over a pair of sequined black pants. Add a bizarre medallion and an overly bleached cheerleader bob, and you've got a disastrous outfit of Cher proportions.

The look of the Golden Globes? Dark colors, deep decolletage and castual pant suits. Can we get the glamour back, please? We've had enough of the mundane.

DOES ANYONE ELSE THINK LORD OF THE RINGS GOT ROBBED AT THE GOLDEN GLOBES?

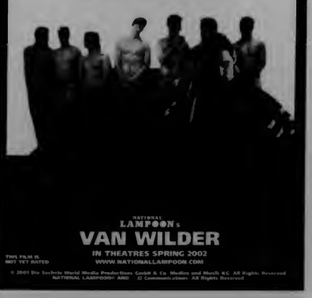
Welcome Back Students
Delivery hotline 549-0077
Newly Rennovated Sushi Bar!

CHINESE &JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923 • 256-8924
now accepting ocmp!

DESIGN SUPPLY
ART STUDIO
SUPPLIES
AT THE TOWN COMMON
65 SO. PLEASANT ST
AMHERST, MA 01002
20% ON ANY ONE ITEM
EXPIRES: 6/11/02
413•253•5592

Shear Bliss
Family Day Spa
253-2322 • 9 West Street • South Amherst
(on Rt. 116, Unisex, Warm, Inviting)
The Most Natural Acrylic Nail System I've ever seen in 20 years!
• No odor! •
(slight vanilla scent)
• Wearable! •
(your nails don't feel like they're in a crypt!)
• Strong and Beautiful! •
• Excellent Hand Nail Tech •
$5 off!
Ask For Kim

Mill Valley
E•S•T•A•T•E•S
"Apartment Deals"
•On Bus line
•Free Heat/hot water
•Washer/dryer hookups
•Indoor cats accepted
•Only minutes from campus
•Air conditioning
420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst • 253-7377
Equal Housing Opportunity



Tuesday, February 5th
4:00-6:30 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Celebration of Arts on Campus

This open house will feature a showcase of student talent as well as provide an opportunity for you to learn more about the Arts Council's grant funding opportunities!

For more information call us at 545-0202 or visit our website www.umass.edu/fac/artscouncil

MORE PRANKS THAN HELL WEEK

NATIONAL LAMPOON'S
VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM

Progression not found in Lostprophets

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

LOSTPROPHETS
thefakesoundofprogress
Visible Noise Limited

The UK is always looking for its big metal breakthrough. Not sure if it makes them livid that they've never had one, but man, do they ever want that killer metal act that will just decimate the US populace like Godzilla through Tokyo and bring the riches and respect back across the Atlantic. Pulka? No. Sona Tariq? Traid not. Raging Speedhorn? Nope. In fact, the only band to make an honest try so far (outside of lavish UK music press) was Nottingham's excellent Pitchshifter, who were never hyped as the next big thing but rather the always-good-thing, and who repeatedly failed to make a dent on US tours with the Deftones, Static-X, and Ozzfest.

Enter the Lostprophets from Wales. Unlike fellow Welsh strummer David Gray, who, like Coldplay, brought America to its knees with one song ("Babylon" and "Yellow," respectively), Lostprophets have no such single off their debut thefakesoundofprogress that's going to fill arenas. Their first stab, "shinobi vs. dragon ninja," is an admirable start, with a riff that means business, a pace that demands attention amongst current rock radio's stable of drawn-out pseudo-ballad trash like Staind and Nickelback, and a good does of feel-good emo in the Jimmy Eat World or Rival Schools ilk. Hey, it is the current big thing. It's the best Incubus single Incubus didn't write since...geez. "A Certain Shade of Green," and far superior to Incubus-lite offerings like Hoobastank and The Apex Theory that tread similar water.

It's a good song, like pretty much every song on the album (eleven, with no filler), but it doesn't have that. The album doesn't have that, either. It's not so bad you want to turn it off, but it feels so inconsequential, lacking any personality in the music. Some bands, like Alien Ant Farm, are very direct, saying: "we suck. We are insufferable crap," as they ride the gravy train out of sight. thefakesoundofprogress doesn't make it so easy; there's no cheesy '80s cover, no rock-bottom trend exploitation. It just floats along, occasionally hitting the listener with a great riff or a great melody, but never doing anything to escape its cage of mediocrity. That's a fate worse than death in the music scene, to be just OK, especially since nowadays you can get rich off being crappy.

So no, this album ain't gonna blow your socks off. They'll remain snug throughout the duration. But let's talk about what makes Lostprophets better than crappy. First, they've a good sense of humor, as the title of their first single sounds similar to X's silly Xrs. Monkey Kong album, and their own album name seems to grimly acknowledge their own lack of innovation. Second, they're not afraid to just shoot ahead and see where they end up. Many of the songs feel almost jam-like rather than meticulously planned, the band (Mike Lewis and Lee Glazz on guitars, Mike Chiplin on drums, Stuart Richardson on bass, and Jamie Oliver on turntables) dropping new sounds in at any time while Ian Watkins expands on a vocal line. This approach does create kind of a bloated feel at times, and a little snipping would create a much more forceful album, but the overall feel is endearingly open, with skillful short instrumentals between tracks introducing even more elements to chew on.

Third, they're not afraid to do what they want. Their hardcore growl is pretty convincing on "kobrakai," the lyrics are sweet and longing on "...and she told me to leave" and "for sure," so they like to keep the listener guessing. Incorporating so many elements from metal to turntables to emo at least shows they're following their own path, not catering to any specific crowd and certainly not the radio, although such a self-assured mix may well eventually lead them there.

Lostprophets better than crapp.

Gary Sinise's career at the Steppenwolf Theater in Chicago earned him a starring roll in Impostor. Lesson? Avoid the Steppenwolf.

Impostor impossible

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

IMPOSTOR
Directed by Gary Fleder
Starring Gary Sinise, Madeleine Stowe, Vincent D'Onofrio and Mekhi Pfeiffer

Impostor, the new nightscape sci-fi action-thriller, has one of those come-and-get-me titles that practically begs a movie critic to spin some self-descriptive pun from it. It takes great willpower to avoid giving in, and I sadly don't have that kind of willpower. So I'll just say it: Impostor is an...impostor, a fake amalgam of other, more beloved science fiction tropes.

The history of Impostor is actually more interesting than the final product. Adapted from a 1953 short story by the legendary Phillip K. Dick (whose work also inspired Blade Runner and Total Recall), the movie was first conceived as one third of an aborted anthology titled Alien Love Triangle. Executives at Miramax (and their genre-oriented daughter, Dimension Films) liked the footage director Gary Fleder (Don't Say A Word) shot so much, that they asked him to expand it into a full-length feature. Then several release dates came and went, and the movie wound up on the dusty slagheap of forgotten projects. Dimension finally released it, and watching the movie I became confused as to why the execs thought it was a good idea to turn Fleder's short into a 90-minute movie. Nothing in it convinced me that it was good, even at only 40 minutes.

Fleder and Co. obviously didn't intend it, but Impostor is also eerily prescient of current events. In 2079, Earth is deeply involved in a war with unseen aliens from Alpha Centauri, with much of the planet in shambles (major cities are protected with large, electromagnetic domes). Images of charred rubble at the beginning and scenes set in a desolate, ruined landscapes would've once brought up memories of post-apocalyptic thrillers of yore, but now bring up dread thoughts of Sept. 11; Orwellian slogans ("Victory at any cost") and a military state where personal freedoms are sacrificed for the greater good are also strangely similar to events that are happening now. I say all this because it may make some people uneasy.

Its use as a precognitive tool aside, Impostor is nothing more than an odorous B-movie dud. Gary Sinise plays Dr. Spencer Olham, an Oppenheimer-like scientist who's developed a weapon of mass destruction that can help aid the humans in the war. Olham is accused by CIA goon Hathaway (a stiff Vincent D'Onofrio) of being an alien assassin, a biological cyborg who's meant to think he's Olham and has a bomb in his chest that will coalesce and trigger upon meeting its target (funny, the individual parts of Impostor never coalesce but still it forms a bomb). Olham escapes vivisection, flees the city and hides in the outer zone, where he befriends a young "zoner" named Cale (Mekhi Pfeiffer, who put his molten glower to better use in last summer's O). Olham agrees to help Cale get much needed medication for the young man's community if Cale helps Olham back into the city to retrieve evidence of his humanity.

Impostor, with its neon-glow lighting, is generic in every possible way. Fleder's half-baked direction has created a direct-to-video-film that has somehow sneaked into theaters. Fleder has proved his credentials as a hack before, and here he can't even stage a coherent fight scene. His muddled direction and the choppy, headache-inducing editing of Arman Minasian and Bob Ducsay, make it impossible to figure out who is doing what to whom. The cinematography by Robert Elswit, all tilted angles and monochromatic blue lighting, makes things even murkier. The ludicrous screenplay is riddled with plot holes and doesn't effectively establish who Olham is (other than a loving husband and a brilliant scientist, both of which are stated rather than shown). With the exception of AI: Artificial Intelligence and The Matrix, there hasn't been a good sci-fi film for a couple of years (Mission To Mars, Red Planet, Final Fantasy, Wing Commander, The One, Planet of the Apes, Battlefield Earth — I rest my case.)

Fleder abandons his talented crew of actors. Tony Shalhoub, whose fourth-billed role is really a cameo, is smart enough to drop out quickly. Madeleine Stowe is forgotten as Olham's wife. Sinise is forced to carry the lead weight of this on his shoulders — I doubt this will remain on anyone's resume. The first new film of 2002 and there's only one-way to describe Impostor: it stinks.

Oscar race heats with a dud and a gem

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

THE MAJESTIC
Directed by Frank Darabont
Starring Jim Carrey and Laurie Holden

A BEAUTIFUL MIND
Directed by Ron Howard
Starring Russell Crowe, Jennifer Connelly and Ed Harris

Both films playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

December is, and always will be, the most highly competitive time for movies, for the sole reason of Academy Awards consideration. For some, the Oscars are only a pipe dream, as they fall short of lofty Academy standards. For others, the Oscars are a real possibility, as are placements on year-end best-of-lists. Studios try to capitalize and invariably run into the same road-block - there's no way to predict Oscar success.

The Majestic, a corny, would-be Frank Capra period fantasy, would have us believe it has viability because it is a sentimental, feel-good film. But this isn't sentimentality; it's syrup - a gooey, sticky glop that drowns everything in sugar. Like Pay It Forward, it demonstrates that just because a movie is nice, it doesn't mean it's going to be good. The Majestic is so sugary that diabetics should avoid it for fear of insulin shock.

Jim Carrey plays Peter Appleton, a minor Hollywood screenwriter who's celebrating the release of his first movie. But just as his newest project, intended to boost him into the A-list, is about to start production he's called before the House Un-American Activities Committee on suspicion of communism. Blacklisted from Hollywood, a drunk Appleton drives his car off a bridge into a river. He wakes on the bank with no memory of who he is or how he got there.

A kindly old man brings him into the town of Lawson to rest. Lawson has been grieving ever since the war, where it lost 62 of its young men. Harry Trimble (Martin Landau), the owner of the dilapidated Majestic theatre, recognizes Appleton as his missing son Luke. The town, which seems to be filled with folks who are nothing but folksy, embrace Peter as Luke and celebrate his return. Peter (Luke?) is skeptical of his identity, but the kindliness of Lawson's residents is seductive - as is Luke's lovely, equally skeptical girlfriend Adele (feature newcomer Laurie Holden, a fixture on "The X-Files"). Only a fool couldn't see where this is going.

The Majestic comes with an Oscar caliber background. This is director Frank Darabont's third film; his previous two movies, The Shawshank Redemption and The Green Mile, were both best picture nominees. Carrey, who has proven himself to be a remarkably subtle dramatic actor is deserving of an Oscar (though not in this role). But it's impossible to muster enthusiasm for a remake of a Hallmark card.

Darabont, Carrey and writer Michael Sloan, have repeatedly said The Majestic is intended to capture the feel of a Capra film. But Capra would never have made a movie this slushy. Darabont lulls on the feel-weight platitudes. The sloppy, tooth-rotting schmaltziness of the film is underscored by Mark Isham's overbearing score that swells with emotion every time someone speaks. The boney glazed cinematography of David Tattersall doesn't help.

Carrey gives a gentle but untrounded performance - it's sadly reactive rather than proactive. Holden shows real star potential. The Majestic stirs up its only real emotion in a climactic, if illogical, confrontation between Peter and the HUAC committee. Even then, a smart person can write it off as a result of post-9/11 patriotic fervor.

Ron Howard's moving, intelligent A Beautiful Mind has more potential for Oscar success. It's based on the inspiring true story of John Forbes Nash, Jr., a brilliant mathematician who fought off schizophrenia to win the Nobel Prize.

In all honesty, A Beautiful Mind is only inspired by the true story. Adapted from Sylvia Nasar's 1998 bio, the movie often plays loose with actual facts, condensing or eliminating real events. But if the movie doesn't retain fealty to the truth, it does still present one of the most harrowing and thoughtful looks at mental illness in cinema.

Russell Crowe is brilliant in his portrayal of Nash: this could be the best work of his career. Nash begins as a cocksure loner at Princeton in 1947, who shirks classes in his search for an "original idea" that will lend him notoriety. His discovery eschewed 150 years of previous thought and forever changed the way we thought of economic game theory (economists still use his findings to this day).

After becoming a reluctant teacher, Nash meets a beautiful student named Alicia (Jennifer Connelly, who should be launched onto the A-list) who is attracted to Nash and makes it her mission to get him to come out of his socially awkward shell. Nash is soon recruited by Department of Defense spook William Parcher (Ed Harris) to be a code breaker during the height of the Cold War. But the demands of his "job" and the constant threat of danger eventually begin to take their toll on Nash.

A Beautiful Mind, which oddly shares themes with those in Vanilla Sky and Mulholland Drive, is not a straight biography, but a drama about one man's heroic struggle with mental illness, and one woman's fight for her man. Crowe will get a third nomination for his performance, subtle and touching where other actors would veer over the top. Connelly is equally good, and will also be nominated. She's smart enough not to rely on her beauty, and gives a performance of stunning depth, heart and soul. The romance between Nash and Alicia is one of the most lovely of the year.

Howard is best known as a director of mainstream, blockbuster films. He has made good, serious movies before (Apollo 13), but he's come off a bad stint that includes the plastic Ed TV and the soulless, ugly How The Grinch Stole Christmas. A Beautiful Mind is his most complex, emotionally resonant film to date. A date at the Oscars would not be an ugly thing.

Seagate presents
transworldlive.com
TRANSWORLD

A 60 minute film compilation showcasing the latest in freeriding action from the producers of Kingpin Productions, Matchstick Productions, Standard Films, Teton Gravity Research, Treetop Films and Poor Boyz Productions

FREE SCREENING
JANUARY 31ST 8PM
TOP OF THE CAMPUS

BROUGHT TO YOU BY: UMASS CAMPUS ACTIVITIES OFFICE/SOMETHING EVERY FRIDAY

FREE TICKETS AVAILABLE THRU:
TIX UNLIMITED IN THE STUDENT UNION OR CONTACT THE UMASS CAMPUS ACTIVITIES OFFICE FOR ADDITIONAL INFO.

FREE TICKETS ALSO AVAILABLE AT THE TOP OF THE CAMPUS NIGHT OF SHOW

WIN THE ULTIMATE SPRING BREAK VACATION!
ROLL AROUND LIKE A ROCK STAR WITH 11 FRIENDS TO 5 MAJOR COLORADO RESORTS!!!

GET LOADED UP WITH TONS OF FREE GEAR, VIP LODGING, AND LIFT PASSES FOR EVERYONE!
SUPPORTED BY: TRANSWORLD SNOWBOARDING, FREEZE & STANCE MAGAZINES COURTESY OF COLORADO SKI COUNTRY, USA

Sponsored by:
U.S. AIR FORCE COLORADO BMG CLIF EA BIG SONY DVD Levi's

Amazons -vs- Convent head-to-head

By Michael Delano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

THE CONVENT
Directed by Mike Mendez
Starring Joanna Canton and Richard Trapp

Vs.

AMAZONS AND GLADIATORS
Directed by Zachary Weintraub
Starring Patrick Bergin and Jennifer Ruhin

Round One: Minutes of Life Brutally Ripped Away
The Convent: 79.
Amazons and Gladiators: 89.
Advantage: The Convent

Round Two: Feminism
Amazons and Gladiators: Speech condemning female slavery made by Amazon wearing an armored ballet top with battle-ready cleavage.
The Convent: Fellatio ends in bloodshed.
Advantage: The Convent

Round Three: Tastelessness
The Convent: Abortion performed to heavy metal music, nuns beaten with bats.
Amazons and Gladiators: Person mauled by a pack of dogs, entire concept and execution of film.
Advantage: Tie

Round Four: Actual Dialogue
The Convent: Character A: "Hey guys, this is Mo." Character B: "What's that short for, Mortician (hysterical laughter)?" Mo: "Are you a bulimic bitch?" Character B: Silence.
Amazons and Gladiators: Powerful gladiator, upon being informed he has an appointment: "That tedious old hag. I'd rather open a vein."
Advantage: The Convent

Round Five: Star Power
The Convent: Coolio.
Amazons and Gladiators: Forfeits in futility.
Advantage: The Convent

Round Six: Surprises You Wouldn't Guess From the Box
The Convent: Two people wrongly accused of being "haters."
Amazons and Gladiators: Ancient Amazon warriors enjoyed lip gloss.
Advantage: Tie

Final Round: Genuine Horror
Amazons and Gladiators: Murderous female Amazon swinging a mace tells her lover to "trust me."
The Convent: A statue of Jesus Christ, crucified, looks down from the cross and calls a character a "motherfucker."
Advantage: The Convent

Winner: The Convent

Aaliyah's life focus of poignant book

By Nikolas Markantonatos
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AALIYAH: MORE THAN A WOMAN
Christopher John Farley
Pocket Books

When twenty-two year-old R&B starlet Aaliyah Haughton passed away last year, her death took her fans by complete shock. The rest of the world wondered exactly who was this semi-superstar that caused grief and sorrow to her millions of fans.

In his book Aaliyah: More Than a Woman, Time music critic Christopher John Farley paints an extraordinarily accurate picture of the life of Aaliyah, a woman who was one of the greatest young talents of our generation.

The biography presents Aaliyah as a person who possessed an individual mystique, an appealing blend of sensuality, elegance, and hipness. Farley traces Aaliyah's life, from her birth in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn in 1979 to her emergence as a singing star in the 1990s and spends most of the biography meticulously outlining her significant impact in pop-culture.

By the time of her death Aaliyah had made a name for herself with two multi-platinum albums and a well-received movie role in Romeo Must Die. But she wasn't your run-of-the-mill star; she was a "trail-blazer." According to Farley, Aaliyah's first recording in 1994 titled Age Ain't Nothing But a Number, helped popularize neo-soul music. "Aaliyah was on the cutting edge of this movement," Farley writes. Teaming up with producer Timbaland for her 1996 sophomore album One in a Million, Aaliyah created yet another sort of sonic movement through Timbaland's "elusive, unpredictable" beats which other artists quickly emulated.

Although she was generally happy, the weeks preceding Aaliyah's death were apparently filled with stress, according to More Than a Woman. After months of grueling work in the studio and a welcome reception by critics (Aaliyah was one of the most critically lauded albums of last year), her third album debuted at No. 2 behind new artist Alicia Keys and the first single "We Need a Resolution" peaked at a disappointing No. 59 on the Billboard charts.

Aaliyah was under a lot of pressure to promote the album to sustain a long shelf life. In addition, she had the MTV Video Music Awards to prepare for, The Matrix, and a few more vocal overdubs to do for The Queen of the Damned.

After finishing shooting her video "Rock the Boat" on Abaco Island, Aaliyah boarded a twin-engine Cessna 402B at some point after 6:00 p.m. on August 25, 2001. Just after take-off, however, the plane went crashing down in a swamps area in the Bahamas. An interview that Farley conducted with the only known witness to the crash offered graphic details. According to Claude Sawyer, 25, the plane was only "60 to 100 feet" off the ground when it began to plummet. Sawyer, a fireman, recounted graphic details of the crash including how there was "fire in spots surrounding the site and some of the bodies of the victims were also on fire."

The book states the same problems that the media has already reported which may have caused the Cessna to crash: the plane was overloaded, the pilot, Luis Morales, may not have been qualified to fly the aircraft and was once arrested for cocaine possession (Morales' lawyer claims that the two latter claims did not cause the accident). Farley also states that Aaliyah may have died on her way back to her fiance Damon Dash. Annie Russell, the local driver who headed the crew of taxis working with the video crew, told Farley that she thinks, "based on a conversation Russell had with Gina Smith, the Blackground executive traveling with Aaliyah, that the young singer left the island to get back to Damon Dash."

Just before her death Aaliyah was planning the seeds for a successful career. She had finished shooting scenes from the Anne Rice novel, The Queen of The Damned, and had already signed on to star in the two highly anticipated sequels of The Matrix. But even more revelatory, according to More Than a Woman, Aaliyah was planning collaborations with such rockers as Beck, Jonathan Davis of Korn, and Trent Reznor of Nine Inch Nails. The tragedy of her untimely death is all the more poignant because of all Aaliyah had to look forward to, and all she had to offer.

Among other revelations, Farley claims that Aaliyah had recorded enough tracks to comprise a whole album worth of new material that the public hasn't yet heard, was planning to launch a fashion line with her best friend Kidada Jones, and was secretly planning on marrying Roc-a-Fella records CEO Damon Dash.

It's clear Farley didn't write this book to cash in on Aaliyah's death. A veteran music writer, Farley, who interviewed Aaliyah weeks before her death, seemed genuinely interested in the young life of the star. He knows his stuff and exquisitely speaks about each aspect of Aaliyah's life.

Aaliyah: More Than a Woman is a fascinating tribute to the life of this captivating performer. Like Farley wrote: "Aaliyah was building bridges: between hip-hop and R&B, between teen audiences and adult ones, between soul music and cutting-rock." The thought of what Aaliyah could have accomplished is the most chilling tragedy of all.

OCMP Off Campus Meal Plan

Rafferty's Sports Bar & Restaurant · Pizzeria Papa John's · Domino's Pizza · D.P. Dough Delivers Calzones · Subway · Antonio's · Amherst Deli Delivers · Newman Catholic Center · Amherst Wines · Pasta e Basta · Judie's · Big Y · Bananarama Authentic Frozen Yogurt · Friendly's · Charlie's Tavern · The Ground Round · Bruno's · Applebee's Neighborhood Grill & Bar · Greenough Sub Shop · The Pub · Chicago Pizzaria · Fitzwilly's · Amherst Brewing Company · La Veracruzana · Gotan · The Hangar Pub and Grill · Pizza Hut Delivery · Starbucks Coffee · Soup Bowl · Bueno Y Sano · China Dynasty · Dairy Mart · Bruegger's Bagel Bakery · The Black Sheep Cafe & Bakery · Panda East · Quiznos · Union Station · Fire & Water · The Lord Jeffery Inn · The Lemon Underground · Earth Food · The Sit Down Diner · House of Teriyaki · Bertucci's Brick Oven Pizzeria · Angelina's · Sylvan Snack Bar

Bringing you the best of UMass and beyond!
www.OCMPAmherst.com 1-888-211-6267

PHOTOS COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

What the hell?
Jack Black and Colin Hanks bookend a photo of those crazy Snow Dogs. Black and Hanks star in Orange County. Tom Hanks is Colin's father. He must be proud.

Marry me instead, Leopold!!!

Meg Ryan and Hugh Jackman star in the terminally cute Kate and Leopold. Our reviewer wants to marry Hugh Jackman. Suitors, take note.

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

KATE AND LEOPOLD
Directed by James Mangold
Starring Meg Ryan and Hugh Jackman

The other day a woman was complaining about the unlikelihood of Kate and Leopold ever occurring. I naturally assumed she meant that no man today would ever be as chivalrous and romantic as Leopold - apparently she was referring to the whole time-space continuum theory.

Was that a double take you just made? Yes. Hollywood's latest romantic flick bases its plot on the concept of there being a time-space continuum, and that with the right mathematical equation one could find the portal to enter another time. Sound a little weighty for a Valentine's date? Don't worry, it's not.

Without giving anything away that the movie previews already haven't, the story line is that a man finds the portal to late 1800's New York. When he returns to present day, Leopold, inventor of the first elevator, follows him back and is stranded in present-day New York City until the portal reopens in a weeks time. A romance with Kate, the downstairs neighbor, ensues, and life-altering decisions must be made by the movie's end.

From the plot synopsis, as well as from previews, the film appeared weak. However, it was actually quite good. The writing was fresh and eloquent, with witty zingers and romantic quips flying throughout the film. And romantic-comedy queen Meg Ryan played a charmingly harried and completely adorable Kate.

However, Hugh Jackman stole the film and (cue corny "aws") the hearts of women everywhere, with his dashing and chivalrous portrayal of Leopold. Jackman plays Leopold with the perfect balance of masculinity, sensitivity and sincerity - creating a romantic gentleman that no woman or man could find fault with. The role of Leopold could have easily been made ridiculous without the right touch of rugged machismo. He waltzes on rooftops, roams about town in a very fancy suit, and gives dating tips without the slightest hint of the effeminate.

Kate and Leopold also causes one to think on several levels. The discussion about a time-space continuum makes one wonder about the future possibilities of time travel, as well as the idea that our fates may not so much be predetermined as they are changeable through a simple twist of science.

And sigh! why, oh why, don't guys act like Leopold? Many of the men will say that feminism and women's lib killed chivalry. Feminism and women's lib is about equality and being able to support one's self. Chivalry was killed by a society that is more concerned with the "me" than the "we," and that is obsessed with lust rather than love. Where HAVE all the cowboys...and Leopolds...gone?

Bottom line - Check out Kate and Leopold for a great date movie. Or on second thought, hey Guys! You've got a little over two weeks until Valentine's Day. I suggest you head over to the movies (sans girlfriend) and take some notes on romance and chivalry. Trust me, what you can learn from this movie about how to treat a woman will be far more useful than that pesky Latin homework you should be doing.

■ LOTR

continued from page B10

Jar-Jar Binks CGI crash-and-burn.

As is the case with many literary adaptations, the screenwriters and director must choose which facets of the source material they are going to focus most on in the film, and here it is the visual elements. Tolkien's writing is such that literally no stone is left unturned in terms of description, and Jackson and his WETA digital effects studio have flawlessly recreated that rich tapestry.

Jackson's decision to shoot the entire film (and its two sequels as well) in his native New Zealand results in some of the most breath-taking natural scenery ever captured on film, and the country's roughly 3-to-1 currency exchange rate enabled Jackson to maximize the already eye-popping $270 million budget extended to him by New Line Cinema. This was clearly a situation where no expense was spared, literally or figuratively, and it shows in the film.

Whereas visually rich films like The Mummy Returns, What Dreams May Come and even Star Wars Episode I: The Phantom Menace were marred by obvious transitions between the real and the computer-generated, FOTR is a seamless blend of the two. It is so hard to spot where New Zealand's natural wonder ends and WETA's digital magic starts that even skeptics are forced to just sit back with wide eyes, and that is perhaps the grandest complement one can pay a movie with so much CGI in it.

As for shortcomings, there are a few. The score by Howard Shore is so repetitive that its central theme gets annoying at times, and Jackson's penchant for facial zooms and quick cuts during action sequences sometimes detract from his otherwise admirable direction. Fans new to Tolkien have also complained that the storyline is too complex, with too much name-dropping and not enough expository dialogue (the whole Gondor stewardship issue is never really explained, and becomes important in the subsequent installments). Lastly, the film's abrupt ending has left some viewers confused and/or disappointed.

But all things considered, these are very minor shortcomings for a three-hour film of this magnitude, especially since this is only the first part of a nine-hour-plus cinematic journey. As FOTR's box office numbers illustrate (it was approaching the $300 million mark at press time), this is a movie that will likely go down in history as one of, if not the, biggest fantasy film of all time.

And if the next two movies are anywhere near as well done as The Fellowship of the Ring, Jackson may just have crafted one trilogy to truly rule them all.

GENEVA CARR and LISA THARPS will be joined by
NINA BLACKWOOD, Original MTV VJ: January 30 - February 3
Mix 93.1's "The Morning Show" co-host KIM ZACHARY: February 6 - February 10

THE VAGINA MONOLOGUES
"A BONA FIDE PHENOMENON."
SIMPLY SPECTACULAR!
AN 'A'."

SPONSORED BY: THE UNION ACTS AND CONCERT BOARD/CCA
JANUARY 30 - FEBRUARY 10, 2002
FOR TICKETS, CALL (413) 788 7033
TICKETMASTER: (413) 733 2500
or visit www.citystage.symphonyhall.com
FREE Parking with ticket
CITY STAGE The Columbus Center - Springfield

Want to work for Arts? Watch this section for more information or just come to our office in the Campus Center Basement.

www.dailycollegian.com

University Studies Abroad Consortium
Your Gateway to the World

- Many programs offer Intensive Language Courses in Spanish, French, German, Basque, Thai, Danish, Hebrew, Czech, Italian and Chinese
- University credit
- Scholarships available
- Semester, yearlong and summer programs available
- Wide range of academic courses in small class sizes
- Enjoy field trips, excursions and optional tours

http://usac.unr.edu
email: usac@unr.edu

University of Nevada
USAC/323
Reno, NV 89557-0093 • 775/784-6569

ONE RING TO RULE THEM ALL

The Fellowship of the Ring moves under threatening skies.

Viggo Mortensen as Aragorn.

Elijah Wood as Frodo, he of the ring.

By Adam White
Collegian Arts Mgr

THE LORD OF THE RINGS: THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE RING
Directed by Peter Jackson
Starring Elijah Wood, Ian McKellen, Viggo Mortensen and Sean Bean

The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring has been met with every measure of praise that the critical mass can muster. It has been called epic (which, at three hours, it certainly is), classic, (in an otherwise thin genre, absolutely) and by some, the best film of the year.

Whether or not LOTR is indeed the cinematic heavyweight champ of 2001 depends just as much on the level of competition as it does on Peter Jackson's adaptation of the J.R.R. Tolkien literary behemoth. In that respect, such a grand comparison fails to do ample justice to just how good LOTR is. Jackson's film is so unlike any of 2001's other movies, so wholly unique to the cinematic offerings from this and practically any other year, that it must be judged on its own merits.

And there are plenty. LOTR is both sweeping and evocative, a rare film that thrills, charms and moves its audience without having to visibly shift gears. Rabid fans of the book can revel in Jackson's painstaking attention to the source material, while those new to Tolkien's world can jump right in and be swept away by the movie's majesty and pace.

For those not already steeped in the magic of Tolkien's work, the story of LOTR is relatively simple: an ancient lord named Sauron is trying to take over a mythical land known as Middle Earth. In order to complete his evil work, Sauron must recover his magic ring, which was cut from his finger and subsequently lost thousands of years prior when his last attempt at world domination failed.

Sauron's ring is now the property of Bilbo Baggins, who is from a race of halflings called Hobbits and lives in a peaceful corner of Middle Earth known as the Shire. Bilbo is persuaded by his wizard friend Gandalf to give the ring to his cousin and heir, Frodo, who is subsequently forced to flee the Shire with the ring once he learns of its true origin.

It is Frodo's journey that provides the central thread to LOTR, though a whole cast of characters that either help or hunt him along the way also provide a number of parallel plotlines to thicken the tale. Frodo is accompanied by three other Hobbits, and later takes up company with Gandalf, an elf named Legolas, a dwarf named Gimli and two humans named Boromir and Strider (later called Aragorn). The latter also happens to be an heir, though his entitlement is a large portion of Middle Earth (called Gondor) that his noble bloodline has been exiled from.

As for "bad guys," there is quite a formidable lineup. Nine "black riders," formerly human kings who were enslaved by other rings of power and turned into Ringwraiths, drive the protagonist from his homeland. He is also followed by Gollum, a creature who was once a Hobbit but was horribly deformed during his own possession of Sauron's ring. Every step of Frodo's journey is also closely watched by Saruman, a powerful and formerly good wizard who has since been bent to the will of evil by Sauron.

Jackson's casting is as close to perfect as any Tolkien fan could hope. Elijah Wood no doubt drove his Tinseltown stock through the roof by absolutely nailing the starring role; never before has so much post-movie banter referred to a male character as "beautiful." Ian McKellen brings perfect paternal warmth to the character of Gandalf, and Sean Bean is brilliant as a fierce warrior with an equally fierce weakness to the ring's power. Viggo Mortensen has his work cut out in tackling the incredible depth of the Aragorn role, but by the film's end he carries himself with the reluctant majesty necessary to do it justice.

The movie's villains are also portrayed brilliantly, from the shrieking terror of the Ringwraiths to the silver-tongued wickedness of Christopher Lee's Saruman. Most intriguing is Gollum, who is only shown in brief glimpses but looks marvelous as a completely CGI creation. With a lion's share of the screen time expected in the second and third installments, Gollum is a relief to those who were bracing for another

Turn to LOTR, page B9

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Contributing Writer

THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS
Directed by Wes Anderson
Starring Gets, Huckman, Angelica Houston and Ben Stiller

Zagat from Hell-fron King-send it best when he said, "There's one to carry family two in mine." Will in Wes Anderson's newest film The Royal Tenenbaums, there isn't just one of two; there are six. This modern day fairy tale is about a twenty-first century dysfunctional family whose members are funny, melancholy and sincere. Simply put, this is a complex comedy with complex characters, told in a simple, humorous way.

Royal Tenenbaum (Gene Hackman) married and had three children in lower Manhattan. When his children were young he and his wife Etheline (played by Angelica Houston) were separated and not divorced. Leaving his family behind, Royal left both the house and also the children in the care of their mother. The children turned out to be geniuses in three totally opposite fields: athletics, writing and business. Richie (Luke Wilson) was a tennis phenom who went pro at seventeen but had a professional meltdown at the age of 27. Margot (Gwenyth Paltrow) was a poetic child who cherished her privacy and began smoking at age 14. She is married to neuroscientist Raleigh St. Clare (Bill Murray) and spends up to six hours a day in the bathroom. Chas (Ben Stiller) as a child had a brilliant knowledge of finances and began breeding dalmation mice and selling them to a pet shop in Chinatown. He organized the purchase of his father's summerhouse where his father shot him with a BB, which was still lodged in his knuckles. Later he had gotten his father disbarred for practicing law in New York. He had recently become a widower and been left alone to take care of his two sons and had become over concerned with their safety. Eli (Owen Wilson) plays the kid next door, and though he is not a Tenenbaum he seems to have come across national notoriety by being associated with them.

After about thirty years of living in a penthouse in New York, Royal Tenenbaum is being evicted and decides that maybe he needs to change his life. In an attempt to catch up with his family, he feigns illness and gets invited back into the house by the youngest Tenenbaum Richie. With the help of Pagoda, the Tenenbaums' longtime housekeeper, he attempts to not only break up the budding romance between his wife and her first serious male suitor Henry Sherman, played by Danny Glover, but also to become the patriarch of his family again. So while he is laid up with supposed stomach cancer (meaning he's smoking, drinking, and eating hamburgers), he tries to become family again with his children and grandchildren. Eventually he is found out to be lying and is left with one last chance to mend his bond with his kids.

Now, trust me, my synopsis comes nowhere near the actual essence of the film. There are numerous sub-plots, flashbacks and other comic and story elements that would take too much away from the film, and out of context, they are just not that funny. But everything about this film has Wes Anderson's own brand of quirky humor. The laughs come almost every minute, and even when the mood turns somber, he is able to add in a one liner that finds a snicker in the crowd. The story is not one hundred percent linear (another reason why my synopsis would suck the life out of the film), but that takes into account his unique storytelling talent. In his last critically acclaimed film Rushmore, the film was broken up by a theater curtain and each month was treated as an act in a play. In Royal, the story is divided into eight chapters, a prologue, an epilogue and a cast of characters narrated in a matter-of-factly tone by the uncredited voice of Alec Baldwin. This serves as the way to transition from one chapter to another. Anderson's storytelling ability and development of characters flourishes in this, his junior film effort.

Anderson also makes directing look easy, adding the smallest detail to every scene so that the most observant viewer will be entertained and a viewer with wandering eyes will be

Turn to ROYAL, page B2

Black Hawk Down puts audience on front lines

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

Soldiers comfort the wounded in Ridley Scott's frighteningly accurate Black Hawk Down.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

BLACK HAWK DOWN
Directed by Ridley Scott
Starring Josh Hartnett, Ewan McGregor and Tom Sizemore

It's only a movie. It's only a movie. Keep telling yourself it's only a movie.

But it's not.

Black Hawk Down is not just a movie. Hollywood has finally learned that there's no war story like a true war story, and turned reporter Mark Bowden's book on the Battle of Mogadishu, Somalia into the best combat picture since Saving Private Ryan. Maybe even better, at least in terms of accuracy.

Somalia, 1993. The United Nations is trying to stop warlords from tearing apart the countryside. Food and aid shipments are interdicted by warlord Mohammed Farrah Aidid, creating a famine that kills thousands. Civil war kills more. United States troops are part of the UN relief force that goes in and tries to save the country. Upon hearing that a meeting between two top Aidid lieutenants is going on, US Army Rangers and other special forces are ordered to go in and arrest them.

Unlike their previous missions, this one will be during daylight, negating the American's technological advantages, such

Turn to BLACK HAWK, page B5

Globes: fashion faux-pas

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

If I were rich, and could afford to have a personal stylist, makeup artist, hairdresser, manicurist and masseuse named Fabian... would I show up to an awards show looking like a drowned rat? No, I think I can safely say that I would not. So, would someone please explain to me why in God's name the stars frequently arrive on the red carpet looking like they've been through hell and back?

But even worse – why do so many arrive dressed to the nines in the same old boring dress? Better to fail and look like a fool than to lack originality and look like everyone else in the same old strapless black dress.

This years Golden Globes were a model of mediocrity. Few stars attempted to break loose with interesting necklines or vibrant colors. Best Actress winner Nicole Kidman, who has long been a glamour staple in the award show circuit, became the poster child for the 2002 Golden Globes fashion blah-ness, that should be henceforth referred to as the Drab-black Globes. Kidman embodied the look in her strapless black gown with high front leg slit. She "spiced" up the look, by purchasing a dress with a bodice encrusted with silver specks. The ensemble left Kidman looking like a seventh grade girl who got into her dominatrix older sister's closet and makeup supplies.

Marisa Tomei followed the black gown trend in her asymmetrical strapless gown and Reese Witherspoon looked classic in a black lace spaghetti strapped dress. Though both looked

Turn to GOLDEN GLOBES, page B5

Cate Blanchett, Jada Pinckett Smith, Will Smith, their child, and Kate Hudson all styled and profiled at the Golden Globes. Unfortunately, they didn't do it very well.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
collegian_sports@yahoo.com 1.29.02 Sports Editor: Eric Soderstrom

UMass basketball

Midterm Report

By Justin Pearson/Collegian Staff

Students,

As you all return from your winter break with your Fall semester grades in hand, we here at The Collegian felt it was our duty to hand out some grades of our own. The men's basketball team has fallen on tough times as of late after an impressive 4-0 start. The Minutemen opened the Atlantic 10 schedule 0-3 for the first time since the 1988-89 season before knocking off Temple 63-53 on Jan. 19 at the Mullins Center for their first conference win.

But UMass will need to pick up its play over the final month of the season if it is to once again make a run for the conference title and earn itself a spot in the post-season. In order to do so a number of the usual suspects will need to redouble their efforts at both ends of the floor and play up to their potential. If they do so this team has a chance to get hot and make a run in the conference. But if they don't it could be a long and cold winter in Amherst.

Steve Lappas	BC	This is the third college head-coaching job for the New York City native and at each of his previous stops he has finished below .500 in his first season in charge. In order to avoid making it 3-for-3 he will need to find a regular rotation of players for the second half. Lappas has used five different starting lineups through the first fifteen games with nine players earning starts. Success comes with stability and only once he settles on an everyday lineup and rotation will Lappas begin to find success. However, you must remember that these are former coach Bruiser Flint's players. The true grade for Lappas will come next year when he has some of his own recruits in the Valley.
Shannon Crooks	AB	From day one Crooks has been the Minutemen's most steady hand and on floor leader, leading the team in scoring (14.6 ppg) and tallying 55 assists which ties him with Anthony Anderson for the team lead. He has also played a team high 519 minutes. The senior from Boston has also been the only member of the UMass backcourt to consistently get himself to the free throw line, but he will need to improve his paltry 61.4 percentage from the charity stripe if the Minutemen are to make a run in the second half of the season.
Anthony Anderson	BC	His grade also marks his best game of the first half. Anderson scored a career high 19 points as UMass nearly pulled out an improbable comeback at Conte Forum, eventually falling 80-78 to Boston College. In that game Anderson hit 5-of-9 from behind the arc but then proceeded to make just three of his next 27 before rediscovering his touch in a 95-86 loss at Fordham. Needs to create better shots for other guards and take pressure off himself at the point.
Kyle Wilson	C	Lappas can only hope that Wilson's performance against Temple (17 points 5-of-7 from three) was a sign of things to come and not an anomaly. The Canadian freshman was brought in for his ability to shoot the rock and he is just now starting to deliver. Will need to improve on the defensive end of the floor and continue to grow in confidence in the second half. So far he has shown that he has what it takes to play here, now he must go out and do it night in and night out.
Raheem Lamb	BC	After sitting out last season Lamb has stepped forward so far this year and been the most complete of the three candidates. He is averaging just under six points per game and has shown an ability to knock down short to mid range jumpers and slash to the hoop as well as being a stopper on the defensive end. He played a major role in holding Temple's Lynn Greer to just 8-of-24 shooting. Needs to increase his range as well as become more aggressive on the offensive end: a player with his tools should be taking more than five shots per contest.
Micah Brand	BC	Impressed everybody with a career high 23 points in the opener against Arkansas-Little Rock and has continued to do so up to this point. Second on the team in both scoring and rebounding, but has notched just two double-doubles (Marshall, George Washington). Needs to produce more down on the blocks as well as keep knocking down his jumper. Needs to become a bit tougher on the defensive end and become more of a force at that end of the floor. Is not playing to potential.
Kitwana Rhymer	C	Has struggled immensely since injuring his knee prior to the game at Boston College. Rhymer had 19 blocks in the first five games of the season but has had just nine in the last ten games. His offensive production has also suffered greatly as of late, scoring just 13 points in his last six games. The senior will need to rediscover his touch at the offensive end of the floor that saw him score more than 17 points a game over a three-game stretch in December. Rhymer leads the Minutemen with 91 rebounds but needs to become more active on the glass and return to the defensive intensity of the first five games of the season. Has the tools to be one of the best big men in the conference.
Eric Williams	AB	Most consistent of the UMass big men, coming off the bench and contributing six points and five rebounds per contest. Has shown the ability to score both inside and outside as well as activeness on the defensive end. The senior is also one of the most vocal members of the squad both on the floor and on the bench. Should continue to see 20-plus minutes in the second half of the season and if he can keep knocking down his jumper from the top of the key the Minutemen.
Jamed Pugh	C	Played just 13 minutes and scored only four points through the first seven games of the season and missed the team flight to Raleigh, N.C. for the game against N.C. State, earning him a spot in Lappas' doghouse. But he earned his ticket out with back-to-back double digit scoring days against Central Connecticut and Maine. Set a career high with 22 points in a loss to Fordham but he failed to score in nine total minutes in the next two games. Needs to become less of a defensive liability and maximize his athleticism on both ends of the floor to earn himself a permanent spot in the rotation.

NOTE: Players left off list earned I Incompletes.

Rebuilding time

Like it or not, UMass is there

ERIC SODERSTROM

When the Massachusetts men's basketball team lost to Patriot League kingpin Holy Cross on Dec. 4 that sometimes-dire feeling of reality began its slither toward the collective mind of the UMass hoop nation.

It was shocking when Steve Lappas lost for the first time.

He found a way to beat Oregon, 62-58, at the Springfield Civic Center back on Nov. 27. And he pulled out a 69-62 victory just four days later at North Carolina State, deep in college basketball's triangle of supremacy.

But fall to the Crusaders, inside the Mullins Center? That thought wasn't orbiting the wits of anyone around here.

After news of the Minutemen's win in Raleigh, N.C. hit the Valley, Lappas could have easily prevailed in any Western Mass. mayoral election.

But after the 67-56 lapse versus Holy Cross, everything didn't seem as certain.

Three of UMass' next four babies of basketball affirmed that caution. Barring their wild second half comeback against Boston College that fell just two points short, the Minutemen forced us to deal with the reality of roller coaster shooting percentages. Scoring only 21 points in the first half against BC and following with 37 in the second stanza, the Maroon and White began its uncomfortable ride of unpredictability.

In its 69-59 loss to UConn four days later, UMass shot 23-of-70 from the floor, including a horrid 1-of-18 from behind the 3-point line.

The Minutemen won its next two games over meager Central Conn. State and Maine squads, but still didn't show any signs of returning to the type of team they were back in late November and early December.

Marshall, St. Joseph's, Ohio State, Fordham and Richmond were all quick to exploit that, topping the Minutemen by a combined 66 points in a five-game stretch. In the St. Joseph's game, the Hawks went 14-for-15 from 3-point land, managed 16 turnovers and still beat UMass by 23 points in a record setting 63-38 final, the losing output was the Minutemen's worst ever in Mullins Center history.

Before the five straight losses, UMass still had a probable shot at an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament. Some people say it's not fair to look ahead, but really. What else is this about? Year in and year out, it's all about finding a way into the field of the never-apt 64.

And the way things started out for

Turn to CAUTION, page C2

COLLEGIAN PHOTO/COLLEGIAN

Steve Lappas and the Minutemen have struggled as of late, but are looking to rebound during their conference slate.

THE PATS' NEW PALACE

CMGI Field is one gigantic luxury box

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

FOXBOROUGH – The redheaded stepchild of the Boston sports community has finished out its final season of existence with a $525 million replacement looking over its shoulder.

Foxboro Stadium, originally Schaefer Stadium and then Sullivan Stadium, will be put out of its misery in due time and unlike the Boston Garden and, someday, Fenway Park, not one area sports fan will shed a tear at the loss. Not with the brilliance and beauty with which it is being replaced.

New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft took the long way from Foxboro Stadium to the site of his CMGI Field located just across the parking lot.

After a tough battle with the notoriously rigid Massachusetts politicians, Kraft signed a deal in November 1998 with Connecticut Governor John Rowland to play his team's home games in Hartford. The Patriots' owner changed his mind five months later and took virtually no money from the Commonwealth to help build a state-of-the-art facility right next to the old stadium.

The result is what National Football League Commissioner Paul Tagliabue has called the Camden Yards of football, referring to the way that ballpark reshaped the way baseball stadiums were built.

From day one, Kraft and fellow Patriots executives wanted the new stadium to have a look and feel that is distinctly New England. After seeing the plan in action, there is no doubt that the group accomplished its mission.

Fans will be beckoned by the beams of light from a mock lighthouse located at the stadium's main entrance. As they approach the gate, fans will pass under an old-style bridge that can only be described as Walden-esque. Along each side of the main entrance are wide access ramps that will allow fans to ascend to whatever level their seats are located with ease.

The general admission seats will not change, in number at least. There are roughly 60,000 seats at Foxboro Stadium, a number that will be equaled at CMGI. The difference, however, will be in the club seating and luxury suites. Six thousand seats between the 20-yard lines are available only through 10-year commitments at between $3,750 and $6,000 per year.

Another two thousand fans will be seated in the 80 luxury boxes located behind the reserved seating section. Like the club seating, luxury boxes also require a 10-year commitment and include year-round availability to the businesses that rent them. Companies may hold banquets, important meetings, or wine and dine an important business partner any day of the year.

Unlike the old stadium, CMGI has a specific seat for everyone with a ticket. Of the 60,000 seats in Foxboro Stadium, 53,000 are on benches without backs. CMGI Field has a chair back seat – with cup holder – for every Pats fan. The average seat width at the new stadium is more than two inches wider than the bench space given to patrons at Foxboro (19 inches to 16.5 inches) while club seating will allow for even more room at 21 inches wide.

Along with the added comfort of a backrest and improved seating room, other improvements will reduce the strain on fans' eyes, necks, and ears. The Patriots will have two giant video boards in the stadium that are of high definition. Fans will not be required to do as much squinting in CMGI because of the extra screen and gigantic size of each (48 feet by 27 feet).

The seating situation at Foxboro has strained plenty of necks in its 28-year existence. Many of the benches are placed in tough angles for the fans to see the action, sometimes pointing toward a corner of the field, but every one of CMGI's seats have a bird's eye view, looking squarely at the 50-yard line.

The public address system at Foxboro had two volumes during Patriots games: hushed whisper and insanely loud. The fans seated near the single point sound system would feel their ears ringing for hours after the game, while virtually everyone else in the stadium heard the announcements as nothing more than a murmur.

The sound system at CMGI is of the highest quali-

Turn to CMGI, page C6

caution

continued from page C1

the Minutemen, predicting a tourney bid started to look like a respectable hypothesis. But as several teams prove every season, UMass isn't all it was made out to be. Here's why.

Lappas is a rookie in Amherst. Only two of his players (Kyle Wilson, Brennan Martin) are his recruits. It's tough implementing a new system with players that weren't handpicked to be a part of it.

The perimeter consists one only one senior, Shannon Crooks. Wilson, Anthony Anderson and Raheim Lamb are all in their Division I hoop premier, and in a game now dominated by guards, they must be near perfect almost every night to thrive at this level.

A clutch shooter has yet to evolve. Wilson is the most likely candidate and has shown many signs of becoming that guy, but he's still a freshman and his confidence level still isn't where it needs to be to become a go-to-guy down the stretch. The new offense entails that a shooter be present. And Anderson and Crooks can't be asked to each connect on three tries a game. Their game is better from inside the arc.

Kitwana Rhymer and Micah Brand have disappeared. In the first four games, the two big guys dominated. Lappas could depend on Rhymer for game-changing defense and Brand always seemed ready to contribute in the clutch. But things are different now. Rhymer's knee still might be hurting from his injury in mid-December, but an excuse can't be found for Brand. His numbers aren't horrible, but he is yet to build on his success in the early goings.

All of this isn't saying that UMass doesn't have a chance to make a run come Atlantic 10 tourney time and sneak its way into the post season. Because the Minutemen have shown that it can play some pretty good ball. In its 63-53 streak-breaking win over Temple on Jan. 19, UMass connected 11 times from behind the arc and controlled things for the entire 40 minutes.

But remember, after that loss the Owls were a mere 6-10.

It's the phrase fans hate to hear, but it's true. The Minutemen are rebuilding. If they make something happen in the conference, then it's an added bonus. Right now, it's a step-by-step, deal with bumps in the road process. And they are headed in the right direction. The kids Lappas is bringing in next year can play. Plus, Anderson, Wilson and Lamb will all be a year older.

So, if you can wait. Then wait, it'll be worth it. But if you can't, don't give up all your hope. After starting last season 2-9, UMass somehow found its way to the A-10 finals. And that was with Bruiser at the helm.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist

GERALD LINC/COLLEGIAN

Despite struggling early on, Kyle Wilson is now beginning to find his shot.

Since 4-0 start, Minutemen have taken a wrong turn

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been a rocky road for the Massachusetts men's basketball team since The Collegian last went to print. Gone is the euphoria from a 4-0 start that put the Minutemen on the verge of their first national ranking since 1998. However all that was just wishful thinking as the Minutemen (8-8, 2-3 Atlantic 10) proceeded to lose their next three including a home loss to UConn and a heartbreaker at Boston College.

That's where we left you, with the Minutemen reeling at 4-3 and in desperate need of a spark. That spark came in the form of 6-foot-10 senior Kitwana Rhymer for the first two games of the winter break. On Dec. 15 against Central Connecticut Rhymer single-handedly carried the Minutemen to a 64-49 victory with 24 points and 15 rebounds, both of which are season highs for the big man. He followed that up with 16 points and five boards in a 78-60 victory over Maine. Micah Brand added 17 points and seven boards in the win that saw UMass head into the locker room up only one before putting it out of reach in the final eight minutes of the game.

Once again things were looking good for the Maroon and White and with the start of the conference schedule just around the corner, few could blame Steve Lappas and company to be happy at 6-3. Little did he, or anybody for see what the future held, namely a five-game losing streak that would see the Minutemen open the A-10 0-3 for the first time since the 1988-89 season.

The losing streak would start in the backwoods of Huntington, W.V. as the Minutemen fell 81-66 to Marshall. Anthony Anderson who had hit seven of his previous 21 three-pointers, was 0-for-10 from behind the arc while Rhymer was held scoreless for the first time since a 68-64 loss at Marquette last October. The Herd was led by guard Ronald Blackshear, a transfer from Temple, who poured in 26 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

Things only got worse seven days later for the Minutemen when they were embarrassed on their homecourt by St. Joseph's, losing 63-38. UMass hit just 27 percent of its field goals and turned the ball over 19 times en route to posting the lowest point output of a UMass squad in Mullins Center history.

Four days later the Minutemen were back in action, taking on Ohio State in their final non-conference tilt of the season. For the second straight game UMass failed to score 20 in the opening half and went into the locker room down by 10. The Maroon and White were able to cut into the Buckeye lead in the second half, but never got within five and eventually lost by eight, 70-62.

Shannon Crooks paced the Minutemen with 22 with Micah Brand added 15 off the bench. Coach Lappas benched four of the five starters from the loss against St. Joe's but it was all for naught as Boban Savovic dropped 19 points and Brian Brown scored 17 for Ohio St. in the victory.

This put the Minutemen at a crossroad of their season. For the first time they found themselves at .500, and with the A-10 schedule about to begin in earnest, a quick change of fortune was in order.

However, it was not to come in the Bronx as Fordham, a team that UMass had beaten their last three meetings by a combined 65 points, ran the Minutemen out of the building, winning 95-86. Crooks' season-high 24 points and Jameel Pugh's career high of 22 points were not enough to overcome the Rams who hit better than 50 percent of their shots from the floor and outrebounded the Minutemen 55-38. Adrian Walton scored a career high 25 points while Duke Freeman-McKamey (15 points 15 boards) and Smush Parker (19 points 10 boards) each notched double-doubles.

The Minutemen fell to 6-8, 0-3 in conference just a few days later, dropping a 63-54 decision in Richmond. The panic button had officially been pushed and the Minutemen switched into crisis mode. They returned home in need of a lift, a less than thrilling proposition considering that John Chaney and the arch rival Temple Owls were waiting for them.

It was on this day, against one of the toughest defensive teams in the nation that freshman Kyle Wilson chose to have his coming out party. The young Canadian scored a career high 17 points and hit five threes to pace UMass to a 63-54 victory. UMass led throughout the contest thanks in large to the defensive efforts of Shannon Crooks (17 points) and Raheim Lamb who held Temple's Lynn Greer to just 8-of-24 shooting on the afternoon.

On the crest of the win over Temple, the Minutemen looked to make it two in a row and did on Wednesday night with a 73-60 win over George Washington at the Mullins Center. Brand and Rhymer were each able to dominate the undersized Colonials, scoring 31 points and grabbing 14 boards between them. UMass continued to be red hot from the perimeter as well, making 8-of-15 threes, including three in a row at the end of the first half that turned a four-point GW lead into a five-point UMass advantage at the break. From there the Minutemen never looked back as they led the entire second half to pick up their second consecutive conference victory.

So sitting again at .500 at 8-8 with 11 games left in the regular season the Minutemen look to have turned yet another corner in their season. Now only time will tell if they will continue down this path or once again be pulled off into a completely new direction.

The best and worst in college hoops

The Dr. breaks it down for you

College Basketball has hit its proverbial midway point and with the NCAA Tournament now just a little over a month away, I'll take a look at some of the startling teams and players in the 2001-2002 season and give you my four No. 1 seeds if the NCAA tournament were to start today.

Number One Seeds

Duke – This team reminds me of the video game Duck Hunt. Stay with me on this one. In the game Duck Hunt, the first couple of levels are typically easy with the dog hiding in the grass looking all happy and giddy when you senselessly kill a couple of animated ducks. The first half of Blue Devil games are more or less the same way: this team toys around with its opponents to make them feel like they are actually in the game.

Then in the second half, as much as it is in the later levels of Duck Hunt, the Blue Devils show their true colors. They throw teams into the trashcan as their level of play increases. By the end of the game, they resemble the dog in the higher levels of Duck Hunt as you start missing the target; he just starts laughing at you because you thought you actually had a chance against them: I hate that damn dog.

Kansas – Roy Williams' team has a good possibility of playing for a national championship (yeah, how many times have we heard this about the Jayhawks before they crumble). Drew Gooden might be the best player in the Big 12 as his average of 20.4 points and 11.8 rebounds makes him a candidate for All-America honors. Helped in the frontcourt by Nick Collison (15.1, 8.1) and the backcourt tandem of Kirk Hinrich and Jeff Boschee (13.9, 13.3 respectively), the Jayhawks pose an inside-outside combination not seen on that team since the days of Jacques Vaughn and Raef LaFrentz.

Maryland – The only team that I think has a legitimate shot of beating the Blue Devils. Juan Dixon was held to just 2-for-9 from the field the first time the two teams met and was a non-factor. However, Gary Williams' team might pose the problem that can get to Duke: an inside post presence. Lonnie Baxter had 24 points and eight rebounds and Chris Wilcox had 14 points when the two teams met in Durham on Jan. 17. If those two can get going with the help of a strong game from Dixon, it could lead to problems for the Blue Devils.

The only other problem the Terps have has nothing to do with talent. They blew a 10-points lead at home in the last 50 seconds last year and then proceeded to let a 22-point first half lead in the Final Four slip away. Duke is in their head and unless they get them out, they will be the bridesmaids to Duke again.

Cincinnati – With all due respect to Florida, The Bearcats have won 17 in a row after losing their first game of the season to Oklahoma St. Not only are they winning, but they are winning with ease, with victories in all 17 games coming by at least double digits. The backcourt of Steve Logan (21.5 points per game) and swingman Leonard Stokes (13.4 PPG) have put teams away early and then the hammer known as Donald Little (1.5 blocks a contest) pounds them into submission. The Bearcats are off to a great start, but they are also not used to the NCAA Tournament, as they have made just one Final Four appearance since coach Bob Huggins has been there (1992, lost to Michigan in the semifinals).

DAVE ROSE

Coach of the Year – Bobby Knight, Texas Tech – C'mon now, you didn't really expect Knight to go into a new situation and lose. Apparently the message got to his team as they are 14-3 as of Jan. 21 with the now, dare I say, mellowed Knight guiding his team to the kind of start that many around the nation thought would be impossible. He has brought a team who lost all but nine games last year and made them grow up in a hurry. Sophomore Andre Emmett has led the charge averaging 17.9 points per game including 32 in a win over Oklahoma St. Many would be happy with a performance like that, but Knight wasn't.

"When you're 80, you'll still be waiting for Emmett to mature," Knight said after that game.

That is what Knight has brought to this team; his fiery passion for the game and the knowledge that they can't accept what they did in the previous game – they can get better with time. With all of this, Knight also deserves credit for a stat you thought you would never see this late into the season: zero technical fouls.

Player of the Year – Jason Williams, Duke – He is like Randy Moss in a way. Moss said he plays when he wants to play. Williams plays hard all the time, but when he really wants to play, there is nobody in the nation that is better than him. He is averaging 21.9 points per game, but his real moment of trepidation came after the Florida State game.

He went 0-6 from the line and Duke lost for the only time this year. After the game, Coach Mike Krzyzewski stripped the locker room of its nameplates and chairs saying his team did not deserve to have their names in a Duke locker room. Ever since then, the only thing Williams has been doing is stripping teams of the ball and their pride, including a 34-point performance against Maryland. All it took was a wake-up call for Williams to REALLY play and the rest of the nation can thank the Seminoles for waking this sleeping giant.

COURTESY UNC MEDIA RELATIONS

Matt Doherty and the North Carolina Tar Heels may prove to form the worst team the school has ever seen.

Most Valuable Player – Mike Dunleavy, Duke – There is a difference between player of the year (best player in the country) and most valuable to their team. Most people feel that the day Duke knew it could gain its second straight title was the day it found out Dunleavy put on 20 pounds during the off season. He was a toothpick with mad skills his first two years. Now that he has added the weight, he has taken some of the weight off of Williams' shoulders and has become a nearly unstoppable player, averaging 17.9 points and 6.9 rebounds per game. He, more so than Williams, provides a match-up dilemma for opposing teams with his 6-foot-9-inch frame and long arms that makes it nearly impossible to block his shot. While Williams might be the player that is almost a consensus player of the year, I think the one player that Duke can't lose is Dunleavy.

Biggest Surprise Team (Good or Bad) – North Carolina – I never thought I would see the day I would say this, but here goes nothing: This team is about as attractive as Joan Rivers. Translation: Ugly with a capital U. When you lose to Davidson and Hampton and almost lose to SUNY-Binghamton, you know that this is not going to be your year. Matt Doherty was in a no-win position with the losses of Joseph Forte and Brendan Haywood to the NBA draft and Julius Peppers and Ronald Curry to the NFL Draft – his main scoring threat is Kris Lang. When he is your No. 1 option, it usually spells disaster. This team could be labeled as the worst in UNC history by the end of the year, which will only make the players that are coming back only that much more motivated to turn it around.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY UNC MEDIA RELATIONS

Michael Jordan: Dr. David Rose's Comeback Player of The Year.

The NBA's best in show, so far

DAVE ROSE

The NBA has reached its halfway mark and with it has come a lot of surprises, except for the Eastern Conference, which we all knew played second fiddle to the much powerful Western Conference. Now come the always entertaining mid-season awards. I will try my best to get them right because the editors of The Collegian have Shaq standing over me waiting to take my head off if they feel that I make any wrongdoings with my selections.

Luckiest Player on the Face of the Earth – Brad Miller, Chicago – Let's see, he and Charles Oakley are fouling Shaq endlessly during a game in January, Shaq can't take the cheap fouls anymore and turns into Robocop. And the first thing he sees, he will take out. I met Miller, who just moves his head out of the way of Shaq's ill-fated right hand. If that punch had landed, search teams would still be looking for Miller's head because who knows how far it would have gone.

Unluckiest Player on the Face of the Earth – The next person who passes off O'Neal, because I have a feeling that he will not miss again.

Surprises of the Season – New Jersey Nets – Who would have known that the Eastern Conference, which is bad at best, would be turned upside down by a team with the grand total of zero division titles in the NBA. Jason Kidd has turned a team of losers last season into the East's best team record wise. He has averaged 13.8 points, 7.1 rebounds and 10.1 assists as of January 22.

Keith Van Horn and Kerry Kittles, who have spent more time injured the last two years than on the court have stayed healthy for the most part averaging 15.8 and 12.8 points, respectively. While second year player Kenyon Martin might have earned the label as enforcer because of his two unneeded elbows to Karl Malone and Tracy McGrady, his speed and deception has been the perfect compliment to Kidd on the break. With the Eastern Conference as bad as it is, this is a golden opportunity for the Nets to go far into the playoffs.

Washington Wizards – O.K. I must admit, I had doubts about whether MJ should have come back, but now the Wizards have more wins already than last year. While I still do not agree with him coming back and even though he is 105th out of 113 players in field goal percentage, Jordan has taught this team how to win. However, if Jordan is the leader of the pack, than Richard Hamilton might be the MVP of the

Turn to NBA page C8

A Message From–
Parking Services
Please visit Parking Services' website at www-parking.admin.umass.edu for futher parking information
Welcome Back Students — Please Park Smart
Avoid ticketing and towing – please do not park in employee lots! The University community appreciates your parking cooperation
Valid Umass parking permits are required in all parking lots Monday through Friday between the hours of 7 am and 5 pm (unless otherwise designated as a reserved space or a 24-hour enforced lot). Parking meters are enforced for payment Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm.

6 Barbers
Unisex Hair Styling
Amherst Barbers
Tel. 253-1722
40 Main Street, Amherst, MA
(Next to Newbury Comics)
Hours:
Mon-Fri. 8-5:15 Sat 8-3:45
Proprietors Jim Reed and Terri Loncrini
$10 and up
Salon Products:
AMERICAN CREW
KMS
Appointments Not Necessary

CLICK ON BOOKBUNDLE.COM
AND SAVE A BUNDLE ON ALL YOUR TEXTBOOKS!
We know that buying textbooks isn't fun. We don't claim that we can change this. However, we do offer a relatively quick and painless process while saving you as much money as humanly possible.

Northeastern surprising Hockey East

MATT BRADY

While their campuses remained dormant for winter break, the schools of Hockey East took to the ice for a crucial stretch that, for the most part, would make or break their seasons and set up the conference playoffs. Make or break, nearly every team saw pivotal opportunities in the month of January.

Huskies show their bite

Coming into the break, Northeastern once again looked to be the team that couldn't quite make it to the next level in the conference, but would certainly be one of those teams that nobody wants to play. As of late, the Huskies have shown more of the latter, going on a five-game unbeaten streak (4-0-1) in conference including momentous wins over Maine and Boston University, and a weekend sweep of then No. 5 Lowell.

Just what has happened to Bruce Crowder's troops? Well, for one, rookie Kent Gibson has been handed the reins between the pipes and has been more than stellar since appearing on the scene. A 1.91 goals against average and .929 save percentage has many people thinking twice about casting their top goaltender ballots for Cam McCormick of UML (though McCormick still has an unreal 1.10 GAA). Over the Huskies' hot streak, he has played all five games, allowing only seven goals on 153 shots, an astronomical .954 save percentage.

Also, the steady play of fearless leader Jim Fahey on the blueline is nothing to scoff at. In the five-game stretch, Fahey had three goals and two assists and was plus-three, including four points in the weekend sweep of the River Hawks. Fahey continues to be the top scoring defenseman in Div. I.

COURTESY HOCKEY EAST MEDIA

Jim Fahey and the Huskies have proved their toughness in Hockey East.

Northeastern will need to continue to get balanced scoring unless Gibson is able to stand on his head for the rest of the year, but considering what he's done so far, that's not entirely out of the question.

On the other hand...

Losing two games to Northeastern was quite a tple for the River Hawks, who entered the weekend of Jan. 18 third in the country and came out on the other side at No. 7. Lowell is still one of the top teams in the conference, but has shown signs of weakness this month, including a 2-2 tie to eighth place Merrimack on Jan. 8.

Just what has gone wrong for UML? Well, it has become apparent that Jimi St. John is not as dependable as super-goalie McCormick, as St. John allowed nine goals in the two games against the Huskies, dropping his record on the year to 3-4-0 and his save percentage to a woeful .846. Lowell's talented defense is wasted as long as St. John is allowing first shots to find the back of the net.

Ed McGrane, Laurent Meunier and Yorick Treille have been solid at forward for the River Hawks, but have not proven that they can overcome a poor defensive performance to take a key game for the most part. Lowell could be in for some trouble during the Winter Olympics as well, as Meunier, Treille and fellow countryman Baptiste Amar will all be missing action while they play for France in the upcoming games.

Wildcats back on top

Following a two-game sweep of Massachusetts, New Hampshire is back on top of the conference and moved up to No. 2 in the national polls. UNH's offense is second to none, averaging just shy of five goals per game this season, tops in the country. Leading the way for the 'Cats is Hobey Baker hopeful Darren Haydar, who has turned it up this year following what was, in many people's eyes, a subpar 2000-01 campaign.

Haydar has abused goaltenders with reckless abandon this year, as he leads the country with 53 points and 31 assists in just 23 games, a remarkable 2.30 points per game. He is also second in the nation with his 22 goals, just one behind Mark Hartigan of St. Cloud State. Alongside freshman linemate Sean Collins, who is the top scoring freshman in the country, UNH's top line may be the best in the nation. That, combined with a formidable number two line centered by Colin Hemingway, is a scary thought as UNH sets its sights on a national title.

Starting goaltender Matt Carney is out for a few weeks following an injury sustained in a 4-3 loss to Providence, but Michael Ayers has shown well in relief, stopping 50 of 52 shots in the two-game sweep of the Minutemen. He will be relied on heavily during the stretch run, but if any offense in the country can cover for bad goaltending, UNH's can.

Terriers up the ante

The most heated rivalry in Hockey East is certainly Boston College and Boston University. The cross-town rivals despise each other, and every series between the two teams is high tension. But BU's sweep of the Eagles on the weekend of Jan. 18 saw a pair of teams headed in different directions.

The Terriers allowed only two goals in the set, moving them solidly into the top four in the conference. Sean Fields earned Defensive Player of the Week honors for his efforts, turning away 57 of 59 shots. He has been spectacular as of late, putting up a 6-0-1 record and 1.98 goals against average in his last seven games. The Terrier defense, anchored by seniors Pat Aufiero and Chris Dysnent, alongside freshman Ryan Whitney, has been tremendously solid for BU, who is second defensively in the conference, both in Hockey East games and overall.

On the other side of the pack, Jerry York's squad is a struggling bunch. Following their National Championship run and the loss of some of their most talented underclassmen, the Eagles have lacked depth and a slide has left them below .500 and sixth in the conference. York dressed only 16 skaters in the second game against BU, and has been without sophomore standout Ben Eaves for weeks, who broke several ribs while playing for Team USA at the World Junior Championships. Things could remain ugly for BC, but don't count the team out come playoff time.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY HOCKEY EAST MEDIA

Northeastern toyed with Lowell's Jimi St. John in two wins over the River Hawks.

■ struggle

continued from page C10

but it brought UMass' goal scoring inadequacies to the forefront.

The Minutemen managed only four goals in a home and home series against the worst defensive team in Hockey East, Merrimack has allowed a league worst 56 goals in 14 conference games.

But instead of taking advantage of a usually porous blueline, UMass continued its theme of making mediocre goalies look unbeatable.

The top scoring line of junior wing Tim Turner and rookies Greg Mauldin and Craig MacDonald shined as each garnered a goal and two assists on the weekend.

But ineptitude reigned throughout the remaining trios, as no other forward managed a point against MC goalies Joe Exeter and Jason Wolfe. Exeter turned away 30 shots in the 3-3 tie in Andover, while Wolfe made 30 saves in a 2-1 overtime victory at the Mullins Center.

UMass had yet another chance to redeem itself just a week later, but the road would be much rockier as a home and home series with third ranked New Hampshire loomed.

An upset was not in the cards however as the Minutemen were dealt two consecutive whitewashes (5-1, 6-1) at the hands of the Darren Haydar-led Wildcat attack.

"I thought we played well on Friday night, but we broke down when we couldn't afford to break down," Cahoon says. "We took a penalty and they capitalized. Then on Saturday we just didn't play well at all."

Haydar showed why he is the Hobey Baker frontrunner with three goals and four points on the weekend, all but quelling UMass' fading playoff hopes.

The dimming began with a 4-3 overtime loss to BC in early January and continued with the disastrous quad of contests with the Warriors and Wildcats. The Minutemen managed to erase a three-goal deficit against the Eagles, only to surrender a Jeff Giuliano goal in overtime.

Freshman stopper Tim Warner started his expectation-laden rookie campaign with a few shaky outings but has come on lately with 35 saves in the overtime loss to the tenth-ranked Eagles and an equally impressive performance against then top-rated St. Cloud State.

"He's young," Cahoon exclaims. "He's been inconsistent. When he's been good he's been really good and other times he hasn't played so well.

"Timmy understands he has to be more consistent."

The talented rook stifled 39 shots in a 5-1 loss to the second most efficient offense in the nation.

Warner's fortunes took a turn for the worse in his third start of 2002, a 6-1 loss at New Hampshire. The Wildcats, the top offensive team in college hockey, do not need much help scoring goals. But shaky play on Warner's part in the opening minutes led to an early UNH lead and a deficit for a team that is getting all to used to playing catch up.

"He saved some goals on some glorious chances," said Cahoon of his freshman stopper's performance. "But there were a couple goals that I think if you asked Timmy, he would say he should have stopped them."

"The early goal killed us though," Cahoon reiterated. "That must be what, the tenth time we've let up an early goal this year?"

Actually Josh Prudden's goal 52 seconds into last Saturday's UNH debacle marked the 12th time in 24 games that the Minutemen had allowed a goal in the first five minutes of play and the fourth time UMass has surrendered a goal within the first minute.

"It is a real issue that we have to deal with," remarks Cahoon. "It's a combination of things both mental and physical but we have to get past it."

Throw low scoring and slow starting in a blender and you've got an ulcer with a twist. After a 2-1 start in conference and a 6-6 jump overall, the Minutemen's inept scoring touch and early game snooze button have dropped them into the catacombs of Hockey East and national anonymity.

"We've got a long way to go," Cahoon said clearly vexed after the bus trip back from Boston. The road ahead is long and it certainly doesn't get any easier.

You just won nothing.

MERCHANTS
RENT·A·CAR
GRAND RE-OPENING
JANUARY 28-FEBRUARY 1
WE'VE MOVED TO
50 RUSSELL STREET (RTE 9)
HADLEY, MA 01035
Phone: 413-582-6130
Fax: 413-582-6129
e-mail: northamptonma@mrac.com
~Under 25 Welcome~
~Cars, Trucks, Vans~
~MHEC Approved Vendor~
~Insurance Replacement Rentals Available~
Toll Free Reservation Line
1-866-TRVL-CAR
1-866-878-5227
Visit us on the web at WWW.MERCHANTSAUTO.COM

FUTONS FOR EVERYONE
MATTRESSES · FUTONS · BEDS · ETC
'THE ALBANY OAK'
Dark Oak Open Arm
'THE BROWNSTONE'
Medium Oak & Black Wrought Iron
'THE NEWPORT'
Kiln-dried Unfinished Spruce
'THE NEW YORKER'
Tubular Black Metal Open Arm
FREE! SOLID COVER W/ FUTON & FRAME
SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES · FUTONS · BEDS · ETC
328 College St., Rt. 9 Amherst
(413) 253-BEDS (2337)
BOUTIQUE STUFF BARGAIN PRICES

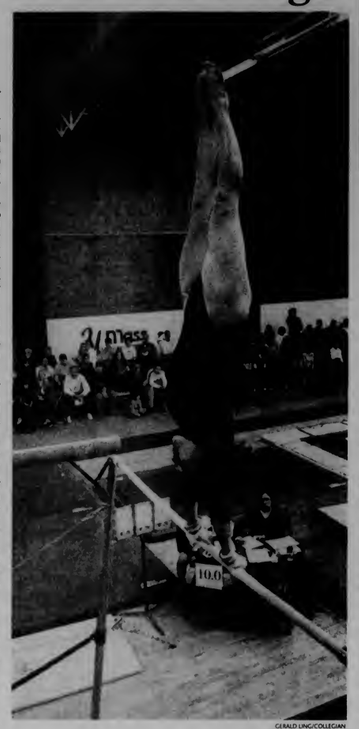
Minutewomen on high

After first win women's gym ready for more

By Katie Landers
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team has evened out its record at 1-1. The Minutewomen squeaked by Yale, adding a check to the win column Jan. 20 in New Haven, Conn. by scoring 191.825 – a mere .075 points more than the Lady Bulldogs.

The Minutewomen stood in the shadow of Yale during the first two rotations, not taking the lead for good until the floor exercise. The Lady Bulldogs lost their stamina as the contest went on, dropping points on the vault, bar and beams. And the strength of the Maroon and White continued to soar through the rest of the meet.



The meet against Yale was UMass' first contest since a loss against Rutgers in its December home opener. Returning veteran Katie Teft led the team on the balance beam and uneven bars, while Meghan Donaghue captured her first all-around title. Donaghue scored a career high of 38.675 points, eighth highest in UMass history, and was named WHMP/UMass Athlete of the Week for the effort.

Teft, named Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week on Jan. 14, provided the support that the Minutewomen needed to get them through the contest. The junior showed her elite skills off on the uneven bars and then again on the balance beam. Teft was able to walk away with the high score on the uneven bars and tied for first on the beam.

This is the second season in a row that UMass surpassed Yale in the women's competition. The Minutewomen beat the Lady Bulldogs in 2001 by just less than two points.

"This is one of the closest meets we've ever had, and it was great to be on the winning side," Head Coach Dave Kuzara said. "We had clutch performances from Meghan Donaghue, who had an outstanding day on all four events, and Katie Teft, who continues to be one of the best gymnasts in the country on both the balance beam and uneven bars."

The Minutewomen will head south to West Virginia this Saturday to compete against West Virginia, Kentucky and George Washington.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The UMass women's gymnastic team squeaked out a win over Yale on Jan. 20 to improve its record to 1-1.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The UMass men's gym team is looking to repeat this season as ECAC champs.

No. 1 Penn St. too tough

No. 6 UMass can't top Lions

By Katie Landers
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The No. 6 Massachusetts men's gymnastics team dropped a tough meet to top-ranked Penn St. on Jan. 20, 212.9-208.2.

The Maroon and White traveled to State College following a second place finish to PSU at the West Point Open the previous weekend. UMass competed against the Nittany Lions, as well as Army, Navy and Temple.

In the round robin, the Lions were able to capture the team title coming in 5.5 points above the Minutemen. The second matchup and first dual meet of the season proved to be an improvement for UMass.

It's been slow and steady for the Minutemen who also lost to Penn St. in the NCAA tourney last spring, but UMass is hoping to get a second opportunity to show the Lions what they've got.

"I hope we catch them in the end," Head Coach Roy Johnson said.

The Minutemen were led by team strong-arms Patrick McFarlin and Darren Morace through the rotations, but could only hold a brief lead after McFarlin's performance on the pommel horse. Morace set a career high down in Beaver Valley with an all-around score of 52.150. The junior continued to set personal bests on the pommel horse, parallel bars and horizontal bars throughout the competition.

"He was just about perfect," Johnson said.

With everyone currently healthy, the head coach is not concerned with the outcome of the last meet and only sees good things in the future of the Minutemen.

"Our workouts are consistent," Johnson said. "The team is doing really well."

McFarlin is making headway in the 2002 campaign. The junior was the only Minuteman to win an event, claiming the pommel horse title with a score of 9.550. Johnson notes McFarlin to be strongest on pommel horse, while being a little unsure on the rings and parallel bars.

"Patrick McFarlin was not strong enough to compete on the rings at Penn St.," Johnson said.

McFarlin continues to work on his routine, currently ranked 15th in the nation with an all-around average of 52.15. Both McFarlin and Morace – ranked 5th all-around in the nation, have their eyes set on the 2004 Summer Olympics in Athens, Greece.

The pair will travel to the Winter Nationals on Feb. 8 and 9, looking to earn spots on the USA National Team. A top ten finish would guarantee a trip to Athens.

* * *

The Minutemen are now preparing to face Atlantic 10 Conference rival Temple. UMass is out for blood after the Owls edged them by just a tenth of a point at the UMass Open in December.

"There's a grudge factor there," said Johnson. "They are good."

The Minutemen continued their season against Navy and Vermont last Saturday, and will host the Owls this Saturday at 1 p.m.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB
Semester Special $179 with valid student ID
The Areas's Most Complete Club • 256-6446
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
•CYBEX/ NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
•CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
•25 YD. POOL
•AQUA AEROBICS
•FULL COURT BASKETBALL
•VOLLEYBALL
•RACQUETBALL
•INDOOR TENNIS
•YOGA
•AEROBICS •STEP
•JACUZZI •SAUNAS
•CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT
MasterCard VISA
90 Gatehouse Road
Off Rt.9 2 miles East of Town Center
Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($179) & get a free HFC T-shirt

UNIVERSAL PICTURES & FlixMix HIRING
COLLEGE MARKETING REPS
Part time per project paid.
Candidates must have: Email, transportation, voice mail, computer & must LOVE MOVIES!
Submit resume ASAP to:
paul.katami@unistudios.com
fax: 818.733.5612

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
now accepting applications for June 2002

SALE! SALE! SALE!
15% - 25% OFF ALL FORUM SNOWBOARDS!
BUY A FORUM BOARD AND GET 30% OFF ANY FORUM BINDING (YOUR CHOICE)
SAVE 25% ON BURTON 1ST LAYER LONG UNDERWEAR
TAKE AN ADDITIONAL 15% OFF ALREADY DISCOUNTED SNOWBOARD PANTS
SAVE 25% ON ANON GOGGLES
ALL SHORT SLEEVE T-SHIRTS $14.95 (REG. $19.95)
ALL PURCHASES OVER $350 GETS YOU A FREE HOODED SWEATSHIRT VALUED AT $49.95
413.586.8766 • Route 5. Easthampton, MA or 413.781.5142 • East Longmeadow, MA
FAKTRAX
SNOWBOARDS · BMX · SKATEBOARDS

ANTHONY'S
HI ENERGY ADULT ENTERTAINMENT AND MORE!!
GENTLEMEN – THE ONLY 18+ CLUB IN THE AREA!
150 Entertainers Weekly
Monthly feature acts & drink specials
Anthony's
500 New Ludlow Rd.
South Hadley, MA
Club-Line 413.532.3621
Hotline 413.538.6969
www.anthonys.net

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Tommy Keane and the UMass men's swimming team is looking for another A-10 title.

UMass swimming teams gearing up for possible repeat

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

How do you improve on a championship season?

Well, technically, you can't. After all, the ultimate goal of any athletic team is to bring home that championship trophy. However, the Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams are looking to do the next best thing to improving on last year's Atlantic 10 title-winning campaigns: duplicating the feat.

The Minutemen and Minutewomen are both poised to make another run at a conference championship behind a strong mix of upperclassmen and solid contributions from the younger members on both sides. Despite losing a fair amount of firepower, both UMass squads will be ready and able to defend their crowns.

"We graduated some pretty significant kids last year, so I'm pleased with the way the team has come together to overcome that," Men's Head Coach Russ Yarworth said.

The Minutemen participated in two meets over the winter break, as they first traveled to Kingston, R.I. on Jan. 12 to take part in the Rhode Island Invitational. UMass emerged victorious in the four-team affair, scoring 538 points to best Dartmouth (508), LaSalle (362), and host URI (330). A trolka of juniors paved the way for the Maroon and White, led by co-captain Rob Bellamy, who took first in the 200-yard free with a time of 1:47.35. Fellow juniors Justin Houck and Peter Tawczynski also took home individual glory, as Houck burned the competition with a win in the 200-yard back (1:55.52), and Tawczynski blew through the water to claim victory in the 200-yard breast (2:12.37).

Other highlights for the Minutemen included freshman Dylan Smith's individual win in the 200-yard fly (1:56.19), and sophomore Logan Alomar's triumph in the one-meter dive competition.

However, the team was not as fortunate in the win column on Jan. 19, as Maryland-Baltimore County was able to travel to Amherst and take a 174-126 decision. Alomar, however, performed spectacularly in the diving portion of the meet, as he swept both the one-meter and three-meter diving competitions. The top swimming individual performances came from Houck, who claimed first in the 100-back, and Smith, who bested the Retrievers with a victory in the 200-yard fly.

Nevertheless, Yarworth was bothered little by the setback against UMBC. He maintains that every meet until the end of the season is merely preparation for the most crucial step.

"Dual meets are important, but they're not the ultimate goal," Yarworth said. "The ultimate goal, obviously, is to win the Atlantic 10 championship."

The team is well on their way to doing so, even though they have relied heavily on underclassmen performances over the year. However, Yarworth has been delighted with the role his junior class has taken in becoming the leadership the team has needed. The Minutemen have had zero seniors on their squad for the majority of the year, and Yarworth mentioned swimmers such as Bellamy, Chad Arnold, and Thomas Keane in providing that leadership. Moreover, he has been happy with how his freshman and sophomores have stepped it up, including Smith, who is someone Yarworth has been "greatly pleased with his improvement." The freshman out of Silver Spring, Md. has been a solid performer in the fly events over the course of the season.

However, the Maroon and White did receive some good news recently, as Yarworth has added the first senior to his team, Carlos Ramos, who Yarworth also coaches on the water polo squad.

"Carlos is finally the sprinter that we have needed to fill the sprinting corps," Yarworth said.

With only two meets remaining before the Atlantic 10 championships, including last Saturday's meet against Rutgers, the Minutemen are making final preparations for the conference finals which will be held in Buffalo, N.Y. during the fourth weekend in February. Yarworth believes the men's competition will come down between UMass, and St. Bonaventure, but he feels that they stand in a good position right now.

"[The team] has done everything I've asked them to do," Yarworth said.

On the women's side of the pool, the Minutewomen also were involved in the Rhode Island Invitational over the winter break, and like the Minutemen, they showed why they are a force to be reckoned with in the Atlantic 10. The Maroon and White equaled their male counterparts with a first-place finish in the meet, dominating conference foes URI (325) and LaSalle (270) with a score of 435 points. Senior Becky Hunnewell led the charge by sweeping the backstroke events, winning the 100-yard event in 1:00.64 and the 200-yard in 2:07.43. Other individual winners for the Maroon and White included junior Molly Buckley sprinting to victory in the 50-yard free, and sophomore Christen Dexter in the 200-yard breast. Junior Kate Allery was a double-winner as she claimed first place in both the one-meter and three-meter diving events.

However, the Minutewomen suffered the same fate as the men's team did against UMBC, succumbing to the Retriever tidal wave in a tightly contested meet, 157-143. Highlights for UMass included junior Lizzy Boyle's strong day in which she finished first in the 50-yard free as well as being a member of the winning 200-yard and 400-yard free relays. Allery continued her strong season as well, as she again flipped and twisted her way into first in both the one-meter and three-meter dives.

The Minutewomen have had a few more struggles in the dual meets this year, as they entered last Saturday's meet with the Scarlet Knights with a record of 4-4. Still, the team will still have enough power and experience to contend, as they returned 24 members from last year's championship squad.

Women's Head Coach Bob Newcombe was unavailable at press time.

STUDENTS Shop & Save Every Tuesday!

The Student Tuesday Discount Program boasts nearly 20 shops and restaurants offering great discounts to students presenting a valid student ID! This means students can SHOP and SAVE every week! See Customer Service or the Mall Office for a complete listing of all participating merchants and discounts.

JCPenney • K-Mart
CineMark 12 Theatres
Media Play • Interskate 91
Ground Round • Gyro Gym
Radio Shack • Footlocker
Electronics Boutique
Bath & Body Works
Payless ShoeSource
Eastern Mountain Sports
and over 50 shops and restaurants!

Hampshire Mall
Route 9, Hadley
(413) 586-5700

Advanced Non-Invasive Pain Relief

Physical Therapy

What does Pope John Paul have in common with athletes like Michael Jordan, Jack Nicholas, Joe Montana, Wayne Gretzky and Terry Bradshaw? They all received dramatic results with Electro-Acuscope/Myopulse treatment. This technology is intended for the non-invasive control of pain without the use of needles, drugs or excessive amounts of electricity, so there is no discomfort during treatment. It is used by professional athletic teams, reputable clinics such as Loma Linda, Cedar Sinai and hospitals and therapists in every health care field.

Created by the developer of the EEG, EKG, AND EMG, The Acuscope/Myopulse system can provide relief from the pain of arthritis, tendonitis, bursitis, sprains and fibromyalgia. Injuries alter the body's normal conductivity. Preprogrammed memory of healthy tissue values within the instrument enables the body to automatically control the precise micro-electrical parameters required for healing. Other treatable conditions include inflammation, post-surgical swelling and stiffness, chronic pain, scar tissue, (incisions), fractures, torn muscles and ligaments, neuralgias, overuse injuries (carpal tunnel, tennis elbow), neck and back pains, TMJ, and headaches.

Neil Primack, P.T., a licenced physical therapist, with offices in Northampton and Amherst, has been successfully utilizing this technology since 1990. He has been a massage therapist since 1982 and a licensed physical therapist since 1986. Most insurance plans accepted.

Neil Primack, P.T. (413)585-1144
256 North Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002

carloansok.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS

Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
UNITED AIR LINES Continental Airlines AirTran
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE! ...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

SEVEN O'S
Rt. 116, Sunderland / next to Cliffside Apts

+ Every Wednesday Karoake
+ Every Thursday Open Mic
+ Live Music every Friday & Saturday

6 Televisions
3 Pool Tables

Join Us Feb. 3rd for Our Huge
Super Bowl Party

Draft Specials
Bud, Bud Light, & Coors Light
Pitchers $4.00 (22 oz. $1.50)
Pints $1.00 (12 oz. $.75)

Food, Prizes and Live Music after the Game.
Come and Party with Us

Have you ever taken a boring class?
What about a great class?
Why not share your opinions with other students?
Wouldn't it be helpful to see what other students are saying about classes, fraternities & sororities, off-campus housing, music, movies, local businesses and much more...
Before it's to late?
TheUndergroundWire.com
Helping you make the most of your campus.

Live Music
mcmurphy's welcomes
THE GUITAR DUDES
every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

■ CMGI

continued from page C7

ty. It is called a full stadium distributed sound and was described by the tour guide as surround sound for the fans. Thankfully, bleeding ears will be a thing of the past at Patriot games.

There will be an easier, more casual flow to attending the games. The concourses are two times wider than those at the old stadium, allowing for much easier passage to and from the seats. There are twice as many bathrooms and 250 more concession areas in the new stadium.

Complimenting the concession stands are wide-open areas behind the seating sections above each end zone. These will be available for anyone and everyone with a great view of the field, enough room to stretch out, and picnic tables to enjoy a hot dog or two.

Fans can take all the time they need getting back to their seats as CMGI tour guides promise fans that no security guards will bother bystanders checking out the action from that vantage point, no matter how much of the game they spend at either location. Providing a more family-style atmosphere this policy will allow the fans spending money for seats in the higher sections to feel more comfortable about enjoying the game from a closer view.

Even the fans flocking to the concourse area to grab a beer or a pretzel can stroll instead of jog because there will be over 1000 television monitors within the stadium, compared with 300 in Foxboro. But patrons won't even have to look for a monitor, as the concourses are layered so there is a perfect view of the field of play from the walkways.

Even the fans that stay in their living rooms to watch Patriots games can rejoice over the new stadium. CMGI will improve their favorite franchise in two major ways.

First, the improvement of revenue from the luxury boxes and club seating will improve Kraft's ability to give free agents big signing bonuses. So the extra money – once it pays off the cost of building the most expensive stadium ever built solely with private funding – will help the Patriots woo players with extra incentives.

Second, the level of improvement has done nothing short of amazed the current Patriots players. Tour guides and CMGI construction workers both passed along stories of players walking into either the training area or the weight room and simply glowing in excitement. The weight room at CMGI field will be more than four times larger than the current closet-sized one in Foxboro Stadium. The large slab of concrete has trouble generating much hot water and gave trainers and conditioning coaches almost no extra room to work with players. CMGI has a bevy of training rooms and promises hot showers for everyone.

Fans, players, and executives are all pleased with the new stadium, which, combined with 2001's unexpected success, will help promote the New England Patriots as one of the top franchises in the entire NFL.

He may have been forced to take a few detours to move over an acre or so, but the extra mileage sure seems to have paid off for Bob Kraft and the Patriots.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Jennifer Butler (21) raises her hands in disbelief after a foul call.

Things coming together

Minutewomen looking to make final half surge

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Assistant coach Jill Rooney's words at the Jan. 23 Sports Luncheon summed up the winter break for the Massachusetts women's basketball team (4-13, 2-4 Atlantic 10) perfectly.

"We are starting to get there," the 11-year assistant told the crowd. Hope is something the UMass players and coaching staff are clinging to and some impressive outings over the break showed signs that this team could be up for a run in the A-10 Tournament.

Here is a look back at how the Minutewomen fared while not having to worry about going to class:

On Jan. 21, the Maroon and White tore past Rhode Island with a 12-0 run that began six minutes into the first half. URI never held the lead after that point. Holding a 5-point lead at the half, UMass began the second frame with a 9-0 run and coasted the rest of the way for the team's second A-10 victory, 58-49.

Junior center Jennifer Butler dominated the game inside, shooting a terrific 7-for-8 from the field for 17 points and grabbed 12 rebounds. Freshman guard Katie Nelson chipped in with 15 points in 35 minutes of action.

Despite a solid defensive effort that held Duquesne scoreless for seven straight minutes, the Minutewomen fell to the Dukes 60-47 on Jan. 17. Butler pulled down an A.J. Palumbo Center record 21 rebounds in the contest and chipped in with 12 points. For the first time in history, UMass pulled down more rebounds (50) than points scored.

Richmond's Kristn Gull scored 10 unanswered points in the Maroon and White's 58-41 loss to the Spiders on Jan. 13. After jumping out to an early 18-4 lead in the first half, UMass struggled the rest of the way. The Minutewomen went 18 minutes without a field goal in the second and shot just 22.8 percent from the floor. Butler and Nelson were a combined 5-for-26 from the field while junior Amber Sneed scored a season-high 15 points in the loss.

The Maroon and White torched La Salle 77-58 in Philadelphia on Jan. 10. Five players scored nine or more points for the Minutewomen in their first A-10 win. Junior Siiri Liivandi led the team with 14 points on 7-for-9 shooting in just 20 minutes of play.

Butler scored nearly half of UMass' points in its 54-48 loss to St. Joseph's on Jan. 8. The Minutemen scored just 18 points in the first half and never recovered. St. Joe's forward Susan Moran paced the Hawks with 19 points.

In the Maroon and White's first A-10 game of the season, Katie Nelson dropped a career-high 18 points on Temple. The Ellicot City, Md. native drilled four 3-pointers and went a perfect 6-for-6 from the free throw line, but was unable carry her team to a victory. Butler chipped in with 17 points and 11 rebounds.

Temple, which led by as many as 17 in the ballgame, was carried by a 23-point performance by guard Natalia Isaac. The Jan. 3, 67-57, loss was the Minutewomen's first game of 2002.

UMass dominated Rider in the PNC Wildcat Classic's consolation game in Philadelphia, 65-54. Butler and junior Nekole Smith dominated the Dec. 30 matchup, combining on the blocks for 29 points and 24 rebounds.

The Maroon and White turned the ball over a season-low 11 times in the contest.

Butler was awarded with All-Tournament honors after the championship game later that evening.

The Minutewomen took on Alabama in the first round of the PNC Wildcat Classic, but were the victims of a controversial call that cost them the game and a chance to play host Villanova for the title.

The game tied at 65-65 with just nine seconds left, the Tide inbounded the ball to Katie Sipe at halfcourt. The shooting guard drove to the middle of the lane and was blocked by Butler at the top of the key as the buzzer sounded.

But a questionable foul was called on Butler and Sipe was awarded two shots with just nine-tenths of a second left in the contest. Sipe made the first shot and missed the second, virtually ending the game.

Sipe scored 12 points in the contest. Butler tossed in 15 points and dominated the boards with 12.

The Minutewomen showed pride over the winter session and fought through some tough adversity – a sure sign that this scrappy team may surprise its A-10 foes in the next month.

GERALD LING

Katie Nelson? or Katie...Jordan? You decide.

Castaway Lounge
I-91 to exit 24, south on Rte. 5
Whately, Mass., (413) 665-8733

Will proudly present another successful
Amateur Night
Monday February 25th
starting at 7 pm

◆ Cash prizes awarded
◆ All ladies over 18 must apply in person
◆ Open on Mondays at 3pm with 10 Beautiful Exotic Entertainers; Food and Prizes given away

Open Tuesdays - Saturday 11am - 1am
VIP Room available for private engagement parties
Phone# 413. 665. 8733

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571

- Full Aerobics Programs including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more
- Nutritonal Consultation
- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & Supplements
- Fitness Testing & Programming

Semester Special $160

- Stairmasters
- Precor Treadmills
- Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
- Lifecycle Upright Bikes
- Precor Crosstrainers
- Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
- Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"

UCard Accepted
virtually everywhere on the UMass Campus
No more checks, cash or change
Use your UCARD Debit Card at Library Copiers
Residential Laundry Rooms
Vending Machines
Text Book Annex
University Store
Campus Food Outlets Convenience Stores
and more...
Make Deposits - Open Accounts
Campus Center Concourse -Tuesday, January 29, 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
UCard Office, Franklin Dining Hall:
Tues - Thurs 8:30 - 7, Friday 8:30 - 5
For more information, call 545-0197 or visit www.umass.edu/ucard

New Sox owners face interesting road

Henry, Werner have decisons to make soon

JIM PIGNATIELLO

There is no doubt that there were some wacky things going on during the course of the sale of the Red Sox to the group led by John Henry and Tom Werner last month. But the "the sky is falling!" Boston media has been caring about the wrong issues since CEO John Harrington and the team's limited partners agreed to sell the team to the bidders offering the least amount of money.

The fact that Major League Baseball's commissioner worked behind the scenes to get Werner into the owner's box because he wanted a small-market team in a big market franchise is moot without the charity involvement of the Yawkey Trust. Now the Massachusetts Attorney General Tom Reilly has squeezed some extra money out of the new owners for the charities and Major League Baseball has approved the sale, the real issues should begin to surface.

1. The new owners want to renovate Fenway instead of building a new one.

There is little room at that location to walk down the street, let alone rebuild one of the nastiest stadiums in all of sports. Harrington and company looked into the costs of renovating Fenway a few years back before making an effort to build a new park right next door – a plan that had as much chance of sailing through as John Valentin has playing third base for the Red Sox in 2002. They decided that the renovation would cost so much it would be worth building an entire new stadium.

Henry wants to remind everyone of how much we love Fenway Park. I admit that I do love Fenway, but it is time to build a new stadium. The seats are cramped together, sometimes facing a pole or beam instead of the field of play. Other seats are on an angle, forcing fans in that area to strain just to see if the pitch was a ball or a strike. The park is built on terrible land that floods when it rains, leaving small lakes in some of the areas used by the players. The concourses are nasty and the media room is terrible. The situation can only be compared to the treatment of the Cleveland Indians by their owner in the movie "Major League," but with two differences: it was a movie and their owner was trying to make the team lose.

There are a few issues that must be addressed in order for the team to get a new park. The team must figure out how to get land in a city that they own, while also financing a stadium with as little help as possible from the city or state.

The first problem seems easy enough as one potential Sox owner Frank McCourt, who owns a huge area of land on the waterfront in South Boston and is probably still interested in owning part of the team. If this is the case, all the new owners have to do is allow McCourt to invest some of his money into the team, thereby saving some of their own money – something they are hoping to do – and be able to build at land on the perfect location. This is not easy to happen, especially in a city like Boston.

Having McCourt in would help the financial burden of a stadium a lot. But after shelling out around three-quarters of a million dollars to buy a team and having to pay the salaries of all the players, affording a new stadium would still be tough, so bringing another investor with deep pockets like billionaire Charles Dolan to be seen as the runner-up for the Sox bid and would probably still buy a piece of the team and be willing to accept a limited role by investing his limited money. Taking Dolan in as a limited partner would further add to the money Werner-Henry can spend on a ballpark and free agents. The only question is whether Dolan and Werner could coexist because both are more interested in the cable channel NESN than in the day-to-day ownership of the Sox.

2. What will change with the new owners?

The big three executives are: Tom Werner, John Henry, and Larry Lucchino. Owner Henry came in as the owner of the Florida Marlins, a team that could never be confused with a stable franchise, but is said to be a great baseball guy.

Principle partner Werner made his money in television, producing hit shows like The Cosby Show and Roseanne, but was the unpopular owner of the San Diego Padres in the early 90s who needed to get Henry onboard in order to have a chance to buy the team. Werner is expected to spend most of his time worrying about NESN.

The man picked by Henry and Werner to run the baseball operations, Lucchino is known as a great baseball mind. The former president of the Padres, Lucchino built a terrific farm system for that club, something the Sox haven't had in years.

They all seem like good guys and solid baseball guys, especially Lucchino. But financing is likely to change the way money is handled when offering players contracts. After spending $700 million to buy a team that claims to have lost $13 million last year and been in the red for the past six years, there is no way the new owners can afford to keep their payroll around the Yankees' – especially now that George Steinbrenner has decided to really open his wallet. Cutting payroll is fine for a team with a strong farm system with players that can contribute in the big leagues, but not for a franchise with one of the worst minor leagues in baseball.

At least the days of taking on guys like Mike Lansing for $7 million a year to get a mediocre pitcher like Rolando Arrojo are over. With some smart moves the team may be able to stay in contention, but will likely tread water instead of improve with big free agent signings until Lucchino can build up the minors and get some young players in uniform.

3. What will the new owners do with General Manager Dan Duquette and Manager Joe Kerrigan?

All reports are that Duquette won't be the GM of the Sox by spring training. Even a pretty solid offseason that brought the second best leadoff hitter in the American league to Boston and established a pitching rotation that has less injury question marks than it has had in years won't be enough to save Duquette's job. Lucchino is the type of guy to bring in his own GM, especially when the rest of the baseball community hates dealing with the current one.

Kerrigan is a tougher case to judge. He didn't get to manage much last year and his time in the position was marred by injury and clubhouse problems that boiled over after months of buildup. The former pitching coach is known for a strong work ethic and knowledge of the game and would definitely get a chance to manage somewhere else if the Sox were to let go.

I think that Lucchino and there new general manager will give Kerrigan an entire year to impress and then make a decision next year, with bench coach Mike Stanley waiting in the wings if needed.

New ownership for the first time since 1933 of the most beloved franchise in New England will not be a smooth ride, but it is sure to be an interesting one.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian columnist.

MATT LEIPSIC/COLLEGIAN

How long will Fenway last? That's one of the many decisions the new Red Sox owners have to make in the near future.

■ NBA

continued from page 3

Wizards. He was averaging 19.8 points per game before an injured groin has kept him out for the last month. Since his loss, the Wizards have gone on a downward slide. However, his return could spark a return to the consistent play and could spark the team from our nation's capital to a high seed in the playoffs.

Minnesota Timberwolves – Quick, who is in second place in the Western Conference? As of January 22, Sacramento was in first, but no one would have thought it would be the hightliving Timberwolves that would be next on the list. While Kevin Garnett is still doing his thing on a nightly basis (22 points, 12 rebounds and 6 assists per game), it has been the play of Wally Szczerbiak (19.7) and the contribution of Chauncey Billups (nearly 12 points per game) filling in for the injured Terrell Brandon that has made them one of the elite teams in the NBA. They have also proven they can beat the best the league has to offer, with victories this season over San Antonio, Sacramento and the Lakers. The only problem is, can they get over the hump and finally win the first playoff series in team history? Only time will tell.

First Half MVP – Kidd, New Jersey; Runner-Up – Garnett, Minnesota – Although he is averaging just thirteen points per game, he has also added the rebounding and the dishing and the most telling stat of all is that the Nets already have more wins this year than they did all of last year. His leave from Phoenix has led to a change in his game. A change for the better. However, there is still one-half of the season to go and the question will be if the Nets can hold on to their positioning at the top of the East.

Coach of the Year – Flip Saunders, Minnesota; Runner-Up – Byron Scott, New Jersey – Without Brandon in the backcourt to help out the development of Szczerbiak and take the pressure off of K.G., Saunders has done a masterful job of putting in the right lineups (i.e. Joe Smith and Billups) to make the T-Wolves an elite team in the NBA. His resume has been one of great success in the Twin Cities, but the season up to this date has been his most successful. Now with Brandon coming back off of injury, the T-Wolves could vie for an NBA Championship and with Saunders, they have the right coach to do it with.

Rookie of the Year – Pau Gasol, Memphis; Runner-Up – Shane Battier, Memphis – For everybody who thinks Gasol reminds you of a totem pole instead of a basketball player, his average of 15 points and close to nine rebounds per game makes him the best first year employee of the association. He does need to put on some weight to be able to hang around for a lone time in the league, but it is a nice start to his career. Now if he can ever get out of Memphis, he could become a megastar in the league.

Comeback Player of the Year – Jordan, Washington – I had to give him an award somewhere here and Charles Barkley already took up the title for worst golf swing for a basketball player, so he gets this distinction for the second time. The question is: Will this be the last time he gets this award?

Players to Watch in the Second Half of the Season: Vince Carter, Toronto – He has put up his usual array of high flying dunks and unbelievable drives to the hoop, but for all of that, the Raptors are still just six games over .500 and that is with the addition of Hakeem Olajuwon to a team that was within a Carter jumper of playing in the Eastern Conference Finals last year. While Carter is averaging 25.8 points a contest, he has not totally broken out into one of those stretches where averages 35-40 points a game within a two to three week stretch. He did that last year when he had games of 38, 39, 33, 32 and 32 in an eight-day stretch from February 20-28. If he can go off like he did during that period and with the Eastern Conference as bad as it is, the Raptors could be a top two seed.

Antoine Walker, Boston – He has been one of only three players in the league (Garnett and Chris Webber being the other two) to average 20 points, 10 rebounds and five assists per game this season. However, the Celtics season might hinge on whether or not Walker decides to take less 3's and more smart shots. He is a power forward that as of Jan. 22 had taken 69 more treys than anybody else in the league (332, teammate Paul Pierce had taken 263). He must be able to take the inside shots to open up the outside more for Pierce. His decision to either stay on the outside or go down more into the post might make the Celtics the color of money, as in a playoff team or green with envy, watching the playoffs from their couches yet again.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!

OPEN 7 DAYS Delivery Available

ICHIBAN

Authentic Japanese Restaurant

1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)

What is the Difference?

#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"

#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl

10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)

Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up

Reserve for Karaoke

HEY!! SPRING BREAK IS COMING
GET READY TO HANDLE YOUR SPRING WITH A

BODY SHOP DISCOUNT MEMBERSHIP SPECIAL

Come to the Totman Rm. 8 location between January 29 - February 3 for viewing & membership sign-ups

PAY ONLY $65
FOR A FULL & UNLIMITED SPRING SEMESTER MEMBERSHIP!!!

FULL WORKOUTS CAN BEGIN ON FEBRUARY 4TH

To work every muscle in your body with
POWERLINE® WEIGHT TRAINING MACHINES
LIFEFITNESS® STATIONARY BICYCLES
& STAIR CLIMBERS
CONCEPT II® ROWING MACHINES NORDIC TRACK® SKI MACHINES
LANDICE® TREADMILLS
PRECOR® EFX ELLIPTICAL TRAINER
AND FREE WEIGHTS

THE BODY SHOP FITNESS CENTER DISCOUNT EXPIRES 2/3/02

SAME PLACE!! SAME PRICE!!

Full refund available for 14 days after date of purchase with original receipt and your university identification card

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!

Signature Service
More Than An Oil Change

WALMART PLAZA
Route 9
Hadley
586-8795

■ Mr. Robinson

continued from page A1

he did it again. This time, Salisbury's pass ricocheted through the hands of a UMass linebacker and fell into the outstretched arms of a falling Robinson.

"It was a tipped ball by Kole Ayi, I dove and just caught it," Robinson remembers. "It was great. It was like a kid in the candy store all over again."

Robinson collected 13 more enemy darts the next three years to bring his career total to 15, a number that ranks fourth all-time in UMass history, three shy of Steven Rogers and Stephen LeMay who top the list with 18. His 171 interception return yards rank sixth on the all time list, and his 25 pass breakups claim the same position.

All are impressive numbers for the kid who didn't even touch a football until after his 16th birthday.

"My basketball coach told me to play football to get in shape for basketball my junior year of high school," Robinson says. "I was just there messing around, not even wanting to play. I just wanted to get in shape for hoop. One day I just picked up a ball and threw it down the field and coach couldn't believe it.

"He threw me in the fire the second game of the season and I started. I took the senior quarterback's position."

And thanks to his gift of raw athleticism, Robinson excelled immediately in coach Reopell's Nottingham lineup. He passed for 1,270 yards and ran for 680 yards as a junior and was named the New York Empire State Player of the Week once during that season when he set a state passing record with 399 yards in one game. His senior season, Robinson threw for 998 yards and rushed for 760 on his way to New York State All-Star honors. His team finished 7-2 that season and advanced to the state semifinals.

Still, Robinson's quarterbacking skills weren't good enough for entrance into the high ranks of college football. He never really began the maturation process that quarterbacks in high school need to go through in order to control offenses at the next level. Because his physical ability alone was too much for opponents to handle, he became spoiled.

"I don't really think he ever matured into the quarterback he could have been," says Reopell. "And I certainly put that on myself. Jeremy was such a great athlete that he was able to get the job done. I remember he threw for over 300 yards one game, and the majority of passes he threw were three-step drops. He had that part of the game real well. He did a good job of being able to sprint out and hit a target. But we didn't do as much drop-back as I should have done with him.

"He wasn't polished enough to be recruited as a quarterback."

So schools began to recruit him for other reasons. His quick, springy 6-foot-2-inch frame and what is now a 38-inch vertical led most to believe that he could excel in the backfields of college football. And along with UMass, institutions like Michigan State, Cincinatti and even Columbia began to track him during his final years of high school.

"I remember Jeremy making plays on the football field that made me look real good as a coach," says Reopell, who was also coaching the Lemoyne College men's basketball team at the time. "I certainly knew what type of athlete it took to play football and basketball at the college level. And he was a pretty talented kid."

Robinson didn't even play for Reopell's defense his junior year, because of its depth. Not until his final high school campaign did he see some action in the Nottingham backfield. Still, as several scouts did, the Minuteman staff recognized his ability and believed that – after some time in the weight room – he'd make an immediate impact on the football field.

And it wasn't going to be as an offensive threat. It was going to be as a defensive monster.

But that's something Robinson didn't find out until four or five days into his first training camp.

"There were like five quarterbacks there," he recalls. "And coach asked us who could switch to another position. I was the quickest one there, so they moved me [to defensive end]. I played a little in high school, but I really didn't even know what to do.

"Like, what? Tackle somebody? I'm only 170 pounds."

Thanks to Bob Otrando, the team's strength and conditioning coach, that didn't seem to pose much of a problem. When Robinson first showed up in Amherst, he was quick, but not sturdy enough to properly deliver the hits coach Mark Whipple and staff expected out of him. That soon changed.

"Jeremy attended every workout this summer," Otrando told The Collegian, prior to this season. "He is one of the hardest workers on the team. When Jeremy got here he was something like 170 pounds. But since then he has gained about 50 pounds and is usually around 200."

Credit that to his 290-pound bench press and his team high 460-pound squat. Those are heavy numbers for a free safety. And you know what that means for opponents of the ball-carrying and ball-catching genre.

It's no surprise that he concludes his UMass career with 336 total tackles including 244 solo stops. It's no surprise that he was selected to play in this year's version of the Blue-Grey All-Star Classic. It's no surprise that his picture will hang forever in the Minutemen's locker room under the adage, All-American.

"It's no surprise[at all. Not at all," Reopell declares. "You could see the kid was certainly going to mature physically. And between his sophomore year and senior year (of high school), Jeremy's attitude changed. Even as he progressed through UMass and matured, he became much smarter with the game, heavier, and much more physical. He put more weight on but never really lost that step.

"I've been impressed with how hard he can hit now," he continues. "In the Blue-Grey game, he was always around the ball. And he just would come in hard, head and shoulder, on runners and punish them. I never really saw that part of Jeremy [at Nottingham]."

But that's not a shocker. Little Jeremy of Nottingham was clearly not the same man that Mr. Robinson of UMass is today.

BORA GIRC/CYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Jeremy Robinson, taking a break during this year's training camp.

When Robinson got to UMass, something just clicked. Probably part of it was the sudden consciousness of independence, which most freshmen experience early in their first semester. But then there's that whole leadership thing that coach Mark Whipple forced on him right away.

"We looked at him athletically and said, you're the guy back there," recalled Whipple, two days before Robinson's final game versus Richmond. "I said you're going to be the quarterback of the defense. And that's what he's done.

"His confidence has grown since he first got here, when we put him back at safety and told him he's going to be the guy. And he certainly responded well."

In 1998, Robinson started as a redshirt-freshman in the UMass backfield and helped the Minutemen to their first-ever National Championship, with a huge 55-43 upset win over Georgia Southern. It wasn't a bad start to a career, by any means.

Still, he wasn't done with his transformation. One thing just didn't fit.

"In my redshirt freshman year I wore No. 23 and the next year I just felt like, that year is over with," he says. "I'm done being a boy and I'm turning into a man. I feel like I have to be the No. 1 free safety in the land. And with that, I want to wear No. 1 so I have to carry myself as No. 1."

The next year, he was an All-American. Robinson made 103 tackles, four sacks, and had six interceptions. UMass returned to the playoffs, but was bumped this time by Georgia Southern, 38-21 in the NCAA Quarterfinal round.

And although his numbers never reached those levels again, Robinson became all the more intimidating in his final two years. Knowing his status, most coaches certainly would have done all they could to avoid him.

But shun him is not something teams in the National Football League will do come April.

The vision of being picked in the NFL Draft is a real one for Mr. Robinson.

"As of now, I'm projected to go in the sixth or seventh round," he says. "But I could go as high as the third round, depending on my 40 (yard dash) time."

His dash time at the beginning of this season was 4.43. If he can get that down to around the 4.35 level in the next few months, he'll boost his way to the top of the defensive back directory.

"That's the difference between $200,000 and $800,000," says Robinson, laughing.

But shaving one-tenth of a point is a lot tougher than it sounds.

And that's why he is making a trip to Colorado in February to work out with NFL stars Eddie George (Tennessee) and Jerome Bettis (Pittsburgh). The two are represented by All Pro Sports, the same firm by which Robinson's new agent is employed. There, he will train for the league's Combine Timing and Testing period which will take place February 28-March 4 at the RCA Dome in Indianapolis, Ind. There, scouts will gather to watch prospects flaunt their physical prowess.

Robinson is quite confident in his ability. After playing on Christmas Day in the Blue-Grey game, a showcase for seniors not in bowl games, he feels he can hang with just about anyone.

"I don't want to say there's no difference between Division I and Division I-AA, but I don't really see any difference when it comes to skill positions," says Robinson, who this season was named first team All-Atlantic 10 Conference and first team All-New England for the third straight year. "I was talking to Al Groh (coach of Blue side in Blue-Grey, former New York Jets coach, present University of Virginia skipper) and he said I was one of the best athletes at our practice."

On either April 20 or April 21, Robinson will find out if an NFL team thinks the same. If he's not selected, he becomes a free agent and still has the opportunity to make his way onto teams via training camps as his former teammates Marcel Shipp and Kole Ayi did.

But there's just something about having your name called from that podium in New York City. Not that mom needs anything else to be proud about. It just makes things a tad easier during the post-graduate job search.

Not to mention the perfect night of sleep you must get when you hear the good news.

■ goals

continued from page C10

wards need some sort of deep therapy to correct this scoring lockdown. Well, Toot Cahoon is no shrink, so a myriad of focused drills and exercises will have to do the trick.

"We've done a lot of things in practice the last couple weeks," Turner says. "All types of scoring drills and just handling the puck around the net. Like we'd have a defenseman take a point shot then bang in the rebound or something like that.

"It's definitely not a lack of effort." Turner speaks the truth. Because if goal scoring ran parallel to sweat, then UMass would be set. The lack falls somewhere between ability and luck.

As the Minutemen stand nose to nose with the stretch run – and three points out of the final playoff spot – it comes down to score or go home.

"We are going to have to be a little more responsible in our own end," Cahoon says. "But when it comes down to it, we have to find a way to score goals."

If they don't, then there will be a lot more somber bus rides and painful number crunching.

There will be a Sports Staff meeting Thursday @ 5:30 p.m. All writers should attend. New Writers are also welcome.

Call 545-1749 for further info. Ask for Eric or Jim.

www.dailycollegian.com

Classes.....Covered ☑ Tuition.....Covered ☑

Health Insurance....?
GET COVERED!

The Chickering Group in partnership with UMASS Amherst offers a Spring Term Health Insurance Plan for the period February 1, 2002 through September 1, 2002.
Deadline to enroll for Spring Term is February 12, 2002.

Plan Highlights include:
- Access to local and national Preferred Provider Networks through Aetna
- Low out-of-pocket expenses.
- Elimination of out-of-pocket expenses for many UHS services.
- Expanded Mental Health / Substance Abuse Coverage.
- Access to the Aetna Prescription Drug Network.

The Chickering Group | Aetna

To receive information call The Chickering Group directly at (877) 480-4167.

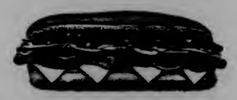
"A groundbreaking learning experience."

"Maybe the best course I've ever taken."

www.bio.umass.edu/biochem/mydna

MyDNA

No prerequisites.
Check it out online!
Register now- BIOCHEM193A



GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY

One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 9, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

HUNGRY?

Subway of Amherst offers fresh 6" and footlong subs, delicious salads and, for smaller appetites, 4" round sandwiches.

SUBWAY®

4 Main Street, Amherst • 256-1919
Sunday - Thursday 10 am - Midnight
Friday & Saturday 10 am - 2 am

T-Shirts, Glasses And Much More!

THE HARP

Take Your Glass Home!

The Harp Presents Murphy's Night

Featuring Murphy's Irish Stout
Thurs. 9:30 - Close
Murphy's Draft Pint - $2.50 20oz. - $3.25
Thursday – Summit House
Every Friday – Traditional Irish Seisiun
Saturday – Electric Carnival

Great Raffle Prizes!

163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
(413) 548-6900

Tons of Giveaways

"Start Your Own Tradition"

Hitting the wall

Mass Attack just can't find the net

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"How many?"

The question posed by UMass head coach Don Cahoon was painful enough. But the answer, tentatively offered by assistant coach Bill Gilligan, was much, much worse.

"Four and two at Providence, four on Northeastern," Gilligan responds, enlisting the aid of the remaining coaching staff. "Zero and two against Lowell, only one on Maine then ...there's tonight."

"So that makes..."

13.

Just 13 goals in six Hockey East games. That type of statistic would cultivate gray hair and cold sweats in any coach. But what is most disturbing for Cahoon is that those lucky 13 represent his team's most torrid offensive pace of the season. Needless to say, it was all downhill from that night...

That night was the somber bus ride home from a four-nil setback against Boston College on the first of December. But as the UMass bench leader and his staff of crack mathematicians painfully dialed up his squad's offensive numbers, they couldn't have known that the present would prove to be that much worse.

"Before the season I knew that there would be peaks and valleys but I didn't expect it to be such a struggle," says Cahoon with a grimace. "One way or another we are going to have to start scoring."

It's not that other teams don't have trouble lighting the lamp, because they do and if you ask most coaches they would say that one of their primary concerns is scoring talent. But in Toot Cahoon's world, that concern has taken somewhat of a Homeric twist.

"It's been our Achilles heel, our fatal flaw," he says. "We just don't finish plays."

Point taken.

It seems increasingly likely that we've hit the dead puck era in Amherst. Four goals in a tie and a loss against the worst defensive team in the conference (Merrimack) wouldn't cut it in bubble hockey let alone Hockey East.

But that was before New Hampshire left skid marks in the UMass goal crease with 11 goals in two contests.

"[UMass] plays hard for sixty minutes, they just don't score," said coach Dick Umile after his Wildcats outscored the Minutemen 11-2 in a pair of games. "I mean no disrespect to the present players, but once the talent level increases, and it is rising, I won't want to play these guys."

As Umile noted, help is on the way, but the UMass faithful will have to wait for the likes of Stephen Werner and Steve Iacobs to show up two recruits with an upside and hopefully, a pair of soft hands.

"We've tried to recruit with the knowledge that we need more kids who can finish," Cahoon remarks. "Right now we just don't have a lot of guys putting up big numbers."

Next year's freshman class, if nothing else, has the potential to keep goal judges busy.

Werner represents the first UMass recruit from the United States National Team Development Program. Just playing on the Under-18 squad denotes him as one of the top 25 to 30 high school age players in the nation.

But Werner, a native of Chevy Chase, Md., is one of the leading scorers (16 points in 25 games) on the team and is listed in the top 100 of draft eligible North American skaters by the National Hockey League's central scouting service.

Iacobs, a power forward type from Cushing Academy in Massachusetts, is also on the NHL's midseason draft list, as is teammate Marvin Degon, who's signing will give Cahoon some offensive punch from the blueline.

Factor in Austin Prep scoring machine Chris Capraro (40 points, fourth in Eastern Mass.) who is rumored to be headed for Amherst and you have a class bent on addressing one need – goals.

It will be a year before this potential-laden class hits Amherst, but for now, the Pioneer Valley does not lie devoid of talent. Maybe that is what makes this offensive implosion so disconcerting.

"We have guys who can score right now who just haven't stepped up for us this year," notes Cahoon. "For one reason or another, depending upon the situation, they just aren't scoring."

In analyzing the UMass roster the most obvious trend is that there is no trend. Some players aren't taking enough shots like Peter Trovato (14 shots in 24 games), less than five defensemen.

Other guys just haven't been able to mesh with their linemates (i.e. freshman Tim Vitek who has played on four different lines and managed only two goals in 25 contests.

Thomas Pock, a forward with considerable talent, was KO'd by the injury bug while leading the team in scoring earlier in the season, only to return after seven missed games.

Then there is that elite few who just can't buy a goal, or a stroke of luck for that matter.

"I don't think it is lack of talent," Tim Turner muses. "These guys all came from high school and junior teams where they lit up the place. But some guys are just snake bitten right now."

Snake-bitten is right. Jimmy Callahan (two goals in 22 games) has banged more iron than Hephaestus, while senior forward Darcy King (one goal, 22 games) wouldn't know a lucky bounce if one dropped the gloves and tried to pick a fight with him.

"I think guys are just getting too excited when they get a scoring chance," Turner says. "It's like, oh no here we go again."

It's not like there aren't some positives, because there are a few, very few. Greg Mauldin, who, according to Cahoon, "has shown signs of becoming a consistent goalscorer," has eight goals in his rookie season – good for second on the team.

And "Timmy [Turner] will get his goals because he works for them." The junior is tops on the roster with 10. But compare UMass' scoring leaders with that of other teams and don't be surprised if you feel a cringe coming on.

Consider that Turner and Mauldin are tied for the team scoring lead with 18 points and there is no other team in Hockey East that has a leader lower than 21 – that being Lowell's Ed McGrane.

Doesn't sound so bad. Well take into account that on average, at this point in the season, the other eight Hockey East teams average almost ten players with ten points or more, while UMass sports just six with double-figure point totals.

At present, the Minutemen simply do not have the talent to keep up with a league bent on offensive explosion. UMass can hold its own going chance for chance with most teams in the league, but in terms of conversion rate, it's not even close.

"We consistently waste the type of chances that I'm convinced other teams would finish," Cahoon exclaims. "We just aren't at a talent level with other teams in the conference."

The offense took a major hit when disgruntled Colorado Avalanche draftee Scott Horvath bolted for Toronto St. Michaels of the Quebec Major Junior League.

Horvath, a 6-foot-3-inch forward with big time skills had trouble staying in the lineup due to streaky play and differing views. Nonetheless Horvath was a talent and has exhibited that with five points in five games with the Majors. Unfortunately he could not bring that skill to the UMass roster on a regular basis.

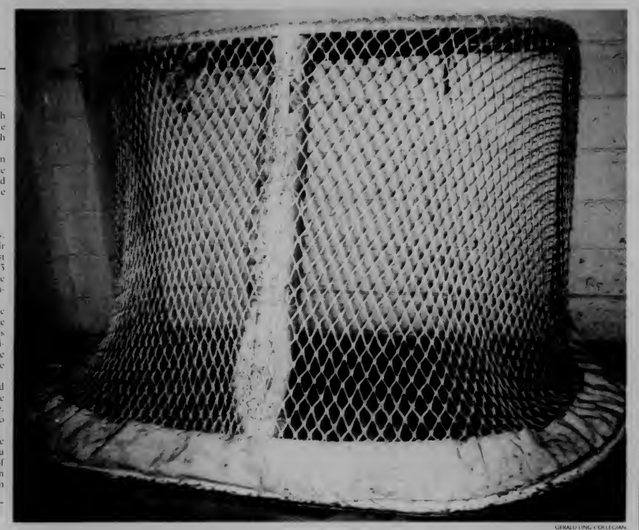
Another loss was forward Brad Nizwantoski who was excused from the team after posting three points in 12 contests. The junior was arrested after supposedly threatening his ex-girlfriend with a weapon.

The University released a response statement at the time of the incident, while any UMass officials surrounding the situation, including the players and coaching staff have politely refused comment.

From a hockey standpoint the loss of Nizwantoski and Horvath – two big front liners with soft hands – has dealt an unexpected but major blow to the offense's production in recent weeks.

"It has certainly affected the team," Cahoon says of their departure. "And it definitely hurts our depth and offensive punch."

To combat a dwindling forward roster, Cahoon has signed his second mid-season recruit in as many years. Josh Hanson, a forward from the Texas Tornado of the North American Hockey League, is expected to see regular game shifts almost immediately.



"He is an instate kid with good offensive instincts," Cahoon says of his newest scoring threat. "He needs to improve his skating but I think he'll be a solid addition to our program."

Hanson led the Tornado (first place in the NAHL's West Division) with 16 goals and 38 points in 31 games. So if anything he's a player that knows his way around the net. As for his lead-footed shortcomings, those can be remedied in time.

The Medford, Mass., native will likely be a productive second or third line forward, but one player does not solve the problem.

The fact is that the majority of UMass' forwards are not getting the job done.

Turn to GOALS page C9

GERALD PING/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts hockey team has the scored the least amount of goals in Hockey East.

UMass snow'd in

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Timmy!" bellowed UMass head coach Don "Toot" Cahoon, drawing the immediate attention of leading scorer Tim Turner. "No sandals, put some shoes on."

"Guys!" he said turning to face the rest of his squad. "It's cold outside, everybody needs to wear sweats and sneakers."

It was clear even then, back on the first of December – as the Minutemen boarded a bus for Chestnut Hill to face-off against nationally ranked Boston College (a game they would lose 4-0) – that Cahoon was worried about his team.

UMass' lackluster performance the night prior, in a 6-2 loss to Maine, was certainly cause for concern. But expectations were not abound for the utter collapse that has found the Minutemen in last place and three points behind Merrimack for the eighth and final Hockey East playoff spot.

"We have been self destructive," Cahoon says. "There is always one part of each game that just takes out of it."

Since a 4-2 win over Northeastern on Nov. 3, UMass has managed only one point (a 3-3 tie versus MC) in 11 conference games.

The Minutemen's only win after Christmas came at the HSBC Holiday Tournament in Troy, N.Y. The tourney, hosted by Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, featured four lower echelon teams from the Northeast region – Niagara, Quinnipiac, RPI and UMass.

The Minutemen drew the Purple Eagles of Niagara in the first round of the tourney. UMass had beaten the Eagles 4-2 in the season opener at Amherst earlier in the year, but this time they were without injured forward Thomas Pock.

Pock's absence didn't faze the Minutemen, who tilted the ice from start to finish in a 4-0 shutout win. RPI's double-overtime victory in the nightcap set up a rematch of last year's penalty infested game, a 9-2 UMass loss in Troy.

The Maroon and White proved to be a much tougher test this time around, as they held a 2-1 lead entering the third period. But a fatal gaffe by senior netminder Mike Johnson gave the Engineers an easy tally and a one-way ticket to OT.

Ryan Shields notched the game-winner less than two minutes into the extra frame, giving RPI the tournament title.

Although it was a meaningless out-of-conference loss, the game could have loomed large as a confidence builder for a team that hasn't won many championships – even if it was a simple holiday tournament. Not to mention the fact that at press time, UMass had not earned a victory since that drubbing of Niagara.

Hope sprung eternal with a two-game set against co-cellar dwellers Merrimack looming. But an overtime loss at home coupled with a draw on the road meant the Minutemen had squandered three of a possible four points against their nearest rivals.

"I thought we played well at Merrimack," Cahoon says. "We had a goal call back in overtime [of the first game]. The second game was just low energy from both teams and we ended up surrendering the winner in overtime."

The subpar weekend not only gave the Warriors some breathing room, but also a chance to leapfrog the Minutemen in the standings.

*****

The impact of the budget cuts has been, thus far, immeasurable. Rideout said without a hint of grandiose in his voice that the cuts have been of a "magnitude greater than anything that has ever happened to the University of Massachusetts in its history."

With department heads instructed to cut budgets wherever possible, the various artistic departments on campus – Music and Dance, Theater and English – have excised anywhere possible. And that's without considering next fall's cut, which most expect to deepen. For now, while Music and Dance has already excised considerably, the Theater Department will scale back the size of its performances this year; the English Department is desperately trying to find funding to allow scheduled writers to visit this semester.

Although it would have been chronicled, the Arts department was unavailable for comment.

*****

Students looking for good news will find little, if any, solace in the following: while funding for student productions is virtually assured for this semester, Maren Brown at the UMass Arts Council expects cuts next fall. In fact, the specter of the budget hangs in the distance for everyone, as this semester's attrition is only the beginning.

Brown, the Director of the University Arts Council, said that if she was going to "get hit this semester, I would know by now, but everyone is reeling at what they are hearing." The Council has helped the Student Union Gallery, Spectrum Magazine, the UMass Theater Guild, and the Cape Verdean Students Association to "name a few," said Brown. But while she promises that this semester will go as smoothly as possible, she did acknowledge that she fears a small budgetary allotment next year.

Like Rideout above, Brown's comments came last week. Yesterday, Delphine Quarels, the Director of Campus Activities Advising Center, said that students could expect to plan for "cost-cutting measures around the edges of students' various productions."

She was referencing various performers and literary magazines on campus. Quarels said that few could expect to do anything at the "quantities that they'd been doing them before." Be it the complexity of sets and costumes for the Theater Guild or the number of Short Cuts for this semester, Quarels seemed absolute on this fact.

Offering advice, Quarels suggested that students hoping for funding needed to be deeply involved in the Student Government Association's creation of its annual budget.

"The students working on that have such a huge job to ensure equity for the next year ahead of them," Quarels said. She said that if students wanted to protect what they had, that the SGA would be the place to turn to.

Brown recommended that students also consider www.umass.edu/funding. She said that students could use that website as a resource if they lost the funding they'd expected. Of course, she also admitted that more and more students are coming to the Arts Council for smaller slices of the pie.

But therein lies a reason for solace – at least there is somewhere to go to. The three departments chronicled in this article have nowhere to turn.

*****

Although it would be easy to do so, nobody interviewed alleged that the arts were being targeted for cuts. Rideout especially said that it was his understanding that "most departments are getting hit this badly." He conceded that few departments were losing 12 professors in one semester, but he still refused to agree with any conspiratorial allegations.

Anne Herrington, the chair of the English Department, pointed out that she had already lost 14 percent of her faculty in the last eight years.

"We've had to cancel two out of the three searches we were conducting and we are likely to lose two or three more faculty," Herrington said. "And I expect those numbers to go up to five or six."

Small numbers against Rideout's 12, but Herrington said

Turn to STRUGGLE page C4

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily-Weekly Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins 8.95 4.48
Nachos Especial 8.95 4.48
Sweet Potato Fries 6.99 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
OCMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street 253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

UMass INTRAMURALS
STILL TIME TO ENTER:
Basketball (M/W/C) A.S.A.P.
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Wallyball (M/W/C) 2-4
Wrestling (M/W) 2-4
More Info: 215 Boyden. 5-2693
On the web. www.umass.edu/umim
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

Historic 1705
Salem Cross Inn 1705
Route 9 West Brookfield, MA 01585
Enjoy traditional New England Dining in a beautifully restored colonial farmhouse
Featured on The Food Networks "The Best of" Chronicle "Phantom Gourmet" and "Hidden Jewels"
Horse-Drawn Wagon or Sleigh Rides for our dinner guests
Fridays 6:00-8:00 pm • Sundays Noon-2:00
Call or e-mail for brochures and sample menues
Phone 508-867-8337 Fax 508-867-0351
salemxinn@aol.com • www.salemcrossinn.com
Winter Hours
January
February through March 17
Valentine's Day

Paid Officials Needed for Basketball & Wrestling
UMass INTRAMURALS
Basketball - Jan. 29 @ 6 p.m. (Boyden 249)
Jan. 30, 31 @ 7 p.m. (Totman Gym)
Please call the office for clinic attendance requirements
Wrestling - Feb. 11 @ 6 p.m. (Boyden 223)
Still Time To Enter Basketball
More Info: 215 Boyden On the Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

Inside Arts - Jewels new album gets poor marks
Ed/Op addresses violence in sports.
UMass Dayton ties over

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
wednesday ★★★★★ issue seventy ★★★★★ 1.30.02

COURTESY TIN YIU/COLLEGIAN

PLAYED OUT

How budget cuts are undercutting the life of Theater, Music, Arts and English

By Julie Burrell and Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

About budget cuts, Roger Rideout was succinct.

"There are no words to adequately describe the fear we all feel about the potential cutbacks and budget cuts for the next academic year," Rideout said in an interview.

Rideout, the chairman of University's Department of Music and Dance, has switched gears since then. When queried about budgetary changes yesterday, he patiently and calmly explained his department's decimation.

"I have been told to give five percent of the budget back next fall. I have 12 faculty members early retiring or retiring and there is no money to replace but one of them," Rideout said. "These are faculty from all aspects of our department."

Further, he reports that campus performances have been cancelled and that non-tenure track faculty has been released from some teaching appointments. Last week, it was only guest artist visits that had to be canceled, six in all. He half-jokingly said that the department is "taking donations."

*****

The impact of the budget cuts has been, thus far, immeasurable. Rideout said without a hint of grandiose in his voice that the cuts have been of a "magnitude greater than anything that has ever happened to the University of Massachusetts in its history."

With department heads instructed to cut budgets wherever possible, the various artistic departments on campus – Music and Dance, Theater and English – have excised anywhere possible. And that's without considering next fall's cut, which most expect to deepen. For now, while Music and Dance has already excised considerably, the Theater Department will scale back the size of its performances this year; the English Department is desperately trying to find funding to allow scheduled writers to visit this semester.

Although it would have been chronicled, the Arts department was unavailable for comment.

*****

Students looking for good news will find little, if any, solace in the following: while funding for student productions is virtually assured for this semester, Maren Brown at the UMass Arts Council expects cuts next fall. In fact, the specter of the budget hangs in the distance for everyone, as this semester's attrition is only the beginning.

Brown, the Director of the University Arts Council, said that if she was going to "get hit this semester, I would know by now, but everyone is reeling at what they are hearing." The Council has helped the Student Union Gallery, Spectrum Magazine, the UMass Theater Guild, and the Cape Verdean Students Association to "name a few," said Brown. But while she promises that this semester will go as smoothly as possible, she did acknowledge that she fears a small budgetary allotment next year.

Like Rideout above, Brown's comments came last week. Yesterday, Delphine Quarels, the Director of Campus Activities Advising Center, said that students could expect to plan for "cost-cutting measures around the edges of students' various productions."

She was referencing various performers and literary magazines on campus. Quarels said that few could expect to do anything at the "quantities that they'd been doing them before." Be it the complexity of sets and costumes for the Theater Guild or the number of Short Cuts for this semester, Quarels seemed absolute on this fact.

Offering advice, Quarels suggested that students hoping for funding needed to be deeply involved in the Student Government Association's creation of its annual budget.

"The students working on that have such a huge job to ensure equity for the next year ahead of them," Quarels said. She said that if students wanted to protect what they had, that the SGA would be the place to turn to.

Brown recommended that students also consider www.umass.edu/funding. She said that students could use that website as a resource if they lost the funding they'd expected. Of course, she also admitted that more and more students are coming to the Arts Council for smaller slices of the pie.

But therein lies a reason for solace – at least there is somewhere to go to. The three departments chronicled in this article have nowhere to turn.

*****

Although it would be easy to do so, nobody interviewed alleged that the arts were being targeted for cuts. Rideout especially said that it was his understanding that "most departments are getting hit this badly." He conceded that few departments were losing 12 professors in one semester, but he still refused to agree with any conspiratorial allegations.

Anne Herrington, the chair of the English Department, pointed out that she had already lost 14 percent of her faculty in the last eight years.

"We've had to cancel two out of the three searches we were conducting and we are likely to lose two or three more faculty," Herrington said. "And I expect those numbers to go up to five or six."

Small numbers against Rideout's 12, but Herrington said

Turn to ARTS page 6

Bush calls for sustained vigilance

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

President George W. Bush spoke to the nation last night in his first State of the Union address.

The president emphasized America's war on terrorism, and tied the war on terrorism to his administration's domestic policies. While much of Bush's speech focused on the war, Bush also used the opportunity to describe his economic plan in greater detail.

"The state of our Union has never been stronger," Bush declared. "The American flag flies gain over our embassy in Kabul. Terrorists who once occupied Afghanistan now occupy cells in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba."

While America is "winning the war on terror," Bush said that the job was not finished yet.

"Camps still exist in a dozen countries. Thousands of dangerous killers, schooled in the methods of murder, often supported by outlaw regimes, are now spread throughout the world like ticking time bombs – set to go off without warning," Bush said. "The United States of America will not permit the world's most dangerous regimes to threaten us with the world's most destructive weapons."

Bush named three countries as dangerous regimes; North Korea, Iran, and Iraq. North Korea's missile buildups call for missile defense systems for America and it's allies, Bush said. Iran's and Iraq's hostility toward the United States will not stand, the president proclaimed.

The president also spoke on the economy and the budget he submitted to Congress.

"When America works, America prospers, so my economic security plan can be summed up in one word: jobs," Bush said. "A good job should [include] 401k and pension plans ... Employees who have worked hard and saved all their lives should not have to risk losing everything if their company fails.

"Through stricter accounting standards and tougher disclosure requirements, corporate America must be made more accountable to employees and shareholders and held to the highest standards of conduct."

The president's budget calls for huge increases in defense and security spending. Homeland security will double, and defense spending will see the largest increase in twenty years. Whether this spending will increase the deficit, the president said, is up to Congress.

"[Deficit growth will be] small in the short term so long as Congress restrains spending and acts in a fiscally responsible way," Bush said.

Bush called for a continuance of the bipartisanship he has seen since the Sept. 11 attacks. Representatives and Senators must work "not as Republicans, not as Democrats, but as Americans."

Bush acknowledged distinguished guests interim leader of Afghanistan Arhmed Karzai, and Shannon Spann, the widow of CIA agent John Michael Spann. Spann was killed in a prison

COURTESY WHITEHOUSE.GOV

President Bush spoke to the nation in his first State of the Union address yesterday.

Turn to STATE page 3

Professor awarded Fulbright

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Despite recent negative press lately about the budget problems at the University of Massachusetts, there are positive things to report taking place around campus. One piece of exciting news is that Department of Natural Resources adjunct professor Rebecca Field has been awarded a Fulbright grant.

The United States Department of State, and the J. William Fulbright Scholarship Board announced recently that Field was awarded the grant to lecture and study in Costa Rica.

Field will be in the Central American country during the months of February and March to conduct an intensive field ecology course on wildlife-habitat relationships in tropical forests. The course will be for graduate students from the National University of Costa Rica and from the five-university Latin American Studies Consortium of New England.

An avid bird lover, Field has studied many birds throughout the world in many different habitats. She has focused on old growth forest requirements for endangered woodpeckers; the effects of hunting regulations on the mourning dove population; and bird-habitat association in old development areas in northern Alaska.

Field has led studies of the endan-

Turn to FULBRIGHT page 3

TIM YIU/COLLEGIAN

Thanks Global Warming!

Seniors Kate Murphy and G. Kelly Sullivan enjoy the semi green lawn of 'winter.'

Cultural Events Calendar

PERFORMANCES

AMHERST – Celebrating Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a musical exploration of the African-American experience, will be performed by Return to the Source, a vocal and instrumental ensemble headed by Amherst alum Junius Williams, on Friday, Feb. 1, at 7:00 p.m. in Keefe Campus Center Frontroom.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A Women's Comedy Night will be held at Mount Holyoke's Blanchard Campus Center on Friday, Feb. 1 from 8:00 to 10:00 p.m. The event will feature comedians Mana Dvorich, Kelsey Elsmo, Jen Matos, Amanda Melson, Jennifer Myszkowski, and Julie Waggoner. The performances will be followed by the "One Love" dance, described under "Parties."

UMASS – The Friends of the Fine Arts Center will be holding their 15th Annual Gala on Saturday, Feb. 2 at 7:00 p.m. at Hotel Northampton. Dr. Billy Taylor, "the Ambassador of Jazz," will be honored. Performers will include the Jeff Holmes Band, percussionist Eduardo Leandro, vocalist Catherine Jensen-Hole, and Amherst College's male a capella chorus. For tickets to the event, call 545-2511.

UMASS – The Brazilian Guitar Quartet will be playing at Bowker Auditorium on Sunday, Feb. 3 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $25, $15 for general admission, $10 for 17 and under, and $7 and $5 for Five College students.
Call 545-2511 for tickets.

FILMS

AMHERST – The film From the Heart of the World: The Elder Brother's Warning will be broadcast at Bangs Community Center in Amherst on Thursday, Jan. 31 from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. The film highlights a meeting of the Kogi people in Colombia, and will be broadcast to raise funds to aid a local group in its attempts to bring the Kogi to the Amherst area. The event is free, although donations are encouraged.

UMASS – The Mad Songs of Fernanda Hussein, a film about a Mexican-American woman searching frantically for her children, will be broadcast in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 7:30 p.m. This event, part of the 9th Annual Multicultural Film Festival, is free. John Gianvito, the film's director, will be on hand to discuss it.

PARTIES

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The "One Love" Dance will be held at Mount Holyoke's Blanchard Campus Center on Friday, Feb. 1, at 10:00 p.m., following the Women's Comedy Night (described above). The dance will feature "an international mix of music and a dance floor for singles and dancing partners of all flavors." This event is free.

AMHERST – Sacueldo...Otra Vez!, a party featuring Latin dancing, will be held at Amherst College's La Casa/Seligman House on Friday, Feb. 1 from 11:00 p.m. to 3:00 a.m. This event is free for Amherst College students, and $5 for others. Dance lessons will be given from 10:00 to 11:00, preceding the party. La Casa/Seligman House is located at the corner of Lincoln St. and Route 9.

RELIGIOUS

AMHERST – An interfaith religious service celebrating the life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., will be held at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel on Sunday, Feb. 3 at 2:00 p.m. The service will be led by Msgr. Thomas Hartman and Rabbi Marc Gellman.

LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS

SMITH – Cornell University Professor Mary Katzenstein will deliver a lecture, "Communin, Identity and Social Change," in the Browsing Room of Smith's Nielson Library at 2:00 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 1. The lecture, part of the "Global Movements, Local Resistances" Conference, is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute.

SMITH – University of Connecticut Professor Nancy Naples will deliver a lecture, "Globalization and Community Activism," in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Nielson Library at 4:30 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 1. The lecture, part of the "Global Movements, Local Resistances" Conference, is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute.

SMITH – Amie Dowling, Deborah Tubar, Julie Lichtenberg and Eveline MacDougal will speak on "Art and Activism" on Saturday, Feb. 2 at 10:00 a.m. in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Nielson Library. The lecture, part of the "Global Movements, Local Resistances" Conference, is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute.

SMITH – Linda Stout author of "Bridging the Class Divide, and Other Lessons for Grassroots Organizing," will speak on "Activism and the Academy" on Saturday, Feb. 2 at 2:00 p.m. in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Nielson Library. The lecture, part of the "Global Movements, Local Resistances" Conference, is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute.

SMITH – Ione will read from her memoir, "Pride of Family: Four Generations of American Women of Color" in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Nielson Library on Monday, Feb. 4, at 4:30 p.m.

HAMPSHIRE – Hampshire College's Lebron-Wiggins-Pran Cultural Center will be holding an open house/Black History Month celebration on Tuesday, Feb. 5 at 7:00 p.m. Featured speakers are Monifa Love, an Assistant Professor of Creative Writing at Hampshire, and Judyie Al-Bilali, an Associate Professor of Theater at Hampshire College.

HAMPSHIRE – A Report Back on the World Conference Against Racism NGO Forum will be held in Franklin Patterson Hall's East Lecture Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 7:00 p.m. Social justice activists from around the U.S. will discuss the events of the forum, and the issues that arose. The speakers include Arnoldo Garcia, director of WRCAR project of the National Network for Immigrant and Refugee Rights [Oakland, California] and Aijen Poo of the Committee Against Anti-Asian Violence.

INFORMATION SESSIONS

HAMPSHIRE – An information session on paid summer internships, titled, "Summer Grants For Social Justice!" will be held at Hampshire College's Cultural Center on Monday, Feb. 4. This event is open to Five-College Students.

EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – Argentine artist Nora Valdez's exhibition, The Journey, will be on display in Hampden Gallery Lobby throughout the spring. The lobby's hours are 12:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and 2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Sunday.

UMASS – Terri Priest's exhibition, Reprise, will be displayed in the Hampden Gallery from Monday, Feb. 4 through Sunday, March 4. The exhibit is based on her experiences during the 1960s, and her vision of the Civil Rights movement.

HAMPSHIRE – "An Exhibit on the Illusion of Biological Races" will be displayed at Hampshire College's Library Gallery from Jan. 25 to Feb. 14, 2002. "If race is a biological myth," the exhibit asks, "then why do we have racism?"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semesters. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Eat sushi and take a sushi lesson for free with your YCMP.

Get free lessons on how to make sushi when you purchase a YCMP

Everyone loves sushi. So when you buy one of our incredible YCMP meal plans, we'll teach you how to make sushi. There's great value and lots of fun, but do hurry, this offer ends February 8, 2002.

For more information, visit our Meal Plan Office at the Franklin Dining Commons or visit us at the Campus Center concourse from January 28 through February8, 2002.

House passes bill to keep low interest rates for student loans

By Amanda Fletcher
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – While the current economic slump has caused the University of California Regents to consider raising student fees, the federal government took an important step in ensuring higher education remains affordable for future students.

The U.S. House of Representatives passed a bill Thursday that aims to keep interest rates low on federally granted student loans. The bill, which was passed unanimously by the Senate in December, extends the current formula for calculating interest rates on all federal student loans to 2006.

Today the interest rate stands at 5.9 percent – the lowest in history. But in 2006, the new bill will fix rates at 6.8 percent until 2012.

It now awaits President Bush's signature.

"It was very hard (to get the bill through)," said Bob Cochran, press secretary for Representative Bill McKeon, R-Calif., one of the bill's authors. "We got unanimous support at the end of the day, but a lot occurred. (There were) negotiations with student groups, the lending community and higher education groups in general, like financial aid administrators."

According to Ellynne Bannon, CALPIRG's national advocate for higher education, who helped write the bill, a typical student will save more than $600 over the life of their loan.

"This legislation is an important step in making college more affordable for millions of Americans," she said.

The bill amends the 1998 Higher Education Reauthorization compromise, which set the current formula for interest rates on student loans. Though interest rates are at an all-time low, based on reports from the White House's Office of Management and Budget, rates are expected to rise as the economy improves.

"Now it's a fairly good time to be getting loans," said Merriah Fairchild, a CALPIRG advocate for higher education in California. "It's an unusual atmosphere to have interest so low, and we know it won't last."

An interest rate of 6.8 percent would be a good deal in 2006, Bannon said.

Having the fixed interest rate held off until 2006 will allow students to take advantage of the current economic situation.

But if interest rates remain too low, lenders wouldn't make enough money to continue in the program, Cochran said.

"Lenders are in there to make money," he said. "There is limited profit, but they're still there to make money.

"There was concern at the time that if you had lenders dropping out of the program, then just the cream-of-the-crop kids – those at Stanford, UCLA and MIT – would get loans," Cochran said. "We wanted to keep them in there to be able to serve all students.

"It will allow the underserved kids to continue to receive student aid."

According to the UCLA Financial Aid Office, 42 percent of all students at UCLA received federal loans last year.

In a typical financial aid package, loans account for almost 24 percent of the money received. The average debt for UCLA students after four years of school is more than $16,000.

"It's not easy in the beginning, when you get started in the job world, so you want to keep all costs down," said Suzanne Blessington, senior administrative analyst for the UCLA Financial Aid Office. "Nobody likes to pay interest."

■ State

continued from page 1

uprising in Mazar-e Shariff.

A poll by ABC News before the speech put the president's approval rating at 85 percent.

Vice President Dick Cheney appeared on the dais with the president. It was the first time the president and vice president have appeared in public together since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

In the Democratic response to the president's address, Congressman Richard Gephardt D–Mo. promised cooperation.

"I want to commend the President for his strong and patriotic message tonight, and I can assure you of this: there were two parties tonight in the House Chamber, but one resolve," Gephardt said. "As Americans, we need to put partisanship aside and work together to solve the problems that face us."

Gephardt's remarks echoed the president's. The Democratic leader viewed the bipartisanship after Sept. 11 as a starting point, and that there should be no reason it should end.

"I refuse to accept that while we stand shoulder to shoulder on the war, we should stand toe to toe on the economy. We need to find a way to respect each other, and trust each other, and work together to solve the long-term challenges America faces. I'm ready to roll up my sleeves and go to work," Gephardt said. "That's one of the reasons I have proposed that next month, a group of leaders from both parties come together at the White House for an economic growth summit to figure out how we're going to help businesses create jobs, reduce the deficit, simplify the tax code, and grow our economy."

■ Fulbright

continued from page 1

gered Puerto Rican parrot; habitat and courtship of black ducks and mallards; and habitat selection of the American woodcock.

She has also directed a training program for natural resources professionals from other countries, especially those in Central America and Central Europe, over the past decade.

Currently, she is focusing on the ecology and management of wildlife in suburban habitats, as well as collaborating with a mammalian ecologist in a study of small mammal predation of open-nesting birds in mixed-oak forests.

Field has published several articles on wildlife-habitat associations and behavior relevant to wildlife management.

She is one of approximately 2,000 U.S. grant recipients who will travel and study abroad during the 2001-2002 academic year through the Fulbright program.

The Arkansas Senator J. William Fulbright established the Fulbright program in 1946 in order to build mutual understanding between the people of the US and the rest of the world. It is sponsored by the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the U.S. Department of State.

Fences, Bulldozers, and Cement, Oh My!

There is an abundance of constructi on on campus, despite heavy departmental budget cuts.

WANT TO WRITE FOR NEWS? COME ON DOWN AND TALK TO CATHERINE, KEN OR MELISSA!

WRITE FOR NEWS

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

SAVE $ ON TEXTBOOKS

We Have These UMass Courses At Discounted Prices

ACCTG-221-ALL	COMDIS-330-1&2	FREN-246-1	MATH-113-ALL	NURSE-326-1	PSYCH-360-1
ACCTG-222-1	COMDIS-401-1	FREN-250-1	MATH-121-1	NURSE-327-1	PSYCH-370-1
ACCTG-331-1-3	COMM-297-1	GEO-100-1	MATH-127-ALL	NURSE-331-1	PSYCH-380-1A
ACCTG-371-1&2	COMM-342-1	GEO-101-1	MATH-128-ALL	NURSE-490-1	PSYCH-391-A
AN SCI-103-1	ECE-122-1	GEO-103-1&2	MATH-131-ALL	NUTR-130-1	RES EC-102-1
ANTH-150-1	ECE-232-1	GEO-131-1-5	MATH-132-ALL	PHIL-100-1A	RES EC-140-1
ART-230-1&2	ECE-242-1	GEO-201-1	MATH-136-1	PHIL-100-2B	RES EC-211-1
ARTHIS-110-1	ECE-344-1	GER-110-ALL	MATH-233-ALL	PHYSIC-100-1	RES EC-212-1
ASTRON-100-1	ECE-354-1	GER-120-1	MATH-235-1&2	PHYSIC-114-1&2	RES EC-241-1
ASTRON-100-3	ECE-397-B	GER-230-1&2	MATH-246-1	PHYSIC-115-1	RES EC-262-1
ASTRON-101-1	ECON-104-1A	GER-240-1&2	MATH-331-1	PHYSIC-131-1	RES EC-312-1
ASTRON-105-1	ECON-104-2B&3C	HIS-115-1	MATH-331-3	PHYSIC-132-1	RES EC-324-1
BIOCHM-193-A	ECON-121-1	HIS-120-1	MATH-370-1	PHYSCI-151-1&2	SOCIOL-103-1
BIOL-101-1A&2B	ECON-204-3	HIS-140-1	MATH-455-2	PHYSIC-152-1	SOCIOL-105-1
BIOL-102-1	ECON-204-4	HIS-141-1	MGT-260-3	PHYSIC-172-1	SOCIOL-222-1A
BIOL-104-1	ECON-204-5	HIS-151-1&2	MGT-260-7	PHYSIC-261-1	SOCIOL-224-1
BIOL-283-1&2	ECON-204-6	HIS-170-1	MGT-314-2	PHYSIC-282-1	SOCIOL-241-1
BIOL-287-1	ECON-308-1	HIS-385-1	MGT-330-1&2	PHYSIC-284-1	SOCIOL-332-1
BIOL-297-A	ECON-309-1	HONORS-191-D	MGT-330-4	PLSOIL-105-1	SOCIOL-391-A
BIOL-544-1	ECON-311-1	HRTA-100-1	MGT-362-1	PLSOIL-115-1	SOM-391-A
CEE-121-1	ECON-322-1&2	HRTA-150-1	MGT-365-2	POLSCI-101-1	SOM-497-5
CEE-270-1	ED-325-1-3	HRTA-200-1-4	MGT-397-H	POLSCI-101-4N	SOM-497-A3&4
CEE-320-1	ENGL-221-1	HRTA-250-1	MICBIO-160-1	POLSCI-111-3N	SOM-497-A6&7
CEE-370-1	ENGLWP-111-ALL	HRTA-340-1&2	MICBIO-255-1	POLSCI-121-2B	SPAN-120-ALL
CHEM-261-1	ENGLWP-112-ALL	HRTA-383-1&2	MICBIO-310-1	POLSCI-255-1	SPAN-230-1
CHEM-262-1	ENGLWP-113-ALL	HUMDEV-270-1	MIE-231-1	PSYCH-100-1	SPAN-240-ALL
CHEM-269-1	EXSCI-130-1	HUMDEV-270-2,3,4	MIE-201-1	PSYCH-100-3	SPAN-246-1
CLSICS-100-1	FOMGT-301-1A	HUMDEV-270-5&6	MIE-210-1	PSYCH-240-1A	SPAN-301-ALL
CLSICS-102-1	FOMGT-304-1,2,3	ITAL-246-1	MIE-211-1	PSYCH-240-2B	SPAN-311-ALL
CLSICS-224-1	FOMGT-310-1	JOURN-335-1	MIE-213-1	PSYCH-240-3C	SPAN-312-1&2
CMPSCI-102-1	FOMGT-320-1	JOURN-391-1	MIE-230-1&2	PSYCH-241-1	SPAN-319-1&2
CMPSCI-120-1	FOMGT-353-1	LATIN-120-1-6	MIE-310-1	PSYCH-305-1	SPAN-322-1&2
CMPSCI-121-ALL	FOMGT-370-1	LING-101-1-6	MIE-313-1	PSYCH-307-1	SPAN-323-1&2
CMPSCI-250-1	FOMGT-422-1	LING-201-1	MIE-340-1	PSYCH-308-1	SPORST-202-1
CMPSCI-311-1	FREN-110-1&2	MATH-100-ALL	MIE-402-1	PSYCH-320-1	STATIS-111-1
CMPSCI-320-1	FREN-120-1-6	MATH-101-ALL	MKTG-301-1	PSYCH-330-1	STATIS-140-1
CMPSCI-589-1	FREN-240-1,2,5	MATH-102-ALL	MKTG-412-1&2	PSYCH-335-1	STATIS-297-1
COMDIS-313-1	FREN-240-4	MATH-104-ALL	MKTG491-1&2	PSYCH-350-1

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St.
Amherst, MA 01002
253-7816

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

collegianeditorial@yahoo.com 1.30.02 ed/op editor: matthew despres

Changes in our midst:

Letter from Chancellor

Welcome back. I hope Intersession went well, and you are looking forward to a good semester.

As you know, in reaction to the state's budget problems, the University increased spring semester fees by $493. Of the $8 million these fees brought in, $5 million went to increase financial aid. The rest went to maintain the academic quality of the University. You should see little if any dislocation in your courses and programs for this upcoming spring semester.

In spite of the increase in fees, other steps had to be taken to meet a $15 million shortfall. While you were away, you may have heard about some of the decisions we had to make on campus. These decisions were difficult and painful but necessary. Let me share with you the outcome of some of these decisions.

On January 18, with great regret, lay-off notices were given to 95 employees across campus. Another 100 positions have been left unfilled. Among the programs to be closed are child care, the non-police security force, the foreign language resource center, and our regional fund-raising program. Each layoff was painful, yet we made the decisions in order to preserve the central mission of the University—teaching, research, and outreach.

The entire child care unit will remain open until the end of the semester, and the flex-care program within the child care unit will remain open until 2004. We will be meeting with parents and staff to help as much as possible in this time of transition.

While the staff in the non-police security force has been laid off, we are committed to maintaining adequate, proper, and safe transportation on campus. Even though you may hear that the Escort Service and library shuttle no longer will be available, I assure you that other transportation will be provided. It will be announced shortly.

We are also doing everything possible to help our laid-off employees. Some will be able to stay at the University in other jobs. Others are eligible to participate in the state's early retirement incentive program. For those who do not have alternatives, we are offering career counseling, job search help, workshops, and personal advice. The University is and will remain grateful for their contributions.

Also, the campus is making plans to show the citizens of the state that an investment in UMass should be a priority. In conjunction with the Alumni Association, we are planning a UMass Day at selected libraries across the Commonwealth. We are also working to educate volunteers, including students, parents, faculty, staff, alumni, and others, on communicating the University's story to the Legislature.

On a more positive note, while you were away, construction of the Isenberg School of Management facility continued. I can see the construction site from my office window, and every day the building changes and brings us closer to completion. Work has also begun on the site for the second part of the computer science and engineering complex. [These projects] tell me that the University will keep building for the future, even in these difficult financial times. I look forward to the entire community working together to build toward this future.

Marcellette G. Williams, Chancellor

When the locker room turns to the courtroom:

Examining the growing trend of violence in sports

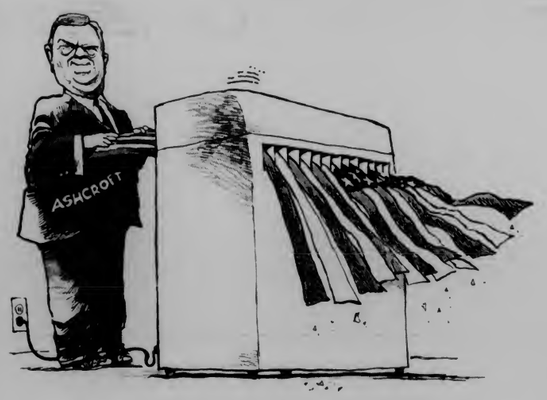
SEAN JACQUET

Everybody knows the story. Thomas Junta, the 44-year-old father of a youth hockey player, complained to his son's hockey coach, 40-year-old Michael Costin, that the scrimmage had become too rough. Costin ignored Junta's concerns, saying, "that's the game of hockey." The two exchanged words, had to be separated, and Junta was asked to leave the rink. Junta waited outside the rink until practice was over, when the two renewed hostilities. This time, Costin was the aggressor and the confrontation turned physical. Minutes later Costin lay dead from a severed spinal artery after Junta, who his lawyer described as a "gentle giant," repeatedly smashed his head against the concrete.

This case has exposed one of the most disturbing trends in America: violence in youth sports. While this is the most extreme example, by no means is this an isolated incident. Far too often in America parents take youth sports too seriously. Parents no longer hesitate to confront coaches or referees when dissatisfied over playing time, officiating or coaching strategy. Discussions often turn heated and sometimes, violent. The violence is what worries me most.

Parents have been complaining since their children have played sports. "My kid doesn't play enough." "The coach's kid plays the whole game." "The refs suck tonight." You know what I'm talking about. Those complaints used to be simple mutterings after the game between frustrated parents. Only recently has violence entered the equation. Whether it's a brawl in a handshake line, coaches striking opposing players, or a parent beating a coach to death, this much is clear: things have gotten way out of hand. One example that sticks out in my mind, aside from the beating death of Michael Costin, occurred in a championship pee-wee football game involving seven and eight-year-old players. After a fumble, one team's linebacker scooped up the ball and appeared headed for the go-ahead touchdown. The opposing coach refused to allow this, charging onto the field and blindsiding the seven-year-old. Watching footage of a grown man, a coach no less, tackle a seven-year-old to prevent a loss in a pee-wee football game provided quite a laugh. This guy was obviously a stooge that took the game far too seriously. Then I realized that this incident, while not fatal, is indicative of the more serious problem.

When did things become so out of control? We've come to expect unreasonable tirades from professional sports. Hall of Famer Ty Cobb once charged into the stands at Tiger Stadium to pummel a crippled heckler. Albert Belle once fired a baseball at a photographer, striking him on the face. Dennis Rodman, who has no shortage of ridiculous behavior, kicked a cameraman in the crotch for no apparent reason after diving out of bounds for a loose ball. Pro athletes erupt so often, it's old news. Bench-clearing brawls and lengthy tirades have become commonplace. While I certainly don't condone violence in sports, these athletes play sports for a living all the while under intense media scrutiny. So much is riding on these games: TV ratings, ticket sales, contract extensions, fan support, salary, etc. Sometimes the pressure becomes too great for these men and women and they crack. I don't support that type of behavior, but I can understand the occasional outburst from a pro athlete.



"...Although only one man has died, that's one man too many..."

Youth sports don't have the same pressures as pro athletics, or at least they shouldn't. Youth sports should emphasize player development and fun, which is a reason kids play sports. Overzealous parents have turned youth sports into a battleground, replacing the fun of the game with a pressure few kids can deal with. Competition has intensified with sportsmanship all but disappearing. How can parents promote good sportsmanship when they can't even behave themselves? Dealing with other kids on the playing field is hard enough for most young athletes. Kids shouldn't have to witness their parents arguing with coaches, or their father being beaten to death as Michael Costin two sons did. Until kids reach high school, sports should emphasize development rather than winning. Parents, as a whole, need to relax. Youth coaches, most of whom are volunteers, shouldn't have to deal with a bunch of Vince Lombardi "wannabes" telling them how to run their team, or threatening their safety. This behavior is not only violent, but also counter-productive. What kind of example is being set for these kids? Parents must learn to deal with the fact that what is happening on the court is out of their control. They certainly don't have the right to express their displeasure violently. This trend now has a death toll. Although only one man has died, that's one man too many.

As for Junta, a jury convicted him of involuntary manslaughter, and he now faces six to 10 years in prison. Did Junta get what he deserved? It's tough to say. Regardless, a man is dead by his hands. Michael Costin died during a fight caused by Junta's displeasure over Costin's failure to limit fighting during a youth hockey practice. It is ironic that Junta's complaint about excessive violence eventually led him to murder a man. Still, the most glaring issue remains the overall condition of violence in youth sports. Have parents learned their lesson? Time will tell, but in the meantime, just remember the advice that I and many other kids have been told when we take sports too seriously: "It's just a game."

Sean Jacquet is a UMass student.

SHRED, WHITE AND BLUE

BRIAN LOHNES '02

WRITE 4 ED-OP

Toasting the exquisite University palette:

Lessons in inexpensive "wine" drinking

BRIAN LOHNES

Ok, you already know the scenario: you are in. You've just come back from winter break. You have been working and making some cash to spend this semester, or your parents have just added to your bank account allowance. Here's a tip from a seasoned vet: the money goes fast, like crack addict fast. Where does it go? Let's see... booze, food, booze and booze. Don't forget about the upcoming spring break trip you are taking, too. Before you burst into tears, listen close. I figured out a way to have your booze and have a couple of pesos in the process. I now present to you a list of wines and things claiming to be wines that you can get for under five dollars and mostly under four dollars a bottle. I assembled a panel of wine tasting experts like Collegian Style File writer Shauna Billings and other folks who tip the bottle a little harder than they should.

Bottle 1: Wild Vine Strawberry White Zinfandel. Cost: $3.69 a bottle. Smells like strawberries and has a crisp strawberry taste. It is really sweet and actually tastes a lot like a strawberry sauce. Billings says, "Smells pink, tastes pink." Rating on a scale to 5? 3

Bottle 2: Fox Horn White Zinfandel. Cost: $3.99 a bottle. My impression? "Smells like Champagne and tastes like urine." Others thought it tasted like the taste you have in your mouth after you vomit. Rating on a scale to 5? 1.4

Bottle 3: Santa Ana Mendoza a Merlot. Cost: $3.99 a bottle. This bottle was doomed from the start. The cork jammed its way back down inside the bottle and made pouring a difficult if not dangerous proposition. This stuff was bad with a capital Mendoza. Kerri said, "I want to wretch on the smell of it. It reminds me of wine in the box without Sprite in it." This stuff was imported from Argentina and we have begun a letter writing campaign to the Argentinean government. Ben asks, "Why do we import this stuff from Argentina?" If I only knew. On a scale of 5? 1

Bottle 4: Livingston Cellars Blush Chablis. Cost $5.99 a bottle. Problems from the beginning on this one because I thought I pushed the cork down into the bottle. Luckily for us, under the wrapping there was a screw off cap. Classy eh? The smell of this stuff wasn't as bad as the last one. I said, "Taste is not good. Sweet at first and then like liquor at the end." Kerri said, "I do not hate the wine and I give it a 3."

Bottle 5: Colour Volant. Cost: $3.99. This was the only wine in the group that actually came from France, the place where they invented wine and beret hats. This stuff was so dark I thought the bottle it was in was tinted but it turned out to be the color of the wine. I said, "The smell could stop a truck. It is Santa Ana made worse." This stuff sucked all moisture out of my mouth and throat. Ben said, "The took Santa Ana and tried to make it worse, and it worked." Rating on a scale to 5? 4

Bottle 6: Robert's Rock Chardonnay. Cost: $3.99. This is a white wine from South Africa, I say, "Jesus. It is sweet when it hits your tongue and then rips down your throat drying the hell out of it all the way down." All of the reviewers agreed this was awful. Kerri really hated it, "The smell reminded me of that person in one of your classes who you know hasn't showered in days and then they get up and leave their stench on the seat." We all agreed that it reminded us of dirty people or bath water. Rating on a scale to 5? 1.2

Bottle 7: Chardonnay Rubicone. Cost: $5.99. Talk about dangerous! People were hurt when we opened this bottle. The cork pushed through about half way down the neck of the bottle. I tried to push it all the way through and in doing so, caused a high-pressure jet of wine to come out and shot Kerri directly in the eye. After several tense moments, and her screaming at me, we continued with the test. This crap tastes like it was made out of lemons or it might have been a bottle filled with distilled Italian urine. That might be the reason that Ben liked it. No one else did. Rating on a scale to five? 3

Bottle 8: Richards Wild Irish Rose. Cost: $3.99. Ok, calling this stuff wine is really a stretch, but it says wine on the front. This swill is made in New York, I said, "This stuff smells like it could peel paint." After I drank it I actually gagged. Kerri said, "This stuff looks like something that someone would sell out of a wagon in the 1800's to cure arthritis and headaches." This stuff was truly hideous and it was agreed that it was the worst one in the entire group. Make no mistake, "Richard's Wild Irish Rose is booze, hooch, hard stuff. It is not wine. Rating on a scale to 5? 0.0.

There you have it. The entire test of the cheapest wine on hand in the Montague general store. Why there? Because it was Sunday and that's the only place around that sells go-go juice on the Sabbath. As you can see, getting drunk can be done for pennies on the dollar, all the more reason to save your cash for more important things, like bail money for your spring break trip to Mexico.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

collegianarts@yahoo.com 1.30.02 arts editor: mike delano

I Am Sam, Sam I Am

COURTESY NEW LINE TELECTIONS

Michelle Pfeiffer is not Sam...

By Jake D. Lewis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

I AM SAM
Starring Sean Penn and Michelle Pfeiffer
Directed by Jessie Nelson

Sean Penn's brilliant performance in I Am Sam as a man with the mental capacity of a seven-year old, is not only another example of his terrific skill as one of Hollywood's most underrated talents, but also what carries the movie out of the "ain't that adorable" territory and into places where it registers more deeply with its audiences.

Penn pulls on your heartstrings when Sam's child-like brain finally understands that the court wants to take his daughter Lucy away from him for good to live in a "normal" family where the parents are smarter than their children, and not the other way around. In the lighter, more comical moments of the film, like when Sam is trying to record an "outgoing" message on his new answering machine, Penn magically transports the audience into Sam's world, where the simplest things are the hardest, candidly showing how innocent his life truly is. Generally, though, the feeling that resides the most in the audience's mind and soul is the bittersweet quality to the film, for as much as we all want Sam to get Lucy back, somewhere in the corner of our minds the fact looms that it may be best for her to stay with the foster/adoptive family.

In the hands of another actor, like Giovanni Ribisi in 1999's similarly-themed The Other Sister, it is possible that Sam would not be as endearing, and perhaps even slightly derogatory of people with mental handicaps. If this were the case, the audience wouldn't feel as torn as they do when the final verdict comes in, or even root for the foster family. And while this humble reporter doesn't know anyone with such a handicap as Sam's, it would appear that Penn never insults or degrades people of that demographic. It's a compassionate performance filled with utmost respect, only matched by the likes of Tom Hanks as the titular title character in Forrest Gump or Dustin Hoffman's Raymond in Rain Man.

Yet for all that Sam fails to comprehend, he manages to understand things that are too minute for the average person. He sees that the marriage of his lawyer Rita Harrison (Michelle Pfeiffer) is destructive, and as it goes, it is taking her son down with it. The concept of a mentally handicapped person saving the day might be overdone, but Sam never preaches to the lawyer, he only stews in the unease of the scenario as any small child might. When all is said and done, though, actions speak louder than words, illustrated in one of the film's climactic moments, Harrison admits, "I think I've gotten more out of this case than you have."

Pfeiffer is better than usual in the movie, actually showing how she can still stretch as an actress every once in a great while. The last time I saw her play so unique a role was as the lusty vixen in 1994's Wolf. Since then, she's become accustomed to playing the pouty and conflicted housewife (see Deep End of the Ocean for an example). She's shed that skin here, leaving herself in a vulnerable position, which works magnificently in this film. She truly is a woman with nothing left to lose, and it's probably because of that quality that she can understand Sam. Both of them are losing everything they hold dear in their lives, and they can only get by with a little help from each other.

Turn to SAM page 7

COURTESY NEW LINE TELECTIONS

...but Sean Penn is in I Am Sam.

Jewel's new album falls flat

Jewel's new album tells tales of potatoes and cowpokes.

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

JEWEL
this way
Atlantic Records

This way is the perfect way to lull into a fitful sleep, filled with harrowing dreams of men who look like vegetables riding around on the open range and capturing cattle. Confused? Who isn't when they listen to Jewel's nonsense lyrics?

I'm not sure whether Jewel is just crazy, or trying too hard to make a statement, but her lyrics on this way lack substance. Case in point – from the song "Jesus Loves You" come the lyrics "Showing ta-tas on the TV is Ok." One could, with a lot of finesse and finagling, attempt to argue the lyric's satirical validity. But they would be wrong. It's just weird. As is "Spivey Leeks was a drip of a man/ he looked like a potato shoved into jeans" from the oh-so-country-music "Everybody Needs Someone Sometime." Strike One for wacky lyrics.

Strike Two? Most of the songs are just plain boring. The CD is difficult to Turn to JEWEL page 6

Count of Monte Cristo swashbuckling fun

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO
Directed by Kevin Reynolds
Starring Guy Pearce and Jim Caviezel
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

It's hard to imagine there was a pressing need to do another cinematic version of The Count of Monte Cristo, especially one that doesn't attempt any kind of radical reinvention of the material. Alexandre Dumas' classic tale of revenge and innocence lost has been given the theatrical treatment at least four times, has been the subject of countless TV and stage productions, and now gets lavish new screen treatment in a serviceable, well-mounted movie fit for a Saturday matinee.

The director, Kevin Reynolds, is a vivid action director, but his career has washed up on the shoals of red flag moviemaking ever since directing those twin Kevin Costner thudders Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves and Waterworld. But Reynolds has an ability to stage a deft swordfight and his Dumas-inspired swashbuckler isn't an embarrassment, unlike last fall's Peter Hyams-directed The Musketeer.

Edmond Dantes (Jim Caviezel) is an earnest youth with a perfect life: the son of a poor merchant, he's been promoted from second mate to captain, has the love of the beautiful Mercedes (Dagmara Dominczyck) and the friendship of Fernand Mondego (Guy Pearce), the son of a count. On a side trip to the Italian isle of Elba, Edmond meets the exiled Napoleon, who asks the young man to deliver a personal letter. Back in Marseilles, Edmond is accused of treason by a jealous Mondego, arrested and sent by the prosecutor Villefort (James Frain) to the prison island of Chateau D'If. His family is told he has been executed.

For years, Edmond is left to rot in jail, plotting revenge and suffering annual floggings at the hands of the warden (Michael Wincott). Then one day the Abbe Faria (Richard Harris, basically redoing his wizardly role from Harry Potter only without magic) literally crawls out from the floor. The old priest was attempting an escape but burrowed in the wrong direction, and now offers Edmond a deal: he will teach the young how to be a gentleman, a scholar and a fighter if Edmond helps the old man to escape. In addition, Faria will give Edmond a map to a legendary treasure. Edmond does escape, joins forces with the pirate Jacopo (Luis Guzman, providing the comic relief), whose life Edmond saves, and finds the treasure. The final act has Edmond reinventing himself as the dashing Count of Monte Cristo, using his new identity to seek his revenge. And death is too good for those who did him wrong.

An entertainingly old-fashioned adventure, The Count of Monte Cristo lives by its acting and stunt work. Caviezel, with his hauntingly piercing blue eyes, is a good fit for Dantes. He doesn't sleepwalk as he did in Angel Eyes, instead taking Edmond from callow young man to cynical avenger with nary a missed beat. Pearce is more mincing than intimidating as Mondego, but Pearce has gleeful fun with the role (it's a complete 180 from his subdued turn in Memento). Guzman steals the

Turn to COUNT page 6

COURTESY SPYGLASS ENTERTAINMENT/TOUCHSTONE

The passion, the drama, the swordplay – it's all in The Count of Monte Cristo.

Count

continued from page 5

show whenever he gets to crack a joke. The role of Mercedes is lackluster, and directors almost always cast beautiful but vapid girls in these kinds of roles, even if the girls can barely carry a slasher film. Dominczyk certainly seems to be on par with the course (she's beautiful, she's unknown...), but she's actually quite good as Mercedes, even if she can't give the role the kind of import necessary to give the character a full body. Wilcott can now officially join the typecasting hall of fame.

It was smart to make Mondego Edmond's childhood friend, giving the character a shade of complexity. What wasn't smart was to allow some blissfully camp moments to seep through. Like when Mercedes discovers Edmond's ruse, learns about his past and still asks with sincerity, "Did you suffer?" Like when the elderly Faria can teach sword fighting to Dantes, even though both are on starvation diets. Why do Edmond and Faria spend years tunneling through when they could just try to bust down the rotting cell doors? Why does Iacopo have a Bronx accent? It's moments like these when you realize Monte Cristo isn't as smart as it could be. But the swordfights are exciting, the movie is nice to look at and as rousing adventures go, there could be worse.

Jayce Bartok (right) and Gin Pearce (left) find a new way to thresh wheat in The Count of Monte Cristo.

COURTESY SPYGLASS ENTERTAINMENT

Jewel

continued from page 5

pay attention to, as the mind begins to wander (perhaps in part due to wondering about that strange little potato mom) after listening to just three songs. Jewel alternates between gentle, slow songs like "Break Me" and "I Won't Walk Away" and the painful twangs of country croons like "Cleveland" and "Leave Me Just Leave Me Alone." Yet, despite the alternating genres, there is absolutely no excitement. Apparently, Jewel is not someone who can be handled in large doses.

A few of Jewel's songs are listener friendly (assuming you're the kind of listener who prefers not to listen to cowboy songs). "Standing Still" has a sweet and catchy chorus – but any enjoyment that could have been garnered from the song has been sucked dry by constant radio airtime. Beware of future annoying overplay of "Break Me" and possibly the title track, "This Way." They may not be the best songs ever, but since they are official Jewel tracks, they'll join the ranks of much better songs like "Who Will Save Your Soul" and "Jupiter."

Strike Three? That would have to be the inane cultish chanting throughout "Serve the Ego." I wouldn't be surprised if airplay of this song resulted in Kool-Aid sales rising at an alarming rate. Beware of vacant-eyed Jewelites with buzzed hair, strumming acoustic guitars next to Spivey Leeks inspired Mr. Potato Head idols (if this reference is beyond you, work on your reading comprehension... or just refer back to paragraph two).

So, this way? Unless you have an affinity for potatoes, bizarre lyrics or country music... and/or you suffer from insomnia, just run the other way.

arts

continued from page 5

she expects to lose at least 15 offered classes in the fall semester.

"We already have students desperately scrambling for classes now," she said. "If we take further hits, we will not be able to offer sufficient instruction to our majors and if that's the case, then we have to seriously consider closing whole programs."

Each additional retirement brings more canceled classes, Herrington said.

"We know the axe will fall," Mark Dean, the business manager of the Theater department, said. "We're just waiting for it."

Dean said that his department will suffer a five percent budget cut next year. He expects possible cuts to the budget for teaching assistants. This would negatively affect the department's ability to produce shows or fully implement the Theater major. The number of shows produced may also be affected. Currently, the department produces five shows every year. Next year, they may be forced into producing only four.

As if enough art hasn't been affected enough, the Fine Arts Center is still trying to schedule for upcoming semesters while available budgets are somewhere in the ether.

Marie Hess, the director of administration and finance for the Fine Arts Center, expressed the same immediate concern that Rideout and Herrington have about positions lost due to early retirement. Because of lack of money, retiring faculty cannot be replaced. Although she does not yet know which programs will be affected, Hess said that the each program will be equally cut. Allocations for facilities will also be reduced.

But in terms of the now, it is morale that has been most affected.

"This atmosphere is very discouraging to work in," said Hess. "It's discouraging to see people get laid off, and to see people in leadership positions leaving."

This is especially disheartening considering the comfort that the students and valley residents have found in the arts since Sept. 11. Although art across the nation has suffered since then, arts in the valley have flourished. Unlike many New York venues, the Fine Arts Center has experienced no drop off in ticket sales.

"Our community likes to get together around art," said Hess. "It relies on the arts."

Shawn Farley, director of marketing for the Fine Arts Center, expressed concern that the cuts combined with the student fee increase will prevent people from having access to the arts.

Not everything will be affected, however. Farley reported that student ticket prices would remain the same. Currently, student tickets cost from $5 to $10. "We'll keep art accessible," she said.

Like the other campus groups, the details just aren't clear. The loss of faculty is immediate, but most of the impact has yet to be seen.

"It looks like we'll be able to struggle through the spring semester, but the longer term is uncertain," said Dean. "It's so abstract right now. We're not in the loop. We don't know what will be affected."

*****

And there it is – everywhere on campus, like everything else, arts is getting badly burned by the budget. Existing $15 million from the UMass budget is nearly impossible unless everyone takes a hit.

Asked about the possibility for things getting worse, Rideout turned concise again.

"I have only been here for three years, but anytime that I've alleged that the worst has already occurred, something worse happens," Rideout said.

As for predictions for the bleak future he is facing, Rideout was quiet again.

"At this point, the impact of these cuts is severe that I could not begin to answer a question about impact for another 30-45 days," Rideout said. "We just found out today about the 12 retirements. We're still stuck in shock."

Who isn't?

Guest choreographers like Terry Orich won't be coming to UMass this semester, due to budget cuts.

the FRESH CUTS

Your alternative music source.

9.99 SAVES THE DAY Stay What You Are

9.99 STARSAILOR Love Is Here

10.99 PETE YORN Musicforthemorningafter

11.99 STEREOPHONICS Just Enough Education To Perform

13.99 GREEN DAY International Superhits!

13.99 TENACIOUS D Tenacious D

13.99 BRUCE COCKBURN Anything Anytime Anywhere Singles 1979-2000

13.99 GET UP KIDS Eudora

MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.
Sale ends February 9, 2002. www.mediaplay.com

www.dailycollegian.com

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

1000's of Choices

Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Jan. 28 thru Fri. Feb. 1
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM

Incredible Selection

CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!

MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8

Sam

continued from page 5

COURTESY NEW LINE PICTURES

"I think I'll go for a walk outside..." Cast members of I Am Sam step out on the town with ballyns.

I Am Sam wouldn't work its magic without a charismatic actress to play opposite Penn as Sam's daughter Lucy, and toe-headed newcomer Dakota Fanning makes an impressive big-screen debut. (OK, she was the "Little Girl In the Park" in last year's Tomcats, but I digress). While her role may not equate to an overnight sensation, be it her desire, this certainly won't be the last we see of Ms. Fanning. Her big, blue eyes are absorbing, and she displays a talent well beyond her years, both as an actress and as the character. Lucy is smarter than Sam, that is certain, but she is able to pinpoint the ultimate point of the court case as well as the moral of the movie: "All you need is love."

The Beatles references don't end there, and in addition to a solid soundtrack of cover songs of The Fab Four's, Sam seems to be able to make the most sense of his world by relating it to something dealing with the band. For instance, when he takes the stand in court and tries to explain why Lucy should live with him, he spouts off some story about how Yoko Ono was John Lennon's muse, and how Lucy is his. Or something like that. While it doesn't exactly add up, at least right away, it's this autistic quality of Sam's that show his capacity for intellect and knowledge.

The logic of these Beatles references may be a bit muddled at times, but overall the script succeeds. Jessie Nelson, who not only co-wrote I Am Sam but also directs, in the latter department there leaves a little bit more to desired. At times, some scenes are too long and irrelevant to the forward motion of the movie. In one such scene, set in the courtroom, there is a longer-than-necessary five minutes of legal banter that hold no bearing to the overall structure of the film. Each scene by itself supports the movie, but within many of them, there could be several minutes that could have been chopped and left on the cutting-room floor.

That's not to mention, also, all of the product placement found in the film. Starbucks Coffee is prominently displayed throughout, as well as Pizza Hut, Payless Shoe Source and a plethora of others. This is an acquired distaste, however, and cannot be held too strictly against a movie who's budget is probably less than one semester of classes here, and needed some financial backing due to its sensitive subject matter.

A movie that makes you laugh, cry and entertain is not commonplace, but I Am Sam is a triple-threat that sneaks under the radar and makes a splash. With dazzling performances all around, I Am Sam gives off all the love you look for in motion pictures.

Elliott Smith guests on the Royal Tenenbaums soundtrack.

Dream Theater releases the follow-up to their excellent Metropolis Pt. II: Scenes From A Memory.

Adios theater? Royal Head?

ADIOS PANTALONES
Adios Pantalones
Cheek Sneek

Adios Pantalones, outside of having the greatest band name ever, actually delivers somewhat on the carefree, jam-happy promise of their moniker. Like their spiritual brothers-in-arms Who's The Fat Guy?, AP finds a way to let loose while maintaining a fairly focused approach to experimentation and free-floating improvisation.

Funk-infused drums and bass is the skeleton of the AP operation, with extremely talented players at the helm. Their MO is essentially a groovy, smoky club-ready beat, withholding any attention grabbing show-offs but adding a flourish here and there lest the listener takes them for granted. Guitars, horns, even flutes show up for accents here and there, but are too often reluctant to spout anything flashy, instead simply appearing and receding so the train doesn't stray too far from the sometimes frustratingly narrow tracks the drums and bass lay down.

Therein lies the biggest problem, muchachos. It's frequently destination: unknown with the meandering song structures, which can be pretty close to heaven in a dark club at 2 a.m. in full this-moment-could-last-forever mode, but on CD is closer to aimless and confused. Toss in lyrics that too often are Barry Horowitz-style pats on the back about being lost in their own "phat beats," and AP's gaze comes off as much more inward than onward.

Not to say the hooks of AP's perpetual groove aren't sharp, however, as it's easy to get snared over the course of these seven tracks. The tight and comparatively aggressive "Sonic" is a stand-out amongst some of the bloat, but AP is a long van ride away from anything resembling pop, with the catchy breakdowns of "Time Machine" coming closest. Time has come for the Pantalones to say adios to the ironically restrictive tendencies of jamband wanderings and bust out the rock star poses they got in 'em. (Michael Delano)

THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS
Original Soundtrack
Hollywood

If Wes Anderson were a student at UMass, I think he'd live in Central (not that I'm trying to stereotype). Anyone who's familiar with Anderson's offbeat comedies (Bottle Rocket, Rushmore, and most recently The Royal Tennenbaums) could recognize his cool-geek style from a mile away. This style is also the primary fashion in which he puts together his soundtracks. With Rushmore the theme was a boy-meets-girl-boy-falls-in-love type deal. Mark Mothersbaugh's scoring for the film was perfect the way it fit with Max Fischer's character and Anderson's directing.

The musical methods of The Royal Tennenbaums soundtrack are no different, and thus, just as effective. Anderson's latest film is the opus of a family of genius children, who were betrayed by their father at one point or another during their youth, and the efforts of that father, to put things back together. That leaves the soundtrack to fit Anderson's mold of depression and angst without being too moody or aurally unforgiving.

The good news is Mothersbaugh's original score hits the mark; it's not exactly classical fashion is endearing and mod at the same time. And if you've seen The Royal Tennenbaums it's easy to see that it's cohesive with the film, as it seeps with the angst of all of the young Tennenbaums. Another thing that's great about it is that unlike the majority of soundtracks that have come along with movies recently, it's not one of those big artist soundtracks that parallels a NOW album with it's collection of hooky singles that make the movie look good in a commercial.

The Royal Tennenbaums is perfect for listening to when studying or doing work, as its non-instrumental tracks aren't intrusive. They're mostly punk-folk ranging from Elliott Smith to the Clash. The album is not only effective in the movie, but enjoyable listening for anyone who enjoys Anderson's unusual taste and style. (Ian Beck)

DREAM THEATER
Six Degrees of Inner Turbulence
Elektra

Prog-metal kingpins Dream Theater were destined from the beginning to release 1999's massive, brilliant Metropolis Pt. II: Scenes From A Memory. The band has always favored long, complex, and shifting song structures, lengthening their compositions and narratives into song sequels, crafting the 23-minute epic "A Change of Seasons" and eventually Scenes From A Memory, an entire album based on a single, compelling story. The question after that album was can the Dream Theater sound get any bigger?

Six Degrees of Inner Turbulence amazingly answers that question with a yes, although bigger in this case isn't necessarily better. The two discs are split into a five-song set and the 42-minute uber-epic "Six Degrees of Inner Turbulence." The five songs on Disc One are all self-contained, but don't go lookin' for anything as quick and to the point as say "Burning My Soul" since even track one ("The Glass Prison," the highlight of the album) is a three-part odyssey of reflection, restoration, and revelation."

"Six Degrees of Inner Turbulence," in its eight parts, examines mental problems and the anxiety of separation from "normal" society. Written in pieces by guitarist John Petrucci and drummer extrordinaire Mike Portnoy, the piece starts with a whimsical overture and the impending doom of "About To Crash," about an overworked and overpressured teenage girl. "War Inside My Head" and "The Test That Stumped Them All" are the darkest and most aggressive sections lyrically and musically, capturing the conflicting forces shaping a teenage boy's future.

Overall, as with the first disc, overdone writing and James LaBrie's inconsistent vocal delivery together with a lack of hooks keeps it from the same success as Scenes From A Memory but, as always, the musicianship and ambition are staggering. There aren't many bands in any genre brave enough to plea for compassion for those with mental problems and admit confusion in their stance on stem-cell research in the span of a single album. Even bit as accomplished as Lateralus but without as dynamic a singer or intentionally ambiguous lyrics, Six Degrees of Inner Turbulence deserves the same critical attention as that overrated darling, but as Dream Theater has learned through many fine albums, respect from the unconverted is a tall wall to climb. (Michael Delano)

significant others

MUSHROOMHEAD
XX
Universal Records

Dear Slipknot,

We're coming for you Slipknot. We've decided that your stay atop the plastic-mask wearing metal band heap has come to an end. No more will fans rock out to your pathetic attempts at "music" if can even be called that.

Instead, they will know only the name Mushroomhead. Far better than a name for a type of Boy Scouts rope tie, Mushroomhead is the horribly realized vision of a creature with the body of a man and the head of a fungus.

They will know our music as well – our mix of basic thrash sequences seamlessly sewn to Marilyn Manson's melodic screaming. Furthermore, Skinny's Mom totally bought him a second bass drum. Feel the wrath of our double dose of power pounding.

Who will remember Slipknot after they hear "Bwomp" or "Xeroxed" or "Fear Held Death" about this one time that Gravy totally almost choked on a Pixie Stick? Furthermore Slipknot, if the ladies loved you for your lyrical stylings, just wait until they hear "Chancre Sore."

If you can handle it, our lyrics: "Self Absorbed Chancre Sore Love You Like a Matador Life Is Just A Metaphor Nothings Fair In Love And War Nothing More Love You Like A Matador Nothing More." That's right Slipknot – no more sissy commas for us real rockers. Furthermore, we don't waste our time with capitalization because we're hardcore like the time I Mann drank three Mountain Dews.

Finally, in case you'd forgotten, our plastic masks are much nicer than yours. Where yours are sweaty and disgusting, ours are sleek pieces of polymer. Fear our stitched on mouths and the eye holes that Bronson's wack Mom sewed for us.

Remember your time on top of the heap Slipknot – it has passed. Now is the time for Mushroomhead.

Sincerely,
Gravy, I Mann, Skinny, Pig Benis, Stitch, Shmotz, Jeffrey Nothing and Bronson.

(Editor's note: Pig Benis? Seriously?) (Sam Wilkinson)

WRITE FOR ARTS! WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS! WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS! WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!
WRITE FOR ARTS!

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 8
367 Russell St. 413-587-2231
schedule for Fri. 1/25 - Thurs. 1/31
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

I Am Sam (PG13) 12:05 4:15 7:15 10:25*	Orange County (PG13) 12:05 4:35 7:10 9:50
Kung Pow (PG13) 12:50 3:55 7:40 9:55*	The Royal Tenenbaums (R) 12:20 4:10 7:30 10:30
The Count of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:30 10:05*	A Beautiful Mind (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
The Mothman Prophecies (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*	Lord Of the Rings (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
A Walk To Remember (PG) 12:15 4:30 7:35 10:20*	Ocean's Eleven (PG13) 7:35 10:15
Black Hawk Down (R) 12:30 3:50 7:10 10:25*	Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone (PG) 12:15 3:30
Snow Dogs (PG) 12:10 4:05 7:05 9:45	* no passes/super-savers

cinemark.com

TRIP-ON SKI STARTING AT $996!

council travel SPRINGBREAK 02

44 MAIN STREET
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-256-1261

800-2COUNCIL COUNCILTRAVEL.COM

Huddle now for a 'Super' Bowl Sunday

NEWMAN CENTER
@ UMASS

Super Bowl Sunday

February 3, 2002

Mass
@
8am and 10:30am
4pm and 7pm

Super Bowl Party
will begin at 5:30pm

Come and enjoy!

ALL STAFF MEETING

6.30

.2/4

Amber Sneed and the rest of the Minutewomen held Rhode Island to only 43 points.

GERALDINE COLLEGIAN

Rams butt UMass out of Mullins

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Looking at the numbers, it was obvious that Monday's matchup between the Massachusetts women's basketball team and the Rhode Island Rams was going to be a defensive struggle.

URI had stifled opponents to the tune of only 58.0 points per contest through its first 18 games, while UMass was not far behind, giving up an average of only 59.9 points despite opening the season with a 5-13 record.

Rhode Island	43
UMass	41

However, neither team had put up big numbers on the offensive end, and a combination of stingy defense and woeful shooting led to the lowest scoring game of the season for the Minutewomen, a 43-41 loss to the Rams.

"It's not that hard to make an open 15-foot jump shot," Maroon and White coach Joanie O'Brien said after watching her squad shoot an atrocious 29 percent from the field. "You just need a person to step up and have the guts to make [it], and tonight that didn't happen. You could see it in their faces and you could see it in their eyes."

Confounding the problem for the Minutewomen was that Rhode Island played a type of matchup zone for all 40 minutes, in which it sagged to the middle in an attempt to stop the UMass post attack.

This forced the guards to hit their open shots, and unfortunately for the Maroon and White, the backcourt trio of Katie Nelson, Monique Govan and Ebony Pegues failed to deliver, going a combined 14-for-15 from the floor.

"The percentages say they are a weaker outside shooting team and their post will kill you," URI coach Belinda Pearman said. "So we were trying to force a different look each time down court so that they couldn't get into a rhythm."

This strategy seemed to work to perfection and forced 26 Maroon and White turnovers, despite the fact Rhode Island was only employing its zone for the second time all year.

Even though it was completely out shot, however, one area in which UMass clearly won the battle was on the glass. The Maroon and White hauled down 39 boards to the Rams' 18, but it only translated into 17 second chance points and did nothing to impress coach O'Brien.

"Rebounds are irrelevant if you can't put the ball in the basket," the eleventh year coach said. "What jumps out at me is that our guards gave us nothing offensively."

Despite all of the problems, though, the Minutewomen were able to keep the score close for the game's duration, and even had some chances to win in the final minute of play.

With 48 seconds left, Nekole Smith grabbed an offensive rebound and laid it in for two of her 12 points, bringing her team within two. On the next possession URI failed to score, but UMass couldn't capitalize on the situation when a Smith turnaround jumper rimmed out with only five ticks on the clock.

Still down by two, the Maroon and White got one more chance to score with 3.8 seconds left, but an errant Nelson pass to Jennifer Butler was intercepted as time expired.

"[Nelson] is young, and she probably doesn't know yet just how long 3.8 seconds can be," O'Brien said about her freshman guard.

For UMass, Butler was the main offensive threat, totaling 16 points and grabbing 11 rebounds, while Shayla Johnson led the Ram attack with 14 points on 5-for-7 shooting. Neda Djuric also played well at the point for Rhode Island, controlling the pace of the game and picking up 11 points of her own.

The Minutewomen will next compete tomorrow at home against Dayton. Tip off is slated for 7 p.m.

■ hoop

continued from page 12

score in the next five minutes. Marshall's two free throws at the 3:40 mark finished off a 15-0 Dayton run to extend the Flyer lead to 36-11.

"Every now and then we'll shoot the lights out and we shot it well in the first half so we were able to get some separation," said Dayton coach Oliver Purnell, whose squad connected on 14-of-22 (64 percent) of its shots in the first half. "The we came out in the second half and did the same thing from the beginning. We had a few spotty moments, but I was real happy with the way our guys played on the backboard, defensively and shooting the basketball."

The Flyers swarmed UMass from the beginning, especially in the paint, as Finn blocked three low-post attempts from senior Kitwana Rhymer (4 points) in the first few minutes. And things soon got worse when junior Micah Brand, trying to save a ball on the baseline, hurt his left ankle with only 4:24 gone off the clock.

Brand played for seven additional minutes with his ankle taped, but came out of the locker room on crutches. Lappas was uncertain of Brand's status immediately after the game, but said he didn't think his big man would be at 100 percent for Saturday's bout at Rhode Island.

Including that game, the Minutemen have nine remaining on their schedule plus the A-10 Tournament. And this time, if Lappas sees even a glimpse of a winning streak, he thinks he'll know how to handle it.

"After the St. Bonaventure game, I should have killed them [in practice]," Lappas said. "But I gave them off Sunday. After that game, everyone was happy, but we should have practiced. That's what these guys need. That's what I've figured out. They have to be on alert every second."

UMass BRIEFS:

Men's Indoor Track & Field

The Minutemen finished first (136 points) out of three teams at the University of New Hampshire meet held Saturday, Jan. 26. UMass won 10 events including the 55M dash, 500M run, 800M run, 1000M run, 1500M run, 55M hurdles, 4 x 800M relay, high jump, pole vault and shot put. Leading the way for the Minutemen was junior Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng (Accra, Ghana) who won the 55M dash for the second consecutive week with a time of 6.45 seconds.

The men's track team will travel to Kingston, R.I., Feb. 2, for a quad meet with URI, UNH and Maryland.

Women's Indoor Track & Field

The University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team garnered 33 points this past weekend, and finished ninth out of 14 teams at the Husky Invitational. UMass won the long jump and set two school records in the pole vault. In the pole vault, sophomore Brandy Green (Fitchburg,Mass.) and senior co-captain Rhianna DaCruz (Pawtucket, R.I.) each cleared 11'6" to set a the school record and qualify for the ECAC Championships, March 2-3 in Roxbury, Mass., at the Reggie Lewis Center.

The previous record was set last weekend, Jan. 19, by DaCruz, who cleared 11'00" at the Tufts Invitational. Green also set a new season-best, and the fifth-fastest time in UMass history in the 55M hurdles with a preliminary time of 8.34 seconds, qualifying for the ECAC Championships. Sophomore Chante Soares (New Bedford, Mass.) won the long jump with a new personal high distance of 18'07.25".

The Minutewomen return to action on Feb. 2 as they travel to Kingston, R.I., for a meet including URI, Brown, Providence College, Boston College and New Hampshire.

Skiing

The University of Massachusetts ski teams both continued to have solid runs this past weekend at the Plymouth State Carnival held at the Waterville Valley Ski area. Both the men's and women's squads placed third in the giant slalom and fourth in the slalom.

In the giant slalom, junior Carolyn Lewenberg (Newton, Mass.) registered a third-place finish with a total time of 2:13.53. Senior Lauren Brodey (Jamesville, N.Y.) was the only other top-10 finisher as she came in 10th with a mark of 2:17.65.

For the men, junior Rich Granger (Princeton, Mass.) came in sixth with a total time of 2:06.02. Finishing ninth and 10th with times of 2:07.02 and 2:07.14, respectively, were sophomore Beau Gibson (Oakland, Md.) and senior Ken Thomas (Lebanon, Ohio).

In the slalom, Lewenberg and Brodey were seventh and eighth with total times of 1:45.65 and 1:46.55. Granger was the only member of the men's squad to crack the top ten as his total time of 1:38.65 was 10th.

Next weekend, both UMass skiing squads will compete in the Brown Carnival. It will be held at the Loon Mountain Ski Area in Lincoln, N.H.

Courtesy UMass Media Relations.

■ hockey

continued from page 12

Reschny got the puck along the far boards and broke in alone on Johnson, throwing a shot at Johnson that slipped through the senior and went in when three NU forwards rushed the net and forced Johnson to fall onto his back.

"I thought I had the puck long enough, but when the whistle blew I knew the referee wasn't going to change his mind," said Johnson, who had 22 saves, eight in the third period. "I gave the referee a mouthful after it went in, but I knew he wasn't going to change the call with just three minutes left."

The Minutemen commenced the scoring when junior J.R. Zavisza scored his first goal of the year 8:10 into the first. Jimmy Callahan chased a dump from assistant captain Randy Drohan and fed the puck behind his back to Zavisza, who stuffed the puck home from the doorstep.

Northeastern's Donny Grover tied the game at one just over five minutes later, when his blast from the point found its way through a screen and past Johnson. Chris Lynch gave the Huskies a 2-1 lead in the second when he took the puck over the blue line and zipped a wrist shot into the top right corner.

Later in the second, UMass knotted the game at two when Hanson posted his first career goal on the power play at 15:33. Hanson skated the puck to the left face-off circle and sniped the puck into the lower left corner past Gibson's pad. Pock and Tim Vitek assisted on the goal.

The Minutemen are in action again this weekend as they host Boston College on Friday and Providence College on Saturday.

Sports
meeting Thursday
@
5:30 p.m
All writers and anyone interested should attend.

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

EARN 1–2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2002 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 4 (Mon) •Feb. 5 (Tues) •Feb. 6 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Feb 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries; YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
"Apartment Deals"
•On Bus line
•Free Heat/hot water
•Washer/dryer hookups
•Indoor cats accepted
•Only minutes from campus
•Air conditioning
420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst • 253-7377
Equal Housing Opportunity

DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

113 campus center University of Massachusetts Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT | AUTOS FOR SALE | EMPLOYMENT | EMPLOYMENT | FOR SALE | ROOMMATE WANTED | SERVICES | TRAVEL

For Classifieds, see tomorrow's paper...

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • CBS/3 Hartford
4 • CBS/4 Boston
5 • ABC/40 Springfield
6 • PBS/57 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN/30 Hartford
9 • HSCN New Movie Channel
10 • NBC/30 New Britain
11 • Fox/61 Hartford
12 • PBS/24 Hartford
13 • NBC/22 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 • WB/59 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • ESPN2
19 • CVCTV (Student Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Good to Gavel
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • CNN Headline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • USA
27 • FBN
28 • TNT
29 • E!
30 • SciFi
31 • Discovery
32 • Nogalo
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Monty By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"Hearts will never be practical until they are made unbreakable."

–The Wizard of Oz

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 19	HIGH: 30 LOW: 27	HIGH: 41 LOW: 19

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) – Focus on presentability today. You'll want to adopt the right behavior and look your best – particularly during an evening gathering. Make sure your robes are pressed and brushed, and that your goat's head is the freshest available.
PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) – Someone is likely to know what's going on inside your head better than you do today. Let the neurosurgeon do her work, she knows how to fix your wiring.
ARIES (March 21 – April 19) –What begins as a slow process – one that you do not wholly enjoy – is soon to be something that you do with much more gusto. Wink, wink.
TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) – Attendance is required in your second class. Make sure you wake up.
GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) – You can afford to be more sensitive today. And everyday for that matter. Seriously, you aren't known for your tact, are you?
CANCER (June 21 – July 22) – You'll be going from one thing to another all day long. Yeah, because that's a specific prediction. Man, I love my job.
LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — A social gathering affords more than one opportunity to capitalize on someone else's oversight. Set your phasers on "insult."
VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — Want to know a secret? Too bad. I didn't get to be a highly paid astrologist by giving away freebies.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Focus on any endeavor that allows you to put your best foot forward – rumba, baby, rumba.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) – You'll be forced to crush someone with your poisoned tail after they stupidly make fun of "the new scaly kid."
SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) – You might want to double-check your figures today. You'll notice that you forgot to carry the one.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) – Don't let someone else's lack of enthusiasm bring you down today. They just suck.

AREN'T YOU SAD THERE IS NO COMIC HERE TODAY? GET OVER IT.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Canadian Cheese Soup

Chicken Burrito

Fried Clams

Bean Burrito (vegan)

DINNER

Canadian Cheese Soup

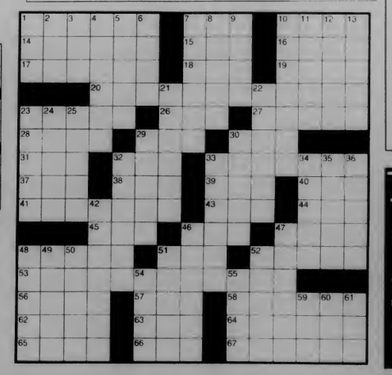
Chicken Cacciatore

London Broil

Vegetable Cacciatore (W Basics) (vegan)

Native American Stew (vegan)

Your ad could go here!



ACROSS
1 Scoundrel
7 Denver hrs.
10 Lake dwellers
14 Dictate
15 All-purpose truck
16 Not working
17 Huge beings
18 Alphabet ender
19 Tragic monarch
20 Trucker's frequency
23 Use steel wool
26 Ancient
27 Dissolves
28 Sightseeing trip
29 Astonish
30 Paving material
31 Landscape or portrait
32 Putter's org.
33 Sped
37 Baseball VIP
38 Tavern
39 Diligent insect
40 Tavern fare
41 Makes holes in
43 Family mem.
44 Buddhist practice
45 USCG officer
46 List ender
47 Pleads
48 Hindu teacher
51 Livy's hello
52 Tint again
53 Astronaut's concern
56 This senora
57 A billion years
58 Is of benefit
62 Jacket
63 Dog breeder's org.
64 — out discover
65 Nuisance
66 Singer Peggy
67 Agreement

DOWN
1 Equip
2 "— seeing things?"
3 Health resort
4 Agree
5 Moving around
6 In case
7 Silence
8 Knight's horse
9 High-schooler
10 Hazelnut
11 Perfect
12 Learn
13 Sheep units
21 Hawkeyes
22 Brainpower
23 Postage sticker
24 Welsh dog
25 Bizarre
29 Ms. DeMille
30 Loose garment
32 Kind of basket
33 Speed up
34 Took it easy
35 Poem of lament
36 Teeming
42 Carpet leftover
46 Show clearly
47 Word of warning
48 Get some rest
49 Squander
50 Parking lot sight
51 Quit napping
52 Fido's pal
54 Get better
55 Dotty
59 A Gershwin
60 Authorize
61 Pig's pad

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H	Y	P	E		S	L	A	P	S		A	H	E	M
E	A	R	N		A	I	S	L	E		D	A	L	E
A	C	I	D		F	I	T	I	N		V	I	E	S
P	H	O	E	B	E		R	E	S	E	A	R	C	H
S	T	R	A	Y		M	O	D	E	R	N
		R	E	N	O		D	A	C	H	E	D
A	R	C	S		E	N	E		P	S	E	U	D	O
L	A	O		W	O	R	S	E		W	I	L
P	R	O	M	P	T		T	W	E		E	P	E	E
O	A	S	I	S			U	P	O	N
		S	A	L	A	A	M		H	A	C	K	S
K	I	D	S	T	U	F	F		E	M	B	L	E	M
I	G	E	T		T	R	I	T	E	S		L	A	V	A
T	O	W	E		C	R	E	E	P		E	R	I	C
T	R	I	P		H	E	R	O	N		D	A	N	K

12-8-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Melissa Hammel
Photo Technician — Tibora Gircsys-Blum
Copy Editor — Jim Pignatiello
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak
Production Staff — riks Alcid, Cara Horowitz

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS

collegian_sports@yahoo.com 1.30.02 sports editor: eric soderstrom

Kyle Watson and his teammates were not enough to lead the Minutemen past Dayton last night at the Mullins Center.

Flyers soar over Minutemen

Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

After his team's 83-68 loss to Dayon last night in the Mullins Center, Steve Lappas stumbled upon a grim realization.

"Because we won three games we got soft and we started to think we were better than we were," said Lappas after dropping to 9-9 (3-4 Atlantic 10). "They don't handle success well."

Dayton	83
UMass	68

Its first loss in four games, UMass beat St. Bonaventure, 67-65, Saturday in Olean, N.Y., and topped George Washington and Temple in its two prior games at home. But as they have shown before, the Minutemen seemed to become overwhelmed in past accomplishments.

"Let's face it," Lappas said. "We were 4-0 and then threw up the big clinker against Holy Cross. As a coach you look at some tendencies. I see some tendencies I don't like. And I'm part to the blame for that, without a doubt. And they're part to blame."

Last night's folly was over at halftime. The Flyers (13-5, 5-2 A-10) opened the game with a 13-0 run and extended the lead to 43-21 at the break. Dayton ran the score up to 43-15 with just over two minutes left in the first half, but UMass put together a 6-0 run to end the stanza. The closest it got to Dayton was 15 points, which happened to be the game's final tally.

Senior Shannon Crooks led the Minutemen with 21 points and freshman Anthony Anderson followed with 20 (6-for-7 3-pointers), but Lappas held that individual performances couldn't be taken for their actual worth.

"The second half of that game was irrelevant," he said. "All these statistics, all these individual stats mean absolutely nothing. The only thing that matters is that Dayton outrebounded us by 22 rebounds (44-22) and shot 59 percent.

"Every other stat is worthless."

Sophomore Ramod Marshall led the Flyers with 16 points and had four teammates also fall in the double-digit scoring category. After a free throw from sophomore Sean Finn to open the game, Marshall drilled a 3-pointer to give Dayton the quick 4-0 advantage. His fast-break layin just four minutes later put the Flyers up 13-0.

Anderson's trey from the top of the key with 8:53 left in the opening half brought UMass back to 19-11, but the Minutemen failed to

Turn to HOOP page 9

First half hoop woes continue

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

One bad half, that will do it to you. All the Massachusetts men's basketball team needed was one half, twenty minutes, to effectively play itself out of last night's 83-68 loss to Dayton. The Flyers went into the locker room up by 22 (43-21) and were thoroughly dominating the Minutemen in every facet of the game. The rebounding margin was 23-8 in favor of the visitors and they had gotten to the line ten more times than the Maroon and White.

This however, was not a new phenomenon for UMass. Slow starts have killed the Minutemen on at least six other occasions this season, a number that would be far greater if it was not for the team's penchant for energetic second half performances.

The key to the slow start last night was the interior dominance of Dayton's Sean Finn and Keith Waleskowski. The pair shot 6-of-7 for 13 points and 11 boards compared to 0-for-10 and just three rebounds for the UMass triumvirate of Micah Brand, Kitwana Rhymer and Eric Williams.

"Our guys were really ready to go," Dayton coach Oliver Purnell said following the game. "I thought we defended well, we didn't give them anything easy and then they missed some shots early. But I think that when you don't give a team easy looks and layups or wide open shots things can snowball a little bit, which it did for them some in the first half. But our defense had a lot to do with it."

Not helping the first half snowball was the loss of Brand with 15:36 to play in the first half. Brand injured his ankle going for a loose ball in front of the Dayton bench with the Minutemen trailing 8-0. The junior forward did return later in the half but did not play after the break and emerged from the locker room on crutches. He played just 11 minutes and failed to score, something that he had not done since the second game of last season.

While the Minutemen's struggles on the offensive end could be put down to good, hard defense by Dayton, injury and an unforgiving rim, the struggles at the other end of the floor were inexcusable.

In each of their nine wins this season, the Minutemen have held their opponent below 37 percent shooting. At the end of the first 20 minutes the Flyers had hit 14-of-22 field goals for a 63.6 clip. Plain and simple, if UMass does not play good defense, it does not win.

"I told these guys after the game, 'you got to understand fellas, if we don't play defense, we stink,'" UMass Head Coach Steve Lappas said after the game. "If we don't play defense and we don't rebound, we stink, because we are not a good offensive team."

So, the Maroon and White is a team that is not good offensively heading into the final month of the season, potentially without one of its prime offensive options, needing to get hot in order to make a run for a first round bye in the Atlantic 10 tournament that comes with finishing in the top two in the division. The only way that the Minutemen are going to do this is to avoid the slow starts that have plagued them to this point.

And Coach Lappas thinks he knows the way to make them do so.

"They have to play defense," he said of his squad. "They have to play defense and they have to rehound, and they can't worry about missing five-foot shots because we've done it before and we'll do it again."

Vacant press conference awaits Collegian reporter

MATTHEW F. SACCO

It was a press lunch press conference as far as those things go.

"Are you the only one, Matt," UMass coach Don Cahoon muttered toward me.

I thought last place team, worst scoring offense in the nation, three points out of a playoff spot — wouldn't miss it for the world.

Coach seemed a little distressed when he realized that the usual assemblage of reporters from The Daily Hampshire Gazette, The Springfield Union News and The Boston Globe had dwindled down to just one wet behind the ears college paper beat writer.

Maybe it was because notoriety — one of the crowds of Cahoon's tenure — has been rapidly decreasing along with the figure below the column marked win percentage. But knowing Coach, it was probably something simpler. Like the fact that for the first time in three months, Cahoon had something positive to talk about following the recently completed conference game between his Minutemen and visiting Northeastern.

But it turns out that Thomas Pock's duo-shell snap shot at 1:20 of overtime was the shot heard round a vacuum. Because while the Minutemen used aluminum, wood and graphite to write their own story — a three goal comeback the likes of which the Mullins Center has never seen — the Valley's sports writers dried their quills and saw it unfit to match one captivating deed with a story of their own.

So there I was — just me, a reporter's notebook and three hockey players — firing question after question, knowing full well that they were befuddled at the cavernous press room and the thirty empty chairs that lay behind me.

Nobody was there.

Nobody saw the debacle that was the first 48 minutes and 27 seconds of Saturday night's game and the trio of goals that the Huskies notched to stake themselves out to a 3-0 lead with under ten minutes to play.

And nobody saw the thunderous and equally uncharacteristic comeback that ensued.

"It was a great comeback," Cahoon told one person after the game. "The win is huge."

Well for all those writers who maybe looked down their nose at the Minutemen after a 12 game winless streak in conference — you missed a heck of a game and the number one contender for season turning point.

"I say we're making the playoffs this year," Pock proclaimed following his adroitly struck game-winner. "We're going to have to steal a few along the way, but we should beat Merrimack in the last game of the year."

If the sophomore's daring claim is to be proven correct, then the Minutemen will have to sooth out their scoring issues. They took a step towards that concern on Saturday by tallying four goals in a game for the first time since late December.

The return of Pock to good health and the mid season signing of forward Josh Hanson (three points, two games) has helped take the UMass offense out of the freezer, well at least for one game.

And what's all the more impressive is that leading scorers Greg Mauldin (18 points) and Tim Turner (10 goals) were out of the lineup due to injury, while their teammates lit the lamp four times within a 13 minute span — but nobody was there to report that either.

For the 1,634 in attendance, they experienced the best of what college hockey has to offer. As for the media, there's sure to be a little less elbow-room come Friday's contest against Boston College.

As for me? Wouldn't miss it for the world.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

Four-goal comeback burns Northeastern

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

With 12 minutes remaining in Saturday's game against Northeastern, the Massachusetts hockey team, trailing 3-0, seemed destined for its 15th consecutive Hockey East contest without a win.

But over the next 13:20, everything changed for the Minutemen, as Thomas Pock scored the game winner at 1:20 of the first overtime to mark what might have been the greatest comeback in UMass hockey history.

UMass	4
Northeastern	3

Northeastern	3
UMass	2

"We've been playing hard for so long and getting nothing out of it," Head Coach Don Cahoon said after the win. "It was a great comeback and the win is absolutely huge."

Huge for a number of reasons. First off, the Minutemen had not won a game in conference since Nov. 3, a 4-2 victory over the same Northeastern Huskies. Secondly, the Maroon and White stood three points behind Merrimack coming into the contest for the final spot in the Hockey East Tournament. Thirdly, UMass was without its top three scorers for the game and had scored four goals in its previous three games of play.

Pock took a pass from newcomer Josh Hanson to spring a two-on-one breakout up the right side and put the puck past Husky netminder Keni Gibson up high. Coming into the game, Gibson was 5-0-1 and had allowed just nine goals in his previous six games.

"I saw that he left the near side open," Pock said. "In a situation like that you can either go low to the blocker side or high. He went down and I knew I could shell it."

With under a minute to play in the third period, the Minutemen completed the comeback when goalie Mike Johnson sprung an odd-man rush by throwing the puck ahead to Tim Vitek in the defensive zone. Vitek advanced the puck to Hanson, who garnered Hockey East Rookie of the Week honors, who then fed the puck ahead to captain Toni Söderholm, who beat Gibson up high with 56 seconds left.

"That was a big-time shot," Cahoon said. "Just to get himself into position for the shot was an accomplishment."

Sophomore Nick Kuiper cut the Northeastern lead to one with 4:16 remaining in regulation. Kuiper received the puck at the right point on a pass from Craig MacDonald and fired a slapshot over Gibson's left shoulder for his second goal of the year.

"It was a knuckler," Kuiper said. "Those are the best types of shots. You just fire it and you don't know where it's going. I think he was screened on the play."

The avalanche of Maroon and White tallies started when Kelly Sickavish started off the scoring with his first career goal on a slapshot that also beat Gibson up high. Freshmen Justin Rafferty and Peter Trovato assisted on the goal.

On Friday night, the Minutemen squared off against the same Northeastern squad at Matthews Arena, but fell to Northeastern 3-2. Trevor Reschny's first goal of the season with under four minutes to play in regulation lifted the Huskies to the victory.

Turn to HOCKEY page 9

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

A UMass hockey stick goes astray.

FEBRUARY

Church needs to wake up.
Ed/Op page 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

FRIDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY TWO ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.1.02

SGA approves fee increase; fights cuts

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The reality of what the future holds for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has not only struck concerns statewide, but within the Student Government Association's Senate as well.

With the recent 12 million dollar budget cuts in effect, senators have been bracing themselves for the changes ahead. As the Fall Semester came to a close, concerns were raised in Senate as to what the new year would bring to the University. Senators discussed the issues on Wednesday night at their first Senate meeting of the year. Topics such as security, athletics, parking and the all-encompassing budget cuts where the topic of their discussion.

"Our main priority as a Senate this semester is to make sure that the budget cuts and lay-offs don't happen again," Speaker Aaron Saunders said. "All around people are saying this is bad, so obviously this is our first priority as a Senate."

Members expressed mixed views on a variety of topics, but much of the emphasis was on student awareness. Ideas such as letter writing campaigns to respective congressmen and women were discussed, as well as lobbying at the State House.

"State funding is the most important issue facing this campus right," Student Trustee Jon Laubinger said. "You, the SGA are the voice for the students and it's your responsibility to bring it before the state. We need to take the time to let our state government know how important this University is to us."

Other members stressed similar thoughts, but also expressed the need for students to take responsible strides to get their message across.

"We need to embark on letter writing campaigns, but we need to know how to do it right," President John Sheehan said. "We don't want to go before the State House and stomp on their flowers. In this situation we need to write to them and tell them our personal stories about how the budget cuts are affecting us, and how we need all the support we can get."

In an effort to get the student body's voice heard, members of the SGA have put together an open forum that will include members of the administration and State Representative Ellen Story (D-Amherst). Saunders explained that he hoped this would give senators and students the opportunity to talk to the administration face to face. He further explained that he felt students have a right to receive direct answers for any questions they may have regarding the budget cuts on campus.

"I want students to be able to address the administration and tell them that they won't sit there silently and let two people at Whitmore handle all the decision-making on campus," Saunders said.

Senators agreed, explaining that they feel the open forum will give students a way to not only share their opinions but also to send their reactions to Boston.

"The idea of the open round table is a good idea and a good way to keep our voices heard down in Boston where traditionally they haven't listened to us much, due to being so far out west," Chair of Ways and Means Mike Taugher said.

Aside from budget cuts campus-wide, senators also expressed concern over budget cuts directly affecting Registered Student Organizations as well. Taugher explained that RSOs will be taking a cut, but how large of a budget cut was uncertain.

"We have several different projections, and we're looking at worst-case scenarios that would put us up a creek, but were hoping that we can minimize any hit that will effect RSOs on campus," Taugher said. "We don't know what kind of money we're going to be dealing with, and the administration isn't even sure yet."

A referendum approving a five dollar student activities fee increase was approved by the students in this past fall's Senate elections. The Senate passed a resolution on the referendum, recommending the hike to the Board of Trustees. Taugher explained how he felt the increase, if approved by the administration, would make up for some of the budget cuts being done within Campus Activities.

"Last semester a five dollar increase was passed overwhelmingly by the students and Senate, so if the trustees approve the motion it would help us out a lot," Taugher said. "From what I've heard from the administration I think they will, which is a realistic increase for this campus."

Senators will also be focusing much of their attention on issues revolving around the recent alcohol policy change, which makes students caught in public spaces with open containers of alcohol pay for alcohol education classes. Senators expressed mixed views on the recent decision.

"I've spoken to Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Michael Gilbert, Director of Housing Services and they just see it as another incentive to get students not to drink," Saunders said. "On the surface that's fine, but an alcohol class is the same for a millionaire and someone on need-based financial aid, but fining $50

Turn to SGA, page 3

SCOTT BURGOS/COLLEGIAN

Out with the old, in with the new

Fresh art is hung in the Herter Gallery, which is open from Monday to Friday, 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Police see rise in vandalism calls

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department started off the new semester with a flurry of activity ranging from arrests to vandalism.

Michael J. Nichols, 19, of Abington was arrested on Monday afternoon at 3:45 p.m. in a follow-up investigation in Patterson Dormitory. Nichols was arrested for the possession of liquor by a person under 21 years of age.

Also on Monday the UMPD received a call at approximately 2 a.m. informing them that an individual was wandering around campus apparently very intoxicated, according to police reports.

The individual was deemed unable to take care of himself and was taken into protective custody and released later that day.

The police received a call from a resident assistant in Brett Dormitory on Saturday informing them that he had found bullets in the first floor men's bathroom. The officers on the scene talked to an individual in the building who was cooperative and explained that he did not possess firearms. The ammunition was seized and listed for destruction.

Vandalism topped the police blotter this week with a number of incidents occurring involving both property destruction and missing items. An individual called into the station on Saturday to report that when he arrived back from winter break he discovered his wall tapestry had been ripped from the wall. He also discovered that a lamp in his room was missing. The individual provided a written statement to the police regarding the missing items.

The same day the UMPD received a call from Lincoln Apartments at 8:45 p.m. reporting that his Volkswagen letta had been dented and scratched on both the hood and the sides.

In a separate incident, an individual called the station to report that his Crabtree Dormitory room appeared to be broken into during the break. The reporting party explained that a number of his over-the-counter medications and vitamins had been tampered with.

On Wednesday, a woman called to report that her jewelry had been stolen from her Van Meter Dormitory room. The jewelry consisted of five rings of varying values; the total value of all of the jewelry was approximately 40 dollars.

There were also reports of a smashed back window in Gorman Dormitory; police called emergency maintenance to repair the damaged window.

Also occupying the attention of the Police Department were several reports of annoying behavior across campus. On Friday they received a call from the Campus Center Hotel reporting that several students outside the building were mooning guests. When police arrived, the individuals had left the area.

A report of a loud party going on in Van Meter Dormitory occurred at 1:45 a.m. on Monday morning. When police arrived, individuals were throwing bottles out the windows. The group was dispersed and the scene was cleared.

Police also received a call complaining that an intoxicated individual was throwing rocks at the windows in Webster Dormitory. An officer on the scene took down the statement.

The UMPD also responded to a call at the Fine Arts Center complaining that there were individuals with skateboards in the closed-off area of the building and that they appeared to be spray painting something on the building. An officer responded to the scene and asked the individuals to move along. No spray-painted items were found.

Concerned joggers came into the station on Saturday morning at approximately 7:30 a.m. with reports that they had found an injured or sick dog lying motionless in lot 90 when they were out walking their own dog. Animal Services was contacted to pick up the animal.

A resident assistant from the James/Emerson housing staff reported that two students were stuck in an elevator in Emerson on Sunday night at approximately 8:30 p.m. The students were removed from the elevator and it was locked off for the remainder of the evening.

Two accidents occurred during the week, the first in front of Bruegger's Bakery in Amherst. The accident was minor and involved a UMass vehicle. Both parties exchanged telephone numbers and filled out paper work. The other accident occurred on lower Massachusetts Ave. and Roosevelt St. when a vehicle went through the guardrail. The Hadley Police Department was notified about the incident and sent an officer to the scene.

TIN WAI CHU/COLLEGIAN

Crunch berries

These shriveled berries cling to their branches as they prepare for the bitter cold, once again.

Anthrax plant approved

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The Food and Drug Administration approved a new anthrax vaccine manufacturing plant yesterday. BioPort Corporation, the nation's only licensed supplier of Anthrax Vaccine Absorbed (AVA), renovated the plant.

"We believe we were able to clearly demonstrate to the FDA our ability to manufacture anthrax vaccine in a controlled and compliant environment," BioPort President Bob Kramer said in a released statement. "Nearly two years ago we presented a plan to the FDA laying out BioPort's commitment to become fully compliant. This inspection allowed us to illustrate our progress and on-going commitment to meeting the FDA's standards."

Federal regulations require the FDA's approval of major renovations. FDA inspectors spent a week inspecting Hollister-Stier Laboratories LLC in Spokane, Wash. BioPort had contracted the facility to serve as another production site.

"FDA has worked as quickly as possible to review these license supplements, including resolving outstanding issues with the firm, for the supplement to be approved," said Bernard A. Schwetz, DVM, Ph.D., FDA's acting Principal Deputy Commissioner. "Our goal has always been to assure that the anthrax vaccine meets high standards for safety and efficacy."

The FDA then tested lots from the labs.

"The FDA is also allowing three lots of the vaccine manufactured in the renovated facility to be released today, after thorough testing and review," Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson said in a released statement. "Since BioPort is the only licensed manufacturer of the anthrax vaccine, today's approval is especially important. Although the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) does not recommend vaccination for the general public, this product is a critical component in our arsenal against bioterrorism."

In fact, the general public cannot get AVA, the FDA says.

"The Department of Defense (DoD) owns all lots of Anthrax Vaccine Adsorbed produced by BioPort in the renovated facility," the FDA said in a released statement.

"We are pleased to learn of the Food and Drug Administration's approval of BioPort's new manufacturing facility to produce anthrax vaccine," Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs William Winkenwerder Jr. said in a released statement. "This action by the FDA will result in an assured availability of vaccine, which meets high standards for safety and efficacy, to protect our troops against the very real threat of anthrax."

The FDA approved BioPort's main facility in Lansing, Mich. on Dec. 27, 2001. BioPort purchased that facility in 1998 from Michigan Biologics Products Institute, which owned the license to produce AVA since 1970.

On the Net: The FDA: http://www.fda.gov; BioPort: http://www.BioPort.com

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

BY TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM

"Who do you think will win the Super Bowl and why?"

Dawn Lassman
2003 Anthropology
"Pats. Because they are on a roll."

Lindsey Jeserski
2003
Undeclared
"I don't even know who is in the Super Bowl."

Madeleine Cadet
2002
Sociology
"Patriots, because they want to make New England proud. They have to!"

Patrick Coyle
2003 Economics
"The Patriots, 'cause I have a lot of money on them."

Jennifer Danforth
2004
Biology
"Pats, considering what has happened to them this year. They have the heart to win."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became The Class Squib in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a fee-subsidized publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimaulli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lillen Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majcrowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

IS YOUR BRAIN STILL ON WINTER BREAK?

We can help!

Check out our website to see how we can help you cut corners to succeed!

sony.com/Slackers/termpaperblues

Cold Days...
Hot Bargains!

Winter Sidewalk Sale

(indoors, of course)

Steve Madden Mavi
Urban Outfitters Buffalo
To the Max Mia

Tuesday January 29th thru Sunday February 3rd

ZANNA

Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

POLICE LOG

January 25

Medical Emergency
An individual fell on the ice and hurt his ankle. The subject was sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital via ambulance.

Individuals called the police for a person with a possible broken ankle. There were no apparent broken bones and treatment was refused.

January 26

Medical Emergency
A receptionist at the Mullins Center called to report that a young boy fell on the ice and struck his head. The boy was alert and conscious and was given an ice pack.

Missing Person
A parent called to inform the police that his son had run away from home. Police called both Amherst College and the Department of Social Services to inform them of the incident.

Suspicious Vehicle
An officer stated that a car had been parked in lot 32 for over 35 minutes. When he departed his vehicle to get a closer look at the car, it drove away.

There was a report of a suspicious vehicle in lot 11. The individual inside stated that he was waiting for his brother who was in one of the Southwest towers.

January 27

Vandalism
An individual reported that his tires had been slashed and his vehicle damaged over the winter break.

January 28

Suspicious Person
An individual called the police to report a threatening phone call to the Continuing Education Building. The incident is under investigation.

January 29

Larceny
An individual reported receiving a bill for a Capital One card that she did not have.

One of two license plates was stolen off of a car parked in lot 22.

Medical Emergency
A woman called from Coolidge Dormitory to report that her friend was having heart palpitations. The individual refused treatment.

Suspicious Person
Skateboarders near the parking garage were told to move along.

An individual complained about skateboarders. He explained that they had damaged his vehicle earlier.

January 30

Noise Complaint
Police received a report that loud yelling was coming from either Chadbourne of Greenough Dormitory. When the officer arrived, the noise had stopped.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

U-Stop...and U-Shop

The U-store has vacated its past home in the Fillard Room and is now open for business asbestos-free.

SAVE $ ON TEXTBOOKS

We Have These UMass Courses At Discounted Prices

ACCTG-221-ALL	COMDIS-330-1&2	FREN-246-1	MATH-113-ALL	NURSE-326-1	PSYCH-360-1
ACCTG-222-1	COMDIS-401-1	FREN-250-1	MATH-121-1	NURSE-327-1	PSYCH-370-1
ACCTG-331-1-3	COMM-297-1	GEO-100-1	MATH-127-ALL	NURSE-331-1	PSYCH-380-1A
ACCTG-371-1&2	COMM-342-1	GEO-101-1	MATH-128-ALL	NURSE-490-L	PSYCH-391-A
AN SCI-103-1	ECE-122-1	GEO-103-1&2	MATH-131-ALL	NUTR-130-1	RES EC-102-1
ANTH-150-1	ECE-232-1	GEO-131-1-5	MATH-132-ALL	PHIL-100-1A	RES EC-140-1
ART-230-1&2	ECE-242-1	GEO-201-1	MATH-136-1	PHIL-100-2B	RES EC-211-1
ARTHIS-110-1	ECE-344-1	GER-110-ALL	MATH-233-ALL	PHYSIC-100-1	RES EC-212-1
ASTRON-100-1	ECE-354-1	GER-120-1	MATH-235-1&2	PHYSIC-114-1&2	RES EC-241-1
ASTRON-100-3	ECE-397-B	GER-230-1&2	MATH-246-1	PHYSIC-115-1	RES EC-262-1
ASTRON-101-1	ECON-104-1A	GER-240-1&2	MATH-331-1	PHYSIC-131-1	RES EC-312-1
ASTRON-105-1	ECON-104-2B&3C	HIS-115-1	MATH-331-3	PHYSIC-132-1	RES EC-324-1
BIOCHM-193-A	ECON-121-1	HIS-120-1	MATH-370-1	PHYSCI-151-1&2	SOCIOL-103-1
BIOL-101-1A&2B	ECON-204-3	HIS-140-1	MATH-455-2	PHYSIC-152-1	SOCIOL-105-1
BIOL-102-1	ECON-204-4	HIS-141-1	MGT-260-3	PHYSIC-172-1	SOCIOL-222-1A
BIOL-104-1	ECON-204-5	HIS-151-1&2	MGT-260-7	PHYSIC-261-1	SOCIOL-224-1
BIOL-283-1&2	ECON-204-6	HIS-170-1	MGT-314-2	PHYSIC-282-1	SOCIOL-241-1
BIOL-287-1	ECON-308-1	HIS-385-1	MGT-330-1&2	PHYSIC-284-1	SOCIOL-332-1
BIOL-297-A	ECON-309-1	HONORS-191-D	MGT-330-4	PLSOIL-105-1	SOCIOL-391-A
BIOL-544-1	ECON-311-1	HRTA-100-1	MGT-362-1	PLSOIL-115-1	SOM-391-A
CFE-121-1	ECON-322-1&2	HRTA-150-1	MGT-365-2	POLSCI-101-1	SOM-497-5
CEE-270-1	ED-325-1-3	HRTA-200-1-4	MGT-397-H	POLSCI-101-4N	SOM-497-A3&4
CEE-320-1	ENGL-221-1	HRTA-250-1	MICBIO-160-1	POLSCI-111-3N	SOM-497-A6&7
CEE-370-1	ENGLWP-111-ALL	HRTA-340-1&2	MICBIO-255-1	POLSCI-121-2B	SPAN-120-ALL
CHEM-261-1	ENGLWP-112-ALL	HRTA-383-1&2	MICBIO-310-1	POLSCI-255-1	SPAN-230-1
CHEM-262-1	ENGLWP-113-ALL	HUMDEV-270-1	MIE-231-1	PSYCH-100-1	SPAN-240-ALL
CHEM-269-1	EXSCI-130-1	HUMDEV-270-2,3,4	MIE-201-1	PSYCH-100-3	SPAN-246-1
CLSICS-100-1	FOMGT-301-1A	HUMDEV-270-5&6	MIE-210-1	PSYCH-240-1A	SPAN-301-ALL
CLSICS-102-1	FOMGT-304-1,2,3	ITAL-246-1	MIE-211-1	PSYCH-240-2B	SPAN-311-ALL
CLSICS-224-1	FOMGT-310-1	JOURN-335-1	MIE-213-1	PSYCH-240-3C	SPAN-312-1&2
CMPSCI-102-1	FOMGT-320-1	JOURN-391-1	MIE-230-1&2	PSYCH-241-1	SPAN-319-1&2
CMPSCI-120-1	FOMGT-353-1	LATIN-120-1-6	MIE-310-1	PSYCH-305-1	SPAN-322-1&2
CMPSCI-121-ALL	FOMGT-370-1	LING-101-1-6	MIE-313-1	PSYCH-307-1	SPAN-323-1&2
CMPSCI-250-1	FOMGT-422-1	LING-201-1	MIE-340-1	PSYCH-308-1	SPORST-202-1
CMPSCI-311-1	FREN-110-1&2	MATH-100-ALL	MIE-402-1	PSYCH-320-1	STATIS-111-1
CMPSCI-320-1	FREN-120-1-6	MATH-101-ALL	MKTG-301-1	PSYCH-330-1	STATIS-140-1
CMPSCI-589-1	FREN-240-1,2,5	MATH-102-ALL	MKTG-412-1&2	PSYCH-335-1	STATIS-297-1
COMDIS-313-1	FREN-240-4	MATH-104-ALL	MKTG491-1&2	PSYCH-350-1

Jeffrey Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St.
Amherst, MA 01002
253-7816

Minnesota cuts budget

By Maggie Hessel-Mial
MINNESOTA DAILY (U. MINNESOTA)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS - University of Minnesota President Mark Yudof has made his message clear: The University can deal with a five percent, $33 million funding cut if it has to, but any more than that will keep the institution from providing quality educational opportunities and could cause tuition increases.

In the second full day of the legislative session Wednesday, House and Senate committees heard testimony from University administration and students on pending cuts to higher education and the institution's capital requests.

"We have a tough problem in this state. We don't see how you could balance the budget without taking from higher education," Yudof said. "We would like the number we have to cut to be closer to $0, but I'm worried the $33 million could go up."

The consensus among those testifying on the University's behalf was that while the University will do its part to deal with the fiscal shortfalls, any more tuition increases would hinder the students significantly.

"We could raise tuition," Yudof said. "But that would hurt students quite a bit."

David Boyd, executive director of the Student Legislative Coalition, said he was concerned about the harm a cut of more than five percent could cause the University. Already facing a 27 percent tuition increase this biennium, students could find a University education a lot harder to finance if the Legislature decides to cut more than $33 million, he said.

Dan Kelly, Minnesota Student Association president and a member of The Minnesota Daily Board of Directors, is a first-generation student who said he has seen his peers working long hours and taking fewer credits to make up for the increasing cost of education.

"The tuition increase has made the University one of the most expensive schools in the Big Ten," Kelly said.

The decrease in state funding for higher education in the past few years, though difficult for the University to take, is part of a national trend reflecting a changing of national priorities, Yudof told House members.

"Thirty-three million dollars will hurt one heck of a lot," Yudof said. "I think we'll manage, but it'll hurt."

Some legislators joked about attending the University when a credit cost $15 and were surprised when Boyd told them the average in-state, full-time student pays $6,500 to attend the institution. Regardless of party affiliation, most lawmakers said they are committed to doing their part to ease the blow of a $33 million cut.

"My concern is always access and affordability," said Rep. Paul Marquart, (D-Dilworth, Minn.) a Higher Education Finance Committee member. "Higher education is going to fuel our economy. The end of a recession will be spearheaded by a strong educational system."

■ SGA

continued from page 1

makes things completely different."

Taugher expressed his opinion stating that he understood the administration's perspective, but further explained his questions regarding where the money would be going too.

"All services are taking hits and I understand they need to be compensated for, but it seems like they could be making money off this, and if so that would be wrong."

Parking Services, Dining Services and Security are also on the agenda for the Senate this semester, as fee increases and cuts have been proposed for the future. The recent cut of the UMass Escort Service beginning in Fall 2002 brought mixed opinions amongst Senators. However, many were in agreement that a restructuring of the program would be a vital first step.

"After one meeting, I can't say much," Taugher said. "But one thing I hope is that people realize the problems coming up and they will be ready to deal with them."

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413.527.4233
schedule for Fri. 2/1 - Thurs. 2/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Birthday Girl (R) 12:15 4:50 7:45 10:15*
I Am Sam (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25*
Kung Pow (PG13) 12:30 3:55 7:40 9:55*
The Count of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
The Mothman Prophecies (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
A Walk To Remember (PG) 12:25 4:30 7:35 10:20*
Black Hawk Down (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
Snow Dogs (PG)
12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
Orange County (PG13) 12:00 4:30 7:10 9:50
The Royal Tenenbaums (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
A Beautiful Mind (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:35 10:35
Lord Of the Rings (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
*no passes accepted
Senior Movie 2/7/02 - 11 Am 8am - doors open at 11:45 a.m.
$3.00 ADVANCE TICKET SALES • NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes online at cinemark.com

SPRING BREAK
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas & S.Padre
www.studentexpress.com
Call Now: 1-800-787-3787

SPRING BREAK

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com

POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS

549-RENT OOPS!

• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
• MHEC Rates

(On bus route)

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.01.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Priests under fire:

Church needs to wake up

An inescapable story over winter break was that of Father John Geoghan, the Boston-area priest accused and subsequently convicted of sexual abuse charges involving children.

After the first charges against Geoghan surfaced in the summer of 1996, numerous other gates were opened and the accusations began flooding in through 1997, until the church acknowledged in 1998 that it had spent millions of dollars settling claims against the priest. Geoghan was defrocked in 1998 after the number of his alleged victims had risen to 50 over a three-decade period of time.

The actions by the church in that year seemed too little, too late at the time, and now, four years removed and with a much clearer picture of what was happening, we know its actions were grossly inappropriate essentially from day one, and that Cardinal Bernard Law was making it his business to quietly cover those tracks. By shifting Geoghan from parish to parish, Law was attempting to silence old problems and, by association, creating new ones.

Those actions, of first denying any wrongdoing and then stepping out to say that his judgments were "in retrospect, tragically incorrect" are indeed tragic, but Law, as Geoghan ultimately was, should he made responsible for his actions. His honesty and merit have been irreversibly compromised, as has the position of esteem he maintains that so many individuals turn to for personal comfort. His actions are on par with those of Geoghan, as should his punishment. Those actions have spoken loudly to voice his obvious lack of concern for those he was elected to lead.

This case more than any other in memory has cast a shadow of grim doubt over the priests who serve the church, not only in the Boston area, but nationwide. Most serve with integrity and hold close to an oath they've sworn their life to. Most maintain exceptional lives and offer assistance to those in need of it. All it takes, however, is one man, in this case Geoghan, to negate that trust and send the whole process spiraling backwards.

The church does not need to waste its time talking around the issue of removing priests who commit similar crimes. It simply needs to do it. It needs to know exactly whom it is letting into its parishes, where they're coming from, and if a situation should arise, the exact procedure to remove the individual as quickly as possible from that position. It's a service to those who seek the church for their own reasons, a necessary comfort that every individual has an absolute right to. Until then, the church itself is a seriously flawed and backward institution, no better than itself than the now convicted Geoghan.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF THE COLLEGIAN.

Letter to the editor:

In support of daycare cut

Recently, a number of columnists and students have become viscerally enraged over the news that, due to budget cuts affecting Massachusetts and the university of her namesake, various campus daycare services will be aborted in mid-term. Sounds like the familiar sound of whining that reaches a fever pitch within that cesspool of immaturity known as the university. Forgive me, oh dearly wise and voluptuous reader, but I must beg to differ with the loudest of the bitter daycare advocates.

Take a look at the basic notions surrounding a university daycare center. Students attend a university because, it is presumed, they have a level of maturity and responsibility far and away above that which they had when they were teenagers in high school. So long as we grant that notion, students not only can, but in fact must be understood to be capable of tending to their responsibilities because they are (and again, this is mere presumption on my part) adults with a firm grip on their lives. Well, let us shelve the obvious fact that the typical university student (myself included) has the relative maturity of a toddler and indulge in the question of what responsibility entails.

Adults do not have the luxury of doing whatever they prefer and casting the consequences to the wind, as it were. Instead, adults are obliged by the full force of human history and the basic concept of growing out of wearing diapers to take responsibility for the consequences of their actions. That means, in this case, that the choice to have children entails colossal obligations which adults who make that choice are compelled to see through. In other words, you have kids, then you raise them.

The callous desire on the part of increasing numbers of Americans to toss their children into the arms of anonymous daycare workers who, several months previous, might have been employed in any number of endeavors involving any degree of immodesty, is deplorable. This action demonstrates one simple and irrefutable fact, which is that these pompous dimwits want to avoid the actual and obvious obligation on their part to raise their own kids. For thousands of years, human beings have raised their children. A mother or a father talbeit far more often the former than the latter) staying home with the infant, then the toddler, is the basic and fundamental obligation of those human beings who choose to produce children. This is not rocket science, and it should be so blatantly obvious as to compel any of these stooges to become instantaneously incontinent with embarrassment. But, somehow, it does not.

For the life of me (which, admittedly, is not saying much), I fail to find a single reason why, in a university where the wide breadth of students are arrogant enough to fancy themselves adults, they have absolutely no desire to simply do what adults must do. Rather, they want to do what adults do and then not worry about what to do next, if the dear, sensuous reader catches the Biblical drift here. Seriously, though, here's the deal, kids: You can grow up, or you can whine and scream about how you want daycare workers to do your job for you. Though, if you choose the route of moaning and groaning (though not necessarily in that order), then you will manage only to add hour upon hour to your own puerile infancy.

Kevin Powers
UMass student

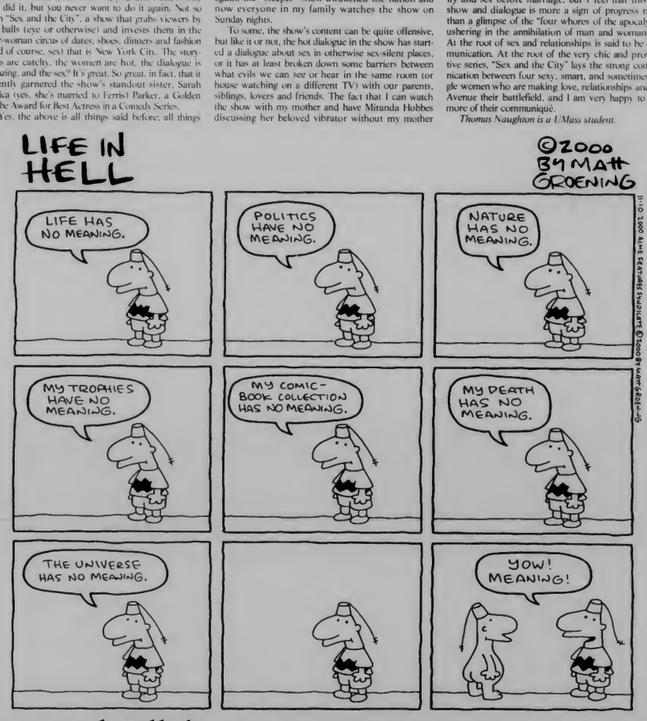
"Sex" stretches past the city limits:

How one television program is opening our minds

THOMAS NAUGHTON

I am fairly sure there is not a writer or opinionated person in this world who would feel comfortable with re-stating a widely fostered opinion, for the idea of having and sharing opinions is based on fostering unique, breakthrough, new, and sometimes controversial ideas about art, society and the like. However, in writing this column, I will not extrapolate any new theories on the evolution of society. I will not analyze the vocal crappings of Britney Spears. No, I will simply resign myself concerning the topic of this column and I will just agree. I will agree with the already-stated general opinion when I say that HBO's series "Sex and the City" is, by far, one of the best shows in the last 20 or so years of television. There. Now that I have said it, I will tell you why (and this goes along with the regurgitation of opinion, but bear with me and maybe I'll say something some one else hasn't yet).

My love for the pay-channel's sexy and hysterical series came as a shock to my system, for the show runs on HBO, and I am an avid supporter of all-inclusiveness when it comes to access to art and media, which is impeded by the high cost of cable TV. The idea of paying for movie channels at times seems elitist and stupid, but after being hooked by the show, the extra money paid to AT&T Broadband in return for my deliverance to the island of Manhattan via HBO for a weekly date with my four favorite women is more than worth the extra ante. I was also shocked because usually watching a movie channel series is like stacking a chainsaw ("Arliss", "Chris Isaak Show"); you don't know why you did it, but you never want to do it again. Not so with "Sex and the City", a show that grabs viewers by the balls (eye or otherwise) and invests them in the four-woman circus of dates, shoes, dinners and fashion (and of course, sex) that is New York City. The story-lines are catchy, the women are hot, the dialogue is amazing, and the sex? It's great. So great, in fact, that it recently garnered the show's standout sister, Sarah Jessica (yes, she's married to Ferris) Parker, a Golden Globe Award for Best Actress in a Comedy Series.



Yes, the above is all things said before; all things already articulated, but wait, there's more. There is the inevitable discussion of the show's impact on sex in the millennium and the buzz-topic of sexual revolution, which has probably been previously illuminated by the media at large, but I will delve into the topic and shame my moral high-ground because I have seen the effect of the show first hand on my family. It was my mother who first began to watch it, a television connoisseur, my mother will credit herself as being the "viewer who viewed when no one was viewing" of the prime time TV world. She "discovered" "Friends" back in the early 90's when she was one of the few saps in America who found herself not finding the remote to channel surf in desperate anticipation of "Mad About You". Without the clicker, and 23 minutes until "Mad About You," my mother trusted NBC with her sanity and sat through the pilot and continuing episodes of "Friends," which she began to love along with the rest of the nation. It caught up to cultural visionaries like my mom, and six stars were born. Flash-forward to the late-90's to find my mother, the cultural visionary, was sitting down to test the waters with the first episode of the much-talked-about HBO series about sex and nightlife in Manhattan. Once again, the "sleeper" show awakened the nation and now everyone in my family watches the show on Sunday nights.

> "...the hot dialogue in the show has started a dialogue about sex in otherwise sex-silent places, or it has at least broken down some barriers between what evils we can see or hear in the same room."

To some, the show's content can be quite offensive, but like it or not, the hot dialogue in the show has started a dialogue about sex in otherwise sex-silent places, or it has at least broken down some barriers between what evils we can see or hear in the same room (or house watching on a different TV) with our parents, siblings, lovers and friends. The fact that I can watch the show with my mother and have Miranda Hobbes discussing her beloved vibrator without my mother flipping out or gasping or without me slitting my wrists in total embarrassment says a whole lot about what that show has done for our sexual conversational skills. Maybe I just have a cool mom. However, if watching the bawdy show is a sign of cultural aptness and sexual revolution, then maybe I have a cool family. Because on Sunday nights at my house, you may hear the squeals of the four woman partaking in the pleasures of the flesh (and Manolo Blahnik shoes) in double sound because one or more of my family is camped out in one room watching in awe of debauchery, while a second contingent is staked out in another area in similar fashion.

I find that I can talk to my mom and sister more about sex and they also have more "mother-daughter" space in the realm of sex and passion to speak to one another because we have all had the ice broken for us. Among my friends and acquaintances, the discussions of sex and relationships seem to be more descriptive and explicit (without being too much information) along with the advent of "Sex and the City", even if they may or may not have seen the show, simply because there are so many people who have seen the series who are clearing the airwaves by talking about the sex on the program and sex in their own lives. Some people may think that this is the next circle of hell, that we're all becoming desensitized to sluttery, promiscuity and sex before marriage, but I feel that this new show and dialogue is more a sign of progress rather than a glimpse of the "four whores of the apocalypse" ushering in the annihilation of man and womankind. At the root of sex and relationships is said to be communication. At the root of the very chic and provocative series, "Sex and the City" lays the strong communication between four sexy, smart, and sometimes single women who are making love, relationships and 5th Avenue their battlefield, and I am very happy to hear more of their communiqué.

Thomas Naughton is a UMass student.

Running to a stand still: lessons in etiquette

KATIE LANDERS

Something occurred to me while I was on the treadmill at the gym over winter break. It wasn't the fact that running for an hour on a rubber mat that spins and spins and spins puts me in close proximity of a mouse, or even that you never actually get anywhere on a treadmill.

So here's my story. I'm running at a decent pace. I've got 35 minutes behind me and about 25 more to go, when all of a sudden my water bottle, which I have tucked nicely into the handle of the Gerbil-wheel, slips out of place and lands in the space in front of me. Approximately 30 people see this happen. This might have embarrassed a normal person, but for those of you who have read me for three semesters, I'm slightly "not-normal." I continued with my run, figuring one of the 30 people in the area would eventually be getting off a machine and hand me my water bottle. Not a minute later did someone climb off a stair-master, walk past me and my sad water bottle on the ground, and keep going. Ok, so that person didn't see it. Someone else will. Again, someone gets off a stationary bike, walks toward me, looks down at my water bottle and then up at me. AHA! My thirst will be quenched. But no. This person continues on his merry way and did not hand me my sad, lonely water bottle that was lying on the floor. On this goes for the remaining time of my run. Some people might have stopped and retrieved it, but I'm stubborn. At least 10 more people had to physically step over my water bottle and walk past me. At least no one kicked it.

People are not nice. Maybe it's something genetic that has happened to our generation. Like a gene mutation caused by our mothers drinking coffee when they were pregnant. Maybe I've just been afflicted by "mean-world syndrome" (yes, Comm. majors and anyone who made it through Sociology 103 knows exactly what I'm talking about). We're all slipping up, myself included. The holiday season passes and suddenly that gives us the right to be selfish once more. I'll admit, when I'm at a red light and going straight, if the person across from me has his left directional on, I most likely will not let them go. I want to go first. When I lived in the dorms, I was the person who took clothes out of the washer (but only if they were done) and put them on top. I, along with many other people in society, have lost the urge to be polite, or to do nice things for people. Let us reflect for a moment on our own person shortcomings.

Enough reflecting.

I'll turn this into a lesson for everyone, as we start fresh this spring semester. Toss away those diet regimens you set your resolution on, and the being better to your parents (you might still want to do that). We can make a habit of being a little bit better to one another and it might make the Pioneer Valley an oh so much nicer place to live in.

Let us turn to Emily Post. Who, you ask? Emily Post was a woman of The Great Gatsby age (circa 1920's) who happened to be the top aficionado when it came to etiquette. In 1922 Post wrote a book entitled Etiquette in Society, in Business, in Politics, and at Home. I'm sure Ms. Post has a lot to offer us UMass students as we make our way into the "real world."

I'll be referring to Post's book from www.bartleby.com.

In Chapter Five, we come across how gentlemen and ladies should behave toward each other in public. First, gentlemen should not sandwich themselves between two ladies while walking on a sidewalk, and should be walking on the curbside. Ladies should not attract attention to themselves in public. Women should not talk loudly or stare at people, and of course DO NOT expose private business into public.

> "...Post suggests that a man stands when a lady approaches or tips his hat as she walks by on the street. Because that's going to happen when you're walking through Amherst Center..."

Post points out that (keep in mind this is the 1920's) often times women who have money with nothing to do will drive through downtown only to vent irritability on a salesperson. Post points out that "consideration for the rights and feelings of others is not merely a rule for public behavior but the very foundation which social life is built." She says to never take more than your share, and never do anything unpleasant to others.

Skip ahead to Chapter 29 and Post has more to offer on the Fundamentals of Good Behavior. "No gentleman goes by a lady's house if affected by alcohol" – there's one that might happen. A gentleman or a lady does not lose control of his/her temper in public.

In Chapter 36 we come across Everyday Manners at Home. A very bad habit of society is to discuss private matters at the dinner table. In this chapter it also says that parents must never disagree in front of their children (anyone else laughing at this?).

So maybe Emily's ideals for society are a little far-fetched. Some of it does fit in nicely with society today. I don't think I'll see any guys stepping off the sidewalk to make room for a girl, but you never know. Read through the rest of the book and you'll see how the lifestyles of the early 20th Century slipped away as America progressed toward the millennium. It's even funnier when Post suggests that a man stands when a lady approaches or tips his hat as she walks by on the street. Because that's going to happen when you're walking through Amherst Center.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.01.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Hogan back In the WWF

One thing is for sure, 2002 will be an interesting year in the World Wrestling Federation. As Taz says, "the mood is about to change." Wrestling fans are abuzz on the cusp of Vince McMahon's recent announcement that the New World Order is headed to the WWF. What McMahon really means by this is two things: 1. The WWF has signed Kevin Nash, Scott Hall, and yes, "The Immortal" Hulk Hogan. 2. The plan is to package the three new signings as the NWO along with a returning Shawn Michaels (who has been out of action since a back injury in early 1998) and possibly Sean Waltman (X-Pac).

The thought process by McMahon and company is that recreating the ultra-successful NWO invasion angle (wrestlingspeak for a storyline) from World Championship Wrestling circa 1996-98, will provide enough of a spark to turnaround the current lackluster WWF television ratings and overall business. As most fans know, the NWO storyline where an outlaw group of heels (or "bad guys") invades a wrestling promotion worked once before for WCW, which was the WWF's main rival for years before it was purchased by McMahon last spring. Hogan, Hall and Nash were the centerpieces of the NWO the last time around, so it is only natural to involve them in the recreation of the angle.

There are a few points to consider before you start celebrating and break out your old NWO shirt. Bringing Hall, Nash, and Hogan to the WWF is bound to seriously change the WWF product, and not necessarily all for the good. Alas, there are some good, some bad, and even some ugly elements to the addition of these three big names.

The Good

If the short-term goal of the signings is to spark some interest in the product, and pick up some steam in the ratings, then it has already been a success. The NWO name along with Hogan, Hall, and Nash will likely draw casual viewers who stopped watching wrestling over the past year. It will provide the WWF with star power, nostalgia and fresh new "dream" matchups. As bad as the actual matches likely will be, there will be a great deal of interest in matches such as Austin vs. Hogan, Rock vs. Hall, or HHH vs. Nash etc. The current crop of WWF main event matchups have grown stale, as the WWF hasn't done a good job pushing new talent to a main event level and creating intriguing new matchups. Long term, the WWF should be working to get the likes of Rob Van Dam and Booker T to a main event level, but short term this may be the best solution to freshening the WWF.

There has also been on again, off again rumors that the WWF has planned to split itself off into two "separate" promotions, with two different talent rosters that do not (at least not more than a few times a year) interact with each other, with one of the groups appearing on Raw and the other on Smackdown. If the WWF does take this route, it will need some "big names" and star power to make it all work. Right now they just don't have enough top-level talent to split between two separate rosters. Bringing in Hogan, Hall and Nash may give them the dose of star power that they'll need to pull it off. Also, the prospects of Shawn Michaels returning as a part of the angle will give WWF rings the return of one of its most athletic and exciting performers in history. What true wrestling fan wouldn't jump at the opportunity to see a Michaels vs. RVD, or Michaels vs. Benoit match?

UNDER THE RING WITH KURT POLESKY

The Bad

As exciting as it will be the first time the infamous NWO music hits, it will also mark the end of several great aspects of the WWF. For one, the long string of athletically awesome Pay-Per-View main events will come to an abrupt end the first time that Hogan (or Nash for that matter) participates in one. This is especially true in the case of Hogan since he is the most likely of the three to be positioned at the main event level. Last year when there were rumors that Hogan was headed to the WWF for a match with Triple H at Wrestlemania, Triple H expressed his excitement in trying to get a great match out of Hogan. However, one has to wonder if Hogan is capable of much of anything in the ring at his advanced age (almost 50 years old) and complete lack of athletic ability. Bad matches are something WWF fans won't put up with for long.

The Ugly

By far the biggest negative consequence to all of this is how much the structure of the WWF behind the scenes will change. Rumor has it that when Vince McMahon polled his writing and production crew on the possibilities of signing Hogan, Hall and Nash, everyone except Triple H (who is friends with Hall and Nash) and Stephanie McMahon were dead set against the idea. There is a reason for this.

Hogan, Hall and Nash are known by other wrestlers for their huge egos and backstage politicking. Some of the younger talent that was working hard and patiently waiting in the wings for their shot at the top of the card will now likely be pushed aside in favor of the new signings. The attitude and morale among the wrestlers has deteriorated, and will likely continue to do so. Wrestlers like RVD, Booker T, Edge, and possibly even Chris Jericho could very well become afterthoughts in the WWF. In a few years when Hogan and company are long gone, the current group of young talent will seem stale and old when they finally get their shot at the top of the card.

The Verdict

Here's the deal: short term there is nothing wrong with the return of the NWO and Hogan and friends. For it to work long term the WWF must figure out a way to continue to develop its own stars into the "next big thing." The signings are even more questionable if the WWF isn't planning on splitting up into two promotions, since they will have an influx of talent and their current crop of second tier players will never be given a shot, even though most of them are good enough. However, the move is a solid one if the WWF is planning on splitting up. If all else fails, at the very least

Turn to WRESTLING page 6

Behind the scenes with Slackers' Devon Sawa

COURTESY WORLDWIDE WWF

Devon Sawa stars with Michael Maronna (aka Big Pete) and Jason Segel in Slackers, opening tomorrow.

By Jessica Kruskamp
THE GUARDIAN (U. CALIFORNIA-SAN DIEGO)

(U-WIRE) LA JOLLA, Calif. - After an impromptu Frisbee session in the drop-off zone of the Hyatt Regency in La Jolla, I was able to stop Devon Sawa of Slackers and get background information about the set. Fresh from a day of classic ding-dong-ditch in the Hyatt, the 23-year-old Vancouver native settled in and assumed a calm, collected, good interview front – backward cap and all.

JK: Does a morning of ding-dong-ditch mean that the set of Slackers was crazy, too?

DS: Yeah, we're making the hotel upset. The set was definitely crazy. A lot of crazy stuff went on.

JK: The classic Hollywood pin-up icon Mamie VanDoren makes an appearance in an intimate sponge bath scene. What was it like working with someone who has been in the business for so long?

DS: I did get to meet her, but very briefly. I was watching the scene from behind the cameras and it was hard to keep the laughter in. That was all improv. Yeah, [Jason] Schwartzman just came up with all that stuff. He just went nuts and she went along with it ... He is just so extremely talented you would often hear the director saying, "God Devon, stop laughing!" and I'd say, "No, I can't. Schwartzman is just so funny!"

JK: How much of the movie was improv?

DS: Oh jeez, I'd say about 80 percent of that film was improvised. There was a lot of acting added to the script.

JK: Was the original script as funny?

DS: When I read the original script and got to the montage sequence, I just thought it was funny as hell. All the different things — a lesbian make-out session, the singing and dancing penis – it was raw and original.

JK: Had you ever been in a cheating situation in school or life?

DS: I have not because it was so hard for me growing up because I had a set teacher for most of my life, so you got one guy in a trailer staring at you for three hours. There is no way of cheating there. There is no way of slacking off, there is no way of skipping school or cheating on your test.

JK: Do you see any of yourself in your character, Dave?

DS: Not at all. At the high school age, I was about a foot shorter than all the girls and a little quirky and skinny, and so I didn't have a lot of girlfriends. Dave is very smooth; always been the popular guy. We are pretty different.

JK: How did the crew handle all the cast and their practical jokes?

DS: We of course at times were goofing off. We pissed off the props people pretty good. By law, you can't drink beer on film, so they change the beer to water, but we decided to switch it back to beer.

JK: Did that scene make it in the movie?

DS: Yeah, we are all sitting on the couch. They found out, and they were not impressed. The director was having one, too, though! It was the end of the day and we said, "Why not, let's have a couple of real ones."

JK: When Casper came out you were 15, and a lot of girls had pretty big crushes on you. Did you ever have any kind of stalker experience like the one in Slackers?

DS: Luckily, no. But I have had some weird fans. I had one girl that sent her brassiere and a lock of her hair. The bra was just gigantic and the lock of hair was red and it ended up being a big red-haired bra because in the mail ... it was just a big hairy bra. Things like that – nothing too threatening. Nothing too Ethan in Slackers.

JK: What does the movie say to the college kids?

DS: We are not trying to send a message. We want to entertain and get them to relax. Have a couple of beers if you can, and go see it.

A crash course in the new "real" world

By Kim Tranell
DAILY COLLEGIAN (PENNSYLVANIA STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. – Let's face it. MTV's The Real World has never really been completely "real."

The half-hour dose of life set to a buzz-worthy soundtrack always had cast members who played to the camera. And then there's the inevitable truth that the show is, in fact, edited.

But now, after almost 10 years of pumping up the level of spectacle (yes, believe it or not, the original New York cast debuted all the way back in May of 1992), it may be time for a little less interference from the production staff. So far, "The Real World: Chicago", Season 11 (MTV, Tuesdays, 10 p.m.) seems a little too tailored to one specific theme.

COURTESY MTV.COM

Aneesa,

COURTESY MTV.COM

Theo,

MTV and Bunim/Murray Productions, the masterminds behind what has become a pop culture phenomenon, wasted no time in bombarding us with an all-new season of carefully patched together drama. Barely six weeks had passed since the Season 10 finale, and here they were: seven new strangers, picked to live in a house and have their lives taped ... well, you all know how it goes by now.

Viewers were able to get acquainted with this season's victims during a painfully uneventful hour-long introduction on Jan. 15. On the male side, there's Theo, the player, Kyle, your All-American Ivy League hunk, and Chris, a gentle-mannered gay recovering alcoholic who struggles with how and when to come out of the closet to his housemates.

On the other hand is Aneesa, an outspoken, open lesbian who doesn't mind roaming the new house minus her clothing (sorry Aneesa, but Ruthie from Hawaii has already blazed those trails).

And then there's Cara, who just might hook up with half of Chicago before the group's six-month stay is over (more on this later).

There's also Tonya, a conservative foster child who, from the looks of it, will spend much of her time in Chicago on the phone with her boyfriend, and Keri, a New Orleans native already showing signs of a potential romance with Kyle.

And if there's any question on how love (or lust) could blossom so quickly, a look around the trendy, three-story abode will provide an answer. From the hot tub, to the shower built for two, to the various sex books littered throughout — the powers that be made sure the house was stocked with quite a few quasi-aphrodisiacs.

And this, of course, just highlights what has become a pattern throughout the past several seasons. The producers have been attempting to play up certain themes with each cast, which is fine if they aren't magnified and exaggerated to the point of sickness.

But last season in New York, racial issues took over the plot (if The Real World can be said to have one), and it seems that this season promiscuity and sexual orientation will be at the forefront.

The first two episodes, and the house itself, indicate that the execs behind the show were hoping their "seven strangers" would partake in one giant, Chicago-style romp with an occasional taste of controversy over some cast mates' alternative lifestyles.

Take, for example, episode one. Aneesa can't seem to understand why Theo, who she knows is attracted to her, gets the wrong idea when she hops in the shower with him. And Kyle? Well, he admittedly can't stop looking at Keri's chest.

Episode two, cut down to the series' usual time slot, just packs twice as much sexual punch in its half-hour. Cara hooks up with three – that's right, three – different guys, one of whom is the singer in a band (which would have been cool if the unidentified rocker didn't have a big and Keri.

COURTESY MTV.COM

blotch covering his head throughout the post-concert rendezvous).

Now, all this doesn't mean the new season can't be entertaining. The cast has gotten more messed up, and, therefore, more interesting.

And part of The Real World has always been about attractive people, romance and sex appeal.

But, at least in the past, there was some suspense and a little room for anticipation. Now the show just travels down a predetermined, production-driven, predictable path.

Hey Arts staff and interested writers!
There will be an all-staff meeting on Mon., Feb. 4 at 6:30 at our office, in the Campus Center Basement. Be there or be square.

COURTESY PHOTO/THE NEW HAMPSHIRE/KRISTEN OLSON

Football? What about acappella!?!

Check out the Fine Smithsonian Jukebox series. It kicks off Feb 3, with The Silver Chord Bowl at John M. Greene Hall, Smith College at 7 p.m. The Bowl is a showcase of collegiate acappella groups including the Amherst College Zumfaces, the Yale Whiffenpoofs (oops), and the Smith College Smittenpoofs (bottom). Produced by the Northampton Arts Council

Garcia evoked in "Grateful Dawg"

COURTESY PAUL SATKIN

Jerry Garcia.

COURTESY SUSAN SULLIVAN

David Grisman and Garcia.

By Benjamin S. Rogerson
DAILY LOBO (U. NEW MEXICO)

(U-WIRE) ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – Gillian Grisman's documentary "Grateful Dawg" chronicles the friendship and musical partnership between David "Dawg" Grisman and Jerry Garcia from the early 1960s until Garcia's death in 1994.

I should start out by saying that most everything about the film is ugly. The camera always seems to be out of focus, the interviews are done poorly and without any direction, and the editing is choppy, using too many dissolves for transitions. What does stand out in the film, however, is guitar-picking Grisman as the bluegrass master and Garcia as the free spirit.

"Grateful Dawg" starts when Grisman and Garcia first meet in 1964. Director Gillian Grisman, daughter of David, uses old photographs showing her father and Garcia when they were young men in their first bluegrass bands. The photos give you an understanding of who these men were – young kids who loved bluegrass and knew that they would one day work together.

While Garcia eventually formed the Grateful Dead, Grisman went his way and did his own thing. Gillian Grisman never includes the Grateful Dead in the film, but rather focuses on the relationship between her father and Garcia.

The 1970s and '80s are bypassed to concentrate more on the years that Grisman and Garcia collaborated. "Grateful Dawg" weaves back and forth between interviews and musical performances.

The interviews merely act as filler because they never really tell anything about the musicians. What is truly learned about the relationship of Grisman and Garcia is from the music they play.

The use of multiple concerts dissolved on top of one another during a song isn't aesthetically pleasing and more often than not is confusing, with blinding and relentless continuity breaks. But the music played, along with all the amateur footage, was amazing, projecting a vivid imagery of its own.

For example, "Arabia" is the most interesting and complex song of the film. It is used in both studio sessions and concerts, cutting back and forth, portraying the time and energy that went in to creating the song.

"Grateful Dawg" isn't a film to see for the directorial genius, but one to see for the amazing music produced by Grisman and Garcia.

The music carries the film and gives you a peek into Grisman's and Jerry Garcia's life outside of the Grateful Dead. Both men are portrayed as who they are – musicians with energy, heart and love for the music they create.

COURTESY PHOTO/ARTISTS

Brazil's "dream team" performs this weekend

The Brazilian Guitar Quartet, comprised of four of the most brilliant guitarists in Brazil, will perform this Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium

SUPERBOWL XXXVI

Sunday Feb. 3rd
TOC Bar Campus Center
Doors Open at 3pm

Free Wings
Free Snacks
Free fun

11th Floor Campus Center

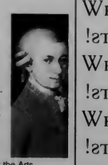
Watch the Pats ride the Rams at the the party of 2002

Don't miss out come early for the best seats!

"the Bar with a View"

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
SPRING 2002

Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $15 for five college students



Sunday, February 3
Brazilian Guitar Quartet
In Brazil they are called the "dream team" – four of the most brilliant guitarists living in the country, including Grammy nominee Paul Galbraith, the brothers Edelton and Everton Gloeden, and Tadeu Do Amaral. "Superb...the players' musicianship and enthusiasm for this venture shines through every bar...fabulous music from a world-class quartet." – Classical Guitar
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30pm

Wednesday, February 6
Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company with the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center
Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Company performs a rare program of works choreographed by Bill T. Jones with the Onon String Quartet and four artist members of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center. A new work will be set to Gyorgy Kurtag's String Quartet Opus 3, and 12 Mikrioludium Opus 13. The program also includes Beethoven's String Quartet op 135, and Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company's, D-Main in the Waters, set to Mendelssohn's Octet in E-flat Major.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by WFCR 88.5FM and The Valley Advocate

Saturday, February 23
Academy of Ancient Music
Christopher Hogwood, Conductor
Robert Levin, fortepiano soloist
A night of Mozart! Renowned for their baroque and classical performance style, including playing instruments of the appropriate period, the Academy of Ancient Music gives audiences the experience of hearing music as it might have sounded at the time it was written. Their program includes the Symphony No. 35 in D Major, and Piano Concertos No. 21 in C Major, K. 467 and No. 24 in C Minor, K. 491
Concert Hall at 8pm
Sponsored by TIAA-CREF
With generous support from the Frederick C. Tillis Endowment for the Arts

Wednesday, February 27
Children of Uganda
Tour of Light 2002
With the abundant vitality of East African music and dance – infectious rhythms, quicksilver movements, powerful drums, lyric flutes, songs of joy and hope – the award-winning Children of Uganda come to the Fine Arts Center. Hailed as "first rate" and "inspiring" by The New York Times, the group is composed of 18 orphans – ages six to seventeen – who serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war related orphans living in Uganda.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by WRNX 100.8FM and FamilyFun Magazine

For tickets call:545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line towww.fineartscenter.com

■ wrestling

continued from page 5

they will sell a dump load of NWO T-shirts.

For all you marks and smarts, "Under The Ring" will be running bi-weekly this semester on Fridays. As in wrestling, that is subject to change. If you've got anything regarding wrestling to say to me, email me with some pithy comments, questions etc. at underthering@yahoo.com. I'd like to publish some letters and maybe even have a guest columnist or two, so email me up. Also, feel free to harass and make fun of me for watching wrestling under your anonymous email address.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

WRITE FOR ARTS!

Eight freshmen start their Arizona softball careers

By Dan Komyati & Brandon Johnson
ARIZONA DAILY WILDCAT (U. ARIZONA)

(U-WIRE) TUCSON, Ariz. - After flaunting their talents during six exhibition games over the last week, the eight Arizona freshmen were given a rare opportunity to reveal a more candid side beyond the playing diamond at Wednesday's softball media day.

The graduation of eight seniors – including five All-Americans – from a team fresh off its sixth national championship, would typically generate some serious concern.

Yet, a large part of the reason the words "rebuilding" and "inexperienced" have not been aimed at the 2002 Wildcat softball team is a talented incoming freshman class.

Five new Wildcats come to Tucson from neighboring California – outfielder Crystal Farley, outfielder Courtney Fossatti, outfielder Carrie Hagen, pitcher Marissa Marzan (redshirting this season) and outfielder Allyson Von Liechtenstein. Three of the freshmen fulfilled their dream of playing in their home state – third baseman Jackie Coburn, outfielder Candace Abrams and infielder Rebekah Quiroz. Both Abrams and Quiroz are Tucson natives, while Coburn hails from Phoenix.

The highly touted group – seven of whom are also academic freshmen – have been thrown into the spotlight rather quickly and, if Wednesday's media frenzy is any indication, each one of them appears ready to embrace the challenges ahead.

How exactly can seven girls that played high school softball just a year ago seem so at ease about contributing immediately on the defending national champions? So far, the biggest support in helping to make the transition has come from each other.

"There are so many of us (freshmen). We have more people to relate to," Coburn said. "We're like our own little sorority."

Fossatti agreed.

"There's still a lot of pressure that comes with being freshmen, but I think that since there's so many of us, (the pressure is) not as great," Fossatti said.

With an opening-day starting lineup that will boast four first-year players, the heavily recruited freshmen will have to provide an immediate impact to keep UA atop the collegiate softball world.

Before arriving in Tucson, the entire class had a variety of options from which to choose when figuring out where to continue their softball careers. All of the freshmen received offers from other prestigious programs such as Fresno State and Oklahoma.

In the end, though, the decision to play in the desert was not that difficult.

"A lot of it had to do with coach Candrea and the tradition here," Fossatti said.

That tradition includes six Pac-10 Conference championships and six national championships since 1991. In building the Wildcats into the nation's elite program, Candrea has amassed a winning percentage of .835 – the second highest percentage among active Division I collegiate coaches.

The head coach appears rather confident that his incoming class of 2002 will only help to maintain the level of winning that he has established.

"They've worked very hard and they're fun to be around," Candrea said. "They're very coachable, and they want to make an impact on the program.

"All of them will have their opportunities this year to step up and contribute."

While the Arizona softball team is all business on the field, off the field, the women are full of laughter and practice strange habits.

When asked who on the team had unusual superstitions, seven fingers pointed directly at Fossatti.

Since her freshman year in high school, Fossatti has been in the habit of kissing her bat, glove, helmet and even her stuffed monkey. When it comes to the monkey, her teammates don't let her go without ridicule.

"We pull pranks on her and steal it from her," said Abrams, the only redshirt from a year ago. "We hung it from a rope in the middle of the restaurant, we put it in the windshield wipers – we torture it."

The girls quickly added that Fossatti freaks out when her monkey disappears.

In addition to having their share of laughs off the field, the young Wildcats are serious about their schooling.

All of them said it is difficult to balance school with softball.

The players often don't get home until 9 or 10 at night and still have to do their homework and eat dinner.

Many of them said eating healthy is also a challenge they face. Because of their demanding schedules, most of the players find it hard to find the time to sit down and have a good meal.

This group of Wildcats may be young and fun off the field, but on it, there's no messing around.

All of them said they would be disappointed if they left Arizona without a national title.

Friday they start down that road.

All Sports writers must attend the All Staff Meeting on Monday or pay the consequences.

Collegian Staffers make their Super Bowl picks

With the arguing going on in the Campus Center basement all week, we here in the Sports Department figured that some of the Collegian's loudest mouths should put up or shut up. Here are a dozen staffers' (Sports and some non-Sports) picks for the Super Bowl. The winner will have his or her chance to write a trash talk column next week.

-Collegian Sports Staff

Staff member	Score	Comment
SAM WILKINSON	Patriots 35, Rams 34	Somebody will probably win this game.
GLEN STRAUB	Rams 31, Patriots 14	Let's face it. The Rams have the better Faulk.
JESSE GREENSPAN	Rams 45, Patriots 3	After the demoralizing loss, 6,000 drunken Pats fans from Southwest will roam the campus chanting "Yankees suck" in an attempt to make themselves feel better.
ANDY VOGT	Rams 38, Patriots 17	For some reason, I don't think the names Mike Vrabel and Roman Phifer strike fear into Kurt Warner.
KEN CAMPBELL	Patriots 24, Rams 17	Adam Vinatieri's going to be tired after kicking those eight field goals.
ERIC SODERSTROM	Patriots 28, Rams 24	Yo, Vinny. Do 'em.
DAVID ROSE	Rams 28, Patriots 17	Mike Tyson bites chunk out of Marshall Faulk's leg, chunk rushes for 150 yards.
MATTHEW F. "STRAW" SACCO	Rams 45, Patriots 21	So Bill Belichick's a genius huh? Then maybe he will retire before Sunday.
JUSTIN PEARSON	Rams 34, Patriots 24	I wish this wasn't the case but I just can't see the Brady Bunch going toe-to-toe with "The Greatest Show on Turf" for 60 minutes.
JIM PIGNATIELLO	Rams 31, Patriots 24	Pats will make New England proud, but can't pull it out in the end.
ANDY MERRITT	Rams 35, Patriots 28	While New England will make this an interesting and entertaining game, the Rams are just too scary to be picked against.
JESS MAY	Rams 42, Patriots 10	I love the Patriots, but they're still from New England.

www.dailycollegian.com

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

*EARN 1–2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2002 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 4 (Mon) •Feb. 5 (Tues) •Feb. 6 (Wed)

•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE

THE VALLEY ADVOCATE
"THE BEST PICTURE OF THE YEAR!"

THE NEW YORK TIMES
"FABULOUS!

OVER 130 CRITICS AGREE
"ONE OF THE BEST FILMS OF THE YEAR!"

Amelie
JEAN-PIERRE JEUNET

DAILY 7 & 9:15-- This week! A young waitress in Paris attempts to make the lives of those around her better

Downtown Northampton's
Academy of Music
support by the Valley Advocate • www.valleyadvocate.com

Movie-Line: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

Mill Valley
E•S•T•A•T•E•S
"Apartment Deals"

•On Bus line
•Free Heat/hot water
•Washer/dryer hookups
•Indoor cats accepted
•Only minutes from campus
•Air conditioning

420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst • 253 7377
Equal Housing Opportunity

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER . NO FEES.
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
253-7879

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES.
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
253-7879.

Large 1 Bedroom . Sublet during Spring Semester available immediately. Cliffside Apartments in Sunderland. Ht, HtW, electric included. Tons of extras. Sign now get free A/C. $740 a month.
413-665-7329.

AUTO FOR SALE

'94 Dodge Spirit. Runs great. $2000 or B/O. Call 256-0677.

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599
582-9103

'95 Mercury Villager Minivan. LS, all power (no AC) VG cond., no rust, 140K miles (trans. Rebuilt 105K), $3500.
Rick 548-9911

COMPUTERS

Compaq Presario 5360 with 15" monitor and printer. Call for info. 546-3152. $500 or B.O.

MAC Powerbook 1400CS, 133mhz, 64 RAM, w/2 batteries plus charger. $200.
665-6833.

Your Ad Could Be RIGHT HERE!!
All you have to do is call...
545-3500

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round.
(941)329-6434
www.cruisesareers.com

Stage hands wanted at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable schedule- week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1-5pm. Applications at Production Services RM 146 FAC

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for tour guides, student admissions reps and summer orientation counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 8.

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMPLOYMENT

Office help positions. New Students Program looking for year-round office help. Preferably freshmen and sophomores. Please call 545-4940 for more information and application. Deadline is Feb. 8.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

EMPOLYMENT

Put up posters. $12 per town/school, 10 hrs a week. References, car, reliable. 259-1227 mail box 1. email references to posters@artspromo.org

FOR SALE

Futon mattress king size deluxe, great condition $75 o.b.o. 259-9187 before 9pm.

Massaversity of Unichusetts parody hoodies and tees. Call Eric 549-9230.

ROOM FOR RENT

Nice room in private house walking distance to UMass. $390 a month all inclusive. 549-2728.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!!
1-800-234-7007.
www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices!
www.breakerstravel.com
(800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

WANTED

The Department of Linguistics needs participants for a language learning experiment. We are looking for a monolingual speakers of English for a one hour experiment with a $9 reimbursement. For more information contact Cr. Joe Pater at 586-2537 or pater@linguist.umass.edu

Need to ask someone to be your Valentine?

What a better way then to say it infront of thousands of people??

Place an Ad in our Valentines Day Issue in Tisk that someone special to be yours!!

Call 545-3500

We no longer run fyi's. Please send all briefs to Jessica May, 113 Campus center basement.

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Monty By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Skybox By Blake

Quote of the Day

"Friends don't let friends drive with Kulak."

–Melissa Hammel

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 23	HIGH: 31 LOW: 3	HIGH: 26 LOW: 13

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Welcome to the University of Massachusetts touch-tone registration system.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – We are now conducting add/drop for Spring 2002.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Please enter your nine-digit student ID number.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Please enter your branch code.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Please enter your four-digit personal identification number.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Please hold.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Enter a two-digit action code.

VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 22) – Enter the six digit schedule number you are requesting.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The action you requested could not be processed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The horoscope you requested is overenrolled.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – ##

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your credit total is zero.

No comic today. Cry me a river.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

N.E. Clam Chowder

Fish & Chips

Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

Spinach Noodle Bake (vegetarian) (W only)

DINNER

N.E. Clam Chowder

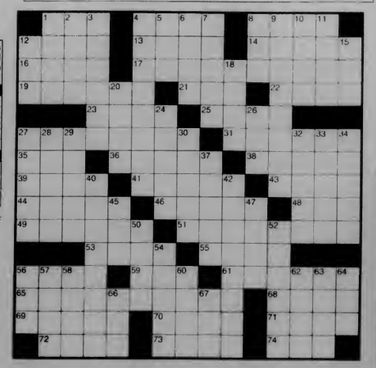
Veal Parmesan

Boston Scrod

Tofu Fajita (vegan) (W Basics only)

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan)

Your VERY STYLISH ad (made by our AWE-SOME graphics staff) could go here!



ACROSS
1 Food steamer
4 Falana or Montez
8 Robust
12 Written reminder
13 Part of NYU
14 Writer Zola
16 Necklace part
17 Car adjunct
19 Not anchored
21 Make a mistake
22 Clever ploy
23 Melodies
25 Go it alone
27 Studio
31 Casseroles
35 Detective's cry
36 Wall painting
38 Blockade
39 Pouches
41 Thong
43 Novelist Seton
44 Strut
46 Fire alarm
48 "Morning Edition" network
49 Continued story
51 Tumblers
53 Half-moon tide
55 Queen's quarters
56 Upscale coats
59 Prefix for angle
61 Horse operas
65 Capless
68 Part of a foot
69 Way over a fence
70 Singer Braxton
71 Bald head
72 Finales
73 Util. bill
74 Mind-reading

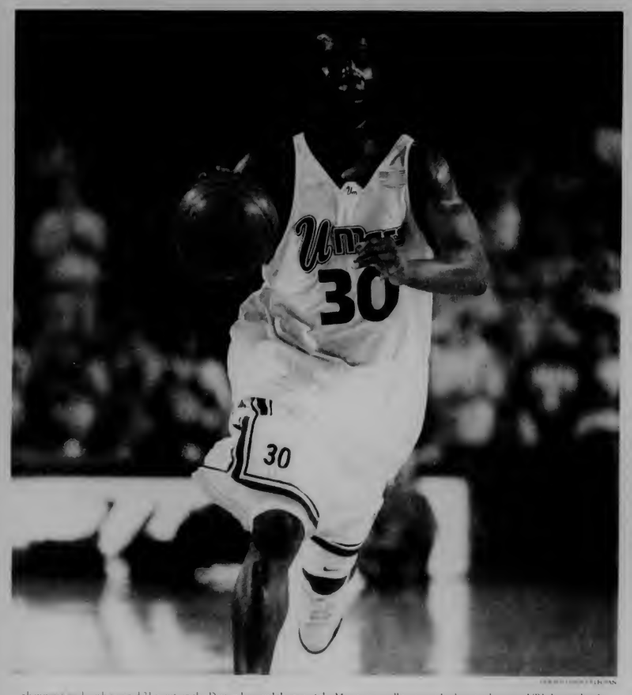
DOWN
1 Do garden work
2 General Bradley
3 Brown bear
4 Radiant
5 Out — — limb
6 Vitality
7 Stakes for sure
8 Attention-getting word
9 Nectar of the gods
10 "Instead of" word
11 Anderes
12 Exec's deg
15 Summer in France
18 Stepped
20 Company
24 Types
26 Fleur-de- —
27 Stinging insects
28 Windy City airport
29 Indy driver
30 Dancer Tallchief
32 Hair rinse
33 Sphinx locale
34 Scorches
37 Cone-bearer
40 Jerry's comedy series
42 Occasional
45 No. to a land
47 Suddenly-bright star
50 Like many a train
52 Happen
54 Babble
56 Letterman network
57 Negative emotion
58 Ireland
60 Admired one
62 Hazzard County deputy
63 Sgt Preston's group
64 That lady
66 " — So Fine"
67 Helmsman's dir.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

F	I	L	L	M	A	C	A	W	E	L	S	A
O	B	E	Y	I	M	A	G	E	G	O	W	N
R	E	A	R	S	I	D	E	S	G	R	A	D
E	X	P	I	R	E	D	S	T	A	N	D	B	Y
C	U	R	L	E	G	O
A	F	F	A	B	L	E	D	R	A	G	O	N	S
S	E	A	L	Y	U	K	O	N	S	C	A	T
T	N	T		B	E	D		G	O	O
I	C	E	D	M	I	N	O	R	R	U	M	P
R	E	S	I	D	U	E	S	A	F	A	R	I	S
		A	N	T			I	A	N
C	L	I	M	A	T	E	C	L	A	C	K	E	D
Z	E	R	O	E	L	B	O	W	H	E	R	O
A	N	O	N	R	I	A	T	A	E	L	M	O
R	A	N	D	S	A	S	S	Y	S	P	A	R

12-24-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff



Night Editor: Matthew F. Sacco
Desk Editors: Tsbora Ginzye-Blum
Copy Editor: Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor: Pete Preston
Production Staff: Frank DiMeglio, Mike Kulak

DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.01.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Minutemen try to rebound without Brand

Shannon Jacks who scored 21 points in the Dayton loss, and the rest of the Minutemen will try to get back on track against URI this weekend.

Outside shot is crucial in Kingston

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was all finally starting to come together for the Massachusetts men's basketball team. After a tough five-game losing streak that saw the Minutemen fall below .500 for the first time under Steve Lappas, they rebounded to run off three straight Atlantic 10 wins to forge their way back toward the top of the standings.

But then Dayton came rolling into the Mullins Center and UMass seemed to take a step back, falling 83-68 to the Flyers on Wednesday night. The Maroon and White looked flat on both ends of the court and didn't have the same jump in its step that it showed in its wins over Temple, George Washington and St. Bonaventure.

The Minutemen (9-9, 3-4 A-10) will look to get back on track as they head to Kingston, R.I. on Saturday afternoon to take on the University of Rhode Island at the Keaney Gymnasium. This will be the first time since the 1991-92 season that these two conference foes have battled in the Ocean State but not at the Providence Civic Center.

This marks the start of a three-game stretch in which the Maroon and White take on a triumvirate of teams that have combined for just two conference wins among them. It is also a stretch that will see the club without the services of junior forward Micah Brand. Brand, the team's second-leading scorer, went down early in the first half of the Dayton game with a severely sprained ankle. He returned briefly midway through the first half but saw no action with the Minutemen well behind in the final 20 minutes. Brand will definitely not see action on Saturday against the Rams, but just how long he will be unavailable is yet to be determined.

"It's not broken, but it's a bad sprain," Lappas said of the ankle. "Right now we don't know how long he will be out, could be one game, could be four games."

Another problem that Brand's injury creates is who will match up defensively with URI's Troy Wiley. Wiley, a junior college transfer was named co-A-10 Player of the Week for his performances against Xavier and GW. He averaged 21.5 points per game in those two contests and gives the Rams their only legitimate inside option.

"We have to scramble now with Micah out," Lappas said. "We don't know who it will be [guarding Wiley], it could be Eric [Williams], could be Raheim [Lamb] or it could be Kit [Rhymer]."

Whether he is called upon to stop Wiley or not, Rhymer will be looking for a repeat performance of the last time he locked horns with the Rams. On Feb. 20 of last year, Rhymer exploded for a career high 30 points, grabbed six boards and blocked five shots, leading the Minutemen to an 82-67 win at the Mullins Center. With the Rams only having three players on their roster listed at 6-foot-7 or bigger and only two weighing more than 200 pounds, the chance for Rhymer to do some serious damage on Saturday afternoon is there.

But despite URI's lack of size on the interior, most opponents have been able to beat them from the perimeter. The Rams are giving up an average of eight trifectas per contest and opponents are hitting almost 37 percent from behind the arc.

This should come as good news to the Minutemen, especially their three guards: Shannon Crooks, Anthony Anderson and Kyle Wilson. In the last four games, those three have hit 33-of-68 from three-point range and have provided more than 50 percent of the UMass offense over that period.

"We've been taking a lot of threes lately," Lappas said. "But all three of those guys have shot the ball well. Even Brennan Martin is shooting the ball much better."

In the end though the key will be defense. If the Minutemen can play well on the defensive end and they play within themselves at the other end of the floor, they will win. UMass is 9-0 this season when opponents shoot 37-percent or below. If they can hold the Rams below that mark, the Minutemen should be well on their way to their fourth A-10 victory of the season.

Coach Steve Lappas will lead the Minutemen in their quest to improve to .500 in the Atlantic 10 Saturday in Kingston R.I.

UMass Sports Briefs

WHMP/UMass co-Athletes of the Week

The Sports Luncheon Committee announced yesterday that junior pinnast Darren Morace and senior Kitwana Rhymer of the men's basketball team were named the WHMP/UMass co-Athletes of the Week. This is the second time this year that Morace has earned the honor while Rhymer has earned the tribute four times in his career.

Morace captured his third all-around title in four events this season. He captured meet titles in four of six events to lead the Minutemen to a seven-point victory over Navy on Saturday evening. His 8.95 on pommel horse was a new career high, and was six-tenths better than any other competitor at the meet.

Rhymer scored 14 points and pulled down four rebounds in the 73-60 win over George Washington last Wednesday. In Saturday's 67-65 win over St. Bonaventure, Rhymer scored 23 points and had seven boards. His offensive output was the second highest scoring total of the season for UMass.

Men's Soccer

The College Sports Information Directors of America announced Tuesday that senior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn was selected to the Verizon Academic All-America team. The co-captain was one of three Atlantic 10 athletes named to the second team.

To be nominated, a student-athlete must be a starter or important reserve with at least a 3.20 cumulative grade point average (on a 4.0 scale) for his/her career. No athlete is eligible until he/she has reached sophomore athletic and academic standing at his/her current institution (thus, true freshmen, redshirt freshmen and ineligible transfers are not eligible). In the cases of transfers, graduate students and junior college graduates, the athlete must have completed one full academic year at the nominating institution to be eligible.

Women's Indoor Track and Field

The Atlantic 10 Conference Monday named sophomore Brandy Green the Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Performer of The Week for her school-record-setting performance in the pole vault at last weekend's 14-team Husky Invitational.

Green and teammate Rhianna DaCruz each cleared 11'6.00", surpassing the old UMass record of 11'0.00" set by DaCruz Jan. 19 at the Tufts Invitational. Green also scored points in the 55 meter hurdles event with a preliminary time of 8.34, a season-best for her and the fifth fastest in UMass history. With both performances, Green qualified for the ECAC Championships held March 2-3 at the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury, Mass. Her five points garnered in the pole vault helped the Minutewomen to a ninth-place finish with 33 points at the event held by Northeastern.

-Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Smith leads in comeback victory

Senior forward scores 18 in overtime win

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

They didn't have the lead once in the first 38 minutes of play. Their best player spent 10 minutes of the first half sitting on the bench. They fell behind by 11 points early in the second half. It wasn't pretty, but they won the game.

Nekole Smith went 4-for-4 from the field in overtime, scoring the extra frame's first four points, to lead the Massachusetts women's basketball team (6-14, 4-5 Atlantic 10) to a 65-58 win over the Dayton Flyers last night at the William D. Mullins Center.

Smith scored 14 of her game-high 18 points in the second half and overtime. The scoring output was also the junior's season-high.

UMass didn't take the lead until Jennifer Butler tipped in a Paige Harris missed free throw with 1:51 left in regulation. The field goal was just Butler's third of the game.

Prior to Butler's tip-in, Harris ran off a personal 4-0 run that brought the Minutewomen to within one point.

Dayton jumped out to an early lead behind guard Chrissy Donovan, who scored 11 of her team's first 21. The junior shot 3-for-5 from behind the arc in the first half, but cooled down, along with the rest of her team, after the first eight minutes of action. The Flyers came out of the gates with a 4-for-6 performance from three-point land and 6-for-10 from the field in those first minutes, but couldn't buy a basket in the half's 12 remaining minutes (3-for-15 from the floor the rest of the way).

The poor shooting by Dayton allowed an equally struggling Maroon and White squad to stay within reach despite a combined 1-for-10 first half performance by Butler and freshman Katie Nelson.

Butler was struggling enough in the first half for Coach Jonie O'Brien to sit her for 10 of the game's first 20 minutes.

It was junior forward Amber Sneed who led UMass' offensive attack in the first half, shooting a perfect 4-for-4 from the field in 15 minutes of action.

Having realized how much she struggled offensively in the first half, Butler decided to stick with what she does best for the rest of the contest.

"I wasn't shooting the ball too well," Butler said, "so I figured I would rebound the ball – that's what I am best at."

It was Butler's knack for grabbing the ball off the iron that swayed the momentum toward the Maroon and White in the second half.

"She played excellent in the last 15 minutes of the game," O'Brien said. "Every time we needed a big rebound, she went out and grabbed it."

Butler ended the night with 15 rebounds, seven on the offensive end.

Dayton seemed to put the nail in the coffin with a 5-0 run to start the second half, extending its lead to 34-23. But Nelson came up big with a three and junior Suri Livandi put back a Butler miss to keep the game within reach.

UMass took over the game with 4:30 left in regulation with an 11-3 run behind four Smith points and Harris' personal four-point run.

Two free throws by Nelson with 22 seconds left extended the Minutewomen's lead to 51-48, but a three-pointer by junior Sarah Allen with 11 seconds left sent the game into overtime.

The Minutewomen forced 24 Dayton turnovers while committing just 13 of their own. Nelson had an impressive 6-to-1 assist to turnover ratio on the evening.

UMass continued to have trouble from the charity stripe, shooting just 50 percent from the line (14-for-28). But Nelson and Smith were able to hang onto victory with an impressive 5-for-7 in the final minute of overtime when Dayton was forced to foul.

O'Brien was pleased with her team's ability to pull together and muster up enough offense despite her No. 1 option's struggles.

"It's a good feeling," she said. "We had a lot of people step up and do some things."

UMass will return to action Saturday as host to Xavier at 12 noon.

Freshman Katie Nelson (with ball) scored four points in the overtime period of last night's victory win over Dayton.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

MONDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY THREE ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.4.02

Black History Month events

By Catherine Turner
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Several events have been planned to celebrate February as Black History Month.

English professor John Edgar Wideman will be reading from his latest book, Hoop Roots, which is a memoir of discovering his passion for basketball. The reading also marks the beginning of the second half of this year's Visiting Lecture Series sponsored by the MFA program in English. The reading will be Thursday, at 8p.m. in Memorial Hall and a reception will follow. For more information, please call 545-5499.

New Horizons Reggae Band will perform at the Top of the Campus at 9 p.m on Saturday, Feb. 9. It is sponsored by the Campus Activities Office and is part of the TOC Coffeehouse series. For more information, call 545-3600.

A panel discussion titled "Ethnic and Religious Discrimination in the Wake of the 9/11 Terrorist Act" will be held from 3-5 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. The free discussion will be held as part of the African Latino Asian and Native American (ALANA) Lecture Series.

Another Top of the Campus performance will take place on Wednesday, Feb. 20. Nigerian talent Toby Foyeh and Orchestra Africa will perform at 8 p.m. According to Kameleon Records, Foyeh and his Orchestra Africa make "modern African music inspired by the traditional music of Yorubaland and presented with the sounds and technology of today."

The Annual Five College Dance Department Faculty will perform their concerts at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium Thursday Feb. 21 through Saturday Feb. 23. The Concert features a commissioned work by Urban Bush Women artist and director Jawole Willa JoZollar. It honors the work of the pioneer African American dancer and choreographer Pearl Primus. Tickets are $12 for general admission; $5 for students. For more information please call 545-2511.

The Top of the Campus will host Boston blues guitarist Chris Bell and his Blues Band on Saturday, Feb. 23. Influenced by such legends as Albert Collins, BB King and Stevie Ray Vaughan, Bell is a BMI songwriter and is the founding member of Stiff Upper Lip, who produce their own unique style of "100% Blues." The show is at 9 p.m. and is also part of the TOC Coffeehouse series.

The all-female R&B group Imani will perform at the Top of the Campus at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 27. The group has performed at schools across the country and has been described as "serious divas" by students at Ohio Wesleyan University.

Also performing on that Wednesday is "Children of Uganda's Tour of Light 2002." This East African music and dance troupe is composed of 18 orphans, ages 6-17, who serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war-related orphans living in Uganda. It will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets range from $10 to $30 for general admission, $5 to $10 for students. For more information please call 545-2511. This event is sponsored by WRNX 100.9, Family Fun Magazine and the Hampshire Mall.

Finally, the month wraps up with the New England premier of "Slanguage," on Feb. 27 and 28. Written and performed by Universes, an ensemble of five multi-disciplined performers, "Slanguage" is a fusion of poetry, theatre, jazz, hip-hop, blues, Spanish boleros and politics. It is directed and developed by Jo Bonney and will be held in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 for general admission, $5 for students, seniors, and low-income patrons. More information can be received by calling 545-2511.

Childcare Center remains central budget issue

This may be the scene at the University Child Care Center if a coalition of parents and teachers fails to change the minds of the administration.

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Proponents of childcare said that the decision to close the University Child Care (UCC) would cost the University of Massachusetts-Amherst rather than save money.

Meeting with interim Chancellor Marcellettette Williams in the Campus Center in an attempt to reverse the decision to close UCC, parents and teachers told the University that it might lose nearly three million dollars in grants.

Assistant professor of Teacher's Education and Curriculum Studies Margaret Gebhard spoke as a representative of Concerned Faculty for University Childcare. The group believes that cutting UCC will do "irreparable harm" to the University.

"UCC is vital to the ability of the University to recruit and retain faculty," Gebhard said. Gebhard also explained that just seven members of her group provide 2,965,000 dollars in grant money. The University would stand to lose that money if these parents weren't able to meet their grant requirements due to a lack of childcare.

Lynn Hatch, a doctoral Economics student, said that there was no way she could make her deadlines for her 30,000-dollar grant if she was staying home with her child. Hatch also suggested an alternative to cutting childcare.

"Will the University cut or freeze the ten highest salaries?" Hatch asked, recalling that a similar move was made during a fiscal crisis in the 1980s.

Exercise Science associate Professor Jane Kent-Braun said that without childcare, the University would lose her grant from the National Institutes of Health.

Overall, Gebhard said, the three million dollars lost would not be made up for by cutting UCC. Full day childcare costs the University $327,695. A further 300,000 is contributed to flexible schedule day care, as mandated in the Graduate Employee Organization's contract. The University had announced its intention to close the flexible care classrooms in May 2004. GEO President Leslie Edwards views that as an illegal move.

"We are about to file grievances," Edwards said. "There is one, possibly several violations of our contracts. We will not let [the closing] happen."

Undergraduate students are feeling the sting of closing UCC as well. Tiffany Sparks, a sophomore Anthropology major, stood up at the meeting and told the Chancellor that if she had known UCC would be closed, she would have chosen to go elsewhere.

"I'm appalled that a university educational institution would squash and belittle an educational institution because it deals with two-year-olds and five-year-olds," Sparks said.

"Childcare is an emotional issue," Williams told the audience. "Were I in your shoes now, the emotion surrounding that impact to me...I know how that would feel."

But empathy wasn't enough for the group.

"I feel like you [Williams] have entirely disrespected the parents," Edwards charged.

"You [Williams] said you understood what you might have felt, but we are talking about a lot more than individuals making 'other arrangements,'" Hatch said.

Several members of the audience cited data that supported their argument. Assistant Professor of Exercise Science Barry Braun said that childcare was nationally recommended to universities to provide peace of mind for their employees.

"New faculty expressed an acute need for more flexible employment options at the University – more opportunities for spouses, and flexible employee benefits such as parental leaves, flexible time limits for tenure, and childcare options," Braun stated, quoting a 1991 study of first-year faculty.

Braun asserts that childcare programs actually save money in the long run by increasing faculty's productivity and their "peace of mind."

"Work-family programs are often viewed as added costs that must somehow be absorbed into already tight budgets. But the costs of work-family initiatives must be compared with the costs of doing nothing.'" Braun said, quoting an American Association for Higher Education report entitled "Work, Family and the Faculty Career." "In a competitive environment, employers who fail to articulate and implement effective work-family programs may lose valuable employees and, over the longer term, see costs increase due to employee stress and low productivity. Rather than increasing costs, work-family programs can result in significant savings to institutions."

Williams thanked the group for presenting its case, but said that it would take further review before any decisions could be made. In the meantime, more cuts are to be expected, she said.

"It's a process. And that process will continue for the rest of the year. There are still programs under review," Williams said. "Unfortunately, in all likelihood, in all probability, yes, I almost positive there will be other layoffs."

Which is exactly what some expected.

Francis Martin, president of American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 1776, isn't sure that saving the program would be a total victory.

"If this program survives, they [the University] will just cut something else," Martin said. "There has to be a better way."

Gubernatorial candidate to address issues

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Robert Reich, a Democratic candidate for the Massachusetts gubernatorial race will speak to students today in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

The University Democrat-sponsored event will take place at 12 p.m. and will focus on participating in the Amherst caucus. Reich will also address some of the issues that are central to his campaign.

This is the second talk given by Reich, the first held yesterday addressing issues pertinent to the Jewish community. The lecture was entitled "Creating a Real Commonwealth."

Reich is currently a professor of Social and Economic Policy at Brandeis University and resides in Cambridge. He previously served as the 22nd secretary of Labor under President Clinton and was a faculty member at Harvard University.

He served as an assistant to the solicitor general during the Ford administration and headed up the policy planning staff during the Carter administration for the Federal Trade Commission. He is also the author of eight books including The Work of Nations, Locked in the Cabinet and most recently a work entitled The Future of Success. He primarily publishes articles regarding the global economy and has his name in the New York Times, The Boston Globe and The Los Angeles Times.

In addition he is the editor and founder of The American Prospect.

"As you well know, for too many years we've had no real leadership, no vision, and no real value in that office. I think I can make a difference," Reich said in a letter to people of Massachusetts. "For most of my adult life I've fought for more and better jobs. As U.S. secretary of Labor I helped raise the minimum wage, fight sweatshops, improve pension security, implement the family and medical leave act, make workplaces safer, and fight for corporate social responsibility.

"I have always stood up for average working people and for those who have been left behind. If you want to know where I stand on issues that are important to the future of the Commonwealth."

Reich is currently vying for the chance to run against acting Governor Jane Swift with five other Democratic candidates.

"Winning the race for governor won't be easy," Reich stated in his letter. "A lot of entrenched interests want to keep things the way they are. They don't want new ideas. They want politics as usual."

The other five are slated to run include Senate President Tom Birmingham, Treasurer Shannon O'Brien, secretary of State William Galvin, former state Senator Warren Tolman, and former national party chairman Steve Grossman. The general election will take place next fall.

The talk is free and open to the public.

Robert Reich is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Fee increase issue around the country

By Alice Iosifescu
COLUMBIA DAILY SPECTATOR (COLUMBIA U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK – Three undocumented City University of New York students got their day in the New York State Supreme Court Jan. 25 against CUNY Chancellor Michael Goldstein and his legal counsel, Frederick Schaffer.

The students, filing under the name "Paula R." for privacy reasons, are challenging the recent memorandum to charge out-of-state tuition rates to students who are undocumented immigrants instead of the current in-state fee.

The three students represent an estimated 3,000 CUNY students who are undocumented immigrants and will have to pay $3,400 instead of $1,600 per semester at CUNY's four-year colleges and $1,338 as opposed to $1,230 at the community colleges.

The policy took effect on Jan. 29, but it includes a provision that gives CUNY students the option to stagger their payments so that not all of the tuition is due at once.

The judge is expected to render a decision within the next two weeks. Meanwhile, local politicians have drafted legislation to circumvent the tuition changes.

Assemblymen Peter Rivera of the Bronx and Adriano Espaillat of Washington Heights plan to introduce a bill, which would change the criterion for in-state tuition from legal residence to graduation from New York high schools. Texas and California already have similar laws in place.

International Briefs

European Union

By Rebecca Worster
ARKANSAS TRAVELER (ARKANSAS)

(U-WIRE) FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. – On the eve of its first-month anniversary, the euro has set a precedent in becoming a unifying force throughout an entire continent.

The debit coin and seven bill forms of the euro currency are used in 12 of 15 member states of the European Union. Many University of Arkansas students traveling back home to Europe are quick to notice the results of the currency exchange.

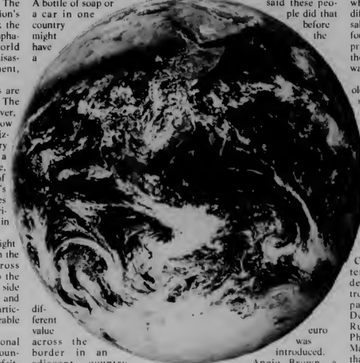
One graduate student from Austria said she's optimistic about the change, although some misjudged its initial popularity. Sarina Kriechbaum-Ikhine said the trip home to Austria on New Year's Eve showed lines of people waiting to withdraw the new currency from ATM machines. Banks around Europe underestimated the citizens' demand Jan. 1, and several ATM machines ran dry before the lines did. Austrian newspapers had advertised the new currency extensively, Kriechbaum-Ikhine said.

"For weeks every single day there was something about the euro," she said.

The euro design became a reality in 1996 when an official council chose an Austrian artist's ideas through a contest with the theme "Ages and styles of Europe." Plans for continental stabilization had been in the making since the mid-1950s, with the declaration of a common European market.

"It's absolutely without precedent," said Mark Cory, UA professor of foreign languages and instructor of a European studies honors course. The currency adoption occurred almost flawlessly, without resulting from a financial crisis, Cory said. The Economic and Monetary Union's original purpose was to link the countries together, while emphasizing another war like World War II would be financially disastrous for the entire continent, Cory said.

The seven denominations are different sizes and colors. The theme from bill to bill, however, is similar. Each has a window design on the front, symbolizing a look to the future, Cory said. The reverse side shows a map of Europe and a bridge, which symbolizes linkage of countries, he said. Each bill's bridge and window structures illustrate a different time period, such as the Gothic Era, in Europe.



The introduction of the eight euro coins was an increase in the amount of coins used across Europe. They are similar to the new American quarters. One side is a common European relief, and the other side represents a particular country. All are transferable throughout Europe.

Cory said while the national icons on each individual country's currency have been forfeited, the general outcome seems to be for the better.

"It takes away one traditional problem: travel," he said.

Currency change-over at country borders will be reduced, although not eliminated, he said. Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom are the only members of the EU keeping their national currency.

While European countries use the same euro, its monetary value varies between countries.

Some economists have predicted the border competition will eventually drive down prices as each country competes.

Tracy Murray, UA distinguished professor of economics, said he doesn't believe this will occur on a large scale.

"Competition in Europe is not the same as in the United States," Murray said. "Customers are much more loyal to their stores."

To some extent people do price shop, but Murray said these people did that before the euro was introduced.

Angie Brown, a junior Spanish major, said she recently traveled to Europe and found transactions with the euro were easy.

"It was actually kind of comforting ... because I wasn't used to the currency," she said.

A more experienced European, Virginie Novo, said her visit back home to France during the winter break was more confusing.

"It was a big mess, especially the sales," Novo said.

She explained sales in France, which happen less frequently, are different from American sales. A sale Jan. 9, Novo said, displayed four prices for one product. Two prices were in French francs and the other two were in euros. "It was very confusing," Novo said.

Asked if she kept any of the older currency, Novo replied she spent all of the francs, but her parents kept some for souvenirs.

"I'm a student. I need the money," Novo said. "If I have some kids, I'll send them to my parents to see them (the francs)."

Philippines

By Rob Torte
U-WIRE (DC BUREAU)

(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON – Continuing a global fight against terrorism, the United States deployed 850 Special Forces troops to the Philippines in the past few weeks, according to Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld. Rumsfeld and Philippine President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo have claimed that U.S. forces are there simply to train the Philippine Army in its war against rebels in the southern part of the country. "In Washington's world view, Muslims seeking independence ... are ipso facto terrorists" according to Tahir Mirza, of Antiwar.com, a noted peace organization.

Mirza and his colleagues have become one of several voices of opposition in the United States. Rumsfeld has said that there are "definite linkages" between the Abu Sayeff rebels in the Philippines and Osama bin Laden's al Qaeda network. The Abu Sayeff is currently holding several American hostages. Rumsfeld also pointed out that the United States would pursue terrorists, even if they were not related to the Sept. 11 attacks or al Qaeda. This means that the United States might get involved in other problem areas such as the Middle East. In the Philippines, some leftist lawmakers are calling for the resignation of Arroyo because she has allowed foreign troops into the country. Several of these lawmakers are claiming that this action is in violation of the Philippine Constitution, which bars any foreign troops from operating on its soil.

Due to President George W. Bush's high approval ratings with most Americans, it seems unlikely that the administration will back off from its current policy. Bush's approval rate is still in the 80s and shows no sign of letting up. "I think we should go after these people wherever they hide," said Kristin Murphy, a senior at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

Rumsfeld has indicated that he will do just that. "We are determined to find terrorist networks and do what we can to help root them out and stop them from killing people," he said.

Briefs compiled from wire sources.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' essential semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1930. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571
• Full Aerobics Programs including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more
• Nutritonal Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Fitness Testing & Programming
Semester Special $160
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
• Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equipment
Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"

Tuesday, February 5th
4:00-6:30 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Celebration of Arts on Campus
brought to you by: UMass Arts Council
This open house will feature a showcase of student talent as well as provide an opportunity for you to learn more about the Arts Council's grant funding opportunities!
Please join us when you RSVP for refreshments, informative tables, a free raffle and more!
For more information call us at 545-0202 or visit our website www.umass.edu/fac/artscouncil

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
EARN 1–2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2002 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 4 (Mon) •Feb. 5 (Tues) •Feb. 6 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY: Thurs. Feb 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

learn how to be a nurse, by being a [nurse].
Here's your chance to do what other students only read about. To get one-on-one training and have a shot at a scholarship worth thousands. It's all part of the Army ROTC Nursing program. Talk to an Army ROTC advisor today. Because it's time you put your passion into practice.
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Companies look to cash in on spring break

By William Pleas
THE MARQUETTE TRIBUNE (MARQUETTE U.)

(U-WIRE) MILWAUKEE – Spring break is just around the corner, and college students around the country are running out of time to plan their vacations to various tropical locations.

And because of the week's popularity, many companies that specialize in selling spring break packages have popped up.

Some of the more popular destinations are both warm and offer easy access to alcohol, according to Joe Bush, vice president of Student Express, a subsidiary of Vacation Travel International.

"This year, some of the hot spots overseas include (Mexican cities) Cancun and Acapulco," Bush said. "Acapulco has grown threefold over the past five years because of the heavy nightlife and low drinking age. As for the continental United States, South Padre Island (Texas), provides a two-for-one with both weather and drinking age and Panama City in Florida, since they allow drinking on the beach."

Bush suggested students do research on both the location and the travel company they work with to make sure they are not cheated.

This is something Laureen McArdle, marketing director for Sunsplash Tours Inc., also suggests.

"Anyone planning to use any travel service should make sure and do research on the company before accepting any offer," McArdle said. "Many of the companies currently doing business have changed names several times or have multiple names they go by."

"Anybody can go to Kinko's, take a bunch of tropical pictures and say they have a spring break company," Bush said. "In reality, there are probably only five or six actual companies that are really working in the students' best interests."

GERALD LINGOS/COLLEGIAN
The Amherst Fire Department is all so quiet with the anticipation of the New England Patriots and the St. Louis Rams game that was held yesterday evening.

Robert Baranoski, general manager of Student Travel Services, said students should also realize the difference between a spring break organization and spring break travel services.

"A spring break organization usually consists of a person or group who collects money, attempts to purchase airplane tickets and hotels and that's it," Baranoski said. "A spring break tour operator works with hotels, airlines, clubs, et cetera, to plan an overall package. This is not to say you cannot get a good deal from a spring break organization, but they don't provide the same level of protection we do.

"If, for example, something were to happen where a flight were cancelled, a spring break tour operator would be able to either refund you or work with the airline to get another flight. A spring break organization does not have that kind of leverage."

Baranoski also provided suggestions for how to act once you reach your destined location.

"Act the same way you would at home," Baranoski said. "You wouldn't go drunk down a dark alley with money hanging out of your pocket in the middle of night at home, so why do it while you're on vacation?"

In addition, Baranoski points out that most of the international locations are tourist locations, so exchanging money is a waste, and most local police forces are not looking to bust spring breakers.

McArdle suggests that spring breakers make sure to keep their identification in a safe place.

"If the hotel you are staying at offers a safety deposit box, take it," Bush said. "There is nothing worse than being wasted and losing something like your ID or passport."

But most importantly, as Bush puts it, students should have fun.

"Listen, there are only so many times that spring break will come around for college students, and it's best to take advantage of it," Bush said. "One of the mottos our company has that we tell students in the first seminar we have with them is, 'What happens at spring break, stays at spring break.'"

Monkey study shows cocaine use is tied to the social order

By Nick Phillips
OLD GOLD AND BLACK (WAKE FOREST U.)

(U-WIRE) WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. – This century has seen monkeys at the forefront of scientific research, from space flights to genetic testing. But a unique study done at the Wake Forest University's School of Medicine hooked monkeys on the same drug as rock stars and athletes: cocaine.

Scientists have concluded that cocaine addition in monkeys is closely linked to social order.

The study was written by Michael Nader, an associate professor for the departments of physiology and pharmacology and of radiology at the University School of Medicine in conjunction with nine associates. Nader's and his colleagues' work is receiving worldwide attention after its publication in this month's Nature Neuroscience.

Scientists put 20 Masque monkeys into small groups. Once a social order was established, the scientists allowed the monkeys to inject themselves with cocaine.

Results showed that the monkeys that were more dominant in the groups were less likely to become addicted.

"The positive spin on that is environment enrichment – changes in the environment that enhance someone's condition – can protect them from drug abuse," Nader said in the Jan. 21 Winston-Salem Journal. "The negative is that stressors – in this case a social stressor – can also impact the likelihood that a drug will have a greater potential for abuse."

Cocaine blocks the dopamine receptors in the brain, allowing the dopamine, a natural chemical that triggers the feeling of being high, to linger rather than being absorbed.

Dominant monkeys ended up with 20 percent more dopamine receptors in their brains than the subordinate monkeys. This allowed them to absorb the dopamine at the same rate that they would without the cocaine, so they never used enough to become addicted.

"There is a typical characteristic to how they respond," Nader said. "We can say that the drug is serving as a reinforcer in the dominant monkeys, it was not. They did not press the lever very much to get the cocaine."

The subordinate monkeys had fewer receptors, so the cocaine blocked them more efficiently. The dopamine stayed in their brains longer, and they grew to like the cocaine.

Since its publication, the study has received attention from scientists around the world.

"I have received many comments from around the world ... Germany, Australia, England, Canada, Brazil. A large majority of the comments have been very positive," Nader said.

According to Sara Shaw, a university graduate and now a full-time lab technician, "I think it's fascinating that we've shown that almost 100 percent of the dominant monkeys didn't get addicted to cocaine. You can do a lot with these results."

The interest in the study has put the University School of Medicine in the spotlight.

"Only a few labs socially house monkeys like we do here," Shaw said. "The monkeys are all male to avoid sex issues. For example, if two males were with a female, there would be too much competition."

Despite being on cocaine, the monkeys are all in good health, Nader said. Shaw said, "The catheters used to give the cocaine intravenously occasionally did cause some infections, but this was normal and not unusual. As far as the cocaine itself, the drug has not caused any problems."

Nader emphasized the continued well-being of the monkeys. "We will limit the amount of cocaine that they get," he said, "So, that there's a very, very small likelihood that the cocaine will have any kind of adverse effect on them. You could not walk back there and tell which monkey had cocaine and which didn't."

All staff meeting @ 6:30 in the Newsroom.

Traveling together has never been better

Right now is the best time to take a trip on Amtrak® With service to over 500 cities and towns, Amtrak offers a perfect getaway for you and your friend, satisfaction guaranteed. Just reserve one ticket for yourself, travel anytime between January 9 and February 28, 2002, and your companion travels for free—but act now, because reservations for this special offer ends February 21, 2002

For even more savings use your Student Advantage® Card and save 15% on the coach fare on the first fare. In fact, with Student Advantage you can save 15% on coach fares all year long! To join Student Advantage call 1-877-2JOINSA or visit www.studentadvantage.com.

For more information about the Buy-One-Get-One-Free offer just mention code H207 when you call your travel agent or 1-800-USA-RAIL. Or take the fastest route to your ticket when you visit www.amtrak.com.

Buy-One-Get-One FREE! FOR A LIMITED TIME ONLY!
Student Advantage Members get 15% off the regular coach fare, the second person is FREE.
Non-Student Advantage Members buy regular coach fare, the second person is FREE.
Offer valid for purchase 1/2/02–2/1/02 for travel 1/9/02–2/28/02. Minimum 7-day advance reservations required, including those designated as unreserved trains. Purchase required within 2 days of reservation. Fares are non-refundable once purchased. Offer not valid on Acela Express®, Metroliner®, Auto Train®, Joint Amtrak/VIA® Rail service to Ontario and 7000-6999 series Thruway service. Offer also not valid for local travel within the Northeast Corridor on Friday or Sunday between 11a.m.–11p.m. on Acela Regional®trains. Blackouts apply on all trains for 2/15/02–2/19/02 and, on the Crescent, City of New Orleans and Sunset Limited only, for the following additional dates: 1/31/02–2/4/02 and 2/7/02–2/13/02. Not valid with any other discounts, fares orders or promotions. Fare passenger and companion must travel together on the identical itinerary. Other restrictions and surcharges may apply.
TRAVEL AGENTS: access your GDS for complete details: G/PRO/WTR; Sabre: T/PRO/WTR. Attach coupon to author's coupon. If electronically reporting, attach to agent coupon. All Travel Agents and Amtrak Ticketing Agents please return the coupon to: Amtrak Customer Segmentation, 10 G Street, NE, Washington, DC 20002.
Name: _____
Address: _____
City _____
State: _____ Zip: _____
E-mail: _____
ARC # 8 554 270 0000 207 1 Mention Code: H207
Amtrak® is a registered service mark of the National Railroad Passenger Corporation.
AMTRAK

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. (413) 587-4233
schedule for Fri. 2/1 - Thurs. 2/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Birthday Girl (R) 12:15 4:50 7:45 10:15*
I Am Sam (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25*
Kung Pow (PG13) 12:50 3:55 7:40 9:55*
The Count of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00*
The Mothman Prophecies (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
A Walk To Remember (PG) 12:25 4:30 7:35 10:20*
Black Hawk Down (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
Snow Dogs (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
Orange County (PG13) 12:05 4:35 7:10 9:50
The Royal Tenenbaums (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
A Beautiful Mind (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
Lord Of the Rings (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
*no passes/super-savers
Senior Movie 2/7/02 - 1 Am Sam - doors open at 11:45 a.m.
NOW ADVANCE TICKET SALES AVAILABLE FOR SPIDERMAN
Tickets & showtimes subject to change @ cinemark.com

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com
OK!
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

"A groundbreaking learning experience."
"A rich educational experience."
www.bio.umass.edu/biochem/mydna
MY DNA
No prerequisites!
Check it out online!
Register now. BIOCHEM

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.04.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Pats in Super Bowl
bolsters spirit on campus

There aren't many sure things in life. And as sure as the sun set over the UMass campus yesterday evening, there were raucous gatherings last night following the Patriots' Super Bowl – win, lose or draw. Whatever the result of last night's NFL Championship game, the majority of The Collegian staff is pleased the Patriots were in the Super Bowl.

A Boston-area sports team appearance in the world's biggest game has created a weeklong buzz on campus. Dorm windows are littered with signage and merchandise while Patriots apparel is at an all-time high on campus.

For the first time in a long time it seems that the UMass campus is united with a positive spin. Students and faculty have gotten all too used to seeing droves of college-age rioters congregating in the Southwest quad because the "Yankees Suck" or because the power went out.

But instead of the usual bonfire burning ritual that immediately follows a case of students not getting their way, last night's activities – whatever they were – are in some ways justified by the fact that these students are indeed taking pride in the performance of their hometown team. And why wouldn't they?

With the consistent struggles of UMass' winter sports – i.e. Steve Lappas' failure to resurrect any interest in the once renowned basketball program and Don Cahoon's very slow rise to respectability – the large, college-age, sports-loving culture that resides in Amherst has been given wet kindling to light their collective fire.

UMass students were in a similar predicament last year as well. The Minuteman football team, which doesn't even play "real" Division I football, stalled out after being touted as the favorite to take the National Championship.

Then as the cold of winter hit Amherst, both the UMass basketball and hockey teams struggled in Bruiser Flint's final year and Cahoon's first. But then came the spring and a UMass lacrosse team that excited the spirits of half the campus, as shown by the teeming Garber Field crowd for a national showdown with Syracuse.

But this year, instead of having to wait until the warm of spring to hit the Pioneer Valley, the Patriots have given rise to the slumbering spirit on campus.

Even the Pats looked like a long shot to do anything in the playoffs at about the midway point of the season. But a fervent New England following has helped New England's second most beloved sports franchise persevere through much adversity and onto sports' biggest stage.

So the once disinterested UMass fan-base has finally found something pure and good to stand behind. No longer does the sports-loving community at UMass need a Yankees World Series loss as an excuse to gather and cheer.

They have their Patriots.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian*'s editorial board.*

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF THE COLLEGIAN.

FOR ANYONE INTERESTED IN WORKING FOR THE COLLEGIAN, COME DOWN TO THE ALL-STAFF MEETING TONIGHT AT OUR OFFICE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT. APPLICATIONS WILL BE MADE AVAILABLE FOR COLUMNIST POSITIONS.

O budget, where art thou?
A glimpse of UMass in the years ahead

BRIAN LOHNES

You know the story, you have seen the results and you aren't happy. None of us are. The cutting of our budget has brought a stunning and untimely end to the progress that UMass was making in creating the image and atmosphere that they were trying to achieve for this, the state's most prominent university. Well folks, I am glad that my lifeboat is coming in May to get off this sinking "flagship." Here is a glimpse into the future of the UMass Budget.

2003: UMass officials deem three meals a day "extravagant" and cut back food service personnel to part time. Students protest, but then become so tired due to malnutrition that they all pass out. The remaining food service workers band together and do their best to try and feed the students but three hours into the emergency food session it is discovered that the "chilighetti" is tainted.

2005: On Wednesday, Oct. 23, UMass announces a hike in fees. $1500 dollars is due on Friday. This increase also affects alumni as the fee is retroactive. Their diplomas will be revoked and their records erased if they fail to pay.

2007: Brick engraving is offered by the library to raise money because it is now required to fund itself. The project works well until workers remove the bricks at the bottom of the building for engraving and the library collapses, thankfully not destroying any of the fake wood plastic benches outside it.

2009: The Isenberg School of Management adds a 17-story addition onto their newly furnished building. Also, members of SOM are granted flying rocket cars to travel around in. The gold plating of the building nearly finished, SOM students are complaining that the building would have looked cooler coated in platinum. That request is granted.

2011: The College of the Humanities and Fine Arts is disbanded to save money. University President Bulger says at a news conference, "Look, all those artsy-fartsy types do is protest all the time. How the hell am I supposed to recruit engineers and attractive young business majors if those hippies are yelling and screaming about how they don't get any money?" Bulger also threatens, "If those biologists, or whatever they are, decide to get unruly, they are gone next."

2013: In order to maintain the UMass basketball program, costs are cut in the groundskeeping department. Students are now encouraged to mow their own dorm lawns. UMass claims that this is a way to further bring "young people" into the real world, by making them maintain their own lawns. One student says, "Hey, I'm an engineer, I am going to be making enough money to pay one of the liberal arts slugs to mow my lawn." The basketball team goes 500.

> "The cutting of our budget has brought a stunning and untimely end to the progress that UMass was making..."

2015: In a last ditch effort to keep top-notch cable going to all of the students in the dorms, the budget of UMass Transit is completely wiped out. All of the buses are sold and all of the employees are fired. To keep a form of transit available, UMass buys a fleet of 1978 AMC Pacers and kicks off the "Pack a Pacer" program. It is a dismal failure when people begin getting stuck in the small, odd vehicles.

2020: Follett makes a successful bid to buy the University. Citing its ability to supply a quality education at lower prices, the purchase is heralded. Every building on campus is renamed and the Follett corporate logo is placed all over them. The professors are hired by Follett and only Follett stationary and books are allowed.

2022: Totally shut off from state money, the University languishes with only 200 professors teaching 27,000 students. Students are asked to pool jewelry and other valuables to be melted down so that the University can pay its professors.

2025: The Massachusetts State Legislature finally recognizes that funding is a problem at UMass. Three million dollars is sent in an emergency package to UMass to revive the nearly abandoned campus. Somehow University President Bulger's brother Whitey has all three million dollars siphoned into a hidden bank account. University President Bulger claims no knowledge of any wrongdoing.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

National media needs to turn attention away from Lindh

KEN CAMPBELL

I'm getting sort of tired of hearing about John Walker Lindh. Every time I turn on my television, it's American Taliban this, and John Walker is a traitor that. For the life of me, I can't understand why this guy is an issue. Shouldn't he be soaking up some rays with the rest of the detainees down in Gitmo?

The guy turned his back on his country. He left the United States of America and got involved in a foreign war. He swore allegiance to a foreign government, and fought on behalf of terrorists. So, when American troops take custody of him and a bunch of other captured Taliban and al-Qaeda after an uprising in Mazar-e Sharif, the only differential treatment he should have gotten was that his orders wouldn't have to be translated. Aside from being used as an intelligence source, Lindh should not be receiving the special treatment he has been getting. The Justice Department wants to try him in a court of law. Why? This guy rejected our laws, and left us completely. I don't think the Constitution was written to extend freedoms to those that actively reject them in other countries. Walker should be treated like any other unlawful combatant, and detained in a camp, under humane conditions. Any punishment he receives should be in line with whatever justice the other detainees get.

In my opinion, the government has been more than kind with Lindh. They're extending him due process, and even told him his Miranda rights. He waived them, again rejecting the United States of America and its benevolence. He has time and again rejected his citizenship, by fighting against Americans and their Northern Alliance allies.

In my mind, Lindh is not an American Taliban; he's just another Taliban. Just another probable terrorist. Just another enemy. He should be with the rest, locked down and under supervision in the humane conditions set up for them at Camp X-Ray. That was the path he chose, and giving him this way out seems wrong.

Now, is he a traitor?

I don't think so. You have to be a citizen to be a traitor. He left the US for another country's government. In my mind, he left behind everything that US citizenship entails – and that includes treason. You can't betray a country you aren't a part of.

Another part of the Lindh controversy that annoys me is his family. I'm getting sick of his parents defending him. This isn't some kid who passed out a Staind concert and woke up in Afghanistan, gun in hand. His parents claim he's a good kid, really. And I'm sure he is. Even though he turned his back on his native country, he cared enough about his adopted one to fight for it. While I think he's wrong for supporting a brutal and oppressive regime that frequently murdered people in the name of God, at least he's man enough to stand up and fight for what he believed in. I think his beliefs are wrong. I think that Lindh is a perverted individual, one who uses religion to justify violence and brutality. God should never be used as a reason for murder, no matter what God you believe in. But at least Walker was man enough to pick up a gun and say, this is my country, and nobody invades it. I can respect that. Granted, it's near suicidal to try and stand up to the best trained and equipped military force the world has ever seen, but maybe he was remembering the few times we had been defeated, and took solace in the fact that, as formidable as the United States military is, it isn't invincible. So I can't blame his parents for defending him, I just wish they would come up with some real excuses. They are parents after all, and good parents defend their children no matter what kind of trouble they get into. That's what a parent's love is all about. Although perhaps if they keep a closer watch on the boy then he wouldn't have run off and decided to become an al-Qaeda trained Taliban defender.

> "...Lindh is not an American Taliban; he's just another Taliban...Just another enemy."

So like I said, I'm tired of hearing the debate on Lindh. I'm tired of hearing how he should be tried for treason – that's anger talking, people, not rational thought. There's not enough evidence to try him for treason. But I think this rule that because he's an American citizen he can't be tried with the rest of the detainees is ridiculous. Ask him if he wants to be a citizen. I'm sure he'll answer no. This isn't Patty Hearst we're talking about, this is a hardened Taliban fighter. He should be treated like all the rest. You don't think the parents of the Cuba detainees love their children? Of course they do, they just don't have access to CNN cameras, because they aren't white, well-to-do Americans from Marin County, Calif.

Lindh is no different than the rest of the detainees, and should be down in Cuba, soaking up the rays, getting three hots and a cot, and thanking the United States for its mercy.

And CNN should find better things to cover, instead of an overblown story on a kid from Marin County.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.04.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Where's the Pete?

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Uh-oh.

One of this week's brand new movies – the college-caper Slackers – was nowhere to be found in this week's Top Ten. Oooooooooooooweeeeeeeee kerblooie! That's the sound a bomb makes. What's unfortunate is that the film stars Mike Maronna – older Pete from The Adventures of Pete and Pete – and probably signifies that he'll never get work again.

Taking the top spot, yet again, was gritty Black Hawk Down. A patriotic tale of a horrifically botched American operation in Somalia in the early 1990's, Down tells the tale of soldiers fated to die. The attack's consequences – soldiers being dragged through Mogadishu's streets and later burned – soured Americans on future intervention in seemingly unimportant countries. That's an irony, if only because the President has been frothing at the possibility of taking American soldiers into other hostile, if relatively unimportant, countries.

AT THE MOVIES

with Sam Wilkinson

Whatever the case, Down made a paltry $11.5 million.

Which means that second place Snow Dogs made even less – but it still came in second place! The Cuba Gooding Jr. with dogs vehicle made $9.9 million. What on Earth could make people want to see something called Snow Dogs in which the furry creatures are subjected to Gooding's continued attempts to ruin his career?

Thank god for literature. The Count of Monte Cristo took a convincing third place with a square nine million. Alexander Dumas must be dancing in his French grave. Guy Pearce and Pete Caviezel star. Pearce continues to have the strangest career – a crossdresser in The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert, a mentally deranged man in Memento, a good-guy cop in L.A. Confidential, and a cannibal-inspector in Ravenous.

Mandy Moore's A Walk to Remember seized fourth place with $8.8 million. The film stars Moore as the girl who isn't popular but then she is, because she's Mandy Moore. Or something like that. Needless to say, the film rehashes every other romantic comedy ever.

A Beautiful Mind took fifth with $8.3 million. Russell Crowe was so good before Gladiator – what the hell happened? Even in Virtuosity, Crowe seemed like he had a real future ahead of him. Now he's being touted as the next Tom Hanks because he said, "on my signal, unleash hell."

If the top five were problematic, the bottom five are atrociously bad.

The Mothman Prophecies made $7.5 million. The film is about West Virginia, and yet it was filmed in Pennsylvania. If The Perfect Storm, about ill-fated sailors in Gloucester, had been filmed in Maine, no doubt hell itself would have been raised. If a film about West Virginia is shot in Pennsylvania, well, who the hell cares? This observation is only made because both films were roughly the same on the ten-point scale of goodness: a four.

Lord of the Rings: Fellowship of the Ring made $6.6 million. The four fantasy geeks in the United States who hadn't seen the film got together with the 74 million who had to go see this movie one final time. Let the wait for The Twin Towers begin.

I Am Sam managed to stay in the top ten with $6.5 million. Why?

Kung Pow: Enter the Fist dropped to ninth with only $3.75 million. Why was this movie made in the first place? Why did anyone think this would be a good idea? Last night's Super Bowl would have been better if Steve Oedekerk, Pow's not so visionary director, had been electrocuted during the halftime show.

Bringing up the very, very rear, Orange County made three million. Jack Black's ability to carry a movie is again demonstrated. Oh wait, he's in tenth place and nobody liked the film.

Beside the disappearance of Slackers, Nicole Kidman's attempts to appear in every movie possible continued with Birthday Girl. When the male lead of a thriller involving the Russian mob is the heartthrob from The Truth About Cats and Dogs, it shouldn't be a huge surprise that the movie didn't make the top-ten.

Mothman a frightening failure

COURTESY SCREEN GEMS

Debra Messing and Richard Gere.

COURTESY SCREEN GEMS

Laura Linney and Will Patton.

COURTESY SONY PICTURES

Richard Gere.

COURTESY SCREEN GEMS

Laura Linney.

COURTESY SCREEN GEMS

Richard Gere and Laura Linney.

COURTESY SCREEN GEMS

Richard Gere.

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Some in the media have wondered how a film like The Mothman Prophecies could even be made. "There isn't even a story," they whine, while heaping praise upon films like Vanilla Sky, which might very well be the worst film made in the last ten years.

There is indeed a story to Mothman. Loosely based on a book by John Keel, Mothman focuses on the haunting of a small West Virginia town. Taking true events – from strange sightings to the collapse of the Silver Bridge – from the 1960's and forcing them into today's timeframe, the film largely fails if only because so much of it goes either ignored or unexplained.

But that was probably the point.

To this day, there has never been an explanation for the collapse of the Silver Bridge in WV's Point Pleasant. Furthermore, little has ever been made clear as to any of the town's strange occurrences. The best anybody could do was posting the possibility that a large bird was spotted by the local residents and called the Mothman.

Theories don't seem to interest director Mark Pellington, who does his damndest to preserve his story's murky feeling. Utilizing strange cinematography at all possible points, Pellington never even shows the famed Mothman. He instead counts on its strange manifestations, usually through the visions of local residents or the slow descent into madness of Richard Gere, the film's lead.

Gere is terrible in the movie. Where any number of talented actors could have added a touch of nuance to Gere's forlorn character, he goes the other direction, stonefacing his role with his usual blandness. Thank God for the film's secondary characters – Will Patton is spot-on as a paranoid local convinced that he's being stalked by the creature and Laura Linney is as good as the script lets her be as the local law. Pellington also counts on the surrounding landscape to tell his story. Its barren blues and grays create the area's loneliness, making the Mothman's presence seem more an inevitability than some shocking occurrence.

Unfortunately, secondary characters and landscapes can only carry a film for so long. Gere's tormented John Klein loses his wife to the Mothman and is then transported to Point Pleasant during a midnight drive to Richmond, a distance of some 400 miles. Remembering nothing, and seeking help, he ends up at Patton's place, where he is nearly killed by the local who claims to have been visited by Klein for three nights in a row. The film's inexplicability spirals from there, as Pellington would have viewers believe that the Mothman was as much a prankster – the creature seems to have a cellphonic handy for the number of crank calls it makes – as it was the cause of terrible tragedies. By the film's end, the Mothman is warning individuals of events about to transpire, including a plane crash near the town that would presumably send the area into uproar. Instead, the plane crash, like so much of the film, goes ignored and unexplained.

Pellington's script seems important to him only when it suits his particular needs, in most cases being only the desire to make audience members jump in their seats.

At this, he was effective enough, but after awhile, each twitch seems cheapened by the fact that the scares aren't backed up with anything more substantive than the shock itself. The movie's climatic finish – the collapse of the Silver Bridge – seems like a big joke. Sure, it really happened, but Pellington's used up his scare points well before the bridge begins to inexplicably fall apart in the middle of a Christmas rush hour. Perhaps the movie's most shocking scene falls on the tired eyes of audience members who have already been scared and scared again.

Pellington's attempt to create actual drama fails because he spends so much time trying to create it – had he instead spent his energies on the characters and the locale, perhaps the film would have been better.

Where The Mothman Prophecies could have succeeded was in the paranoia of an area that believes tragedy is bound to occur – rather than basing the film on John Keel's book of the same name, a better film would have involved Klein's arrival as part of the whole series of events that led up to the bridge's collapse. Instead, the movie comes off as a cheap, albeit occasionally effective, attempt to scare audiences. Where a substantive film could have been, instead there is only the stuff of late night drive-in theaters: cheap thrills with a lame payoff.

Pink d!sappoints

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PINK
M!ssundaztood
Arista

Pink. God bless her, isn't willing to settle for her lot on TRL life. The rose-tressed pop star (real name: Alecia Moore) has abandoned the cliche R&B/pop that marked her name making hits on only her second album. But her new release, M!ssundaztood, is less an example of musical progression, and more a sign of a major identity crisis. Anyone expecting the album to sound like the new hit "Get the Party Started" will be shocked – maybe even disappointed – by the streak of self-loathing that snakes through M!ssundaztood (check out the titles "Numb," "My Vietnam," "Just Like A Pill" and "Don't Let Me Get Me"). Pink's schizophrenic sophomore effort is at right angles with itself, veering between bouncy pop, Alanis-style confessional rock and blowsy blues. This is an album that is very conflicted and rather boring.

It's a given that records should start off with a song that draws the listener into the album (which is why first singles are often also the kick-off tracks). But the titular first track is easily M!ssundaztood's worst. It's a dance track like "Party," but Pink's vocals are weak and faltering, sounding less like a multiplatinum artist and more like a karaoke bar patron. The cookie-cutter beats are monotonous, the lyrics simplistic, and groans toward the end sound like, well, constipation. This is tinker toy pop that even Max Martin would've refused to use as filler on N'Sync's debut. "Don't Let Me Get Me" brings us into Pink's wounded self-pity, and while it's better than "M!ssundaztood," it's still troubled by poor pacing – Pink rushes through the song, and finds herself stuck trying to draw out its running time after running out of fuel. "Just Like A Pill" has a bit of a late '80s feel, and though it's again better than the previous two, it still lacks a je ne sais quoi.

She says up front that "Respect" is her rap song, but it has no flow and a beat recycled from the pre-gangsta early '90s. The lyrics about loser playas and female empowerment are admirable, but the song is ludicrous. "18 Wheeler," one of the album's few highlights, is a better example of girl power but there is one glaring problem: Pink censors herself from saying "fuck." In the song and lyrics sheet, she begins to say it, but cuts herself off, and it becomes distracting. And this isn't a case of Walmart-ish censure; Pink freely says "ass" and "bitch" on the album. "Family Portrait" is her divorce song, which is backed with violins and a children's choir. I detected the ghosts of Mary J. Blige and Nelly Furtado flitting through, but they stayed only a second before searching for better pastures. As far as divorce songs go, I prefer Blink-182's "Stay Together for the Kids."

"Misery," featuring guests Steven Tyler and Richie Sambora (don't get too attached: Tyler only provides backup vocals), is a bluesy gospel that surprised me, as it actually drew me in, as opposed to the similar sounds of Alicia Keys, who is a very talented musician (stunning voice, superb craftsmanship) but whose music has kept me at a distance. Pink matches Tyler yowl for yowl and the song suggests a new career path for the young woman.

"Dear Diary" has an oriental feel (perhaps a new trend as Shakira's "Que Me Quedes Tu" and Incubus' "Aqueous Transmission" both sport similar sounds) and Pink gives her voice a smoky sheen that makes this another winning song. The slow and deliberate "Eventually" featured shaky vocals, but could be the theme to a trailer for one of those intellectual/erotic relationship dramas. I'm on the fence toward "Lonely Girl," while "Numb" is just that: an attempt at rock that has been shot through with novocaine. "Going to California" is another bluesy track, but it's a socially relevant sham. The album closes with "My Vietnam" which begins with the sounds of helicopters and a staccato groove. The vocals are given an echo effect that is at first distracting (akin to the telephone effect on The Strokes' album), but later tolerable. But the vocals, lyrics and beats promise an explosion that never arrives, so the song becomes lifeless and anticlimactic.

It's clear why M!ssundaztood went wrong. Pink got to collaborate on most of the songs with her idol, which happens to be... Linda Perry, formerly of the group 4 Non Blondes (you know, the group responsible for that irritating hit "What's Up"). For an idol, one could do better than a one-hit wonder whose hit was awful. Perry's lack of musicianship sucks the life out of the album; Pink's self-pity is also problematic. Albums have long been used for an artist's catharsis, which is all well and good, unless said catharsis comes at the expense of the music, as it does here.

Listening to M!ssundaztood actually gained a better appreciation for the funky poppiness of "Get the Party Started," a deliciously giddy confection of a pop song. It's the only obvious single on the album, because "M!ssundaztood" and "Respect" are too weak and the other songs are too dissimilar. It's also the only real live wire on an album that is curiously flat, muted and passionless. After sitting through disappointing new albums from Britney Spears and Jewel, I was hoping this would be a corker. It isn't. I'll just have to console myself with Michelle Branch instead.

COURTESY SONY MUSIC

Pink can't get her act together or her party started on her new release.

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities
Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER . NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Large 1 Bedroom . Sublet during Spring Semester available immediately. Cliffside Apartments in Sunderland. Ht, HtW, electric included. Tons of extras. Sign now get free A/C. $740 a month. 413-665-7329.

AUTO FOR SALE

'94 Dodge Spirit. Runs great. $2000 or B/O. Call 256-0677.

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Compaq Presario 5360 with 15" monitor and printer. Call for info. 546-3152. $500 or B.O.

MAC Powerbook 1400CS, 133mhz, 64 RAM, w/2 batteries plus charger. $200. 665-6833.

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseasareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $1000 for your group! Work on campus to raise money for your student group or organization. Make your own schedule and earn $5 per application. Please call 1-800-808-7450

More than a summer camp, an experience of a lifetime. Trails End camp (Beach Lake, PA)- Baseball, basketball, golf, volleyball, mountain biking, tennis, ropes course, hockey, arts and crafts (woodworking, photography, fine arts, video/film) waterfront (water skiing, boat driver, canoe, sailing, kayaking), pool instructors, and male general counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!!! www.trailsendcamp.com or 800408-1404

Put up posters. $12 per town/school, 10 hrs a week. References, car, reliable. 259-1227 mail box 1. email references to posters@artspromo.org

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMPLOYMENT

Office help positions. New Students Program looking for year-round office help. Preferably freshmen and sophomores. Please call 545-4940 for more information and application. Deadline is Feb. 8.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

Stage hands wanted at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable schedule- week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1-5pm. Applications at Production Services RM 146 FAC

EMPLOYMENT

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for tour guides, student admissions reps and summer orientation counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 8.

FOR SALE

Penny a minute phone cards. Best deal for calling family and friends. Machine in U-Store.

Futon mattress king size deluxe, great condition $75 o.b.o. 259-9187 before 9pm.

Massaversity of Unichusetts parody hoodies and tees. Call Eric 549-9230.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELS! giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

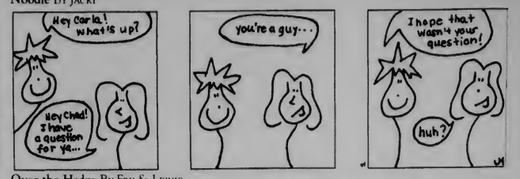
#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

We no longer run fyi's. Please send all briefs to Jessica May, 113 Campus center basement.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

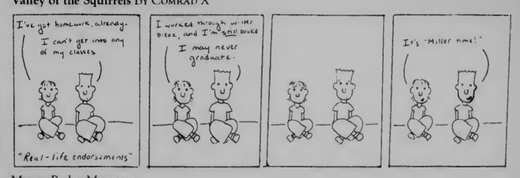


1 · HSCN Bulletin Board
2 · CBS 3 Hartford
4 · CBS 4 Boston
5 · ABC 40 Springfield
6 · FOX 61 Springfield
7 · HSCN Movie Channel
8 · UPN 20 Hartford
9 · HSCN New Movie Channel
10 · NBC 30 New Britain
11 · Fox 61 Hartford
12 · PBS 24 Hartford
13 · NBC 22 Springfield
14 · International Channel
15 · UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 · WB 59 New Haven
17 · ESPN
18 · ESPN2
19 · UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 · Weather Channel
21 · Travel tv Travel
22 · C-Span
23 · CNN
24 · CNN Headline News
25 · Lifetime
26 · USA
27 · TBS
28 · TNT
29 · A&E
30 · Sci-Fi
31 · Discovery
32 · Nesn
33 · Cartoon Network
34 · Nick at Nite
35 · TV Land
36 · Comedy Central
37 · MTV
38 · Univision
39 · Bloomberg Financial Network
40 · College TV Network
41 · MTV
42 · MTV2
43 · VH1
44 · The Learning Channel

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

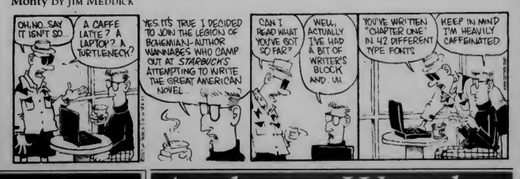
Noodle By Jacki

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Monty By Jim Meddick



Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Monty By Jim Meddick

Monty By Jim Meddick

Quote of the Day

"I don't care. 'Cause I'm still here. And I've got nothing left to lose with all the years I've wasted on you."

–Sugarcult

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 37 LOW: 11	HIGH: 25 LOW: 10	HIGH: 35 LOW: 15

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Welcome to the University of Massachusetts touchtone registration system. Prepare to be frustrated beyond your wildest dreams.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – We are now conducting add/drop for Spring 2002. Although there are no classes left. Why are you even bothering to call?
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Please enter your nine-digit student ID number. Although we've changed it...and not told you.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Please enter your branch code. But you will be an undergraduate forever, so what's the point of having different branch codes?
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Please enter your four-digit personal identification number. Although you probably won't remember it from freshman year. Try banging your head against a wall.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Please hold. (4 hours later) Please hold some more...but every class you want is being filled while you are waiting.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Enter a two-digit action code. But it's not really worth it, the only classes left to add are Advanced Russian and Chainsaws 503.
VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 22) – Enter the six digit schedule number you are requesting. Prepare for your request to be denied.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The action you requested could not be processed. Due to budget cuts all classes are being cut from the system.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The horoscope you requested is overenrolled. Please enter another horoscope.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – ## ... &=^$%&=^%$!
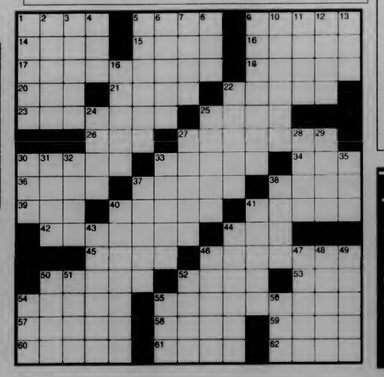
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your credit total is zero. Drop out now, or forever stay at UMass.

Frosh By Megan Orosz

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com



ACROSS
1 Mexican pot
5 Hen's spouse
9 Japanese port
14 "Misery" costar
15 Kind of roast
16 Air traffic gear
17 Stereo component
19 Rattle
20 — Ioo yung
21 Nights before
22 Embarrass
23 Lunchbox partner
25 Tinned meat
26 Calendar abbr
27 Tortilla snack
30 Steamy dance
33 Blase
34 Ipanema's city
35 Tommie of the diamond
37 No rocket scientist
38 Tiny stream
39 Task
40 Stale
41 Temporary failure
42 Very
44 Round Table knight
45 After-tax amounts
46 Heavenly
50 Woodsy
52 Light sword
53 Kimono closer
54 Broken
55 Highest
57 Join up
58 Window ledge
59 Crystal-ball words
60 Fresco base
61 Snake eyes
62 Look after

DOWN
1 Four duos
2 Gulfee
3 Sweater size
4 Actress Jillian
5 Taste
6 Chanille items
7 Has a cold
8 One, for Pierre
9 Grove
10 Cold cut
11 First organ donor?
12 Batman creator
13 Mo. neighbor
18 Pace
22 Wild time
24 Storm about
25 Frothy
27 Toss about, as words
28 Excursion
29 Lubricates
30 — Mahal
31 Psyched up
32 Midwest st.
33 Herdsens
35 Bravo, in Barcelona
37 Eccentric
38 Zany Martha
40 Symphony big wig
41 Tavern brew
43 Follows
44 Pays homage
46 Pie ingredient
47 Relaxed
49 Summoned to court
50 Rider's handhold
51 Casts a vote
52 Action tale
54 Beer barrel
55 Neighbor of Can.
56 Engineering sch.
46 "A Doll's House" playwright

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

W	O	K		L	O	L	A		H	A	L	E
M	E	M	O		U	N	I	V		E	M	I	L	E
B	E	A	D		S	A	F	E	T	Y	B	E	L	T
A	D	R	I	F	T		E	R	R		R	U	S	E
		A	I	R	S		S	O	L	O
W	O	R	K	R	O	O	M		D	I	S	M	E	I	S
A	H	A		M	U	R	A	L		S	I	E	G	E
S	A	C	S		S	T	R	A	P		A	N	Y	A
P	R	E	E	N		S	I	R	E	N		N	P	R
S	E	R	I	A	L		A	C	R	O	B	A	T	S
			N	E	A	R		H	I	V	E
C	H	E	F		T	R	I		O	A	T	E	R	S
B	A	R	E	H	E	A	D	E	D		I	N	C	H
S	T	I	L	E		T	O	N	I		D	O	M	E
L	E	N	D	S		E	L	E	C		E	S	P

12-25-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Garden Vegetable Soup

Chicken Nuggets

Chili Nachos

Broccoli-Cauliflower Casserole (vegetarian)

California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER

Garden Vegetable Soup

Chicken Mamou

Baked Ham with Raisin Sauce

Six Bean Stew (vegan)

Today's Staff

Ken Campbell
Gerald Ling
Matt Brady
Mike Kulak

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.04.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Rhode Island repels UMass invasion

Lackadaisical loss one to forget for Mass. fans

KINGSTON, R.I. — Watching the Massachusetts men's basketball team play its final game within the puny confines of Rhode Island's Keaney Gymnasium Saturday afternoon was surely a touching experience one I'll always remember.

That is, to forget.

For the first time this season, I just wasn't moved by the entire Minuteman experience. There's no question that under somewhat normal circumstances an 11-point loss to a 4-12 Rhode Island squad would send a dose of hoop disorder to my near-stable wits.

But this team is so very far from typical.

The best deciphering I've accepted came from the withering cords of the man himself, Head Coach Steve Lappas, minutes after UMass lost to Dayton, 85-68, last Tuesday night at the Mullins Center.

"I've never had a team that had a bigger range," said Lappas, now in his third collegiate head-coaching job. "We can be so bad and have a chance to be so good. Usually you're bad but you have a chance to be less bad or you can be good and you have a chance to be real good. I've never had a team that had both ends of the spectrum. Usually if you're so bad, you're not going to be good.

"You stink."

And that's something Lappas surely reminded his team of immediately after Saturday's 70-59 drubbing from the Atlantic 10's worst participant. He wasn't exactly worried about his players' spirits.

"Obviously they're down right now," said Lappas in the post game press conference. "But I can't really measure morale because I wasn't doing a poll just now in the locker room to see how everybody feels.

"They know how I'm feeling though. You ask them how I'm feeling and they'll tell you."

Confused? Frustrated? Incensed, just a bit?

All are rightful emotions for a guy who has seen pretty much everything that can happen within the limits of a basketball court.

Early on this season, the things Lappas saw were quite pleasing. Alas, those visions are now long gone.

If N.C. State and Oregon are on the bubble come tournament time, they'll be penalized for losing to UMass. And being categorized as a "bad loss" isn't the smartest form of flattery.

It stinks, actually.

So with eight games remaining on the schedule that one heckling question remains. Why hasn't this team gotten any better?

Don't even try to figure it out. It will only cause your brain to freeze in perplexing fashion.

Because that's exactly what happened to mine Saturday in Kingston. I just don't get it. UMass is not a bad basketball team, but you really couldn't count on them to hold a 67-point lead with 12 seconds left.

Nothing this team does in the future will surprise me. It could bust through the conference, win the A-10 Championship, make to the Sweet 16 and I wouldn't be too shocked. But it could also lose the next eight games by a total of 1,000 points and I wouldn't be jolted even a little.

It's been that kind of ride. And I've decided to stop my attempts at understanding it.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

Minuteman Coach Steve Lappas seems unable to comprehend how his team could lose to A-10 doormat Rhode Island.

Men's hoop continues streak play with crushing defeat in RI

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – It could not have started any worse for the Massachusetts men's basketball team on Saturday afternoon. Just two seconds after the opening tip, freshman Dustin Hellenga raced down court for an uncontested layup, putting Rhode Island ahead 2-0. And from that point on, it rarely looked back en route to handing the Minutemen their second consecutive loss.

URI	70
UMass	59

Hellenga and Troy Wiley each scored 15 points to lead the Rams to a 70-59 victory. With 7:07 to go in the first half, Hellenga, the Rams second-leading scorer, hit his first of three 3-pointers on the afternoon to put URI ahead 15-14. From that point on, UMass could never regain the lead despite a brief rally midway through the second half that saw the Minutemen even the score at 39-39 with 12:56 left to play.

But immediately following the Maroon and White's run, URI (6-13, 2-6 Atlantic 10) responded with a 14-2 run of its own over the next eight minutes to put the game out of hand. Wiley scored seven of the Rams' 14 points during that sequence, including three acrobatic dunks to get the 2,417 patrons at the Keaney Gymnasium into an uproar.

"I think we went into a scoring drought," UMass Head Coach Steve Lappas said of the Rams' run. "When you miss so many shots you go to the offensive glass a little bit harder and when you don't get it they get some transition baskets. It just compounds the problem when you are not a good scoring team."

In the end the Minutemen (9-10, 3-5 A-10) just did not make enough shots to pull themselves back above .500. Shannon Crooks, the team's leading scorer, made just 1-of-15 field goals and notched a season-low five points on the afternoon. His struggles, in part, may be attributed to a head injury that he suffered just two minutes into the game when he went careening into a cameraman head first after having his layup blocked by Wiley. Crooks returned to the game a few minutes later, but clearly struggled.

"He really took a shot in the head and I don't know what that had to do with [Crooks' poor shooting], " Lappas said of the injury. "He was never knocked out or dizzy, it just hurt and that's why we put him back in. But it couldn't have helped, it was so early in the game."

With Crooks struggling, Anthony Anderson took it upon himself to lead the UMass attack. He scored a game-high 17 points, but made just 2-of-8 field goals after the intermission as the Ram defense began to key on him.

"We had one guy making a shot in the first half so it's not that complicated [to shut him down,]" Lappas said. "Anthony, to me, did as much as he could, he just has to get a little help."

Coming into the game UMass had a clear and decided advantage on the interior, even without the services of Micah Brand who missed the game with a sprained ankle. The only thing that could stop the Minutemen in the post was themselves, and that is exactly what happened. Senior Kitwana Rhymer, who set a career-high with 30 points against the Rams in the two schools' last meeting, picked up a pair of fouls inside of the first four minutes and then his third shortly after reentering with six minutes to go in the frame.

"We wanted to try and get to the free throw line and we wanted to get the ball inside to Marcus [Evans] and Troy [Wiley] and I thought we did a good job of doing it," URI Head Coach Jim Baron said. "In the past we've taken quick shots and we just can't afford to do that. We need to utilize our size and strength on the inside."

Through it all, Rhymer was limited to just 15 minutes of action. Making this even harder for Lappas to swallow was the fact that in those 15 minutes, Rhymer looked nearly unstoppable, scoring nine points and grabbing four rebounds.

Eric Williams also gave the Minutemen some good minutes on the low blocks, scoring 11 points and grabbing a season-high nine boards. But it just was not enough for UMass in the end, as the Rams made 11-of-15 free throws in the final minute and a half to ice the contest and grab their second conference victory.

The Minutemen return to action on Wednesday night when they once again hit the road to take on the Dukes of Duquesne, who grabbed their first conference win on Saturday, defeating Fordham 95-66.

PC Friars convert Minutemen

By Matthew E. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It hasn't like the last two UMass-Providence meetings this season, a lone goal set the two teams apart as the Friars took a 3-2 road victory in front of 2,150 fans at the Mullins Center in Amherst.

"Our guys are still battling," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after the loss. "It's just another one of those close games that we didn't get a point out of.

"But we aren't going to be an easy two points for anybody."

Regan Kelly's second goal of the contest at 2:51 of the third period sealed the win for visiting Providence.

Jon DiSalvatore, who finished with two assists on the night, collected a neutral zone turnover before crossing into the UMass zone and firing a shot that goaltender Mike Johnson directed right to Kelly's blade.

The sophomore showed poise in collecting the rebound and banging home a 3-1 lead for the Friars.

"He has that type of ability," PC coach Paul Pooley said after the victory. "It was a great play to stay calm on the puck and put it away."

Kelly's original tally gave his squad a 2-1 lead with just under five minutes remaining in the middle frame. Drew Omicioli wheeled past the whole of the UMass defense before deking Johnson and laying the puck in the crease for Kelly to punch home.

The goal was a huge momentum swing as it came just 26 seconds after UMass' Josh Hanson had knotted the game at one on a breakaway.

"That goal was huge," Pooley said. "It's kind of a hostile environment to play in, but that really took the wind out of the place."

Hanson's tally – the second of three goals in 1:06 – came on a home run feed from freshman Sean Regan (two points). Regan lifted his classmate at the PC blueline before springing him unabated on Nolan Schaefer. Hanson then deked forehand before splitting the goalie's wickets with a well-struck backhander.

Peter Tregoe opened the scoring 40 seconds before that as the Friars' lone second period power play expired.

As Tim Turner sprinted out of the box after serving a pair for slashing, he could see DiSalvatore thread a goal crease needle to Tregoe camped on the weak side, for the score.

Regan's second career goal again made it a one-goal contest at 4:01 of the third, but the Friars were able to hold on for the victory.

"It's a solid road win," Pooley said. "I thought the guys responded well from a poor effort last night."

UMass' best chance came after 22 penalty minutes were handed out at the midway point of the third.

The Minutemen actually ended up with a power play, thanks to Schaefer's roughing call, but were unable to capitalize as the Friar netminder atoned for his gaffe with three shorthanded saves.

"That showed us that we really had to work for this win," Pooley said. "I think we earned it."

The physical intensity from both teams has led to three one-goal games, as Providence takes the season series 2-1.

"I don't think either team was at the top of their game," Cahoon said. "But the intensity was there as it has been in the previous two games we've met."

With the loss, UMass drops to 3-14-1 in Hockey East (8-19-1 overall), while the Friars reach .500 in both conference play (8-8-1) and overall (13-13-3).

The defeat keeps the Minutemen one point behind Merrimack, who at press time, had not begun their Sunday matinee with Lowell.

The celebration ensues after a UMass goal, although Providence would get the last laugh, winning Saturday's contest 3-2.

COMMERCIALS INSIDE

GO PATS!
ALL PAGES (ALMOST).

SPORTS PAGE A4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
TUESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY FOUR ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.05.02

CONGRATULATIONS PATRIOTS

(now let's break something)

see page 2

All they need is a reason: students light fires in celebration

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Insanity.
Craziness.
Pandemonium.

Whatever the hyperbole, it would be hard to describe Southwest as going anything other than ballistic after the Patriots' 20-17 Super Bowl victory. Students packed into Southwest's Pyramids to celebrate a championship that came 16 years after New England's last.

The Super Bowl was the Patriots' first.

Police estimate that 6,000 screaming fans – some students, some not – poured into the Pyramids after the game's completion. Some came from Southwest, some from across the campus. In the first few minutes after the game, traffic slowed to crawls around campus as students stumbled across streets barring left their residence areas.

The Pyramids were madness. A few minutes after the end of the game, students were drinking, cheering, chanting, cussing, spitting, vomiting, screaming, kissing, flashing, burning and most of the other "ing" verbs not mentioned here. Every single human emotion was on display.

As were the breasts of young women who answered fellow students' "Show your tits" chants. And the red flesh of guys who built a bonfire and, celebrating apparently, jumped over and through the dancing flames.

But if this article attempted to sum up Sunday night entirely, it would fail. Instead, let Anne Farry, a freshman Communication major, do the work.

When asked about the celebration, she would only scream, "it's fucking madness! It's fucking UMass!"

*****

Now for a sober perspective.

"Go Patriots, I'm happy the Patriots won. First time in my lifetime they've been winners," Barbara O'Connor said. She's the Chief of the University of Massachusetts Police, and she was watching the celebration from an observation point above the crowd. She was giving instructions on crowd control from that same spot.

"All things considered, it was an extremely dangerous situation. Rocks and bottles were being thrown at officers, officers were standing fast and monitoring the crowd," O'Connor said. She was unrepentant for her anger. "Fireworks were shot into the crowd; one student ended up at Big State with burns on his hands and feet."

The Chief said that scores more were injured, but didn't report anything. She called them the "walking wounded," and said that officers knew that injuries weren't being reported, limited in her ability to respond, she said that officers were prepared to handle the crowd – "thankfully none of our officers was hurt," she said.

"It's one thing to celebrate, it's another thing to become riotous."

O'Connor's ability to control the crowd was severely hampered by her lack of manpower. She had only 50 officers at her disposal with "some minor support from the State Police."

Because of the small number of officers, especially when compared against a crowd that O'Connor called the biggest in her 19 years at UMass, O'Connor was helpless to prevent much of the crowd's behavior. In response to criticism that her officers did too little to prevent damage Sunday night, O'Connor wondered if those doing the criticizing knew anything of crowd control.

"If I'd had the entire State Police force with me, maybe," O'Connor said, citing a State Police force with more than 2,500 officers. Instead, she said that her officers were reduced to entering the crowd only "to help someone who had been badly hurt."

Her main goal in crowd control was to prevent her officers from becoming the focus on the "celebrations."

At various points throughout the evening, officers moved in formation, flanking the crowd while pinning it into the Pyramids. All the while, officers on top of Berkshire videotaped the festivities.

UMPD cameras weren't the only ones focused on the revelry – the University's security camera, on the side of John Adams, whirred away. Uselessly.

"The camera surveys the crowd," O'Connor said. "But it's not useful to identify offenders, so that camera will be of no assistance to us."

Watching from above, O'Connor watched students storm Berkshire Dining Hall, bringing out a fire extinguisher and spraying it above the crowd. At the point of the Berkshire breakin, she said there were maybe 1,000 students left. She surmised that the camera might be helpful in trials involving the night's three arrests, but she made no promises. When the thousand dipped even lower, O'Connor decided that the party was over.

"When there were 150-200 people left who just wanted to fight with the police, we moved in and sent everyone home."

And a day later? Asked to summarize, O'Connor was frank.

"Everyone went home alive and destruction was kept to a minimum," she said. "I'd say we did a pretty good job."

*****

Typical of UMass, somebody had to disagree with O'Connor's assessment. In this case, it was Aaron Saunders, the speaker of the Student Government Association's Senate.

"None of this ever would have happened," Saunders said while celebrating Sunday night, "if officers hadn't taken formation at Berkshire."

Rather than follow up on those allegations, Saunders, like so many sources for this page's articles, simply melted back into the celebrating throng. It was a night for mindless, wanton and often dangerous celebration.

Everyone was doing it. There was the goateed guy in the blue "Security" sweatshirt that was the first to enter Berkshire and the last to leave. And the four-foot-five guy with glasses, short haircut and a seemingly endless desire to shoot off fireworks.

And all of the people pictured on the front page.

And everyone there.

Thanks Sunday night to Southwest brought revelry by enthusiastic Patriots' fans.

SHAUNA BELLINGER/COLLEGIAN

From the front: an eye-witness account of riots

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This article was started at 12:22 a.m., the day after the New England Patriots won their first Super Bowl. The obligatory Southwest riot has occurred.

Collegian reporters arrived at 10:15 p.m., and it was apparent that many people were celebrating in the classic Southwest style. People streamed into the Pyramids area of Southwest, passing a group of a dozen or so police officers in riot helmets outside of Hampshire Dining Commons. Three mounted officers were nearby. Tom Fleenor, a sophomore Political Science student, was heading there to celebrate.

"It's going to be fucking awesome," Fleenor said. "Southwest is always the place to be. Whatever happens, happens."

They came singly and in groups. Five, ten, thirty at a time.

Bottles smashing, the sound of distant sirens, the crackle of fires and screams of revelers formed a constant din, and under that the roar of the crowd. And what a crowd. Three or four thousand people gathered in the Pyramids. When there are that many, your mind can't keep track. You count "one, two, a lot" and leave it at that. More than one person was lighting fireworks, and every so often the airbursts would light up the area. The tube-launched rockets shot into the air, reaching (and sometimes hitting) the 18th story of John Quincy Adams, to the cheers of those standing atop the doorway.

"It's crazy! A sixteen point underdog coming back, walking in as a team!" a young man screamed as he passed under Mackimmie and saw the edges of the crowd.

There were men in the trees looking down on the revelers below them. People were drinking openly. When they finished, they flung their cans or bottles every which way; the former clanging, the latter exploding into shards of glass.

A drunken young woman wearing an Amherst College jacket emerged from the edge of the crowd.

"Bucky Jones, he's the man," she bellowed. "I'm naming my kid after him." She disappeared back into the crowd.

"She doesn't know what she's talking about," said a woman wearing a UMass sweatshirt. "Ty Law was the man of the hour."

The crowd was as one, chanting and swaying. It seemed like a cultish ritual until you paid attention to the words.

"Fuck the Rams!"
"Fuck the cops!"
"U...Mass!"
"USA, USA, USA!"
"Fuck Osama!"
"Yankees suck!"

And then there was the singing – "We are the Champions" as flags were waved and an inflatable football was bounced around the crowd. Mosh pits were started. Several women exposed themselves to the mob, which just grew more raucous.

Flashes in the sky. More fireworks now, around 11 p.m. They backlight what seem like a million pieces of paper thrown from the surrounding towers.

Another barrage of rockets hit Berkshire Dining Commons, bouncing off the roof. A group of 18 cops in riot helmets stood in the Berkshire entryway, surveying the crowd. Housing officials stood in the shadow of JQA, dodging the occasional hurled beer bottle or firecracker. Other University officials were standing in groups at the edge of the area, surveying the damage. People – it is still unclear who were UMass students and who were not—were burning toilet paper, shirts, paper, anything that would burn was being burned, in several places. The largest fire was in front of the north Pyramid. Shirtless men danced around it.

People lined the retaining west of JQA, and at least one fell off, landing in the bushes four or five feet below. He got up, groaning, but giving a thumbs-up.

"This is insane," Josh Hankin, a sophomore Legal Studies student said. "I hate to see what it would be like if they lost."

A firecracker was thrown feet from where Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin had been standing moments before. Vanin said the University took steps to avoid this situation.

"We have a lot of staff on. Residence Life and Public Safety are out in full force. We tried to provide alternative venues, like the Mullins Center. People who went there had a great time," Vanin said. "Right now, my only concern is the personal safety of students."

When will the University stop the rioting?

"When we feel that we have a real serious safety problem," Vanin said.

The fires grew, fed by two males who ran and got trash cans to burn. The group of cops assembled near Hampshire were moving toward JQA. A small fire had been started there. The lead officer had his night stick out, at what would be "charge bayonet" had it been a rifle. Other cops surrounded a man carrying a fire extinguisher. The last cop in the formation walked backward, acting as a rear guard. They surrounded the fire and it was put out. The police then escorted the ersatz fire fighter back to safety.

A few minutes later, police from south of Washington moved in toward the crowd. They were pushed back. Rioters pursued them, chasing them back to Berkshire.

All the police were moving – assembling in front of Berkshire. The horses were actually standing on the patio of the Dining Commons. They formed what looked to be a defensive perimeter. The staccato pops of firecrackers erupted in the midst of the crowd. The crowd was facing the police now, jeering them and shouting. A bearded man in a blue shirt and a visor was front and center, leading the mob in its chants. Something – it was unclear what – flew from the crowd and struck an officer in the chest. The cop remained standing. More things were flying toward the officers now. One connected with a police horse. The mob by now had thinned out some, but the police were woefully outnumbered. Little fires had been started all over. One man drifted to far near the smoldering remains of one, and his pant leg was on fire. The cops left Berkshire. They were assembling in two groups: one on the northeast corner of Washington and a larger group, including the horses, on the southwest corner of the tower. As they left, rioters pursued them again. People were throwing insults and objects from Washington.

The mob was starting to break up. What had been thousands were now hundreds. The sound of breaking glass rang out. The rioters had broken into the Dining Commons. A hissing noise and fog erupted and the crowd surged away from the DC, fearing tear gas. It was a fire extinguisher, ripped from the wall of the DC. The cops now moved in. The three horses charged toward Berkshire, clearing out the front of the building. Police followed them closely on foot, and stormed into the DC. The DC secured, the horses withdrew. The crowd, greatly diminished now, was huddled around the fire, chanting. It seemed to be regaining some level of relative peace. The Collegian reporters left the area at 12:00 a.m. This article was finished at 6:00 p.m., the day after the Pats won the Super Bowl.

Students protest World Economic Forum in NYC

By S.J. Port
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past Saturday, Martina Levinson, a University of Massachusetts graduate student, enabled 90-100 predominantly undergraduate UMass students to protest the World Economic Forum's gathering in NYC.

Following less than a month's work to organize the trip, Levinson and her fellow protestors left campus at 5:45 a.m., driving four hours to Manhattan. Students spent the day in peaceful demonstration of the World Economic Forum's annual gathering, being held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Joining the 7,000 protestors, including the UMass students, were 4,000 New York City officers assigned to the rally.

The World Economic Forum, formerly based in Geneva, Switzerland, is an organization whose Web site maintains that its purpose is "committed to improving the state of the world...the Forum acts in the spirit of entrepreneurship in the global public interest to further economic and social progress." It is funded and organized through the world's largest corporations. Many political and social activists protest the group's work because they believe it to be work for the rich by the rich. Socialists, anti-globalization workers and anarchists were among those protesting the group's convention on Saturday.

Inside the Waldorf-Astoria, U2's Bono, and billionaire Bill Gates were among members of the Forum's guests who reported to the press and demonstrators that they were there to emphasize their belief that groups such as those at this forum must do more as rich countries and corporations to help the poor.

Of the 90-100 UMass students who attended the rally, only one student was arrested: Ethan Heilman, a sophomore enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences. Heilman was one of 37 arrested demonstrators held for eleven hours by the New York City police, handcuffed on a bus. He was pepper sprayed, held overnight, and arraigned the following afternoon.

Levinson, who had given her personal cell phone number out to each of the students ahead of time, arranged for the detained Heilman to receive a ride back to the UMass campus yesterday morning, following his release from jail.

UMass sophomore Lauren Pardee, a member of Levinson's crusade, admitted that the event was her first experimentation with protesting and although she felt a nervous excitement, she was sure the event would be an experience to remember.

"It was definitely an eye-opening experience. To see so many different types of people come together for one cause," Pardee said. "I felt like the police took away our constitutional and civil rights to peacefully protest by using unnecessary force towards us."

Levinson, despite one student's arrest, saw the pilgrimage as a success.

"I've been in Western Massachusetts for two years now and never have I seen this much energy around an issue."

Levinson looks forward to working again with her UMass peers while organizing a group to support a march against war and racism in April.

Democratic candidate captivates students

By Alicia Upano
COLLEGIAN STAFF

SCOTT ELLIOTT/COLLEGIAN

Robert Reich spoke of his plans for Massachusetts, as a hopeful candidate for governor for the Democrat party.

Robert Reich, a Democratic candidate for the Massachusetts gubernatorial race, announced yesterday to an audience of students, faculty and local citizens – prospective voters for this weekend's Amherst caucus – that he is a specialist in cleaning up Republican messes.

Sponsored by the University Democrats, Reich's talk in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday afternoon marked Reich's third appearance in Western Massachusetts during his three and a half week campaign.

"They said the Patriots could not do it, they said Robert Reich could not do it. This weekend we showed them, but there's still so much to be done," Reich said, referring to his successes at last weekend's caucuses throughout Western Massachusetts.

The talk focused on the issues of education, health, and the environment. Reich attacked the decision to close the University Child Care center "to save a few thousand dollars," the state cutting funds from community colleges, early childhood education, after school programs, and the dental program in Medicare.

Reich said the recent budget cuts across the state is a direct result of the tax cut executed several years ago by the Republican government. He recently publicly advocated postponing the proposed tax cut. Although he was told it was political suicide, he said the postponement is necessary.

Reich served as the 22nd secretary of Labor during Clinton's first term – a period that marked the first Democrat President after 12 years of Republican presidency. Having been involved in politics for half his lifetime, this election is the first time he has run for office, during a period when Massachusetts has had 12 years of Republican governors.

"Massachusetts was a leader; it set the trend. The idea of the Commonwealth was an idea people believed in," Reich stated. "[Now], we are not doing that."

Smart-growth policies are one of the issues that Reich touched upon. He advocated economic policies be targeted to older cities, discouraged strip malls, and "all of that which spreads pavement over the environment."

"Globalization is one of those words that have gone from obscurity to meaningless with little [intervention]," Reich stated. In terms of global capitol, the "essentials to our future prosperity," in his opinion, is only possible with a highly productive workforce, great infrastructure, and healthy, educated citizens.

"With your help, come November, we will have a start of a new day in Massachusetts," Reich concluded. He received a standing ovation and fielded questions from the audience.

One audience member asked, "How could you deal with this entrenched, almost monolithic Stalinistic democratic machine that one of your party members is involved in?"

Reich claimed that he did not know who the man was referring to specifically, but returned to the ideas of public activism and bringing in new faces to government instead of what he called "a power vacuum filled with legislators who have turned their back on the public."

"Democracy is all about making [politicians] scared of losing their jobs," he added.

Humor and anecdotes of his career were injected throughout the afternoon talk. Standing in front of the podium nearly his height of 4-foot-11, he said, "When all that began [working as a Cabinet official] in 1993, I was 6-foot-3. It wore me down."

Like pushing buttons? Work for the Photo Department. Email us at collegianpics@yahoo.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lillien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Missed the all staff meeting? Want to write for us? Please come to The Collegian offices ASAP!

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.05.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRIS

Embarrassment in victory

Southwest celebration a joke

Yes, the "Yankees Suck."

But we're not entirely sure what that has to do with the Patriots stunning Super Bowl victory, just because he engineered a successful drive in the game's final two minutes, Tom Brady probably won't start hitting homers for the Sox. And while we love Adam Vinatieri's right foot, we doubt that it means he can pitch for a whole season with his right arm.

Why even mention our most hated rivals at the moment of our greatest joy? Why waste breaths on the Yankees when the Patriots have just done the unthinkable?

Why Southwest, why?

Southwest's degeneration from celebration to degradation was an embarrassment. From the shirtless guys dancing around a bonfire as if characters from the Lord of the Flies and the women in the windows flashing the wanton crowd, to the police who were helpless to prevent students from doing as they pleased and the campus leaders, both student and faculty, who stood by, last night was an embarrassment for a University that doesn't need the help.

Already in a relative shambles after devastating budget cuts, the University of Massachusetts led a shameful display of supposed festivity.

All involved have some culpability for the damage that occurred.

All involved have some culpability in any injuries.

All involved have culpability.

Where there should have been a joyous excitement, there was an instead a stupid desire to break something, anything, to celebrate victory. And so yesterday, and today, and probably tomorrow, instead of enjoying the afterglow of the unexpected Super Bowl, someone will have to decide how to pay the Police Department for their overtime spent in riot gear, someone will have to decide how to pay for Southwest's cleanup, and hopefully no one will have to decide how to pay the injured who sue.

Meanwhile, little of Southwest seemed genuinely interested in the fact that the Patriots won the Super Bowl. Fans chanted everything from "Fuck the Rams" to "Fuck the Police." While we're sure that Brady, Belichick and the rest appreciate both, some recognition of their hard work might have been appreciated.

But typical of UMass, and especially Southwest, where there should have been happiness and celebration, instead there was the dangerous pandemonium of 6,000 students converging on the Pyramids. From students hit with fireworks and bottles to the student who ended up in Bay State Medical Center with burns on his hands and feet – the senseless injuries resulting from senseless behavior hardly celebrated an unexpected victory.

So yes, the "Yankess Suck." But one of these days, it's going to end up being far worse than Southwest's injuries and at some point, somebody will have to ask how much is too much?

We'd suggest Sunday night was.

Unsigned Editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

If you missed yesterday's all staff meeting, it's not too late to write for the Collegian. Stop by the office.

Budget cuts hurting students

What will a future UMass look like?

MELODY ZAGAMI

Friends, it is with a heavy heart (and a slight hangover from the Pats win over the Rams) that I present to you the last column of my career here at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. I'm not retiring. I'm not moving to Tampa to play shuffleboard and drive a caddie that consumes two lanes. I'm not transferring or worried that I won't have enough time to focus on academics.

I make a wallet-breaking $6,00 for my little space here each week and the University has decided that my position will be cut. Campus security, the Escort Service, Child Care, the Foreign Language Lab and yes, now me, your Tuesday columnist, have all been cut. From now on the University will use the space once occupied by my little literal soapbox to advertise for the new S.O.M. and Engineering Additions. So instead of me, you get pictures of buildings. There will also be advertisements from companies whose work forces consist of starving undereducated children and cute animals in shackles. Oh yeah, and family vacation photos of Kathy Lee, Frank and Cody, to add to your misery.

I'm lying. I just wanted to get your attention. Personally, if I wanted to go to a school that didn't offer me anything, I'd have picked Mass Bay. I could have just not gone to college at all and joined the circus, which was always a dream of mine crushed by the weight of higher education. If I had not wanted adequate protection from my law enforcement I would have picked a city school where the brochure might suggest I buy a can of mace.

I came to visit this school on a beautiful day in the fall of 1997. It reminded me of Disney World, with the precise bus system and the immensity of the whole campus. One finds that as their time here progresses, the campus gets smaller and smaller. The issues that we thought would never affect us get closer and closer all the time.

I don't have a kid. I didn't lose my job, yet. But, I worry for the future. Will future students lose even more? Where and when do funds stop getting slashed?

> "I worry for the future. Will future students lose even more?"

More and more I pick up a "we don't give a shit about students" vibe from the administration. It seems that small groups are benefiting from certain things, while the rest of us are getting the proverbial shaft.

Our university is regressing. It's like decades ago when programs were small and options were limited. Only back then when people were upset, they got up off their asses and did something about it. I can't get into a class I need to fulfill one of the General Education requirements, and I'm a senior. My friend keeps getting yelled at by faculty members from her major because they have nowhere else to lay their frustrations. There is a feeling of unrest and uncertainty on campus, and it touches every corner from Southwest to Sylvan.

I keep seeing new benches getting installed, though. I keep hearing how much salary certain members of the administration and faculty earn. I know that at my office, we can't even afford toner for our printer and nothing's legible. The journalism department doesn't even have a voicemail system anymore, nor can they afford to send us notices or our department newsletter. I guess I can live without those things, but can the department run smoothly without them?

This is the watering down of a state university that will eventually lead to greater financial burdens on its students. I came here because of the high quality of the education for the affordable cost. If I wanted to pay $30,000 a year I would have gone to Boston University, where I would at least be able to get into classes. If you go back through Collegian archives you find a lot of bitching about D.C. food, campus cable, ugly architecture, and parking services. Man, those were the days.

I have no clear answer to remedy this situation. We must excel. You, the dregs of the undergraduate student body will have to turn this situation around. Don't tolerate table scraps and leftovers when we've paid for a whole meal. Don't sell yourself short because you aren't in a program that the university values and don't settle for anything less than what you deserve.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian columnist.

Budget cuts student safety

Escort service will be missed

CARA BEDICK

"I don't feel well, I don't think I could walk it if I tried."

"I usually have a friend who walks with me, but they couldn't come."

"I can remember when there were sign-up sheets in the dorms so that you could always find someone to walk with."

These are all parts of conversations I have overheard while waiting for the Escort Service to arrive. The ride is usually silent. We sit, staring at the road ahead of us, feeling the comfort of the filled seats, knowing that none of us had to walk home alone. I am describing the awesome escort service that Javier Cevallos, our vice chancellor of student affairs was quoted as saying students used "as a taxi service, and not in the means of security." I would love to know where Cevallos obtained the information to form his opinion. As a sophomore who has worked on campus since the day after I arrived here, the Escort Service has been a constant, reliable method of returning to my dorm at night.

Due to budget cuts, not only has the Escort Service been taken away from students at UMass, but no other choice has been left but to walk home alone. Security officers who would have patrolled campus won't be here much longer either. Both security benefits are being "phased out." leaving us empty handed by mid-March. Long before there was public discussion on these budget cuts, I heard conversations with drivers of the Escort Service about their limited funding.

I don't know who thought that members of our UMass community were going to let these ridiculous budget cuts go by without a fight. The Escort Service, along with other security benefits, is crucial to our safety here on campus. Incidents on campus that occurred only two years ago induced fear that many recall as nothing they had ever seen before. The fear remains and extends to even prospective students, the ones that our school is spending a good portion of our money to attract.

What will the tour guides say to parents who ask about safety on campus? How about, "Well, the administration just did away with a large portion of our security personnel because they couldn't find a better way to deal with budget cuts, but I promise we're safe." By allowing the retraction of our security resources, we are allowing the endangerment of both fellow community members and ourselves.

> "...no other choice has been left but to walk home alone."

If the events of September 11 have taught us anything, it is that Americans have a false sense of security. By allowing the elimination of our security, we are not simply blind to this realization of the lie we live, but open-eyed to the complete absence of safety.

I am taking a class offered by the Sociology Department, a department that has been enormously affected by the budget cuts. For this class I read an article that said for a good society to evolve, its policies must reflect change in values. The Escort Service began as an acknowledgement of the change of needs of our community. If you take a look at our university's public safety website, it says that the Escort Service was designed to provide safe, dependable, and courteous campus travel for students, faculty, staff, and guests of the community. The service began as a progressive project of the Student Government Association. What statement are we making by allowing the University to take away benefits that we were promised when we decided to become a part of it? It is not time to regress.

We cannot and will not accept this absence of security. If you read through last week's article that informed us of what Cevallos cares about our well being, you would have noticed that there is going to be an open forum this week. The forum will be held by the SGA on February 7 at 6 p.m. in Room 168 of the Campus Center to discuss issues regarding the recent budget cuts.

It is imperative to be at this meeting. We must come together to tell our administration that we will not allow our safety to be threatened at the whims of a Vice Chancellor that I personally have never seen in the comfort of that Escort Service van.

Cara Bedick is a UMass student.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR:

Cutting of daycare ruffles feathers

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to the article that appeared in the Editorial/Opinion Section on Feb. 1st by Kevin Powers. First of all, Kevin, put away the thesaurus. Your backwards and selfish mentality cannot possibly hide behind the words you clearly had to use the spell check on ("puerile"? Come on!).

The attack upon students who put children in day care is totally unwarranted. If parents have chosen to further their education in the hope of providing a better future for the child, some arrangement must be made for daycare. It is certainly not their goal to "...toss their children into the arms of anonymous daycare workers..." because "...these pompous dunwits want to avoid the actual and obvious obligation on their part to raise their own kids." Mr. Powers seems to think that once one becomes a parent, all activities other than raising the child should cease.

Let me introduce you to the real world – one in which there isn't time to berate anonymous others on how to raise their children. Parents or not, most of us here at UMass have to work. Is employment another attempt by these "dimwits" to rid themselves of their children? Of course not – employment is a necessary part of providing for the child. So why is placing a child in daycare while attending classes for a better future such a deplorable act?

You wrote that students "...are arrogant enough to fancy themselves adults..." yet "they have absolutely no desire to simply do what adults must do." You continue on to make the point that true adults must live with consequences and deal with their responsibility. Basically, you mean raise your child even if it is an unplanned pregnancy. What the hell do you think the people with children in daycare are doing? They are carrying the dual burden of raising a child and going to school. Instead of bashing these parents, you should be applauding them.

Furthermore, you started to preach some religious morality at the end of your tirade. You Bible-thumpers are the fanatics that meddle in the lives of newly pregnant and scared single mothers, spouting abortion as a sin. Yet, now that the mother has given birth, you have the audacity to lecture them on how to raise the child.

In your world, apparently, parents should simply raise their children without any outside help. Otherwise they are neglectful and immature parents. Would you rather they lived on welfare to "properly raise" their children? No, you are the same kind of person who bitches about those who "milk the system," and you clearly see daycare as just that. Doesn't your religion, which you seem to so proudly support, teach compassion? It seems the rest of us who are "moaning and groaning," as you put it, learned it well. I would gladly see some of my tuition spent on a child's future rather than wasted on building additions. I think Sam Wilkinson and many others agree.

I suppose, Mr. Powers, that being a father is not in your near future – lest you have to eat your words. This doesn't surprise me at all. No woman in her right mind should ever give a selfish windbag like you a second look.

Matthew Kelleher
UMass Undergraduate

Dear Editor:

When I opened the paper on Friday afternoon, I was appalled. Astounded. What troubled me so much was a letter I read from a Mr. Powers, basically saying that it was a good thing the daycare was closed, because now people would have to take responsibility for what they had "done." Let's move past the fact that it's never a good thing when an easily accessible daycare shuts down. Let's forget about all the bright, wonderful teachers (not babysitters, mind you. These people are trained teachers) who will be out of work because of this. We'll talk about them later.

Let's talk about something that he seemed to have missed. Most of the students at that daycare are not the children of UMass students that are shirking their responsibilities. They are the children of staff and faculty, of TAs, and even people that live in the town of Amherst that live close by. Make no mistake, the daycare we have is a great daycare. I worked there my first semester, and I saw something that you don't see at every childcare facility: Children having fun. Kids laughing and playing, kids doing, and most importantly: kids learning.

Daycares are not, and I repeat, NOT expensive babysitter's clubs. They are not jails for kids, and they are definitely not a place where kids are placed in any kind of harm. They are places of growth. I challenge anyone to try to raise a child in his home without any interaction with any other children. You will not turn up with a well-rounded child. Kids need that interaction; they need that change of pace. Daycares provide that. They provide a safe environment away from the home where a child can learn about himself or herself in many different ways. Kids learn how to talk with other kids and other adults, how to be creative, how to sing, how to dance, and they don't have to worry about their needs being met, or if Mommy is too busy on the phone, or if they feel lonely. That's taken care of.

The TEACHERS are there for the children. I know some teachers that stay hours after the close of the school and come in hours before the opening the next day to make sure everything is just right for the students. They come in on the weekends, and they come in on holidays. If you fire people like that, if you just cut them loose just because of budget cuts – then there is a serious problem with your organization.

Now, I've only talked about the children and the teachers. What about the parents? As I said before – they aren't just students. They are people with kids. They put their kids into daycare for a variety of reasons, but they do NOT put them there because they are trying to run from responsibility.

Daycare is a very responsible thing to do. Sometimes people don't have enough money to have a parent stay home. They need both incomes to make ends meet. Now where can they put their children while they work?

What if there are no relatives around? The fact is that working parents are grateful for a safe haven for their children. For many people, this is the way that they can provide food and shelter for their children.

I am the first to stand up and say that people have the right to express their feelings on different things, and that this is a right that all people should have. But when you exercise that right, you need to actually know what you're talking about. How it affects all parties involved. Then shoot your mouth off.

Janra Roberts
Undeclared Junior

Dear Editor:

This past week at the Mullins Center was the busiest week that we will experience this season.

Given the fact that the building is home to three UMass teams and each team has different requirements, the student labor force needed to convert the facility from two types of basketball set-ups to hockey set-up eight times in eight days. Two of those conversions occurred between a women's basketball game at noon and a men's hockey game at 8 p.m. on consecutive Saturdays. The operations crew has honed this daunting task down to a three-hour completion time, which is a feat that compares to most major arenas in the country.

From January 26 to February 4, we hosted four women's basketball games, three hockey games, one televised men's basketball game, and the televised New England Patriots Super Bowl game on Sunday.

I am very proud of the employees of the Mullins Center and very pleased with all of their hard work and effort. A large number of these employees are in the Sports Management program. I view Mullins Center employment as a "learning" experience that they will take with them upon graduation.

I did want to share this with all of the UMass campus as, again, I am very proud of all of the Mullins staff.

Nancy C. Beauchamp
Executive Director
Mullins Center

Turn to DATING, page 7

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.05.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Dating diva answers Q's

COURTESY SHALINA BILLINGS

ASK &LENA

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With conversation hearts and Hershey's Kisses filling the stores, there's no denying that Valentine's Day is in full bloom. With such a wide range of pink and red cards at your local drugstore, ranging from Teletubbies for the preschoolers to Britney Spears for the high school crowd (and let's face it, their fathers as well), how is one to decide how to woo one's crush? Many of you already have dating concerns from how to ask out that sassy senorita in your Spanish class to how to spice up a long-term relationship that's been through it all. With a few quick pointers, your V-Day can be literally painless, like A Pass/Fail Music Appreciation class. If you've got the appreciation (or should I say "love") then you're already on a 4.0 path.

Help! There's a guy in my major that I think is adorable, smart, nice – the whole package. I've never approached him before but we always catch eyes and smile. I don't even know if he has a girlfriend. Would it be too bold for me to ask him out for Valentine's Day?

– Sheila T.

Sheila, there's nothing wrong with having a crush and acting on it. I've done everything from writing a letter to Jonathan Brandis (in eighth grade) professing my love to simply calling my sweetheart and then hanging up after hearing his squeaky pubescent voice in high school. However, now that we're in college I suggest a vastly different approach. Start off slow with this guy by first getting to know him a little better. Next time you make eye contact, don't let it simply stop at that. Maybe ask him if you could see his notes from the last class, while getting the scope on all his stats like "where do you live, what's your major..". You know the drill. Chances are that you'll have something in common that you can chat about.

Now that you've broken that barrier, it's perfectly acceptable to sit next to him during class and eventually ask him to study with you for that killer midterm. Of course, you'll only want to take these steps if you like him after your initial introduction. In fact the boy may be a personality Monet – his smile makes him look sincere from a distance but upon a closer investigation he's nothing to write home about. As for a Valentine's Day date, I would hold off on that one just yet. You'll definitely seem a little too presumptuous if you ask out someone that you've only smiled at in class a few times. Take it slow and after a week or two maybe ask him out for coffee or lunch. Daytime dates are always the best first dates

Turn to DATING, page 7

Cracker's Forever good indy-rock fun

Cracker – they have nice suits... and we like their album. Could their day get any better?

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CRACKER
Forever
Back Porch/Virgin

No matter what David Lowery does, he always seems to find a way to avoid mainstream attention. From the indy-rock glory days of Camper Van Beethoven and the brief success of Kerosene Hat's "Low" to the band's total disappearance in recent years, Lowery's career has managed to cruise beneath the radar.

Cracker's latest, the aptly named Forever, will do little to redefine Lowery's constant condition.

A collection of roots rock – there is Kid Rock and his mindless anthems, Lowery could never sing "Rollin'" because he recognizes the inherent stupidity of the song.

Similarly, on the band's website (www.crackersoul.com), somebody can't help but point out that while a Virgin greatest hits albums might be good, it can't be taken that seriously if only because it was marketed on television.

Instead, there's "Don't Bring Us Down" which features Lowery at his hoarsest. Scratchily chanting the song's title against his driving guitar, Cracker's enigmatic lead-singer relies on his keyboards. Kenny Margolis sounds positively Manzerik as he carries the song.

Where "Down" is typical Cracker, "Guarded by Monkeys" is typical Lowery. His strange lyrics – "you are so beautiful/you should be hipdeep in the jungle/on some forgotten island...you are so beautiful/you should be guarded by monkeys" – with feedback galore.

Lest it all be a roadhouse sound, Cracker sounds positively Cornershop on "Superfan." Lest it all be neo-Indian rock fused with techno, Cracker sounds Tragically Hip on "Forever." Cracker refuses classification – not surprising for a band that has threatened to play polka to booing fans and then done so when the booing did not cease.

Forever isn't all gems. The cleverly titled "What You're Missing," a series of knocks on more established artists interested in advancing themselves rather than their music, falls flat because it isn't all that funny. Lowery is funny as "MC Cracker D" but by the end of the song, the joke has worn thin.

Moments like these – where Cracker's cynicism overwhelms the band's ability to really rock are few and far between. Instead, Forever is yet another entry in the odd odyssey of the band's stunted career.

Forever short on mainstream success, and forever long on creativity, it will be a sad day when the band sacrifices one for the other. At the present time, there has been no threat of such a disaster occurring.

Forever is evidence of that.

Superbowl ads magnificent flops

By Nicholas Pizzolato
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Well, one of the biggest nights for television occurred on Feb. 3. It wasn't sweeps or the Emmys. It wasn't a brand new night of Must See TV or the season premiere of "Survivor." It was the Super Bowl, and although New England was ecstatic about the Patriots being in the big game, many were also looking forward to the legendary Super Bowl commercials.

And not just any commercials, these are mini-movies that serve as small intermissions between every time out and turnover. These commercials normally are worth $2 million per 30-second ad during the big game. In the past, these commercials have been the highlights of Super Bowl Sunday.

In the three years that I have been analyzing these gridiron ads, I've been blown away. Two years ago we saw some of the most brilliant and clever ads. We had cat herders, the birth of the E*Trade Monkey and the ".com" revolution. However, we all learned that just because you are on the Internet and spend millions on a Super Bowl commercial, doesn't mean that you will stay in business. Nearly half of those Internet commercials that bought airtime that year were out of business by the next year. Sadly, this included the "Pets.com" sock puppet.

The next year, not only saw the death of e-business, but also the range of comedian Cedric the Entertainer. The E*Trade monkey showed up again, Bud Light dominated, Britney shook her booty for us to buy Pepsi, and the controversial commercial of Christopher Reeve taking his first steps for an investment firm left some uneasy.

This year, however, we Super Bowl fans saw something very rare. Not only did the Patriots win in dramatic New England fashion, but for the most part the commercials weren't that good or original, which made my job much easier.

THE FUNNIEST COMMERCIALS

Honorable Mention: Cedric the Entertainer comes through again in the clutch with a Bud Light Cyrano De Bergerac. While he is telling a friend what to say to a beautiful girl sitting next to him, Cedric asks the bartender, "So, how much?" which gets his friends slapped. He has proven to be much funnier than those Bud Light lizards.

5) Bud Light introduces a cowboy to the mob in the "How ya doin'" ads. "Nuff said.

4) "It's Brisk, Baby", the catch phrase used by Lipton through small Claymation puppets, climbs its way into the Top Five, by having the puppets strike after being told that they are not needed anymore. Funny because not only does Danny DeVito turn out to be taller as a puppet than he does in real life, but also Jackie Chiles, the Cochran-esque lawyer from "Seinfeld" made a Claymation appearance. However, the main reason this ad worked was because Al Roker was attacked by a puppet Mickey from the Rocky ads. "You're an animal."

3) Bud Light premiered another commercial which had a man whose eagle got him beer. When asked how the bird does it, the bird is shown terrorizing a small outside cafe. Let's face it: nothing is more comedic than a bird causing havoc to get two free beers.

2) One word: Quiznos. I don't know where I can find them and I don't know what makes them special. All I know is that I now want to eat the sandwich that used the phrase "Cheat to win" in its ad campaign. One of the most creative ads I've seen in a while. Take that Blimpie. Die Jared.

1) Finally the number one ad is the first ad they showed. Barry Bonds hitting the longball during batting practice. And then, a voice tries to psyche him out and tells him to go into early retirement and not break the home run record. The voice turns out to be the current home run record holder, Hank Aaron. GENIUS!!!! The commercial was for Charles Schwab, an investment house talking about your future, but the reason why this commercial works is because you see Hank Aaron in the press booth, whispering "Hank who?"

The Pepsi Ad

I know it starred pop goddess Britney Spears. But this was possibly the worst ad of the night. Watch Britney as she sings the different Pepsi jingles. The highlights: Britney as a '50s waitress and Britney singing the "Simply Irresistible" cover. Downsides: Britney was a HIPPIE!! The ad ended with Britney dancing and singing the song from last year's ad, and believe or not she was wearing even less than last year's ad. One student last year told me, "I didn't want to drink Pepsi, I just wanted to have sex". If that's the case, this year the Pepsi observation was, "I didn't want to drink Pepsi, I want to drink Coke."

M WHAT

Ok, will someone tell me what M Life is. I know it's from

Turn to ADS, page 7

Fashion in news

Fashion news – it's hip, it's edgy, it's bold... okay, it's not. But with all the sports coverage for the Super Bowl, and all the news coverage for all that news, isn't it time that fashion got its moment on Page One? No, it is not time – which is why this story is rocking Page Five. But read on, my curious little fashionistas, and marvel at the earth-shattering news in the world of fashion.

ITALY – Italian clothing maker C.P. Company has created the latest in paranoia gear – the L.E.D. coat. The jacket contains a tiny computer that measures gases in the air, like methane and freon. How much for this fashion marvel? Over one thousand dollars. And why would anyone choose to buy a coat that tells him how dangerous the air around him is? "The gentleman who understands this is beyond normal outerwear," C.P. vice president, Sam Hassan, told The New York Times. "He could be an artist, he could be someone visual. Our customer isn't looking for basic products." Hmmmm. an artist? I was thinking more along the lines of a strange engineering hermit who thinks that women want to check out his calculator. Mathletes are hot.

ALSO ITALY – In big news – Giorgio Armani declared that he is sick of luxury. Yes, it was bound to happen sometime. We all know the fashion world was a little deluded, but to turn on one's self? That's crazy talk. "I'll tell you something. Luxury disgusts me," Armani told Italian newspapers. "I want young people to understand... that it is absurd to prostitute oneself just to get a designer bag." Was this a rampant problem? And if so, why weren't the prize-winning investigative reporters at Seventeen and Vogue on top of this issue? In his

Turn to STYLE, page 7

Bin Laden's (depicted here) bro is rocking the designer label.

ORANGE COUNTY FRESH & FUNNY

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

ORANGE COUNTY
Directed by Jake Kasdan.
Starring Colin Hanks, Jack Black and Schuyler Fisk
Paramount Pictures

The teen comedy genre, decayed by too many bad Freddie Prinze Jr. movies, gets a much-needed booster shot with Orange County. A witty slapstick adventure streaked with dark veins of suburban satire and a minimum of gross-out stupidity, the movie certainly comes with good genes. The appealing leads, Colin Hanks and Schuyler Fisk, are the respective progeny of Tom Hanks and Sissy Spacek, and director Jake Kasdan is the son of legendary director Lawrence Kasdan, making this a veritable meeting of second generation Hollywood. But this smart young trio knows enough not to remain in its parents' shadows, and has proved itself with this quirky comedy.

The likable Hanks, who has his father's Everyman quality, plays Shaun Brumder, a straight-A student looking to escape his dead end life in the titular L.A. suburb. Formerly an easily distracted surfer, Shaun's life was changed when his friend died and he found a book buried in the sand. The book inspired Shaun to become a writer and attend Stanford University, where he would study at the feet of the author he idolizes. With his highest scores, Shaun would be a shoo-in – until he gets a rejection letter. His addled guidance counselor sent in the wrong transcript, and now Shaun must find a way to fix the mistake, with help form his sensible, animal loving girlfriend Ashley (Fisk) and his slovenly brother Lance (Jack Black, back to form after the disappointing Shallow Hal).

Orange County is puny plotwise – even at less than 90 minutes the story feels spread thin and sometimes a little flat. But Kasdan and screenwriter Mike White (both veterans of the short-lived "Freaks and Geeks") give the movie an offbeat air. White's clever script presents Orange County as a world full of grown-up babies, where Shaun and Ashley are the only adults but that doesn't mean Shaun is capable of grasping what's really important. Hanks and Fisk, both of whom escaped worse teen movies (he: Get Over It, she: Snow Day) are winning young actors who prove that talent is hereditary. Kasdan hired a heavenly supporting cast – Catherine O'Hara and John Lithgow (as Shaun's parents), Lily Tomlin, Chevy Chase, Ben Stiller, Harold Ramis, Garry Marshall, Kevin Kline – that demonstrates how much smarter this film is than your average teen film. Kasdan has a flair for the off-kilter (he directed the under appreciated indie Zero Effect), and tones down the usual toilet humor in favor of more idiosyncratic humor (i.e. a cheerleader with a penchant for embarrassing sexual trysts). A few months ago, audiences were "treated" to the slipshod antics of Not Another Teen Movie. This deserves that title because it is not another teen movie. It's something much more razor-sharp.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN UCard Coca-Cola
Is This Your Smile?

If so, YOU just won $25 on your UCard, redeemable anywhere on campus! Just go to Daily Collegian Office in the basement of the Campus Center, with your UMASS ID for proper verification.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM THE UMASS UCARD AND COCA-COLA!

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

EARN 1–2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2002 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 4 (Mon) •Feb. 5 (Tues) •Feb. 6 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY: Thurs. Feb 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

■ dating

continued from page 5

because they're usually quick and casual. For now I would plan a girl's night out with some other single friends for February fourteenth. Remember that it doesn't have to be a commercialized holiday for you to share a magical time with someone special.

I have this problem. I am going out next week with this girl that I used to date. We broke up on decent terms and I kinda still like her. I am not interested in anything serious, but I think she is. What should I do?

– Tom K.

Oh man! That's a difficult question but I think you have a few options depending on your situation. First, did you establish this as a romantic date or simply a gathering of two friends? If you're not interested in anything serious, than you may want to change the parameters by calling her and saying something like "I'm so glad that I'm going to spend some time with such a great friend like you." That's a subtle way to send her a message in case she has other ideas about your intentions.

However, you said that you possibly still have feelings for her. I suggest that you look inside yourself and ask some serious questions. What went wrong with your last relationship and do you think that the two of you have changed enough for that to not happen again in the future? Do you think that the both of you really have feelings for each other?

Perhaps you like one another out of convenience and comfort because you get along so well as friends and you've dated before? In my experience, dating on again and off again usually causes more heartache than it's worth. If she brings up the subject of dating even after you have established it as a friendly gathering, have an open, honest conversation with her about your feelings. It may seem hard now but it will prevent miscommunication and bitterness for the future.

***

Want to plan that perfect Valentine's Day Date? From first dates to that sweetie that's already a steady, stay tuned for next week's special Valentine's Day edition of Ask Elena.

Got a question for Elena? Ask her advice on anything from friends, family, love, and health... anything that has been on your mind. Email your questions to askelena@yahoo.com.

Dr. Pepper ad corny and inane

By Tyler Brezler
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) – I'm really enjoying this new Dr. Pepper ad featuring Garth Brooks. Have you seen this one yet? It's fantastic. He's sitting on a front porch with some good ol' boys, strumming away on his guitar, singing songs of social importance.

Yup, he's hawking a soft drink – the most important thing any artist can achieve these days, up to and including winning a Nobel prize. Look at all the other ground-breaking musicians who have launched soda ad campaigns: John Lennon for Sprite; Kurt Cobain for Pepsi, and Johann Sebastian Bach for new Code Red Mountain Dew, the choice of the x-treme, in-your-face baroque composer.

We seem to have reached an age where, no matter how much money one has from his artistic achievement, be it void of integrity or not, there is always room in the wallet for a little more green. Of course, this isn't the case with Mr. Brooks, who as we all know has had very little success with any of his musical efforts. One can hardly blame him for chasing down a little more cash. Besides that, I know he's just doing it because he enjoys a great, refreshing beverage like Dr. Pepper. Who doesn't? (cha-ching!)

But enough with the sarcastic crap. Garth Brooks sucks. His music sucks. His vacuum cleaner sucks (and how!). He appears to me to be a rich, soulless bastard who would sell his grandmother's heart for five bucks if he hadn't already auctioned it off on Ebay.

That aside, I would like to now discuss the message of this soda commercial, which is both fascinating and mystifying. I might be misquoting the lyrics slightly, but the message was more or less, "Be an individual and drink what we tell you to: Dr. Pepper!"

Now, for those of you who have given this some thought, doesn't there seem to be a slight contradiction in that ad pitch? Hmmm ... By behaving like everyone in the commercial, I will become special and unique. My choice in soda will be similar to theirs, and thus, I will win their approval. Screw the taste, man; I just want people to like me. I want them to like me because I am different, just like they are.

Why do we repeatedly see ads like this? Are advertising agencies deliberately trying to mess with our heads? Why can't they just be honest about the whole thing? Well, mi amigos, the time has come. That's right, I received a call from Dr. Pepper's advertising agency earlier today, and I am about to become their newest spokesman. Since I'm not famous in any way, shape or form, it won't even be considered selling out! Rock!

So, the agency let me come up with this new idea all by myself, which is quite rare, but there's no use tampering with genius. Now, my idea is this:

Me, sitting alone in a room, surrounded by nothing but four walls.

"Hello, America. Recently you may have seen a variety of soda commercials claiming that if you participated in the consumption of a certain carbonated beverage, you would become sexually attractive, be liked by those around you and/or be able to jump off of mountains strapped to a snowboard in your jockey shorts, partying with Mel Torme (also in his jockeys). These were lies. Yes, all lies. We enjoyed lying to you and plan to do it again in the near future. But right now, ladies and gentlemen, right now I need to be honest with you. I need to reiterate that if you drink our beverage, or any other beverage for that matter, none of what was promised will ever come true.

"Unless of course you drink the New Dr. Pepper, which will make you more powerful than God. I'm not kidding you, man! You will be totally invincible in every way possible. Go ahead, drink some. Now try shooting yourself. Didn't hurt, did it? I didn't think so. Now try driving a car into someone on the street. See, they died, but you didn't, because you are stronger than God. Feel free to smite those who displease you, because you will soon rule the world!

"As for attracting women, what do they love more than power? Why, nothing! And with all the power in the world, you will have chicks crawling all over you, simply because you scarfed down an entire liter of carbonated goodness. What better reason could we possibly give you to drink our product?

"What's that, you ask? Does it taste good? What the hell do you care? You'll be the mightiest being in the history of mankind. So buy New Dr. Pepper, and be better than God."

That, my friends, is advertising brilliance.

It doesn't really taste like pepper.

■ style

continued from page 5

latest line, Armani pays homage to the proletariat with such stunning fashions as donkey jackets and military boots. I'm sure at $2,000.00 a boot Joe-the-plumber is feeling quite honored.

NOT ITALY – Rodeo Drive, 5th Avenue... Tretyakovsky Proyezd? Yeah, what she said. Fashionistas the world over will have to begin practicing their Russian, as Moscow is joining the ranks of Paris, New York and Milan as a fashion capital. Moscow's designer boutique district, Tretyakovsky Proyezd, boasts Gucci, Fendi, Dolce and Gabbana, Brioni, Prada and Bulgari. Quickly thumbing their noses at the whole idea of communism, Russians are joyously jumping on the capitalistic greed so popular in America. Upper middle class Russians make about $1,000 a year – yet they're rocking the Bulgari watches and Tiffany key chains. "In New York, if someone buys a coat for $10,000, it means they have millions," Russian fur designer Helen Yamak told an A.P. reporter. "In Russia, if somebody buys for $10,000, it means they can have just $5,000 and $5,000 loaned from friends." Who lends their friend $5,000 to buy a coat? Maybe they should consider prostituting themselves like Armani recommends.

AT AN UNDISCLOSED CAVE LOCATION – Osama bin Laden's brother is riding the family's name to fame. Yesama bin Laden (he spells it a little different than his bro) obtained a license to have his own line in Switzerland prior to the terrorist attacks of September 11. Bill Prince, deputy editor of GQ, told The Guardian, "It is in extraordinary bad taste." The Guardian also likened the clothing line to having a "Hitler" line of clothes (which apparently was once a brand-name line). Don't expect to see this clothing line sweeping America anytime soon.

Fashion news – maybe they should just stick with stiletto and tube tops.

Information from The New York Times, Reuters, The Associated Press and The Guardian were used to write this column. Sorry – we don't have the budget to go jet setting to Milan.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian Columnist

Armani – his looks are defined by luxury – just don't prostitute yourself for them

■ ads

continued from page 5

Britney could get more obnoxious with each decade.

AT&T but what exactly is it? All I know is that one of the ads had a guy from HBO's prison drama "Oz" in it.

BEST OVERALL COMMERCIAL

Without a doubt the best commercial wasn't funny and it had nothing to do with beer. It made the connection between buying drugs and that money which in turn supplies terrorists with funds. In this day in which everyone hates terrorism equally, it was bold and brilliant to make the connection between "just having some fun" and supporting terror.

Well, this was the worst year for commercials, but it didn't matter, because this was the best Super Bowl I've seen. Need I say more?

Nick Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist.

WRITE FOR ARTS

STUDENT TRAVEL
It's YOUR trip, take it!
London.....$274
Amsterdam....$351
Paris.....$349
Los Angeles.....$198
New York.....$115
Washington D.C.....$78
Fares are round-trip from Hartford. Restrictions may apply. Tax not included.
BUDGET HOTELS for as little as $18 A NIGHT!!!
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571
• Full Aerobics Programs including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more
• Nutritonal Consultation
• Tanning
• Sauna
• Juice Bar & Supplements
• Fitness Testing & Programming
Semester Special $160
• Stairmasters
• Precor Treadmills
• Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
• Lifecycle Upright Bikes
• Precor Crosstrainers
• Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
• Cybex Circuit Training Equipment
Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"

Please help The Collegian end the madness.

Which Minuteman do you think should stay, and which one do you think should go?

Email us at collegian_sports@yahoo.com.

We'll post the results next week.

The UMASS Bahá'i Club Invites you to discuss:

The Destiny of America and The Promise of World Peace

Wednesday, February 6, 2002, at 7:30 pm
Campus Center Room 803

Thursday, February 7, 2002 at 7:30 pm
Campus Center Room 803

Friday, February 8, 2002 at 8:00 pm
Garis home— 256-6277
146 Shays Street, Amherst

ADVERTISEMENT

The Destiny of America and The Promise of World Peace

At this time of world turmoil, the United States Bahá'í community offers a perspective on the destiny of America
as the promoter of world peace.

More than a hundred years ago, Bahá'u'lláh, the founder of the Bahá'í Faith, addressing heads of state, proclaimed that the age of maturity for the entire human race had come. The unity of humankind was now to be established as the foundation of the great peace that would mark the highest stage in humanity's spiritual and social evolution. Revolutionary and world-shaking changes were therefore inevitable.

The Bahá'í teachings state:

The world is moving on. Its events are unfolding ominously and with bewildering rapidity. The whirlwind of its passions is swift and alarmingly violent. The New World is insensibly drawn into its vortex . . . Dangers, undreamt of and unpredictable, threaten it both from within and from without. Its governments and peoples are being gradually enmeshed in the coils of the world's recurrent crises and fierce controversies. . . . The world is contracting into a neighborhood. America, willingly or unwillingly, must face and grapple with this new situation. For purposes of national security, let alone any humanitarian motive, she must assume the obligations imposed by this newly created neighborhood. Paradoxical as it may seem, her only hope of extricating herself from the perils gathering around her is to become entangled in that very web of international association which the Hand of an inscrutable Providence is weaving.

The American nation, Bahá'ís believe, will evolve, through tests and trials to become a land of spiritual distinction and leadership, a champion of justice and unity among all peoples and nations, and a powerful servant of the cause of everlasting peace. This is the peace promised by God in the sacred texts of the world's religions.

Establishing peace is not simply a matter of signing treaties and protocols; it is a complex task requiring a new level of commitment to resolving issues not customarily associated with the pursuit of peace.

Universal acceptance of the spiritual principle of the oneness of humankind is essential to any successful attempt to establish world peace.

Racism, one of the most baneful and persistent evils, is a major barrier to peace.

The emancipation of women, the achievement of full equality of the sexes, is one of the most important, though less acknowledged, prerequisites of peace.

The inordinate disparity between rich and poor keeps the world in a state of instability, preventing the achievement of peace.

Unbridled nationalism, as distinguished from a sane and legitimate patriotism, must give way to a wider loyalty, to the love of humanity as a whole.

Religious strife, the cause of innumerable wars and conflicts throughout history, is a major obstacle to progress. The challenge facing the world's religious leaders is to contemplate, with hearts filled with compassion and the desire for truth, the plight of humanity, and to ask themselves whether they cannot, in humility before their God, submerge their theological differences in a great spirit of mutual forbearance that will enable them to work together for the advancement of human understanding and peace.

Bahá'ís pray, "May this American Democracy be the first nation to establish the foundation of international agreement. May it be the first nation to proclaim the unity of mankind. May it be the first to unfurl the standard of the Most Great Peace."

During this hour of crisis, we affirm our abiding faith in the destiny of America. We know that the road to its destiny is long, thorny and tortuous, but we are confident that America will emerge from her trials undivided and undefeatable.

—National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States

For more information and for a free copy of the booklet The Promise of World Peace
Please visit our Web site at www.usbahai.org or call us toll free at 1-800-22-UNITE

For information in the Amherst area call 256-6277 or 549-1666

Printed in The New York Times, Sunday, December 23, 2001

A truly lucky guess

Well, well, well.

All the combined knowledge of the Sports Department, some of the brightest minds college journalism has ever seen, have once again been put to shame by the News Department.

Pitifully poor showing, folks, really.

The challenge was to put up or shut up. Well, shut up. Patriots won the Super Bowl, 20-17. I was four points off of my 24-17 prediction. Suds was close. If you call 28-24 close. But his comment (Yo, Vinny. Do 'em.) was appropriate.

Apparently I can't bust on everyone, like in the good old days of the Collegian NFL picks. So to all you who picked the Rams, I've got some words for y'all.

Glen Straub. Poor Glen picked the Rams, 31 to 14. Why? Because Glen, nice guy though he is, is a moron. We all feel bad for him, really.

Jesse Greenspan, who roots for the Mets and wrote that infamous "I hate the Red Sox" column once again placed his life in danger by picking the Rams to win, 45 to 3. Such disrespect. That, ladies and gentlemen, is a suicidal pick.

Greenspan can be reached at jgreens@student.umass.edu.

Andy Vogt. Don't you cover volleyball? Isn't the coach quitting? Why aren't you writing about that instead of picking the Rams to win 38 to 17?

David Rose. I don't have anything to say. What? Me? Speechless? Yep. Your absolute lack of respect for everything I do means I can just bask in this victory. Apparently watching SportsCenter nine hundred times isn't good for your health.

Matthew F. "Straw" Sacco. Bill Belichick is a genius. And the Yankees do suck.

Justin Pearson. Pearson cut himself pretty badly Super Bowl Sunday, and I'm too nice a guy to bust on an invalid. Besides, I may want Sox tickets someday, and he's got the hook-up.

Jim Pignatiello. Your lack of faith is disturbing, my friend. But you were right – they did make New England proud.

Andy Merritt. You're fired. Again. For real this time.

Jess May. Why, sis? You broke my heart, Fredo. You broke my heart.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Trash Talker.

This is not Ken Campbell, but it should be. (Eric Soderstrom is also a Collegian Trash Talker.)

■ Pats

continued from page 12

let my cousin Vinny do the rest." The translation: you don't take greatness out of anything when you have it.

Let's do the math real quick: 21 touches for 130 yards, carry the two, add the one, which comes out to over six yards per touch. Uhm, hello, Mr. Mantz, aren't you forgetting somebody in the offense? Hello, anybody home? He scored 21 touchdowns this season and you gave him only 17 carries on Sunday. I had mentioned last week that if Mike Tyson bit a chunk of Faulk's leg, the chunk would still rush for 150 yards. Apparently, Mr. Tyson took a bite out of the part of the Rams playbook that says in big letters, "GIVE THE BALL TO MARSHALL FAULK, A LOT."

Also, the defensive calls during the last drive were a thing to question. Once again, we learned that the only thing a prevent defense does is prevent you from winning. The Rams had been aggressive all game long, but with over one minute left in the biggest game, the Rams went to a soft zone, so soft that Tom Brady went down the field without a timeout.

Martz's genius might have worked against him in this situation because he never changed the game plan and adjusted to what the Patriots did defensively and because of that, Belichick won the game's biggest battle: the battle of the minds.

Throughout the whole postseason, the overwhelming theory was that the only team that could beat the Rams was the Rams themselves. Without taking anything from the superior team effort of the Patriots, the Rams beat themselves on Sunday night. Three turnovers against a composed opponent cost them the game and in doing so, also stopped any talk about the Rams being among the greatest teams ever to play the game. Great teams don't turn the ball over, great teams don't panic in the face of adversity and great teams have coaches who know how to use the weapons they have to their advantage. The Rams went 0-for-3 in those departments in Super Bowl XXXVI on Sunday. The offense made too many mistakes to win and the fact Mike Martz essentially packed away the best football player in the world shows that although they might be "The Greatest Show on Turf," the show can be shut down once in a while.

Dr. David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

■ diary

continued from page 12

little fired up while watching the pregame show. At this point, you are either with us (err, them) or against us.

Rodney Harrison of the San Diego Chargers picks the Rams to win (I hate Rodney now). Jason Taylor of the Miami Dolphins picks the Pats (Whooo!).

5:57 p.m. – The Boston Pops, scheduled to play the Super Bowl long before the Pats made it there, just wowed the world in a way that only those lucky enough to have seen their Christmas Show can understand. All these terrific patriotic moments are just outstanding. The Patriots have to win. It just makes so much sense.

6:05 p.m. – I still hold the whack-a-mole record, but there have been a ton of 39's. I know my score won't stand up. It is like being the chip leader in the World Series of Poker and seeing T.J. Cloutier move to your table. You are going down.

6:15 p.m. – I am officially getting jumps. I hate the Rams. I hate everyone who picked the Rams to win by so many points and everyone at this paper who took them to win in a landslide or claimed that they had no chance.

I hate all the idiots on ESPN that think they can forecast who is going to win a game because they once played the game – none of them gave the Pats a chance to beat the Steelers last week. What makes them any more right this time?

6:22 p.m. – After watching the Rams offense introduced in the normal one-at-a-time fashion, it was announced that New England wanted to be introduced as a whole. AMAZING! I have never even heard of that happening. It was such a classy move by the team. I hope America fell in love with them at that point.

6:38 p.m. – They interview Troy Brown on the sidelines right before kickoff. I think I understood what he said, but it was in triple speed, so I'm not sure. Jump to an interview on the other side of the field with Kurt Warner, he is much more relaxed. Ugh, that isn't a good sign.

6:42 p.m. – You could hear a pin drop in the room – completely different from every other year. Even the chitchatting between those who tend to look forward more to the commercials than the game itself are hush-hush. Wow.

6:45 p.m. – Pats force the Rams to punt on their first possession. Sweet.

6:51 p.m. – New England is punting. I am shaking. At this point, it isn't about whether or not the team is prepared to play in the Super Bowl, but whether its fans are ready to root for the team as hard as they tend to.

If I were on the game show, "The Chair," all they would have to do to get my blood pressure up is play some of this game on the screen. The game would be over on the first question.

7:00 p.m. – St. Louis is on the board first with a 50-yard field goal by Jeff Wilkins. For some reason, this calms me down a bit.

7:22 p.m. – Wilkins misses a field goal. New England takes over on offense with great field position. Let's get something going.

7:29 p.m. – No Luck. Pats can't get do anything on offense. Rams are getting some good pressure on Brady.

7:33 p.m. – St. Louis is winning the battle on the line of scrimmage right now. This is going to get ugly real soon. The Rams are about to explode.

7:34 p.m. – HOLY S—! Ty Law just picked off Warner and returned it for a touchdown! New England leads St. Louis, 7-3. I may have a heart attack. I hate all those people who said this would be a killing.

7:42 p.m. – Troy Brown just called for a fair catch at his own 15-yard line with no one within 15 yards of him. Okay, that was a pretty dumb play by one of the smartest players on the team.

7:44 p.m. – The Patriots' offensive line is suddenly moving the Rams back.

7:48 p.m. – Brady is sacked by Leonard Little. Man, I really need one of those skullcaps. Rams will get the ball now.

7:57 p.m. – Forgot to look at the clock because I nearly lost bladder control as Antwan Harris knocked the ball out of Ricky Proehl's hands. Terrell Buckley recovers the ball and advances to the Rams' 40-yard line.

8:00 p.m. – David Patten just made a leaping catch (super reminiscent of last week's catch from Drew Bledsoe) in the back of the end zone to put the Pats up 14-3. That was a perfect pass by quarterback Tom Brady.

8:01 p.m. – They are going to review the play. Oh no. Looking at the replay...it looks like a catch. Come on, you can't overturn this. You overturn this and I am going all the way back to Amherst to riot with those numbskulls in Southwest.

8:06 p.m. – Uhm, it is halftime and the Pats have a 14-3 lead. I am staring at the television in shock.

8:08 p.m. – The buffalo wings are broken out, and we can't help but talk about the improbability of what is going on. My friend Bob sums my feelings up perfectly. "I would feel a whole lot better if it was the fourth quarter."

8:20 p.m. – Really touching halftime show. U2 was terrific and the tribute to the victims was very well done.

8:35 p.m. – On to the second half. Antowain Smith is pounding the ball. The Rams even brought nine men into the box at one point.

8:38 p.m. – Punt time. I can't help this feeling that the Rams are going to explode at any time.

8:57 p.m. – Quote of the night so far goes to my friend John. After seeing the Truth commercial that pointed out that there is cyanide in cigarettes, which is also in rat poison, John dropped a "So if I smoke in my house, it will kill the rats." This brought the room down.

9:05 p.m. – This is getting bad. The Rams are really moving the ball well. I just don't feel comfortable with the lead at all. Come on defense, make a play.

9:05 p.m. – Otis Smith just made a pick. He almost broke it for a touchdown. Pats are at the Rams 33 – great field position.

9:07 p.m. – One of those heart-in-the-throat moments: Pats TE Jermaine Wiggins has a ball thrown off his chest and it bounces straight into the air. There was a collective shriek in the room, but (thankfully) no Ram defender was near him.

9:08 p.m. – Adam Vinatieri makes the field goal, giving New England a 17-3 lead. The Pats kicker is now 24-for-24 all-time indoors. Amazing.

9:12 p.m. – That's the end of the third quarter. The Patriots are 15 minutes away from being world champions and I am still terrified of the Rams' offense.

9:14 p.m. – There are two other people with 40's in whack-a-mole. D'oh. The Rams are moving. Come on guys, one more play. Just one more.

9:18 p.m. – Marshall Faulk just caught a pass from Warner and is inside the 10. That isn't good. Come on, just one play defense.

9:23 p.m. – It is 4th-and-goal after nice plays by Lawyer Milloy and Law. The Rams are going for it. They have been successful 75 percent of the time on conversions. Wow. Please stop them. Just one more stop.

9:24 p.m. – Warner fumbles! Tebucky Jones picks up the ball! I AM ON MY FEET! HE IS GOING TO SCORE! There is no way the Rams can come back from this.

9:24:5 p.m. – Oh no. There is a flag down on the field. Where? What? No! Please tell me it was either after the fumble or on the Rams.

9:25 p.m. – Holding on New England defender Willie McGinest, which gives the Rams the ball back and an automatic first down on the one yard line. Yeah that was a good call, McGinest tackled Faulk. Great.

9:27 p.m. – Someone mentions that they scored 41 on whack-a-mole. What is whack-a-mole?

9:29 p.m. – Touchdown. Kurt Warner runs in on sneak. 17-10 Pats lead. Oh no. I am beginning to remember that this is a Boston team and I feel like those wings are going to come back up. This is bad.

9:32 p.m. – Pats have to punt for the second time since Warner scored. Please, Ken Walter, kick the ball like you never kicked it before. Man, this is terrible. I can't take much more of this.

AWFUL KICK. Terrible bounce. 30-yard punt. I think I am going to faint. Oh NO!

9:33 p.m. – Rams have the ball and are 45 yards from tying the game. Warner is flexing his thumb. Yeah, right. This doesn't change anything. He is making good throws. Quick, someone step on his hand. Where are the pro wrestlers – they would know what to do.

9:36 p.m. – Touchdown Rams. Tie game. There is 1:30 left in the game. This is nuts. I am legitimately shaking right now. I can't get out of my head that this is exactly what a Boston team would do – take the lead and give every fan some hope that they could actually win, only to blow it at the end. This thought gives me shooting pain throughout my body. And then I went numb.

(At this point, I stopped looking at the time, I wrote down the time left in the game.)

1:21 left – Troy Brown's return goes nowhere. The Pats have no timeouts left and are insanely far away from field goal position.

0:41 left – Three straight passes to Redmond and I can't believe what I am seeing. A drive led by Brady that is Joe Montana-esque.

0:21 left – Brown just made a huge run after the catch. Holy hell, they might be in field goal range.

0:07 left – Brady spikes the ball to stop the clock. Vinatieri is coming from the sidelines with a chance to win the Super Bowl. The fossils commentating remind us that Vinatieri has a perfect 100 percent field goal percentage indoors – don't say that now!

This is what I actually wrote as the ball was snapped:

48-yard attempt.
Holy S—.
Holy S—.
Clock is out.
Pats won.
OHMYGOD!

***

It still hasn't sunken in. All championship teams claim that no one gave them a chance, but the Patriots can actually say it. There were so few people that even thought this would be a game, let alone gave the team a chance to win. And they pulled it off.

Personally, I am shocked that I survived the experience. After the game, as Patriot owner Bob Kraft was presented the trophy, I just stood in front of the television in shock. Half of me wanted to cry (the host of the party even checked to see if I was), the other half wanted to jump up and down and shout at the top of my lungs.

Boston has ended a 16-year run of being Loserville. It still hasn't sunken in. I don't know how long it will take.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian columnist.

UMass Sports Briefs

Men's Basketball

The Atlantic 10 conference Sunday named sophomore guard Anthony Anderson its Rookie of the Week. This marks the third time this season Anderson has received the honor.

Anderson averaged 18.5 points, 2.5 rebounds, and 2.0 assists per game for the Minutemen over the last week. He netted a career-high 20 points on 7-9 shooting against Dayton on Jan. 29, in addition to posting four assists and a pair of rebounds. Then, against Rhode Island on Feb. 2, Anderson had a team-high 17 points and three boards. He played 67 minutes without committing a turnover at his point guard position this past week. Anderson was also 12 of 24 (.500) from the field and eight of 20 (.400) from three-point range on the week.

Swimming and Diving

Junior Kate Allery earned Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week honors and freshman Dylan Smith was named A-10 Rookie of the Week for their performances against Fordham University, Feb. 2, at Joseph R. Rogers pool.

Allery set a school record in the one-meter dive event with a first place score of 287.75, and also claimed the three-meter dive (296.05) as Massachusetts defeated Fordham (184-112) on Saturday. The one-meter mark eclipsed the old UMass record of 265.65 in the one-meter and earns Allery her second Performer of the Week citation this season.

Smith claimed the 200-yard butterfly on Saturday versus Fordham with a time of 1:53.88, the second-fastest mark in the Atlantic 10 this season, as Massachusetts defeated the Rams, 187-110. He also finished first in the 1,000-yard freestyle (9:53.44) to earn his second Rookie of the Week citation of the season.

– Courtesy UMass Media Relations

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

Today!
Tuesday, February 5th
4:00-6:30 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Celebration of Arts on Campus
brought to you by: UMass Arts Council
Learn more about the Arts Council's grant funding opportunities. Talk with successful grant recipients. Meet Arts Council members and staff. Refreshments and raffle too!
Featuring performances by the UMass Theatre Guild Vocal Suspects Short Cuts Alive With Dance Student Valley Productions and more! Join us when you can!
For more information call us at 545-0202 or visit our website www.umass.edu/fac/artscouncil

SPORTS...LIKE REPORTS, ONLY DIFFERENT LETTERS.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-567-4233
schedule for Fri. 2/1 - Thurs 2/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Birthday Girl(R) 12:15 4:50 7:45 10:15*
I Am Sam (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25*
Kung Pow (PG13) 12:50 3:55 7:40 9:55*
The Count of Monte Cristo(PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:10*
The Mothman Prophecies (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*
A Walk To Remember (PG) 12:25 4:30 7:35 10:20*
Black Hawk Down (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25*
Snow Dogs (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
Orange County (PG13) 12:05 4:35 7:10 9:50
The Royal Tenenbaums (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
A Beautiful Mind (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:30 10:35
Lord Of the Rings (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
*=no passes/super-savers
Senior Movie 2/7/02 - I Am Sam - doors open at 11:45 a.m.
4 DAY ADVANCE DATE! SALES ARE FINAL • NO PASSES • NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes online at cinemark.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit

Interested in joining a sorority Rush Chi Omega Tues 8-10 pm wed 5-7 pm for a ride call Joana 549-9624 47 Olympia Dr.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Large 1 Bedroom Sublet during Spring Semester available immediately. Cliffside Apartments in Sunderland. Ht, HtW, electric included. Tons of extras. Sign now get free A/C. $740 a month. 413-665-7329.

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Eagle summit $500.00 253-9511

AUTO FOR SALE

1985 Cadillac Seville excellent condition 50,000 miles like new $4000 firm call 545-4013

1987 Volvo Wagon $1000.00 978-724-0061

'94 Dodge Spirit. Runs great. $2000 or B/O. Call 256-0677.

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

Laptop AST Ascentia 200MHZ. Very light. CD Rom, Floppy, bag, many exteras. Windows ME. $400. 413-478-9338 LV Msg.

Compaq Presario 5360 with 15" monitor and printer. Call for info. 546-3152. $500 or B.O.

MAC Powerbook 1400CS, 133mhz, 64 RAM, w/2 batteries plus charger. $200. 665-6833.

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseasareers.com

Office help positions. New Students Program looking for year-round office help. Preferably freshmen and sophomores. Please call 545-4940 for more information and application. Deadline is Feb. 8.

Put up posters. $12 per town/school, 10 hrs a week. References, car, reliable. 259-1227 mail box 1. email references to posters@artspromo.org

Stage hands wanted at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable schedule- week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1-5pm. Applications at Production Services RM 146 FAC

EMPLOYMENT

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for tour guides, student admissions reps and summer orientation counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 8.

FOR SALE

Penny a minute phone cards. Best deal for calling family and friends. Machine in U-Store.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David GoodRich (Pmulrey, Emekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_GoodRich@hotmail.com

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreak travel.com 1-800-678-6386

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sun-coastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

NEED A ROOMMATE? NEED TO FIND A CAR? PLACE AN AD TODAY!! 545-3500

We no longer run fyi's. Please send all briefs to Jessica May, 113 Campus center basement.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 · HSCN Bulletin Board
3 · CBS/3 Hartford
4 · FOX, 4 Boston
5 · ABC/40 Springfield
6 · FOX 52 Springfield
7 · HSCN Movie Channel
8 · UPN/30 Hartford
9 · HSCN Sec. Movie Channel
10 · NBC, 10 New Britain
11 · Fox/61 Hartford
12 · PBS, 24 Hartford
13 · NBC/22 Springfield
14 · International Channel
15 · UMASS (Academic Channel)
16 · WB, 59 New Haven
17 · ESPN
18 · ESPN2
19 · UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 · Weather Channel
21 · Gavel to Gavel
22 · C-Span
23 · CNN
24 · CNN Headline News
25 · Lifetime
26 · USA
27 · TBS
28 · TNT
29 · FX
30 · Sci-Fi
31 · Discovery
32 · Noggin
33 · Cartoon Network
34 · Nick at Nite
35 · TV Land
36 · Comedy Central
37 · BET
38 · Univision
39 · Bloomberg Financial Network
40 · College TV Network
41 · MTV
42 · MTV2
43 · VH1
44 · The Learning Channel

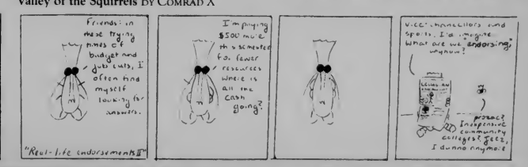
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Monty By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Noodle By Jacki

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"From the parquet floors to the fifty foot ceiling/I pull the heavy black curtain back, now revealing/The sun beneath the velvet, and like it was mine/No one elses, embracing the beams, yo, I felt it."

–Black Thought in "Glitches," Down To Earth Soundtrack

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Friday
HIGH: 25 LOW: 16	HIGH: 32 LOW: 8	HIGH: 65 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) – Someone is likely to know what's going on inside your head better than you do today. Let the neurosurgeon do her work, she knows how to fix your wiring.
PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) – Focus on presentability today. You'll want to adopt the right behavior and look your best – particularly during an evening gathering. Make sure your robes are pressed and brushed, and that your goat's head is the freshest available.
ARIES (March 21 – April 19) – Attendance is required in your second class. Make sure you wake up.
TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) – What begins as a slow process – one that you do not wholly enjoy – is soon to be something that you do with much more gusto. Wink, wink.
GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) – You'll be going from one thing to another all day long. Yeah, because that's a specific prediction. Man, I love my job.
CANCER (June 21 – July 22) – You can afford to be more sensitive today. And everyday for that matter. Seriously, you aren't known for your tact, are you?
LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) – Want to know a secret? Too bad. I didn't get to be a highly paid astrologist by giving away freebies.
VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) – A social gathering affords more than one opportunity to capitalize on someone else's oversight. Set your phasers on "insult."
LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) – Focus on any endeavor that allows you to put your best foot forward – rumba, baby, rumba.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) – You might want to double-check your figures today. You'll notice that you forgot to carry the one.
SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) – You'll be forced to crush someone with your poisoned tail after they stupidly make fun of "the new scaly kid."
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) – Don't let someone else's lack of enthusiasm bring you down today. They just suck.

I THINK FROSH SHOULD BE IN THE THE PAPER EVERY DAY!

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Cuban Black Bean Soup

Macaroni & Cheese

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

Vegetable Egg Rolls (vegetarian) (W Basics)

DINNER

Cuban Black Bean Soup

Seasoned Roast Pork

Tomato Basil Cod

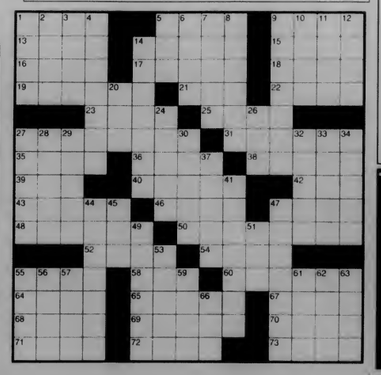
Cheese Lasagna (W Basics) (vegetarian)

Black Bean Tofu Steak (vegan)

Today's Staff

Eric Soderstrom
Scott Eldridge II
Andy Vogt
Mike Kulak
Frank DiMeglio
Erika Earl

Put your ad here, and I'll be your very best friend!



ACROSS
1 Be too fond of
5 Publish
9 Clublike weapon
13 Skating jump
14 Rodeo noose
15 Frankenstein's servant
16 Just
17 Complete
18 Singer Diamond
19 Whine
21 Overactor
22 Small land mass
23 Baldwin of "The Shadow"
25 Lady's honorific
27 Pizza, e.g.
31 Grouchy
35 Horse's gait
36 Luau strings
38 Nurse Barton
39 Gold, to Pedro
40 City near Phoenix
42 Zippy the Pinhead's word
43 Milker's perch
46 Laundry need
47 Satellite
48 Smoothed
50 Ballparks
52 Fabric measure
54 Entreats
55 Takes vows
58 Years on end
60 Oxlied
64 MDs' employers
65 Dumbfounded
67 Went by car
68 Staffer
69 Canter
70 Director Bunuel
71 "Rad" locale
72 Musical chairs goal
73 Himalayan sighting

DOWN
1 Pond makers
2 Wagon pullers
3 Actress Hatcher
4 Raise
5 Indy area
6 Expletive
7 Water vapor
8 Runway surface
9 Token
10 Census data
11 Mattress part
12 — Stanley Gardner
14 Eliminate
20 Pixie
24 Steel mill fuels
26 Equator segment
27 Tooth cleaner
28 Ventricle neighbor
29 Serving utensil
30 Floor models
32 Marshy inlet
33 Sweeper
34 Bored responses
37 Run-ins
41 Military trim
44 Homer spic
45 Meadow
47 Tight
49 Imagines
51 "Gidget" actress
53 Herd orphan
55 "Say —?"
56 Kuwaiti leader
57 Non-flying bird
59 Zilch
61 Playboy
62 Amend
63 Bandleader Arnaz
66 L.A. hours

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

O	L	L	A		F	R	A	U		O	S	A	K	A
C	A	A	N		L	O	I	N		R	A	D	A	R
T	U	R	N	T	A	B	L	E		C	L	A	N	K
E	G	G		E	V	E	S		S	H	A	M	E
T	H	E	R	M	O	S		S	P	A	M
			J	A	P		B	U	R	R	I	T	O
T	A	N	G	O		J	A	D	E	D		R	I	D
A	G	E	E		D	E	N	S	E		R	I	L	L
J	O	B		M	O	L	D	Y		L	A	P	S	E
	G	R	E	A	T	L	Y		K	A	Y
		N	E	T	S		A	N	G	E	L	I	C
M	O	S	S	Y		E	P	E	E		O	B	I
K	A	P	U	T		U	P	P	E	R	M	O	S	T
E	N	T	E	R		S	I	L	L		I	S	E	E
G	E	S	S	O		A	C	E	S		T	E	N	D

12-26-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.05.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Kenny to leave University

Women's volleyball coach resigns post

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Bonnie Kenny, Head Coach of the Massachusetts women's volleyball team, is leaving UMass for the University of Delaware.

Although not yet publicly announced, Athletic Director Bob Marcum confirmed yesterday that he'd received Kenny's letter of resignation.

"In her letter of resignation, she said that she'd be the new head volleyball coach at Delaware," Marcum said. The resignation is effective immediately.

For its part, Delaware would only vaguely confirm her hiring.

"We are having a press conference on Thursday to announce who we've hired," Scott Selheimer, Delaware's Sports Information Director, said guardedly. "We'll be announcing that we've hired her."

Last Monday, Kenny met with her team to announce her resignation. Players met with Marcum Friday to express concern that the program would be damaged by Kenny's resignation or at least slowed in its growth.

"There was some fear that the program would no longer be maintained at a certain level," Marcum said.

Those fears are unfounded though, with Marcum saying that, until he heard otherwise about budget cuts, the volleyball team would continue on the path that it had been traveling.

"We'll have to start a search immediately," Marcum said. As for team members' concern that Kenny would take her three new recruits – all of whom are highly heralded – Marcum would not speculate. "Anytime you have a change in coach, the new coach is going to have the opportunity to influence incoming recruits to stay."

Players also expressed interest in meeting candidates for the head-coaching job, something Marcum said he'd be willing to consider.

Nobody could confirm rumors that Assistant Coach Cindy Gregory would follow Kenny to Delaware. Marcum and Selheimer both said that they hadn't heard. Players said that Gregory confirmed at a meeting that she would stay on until the end of the semester before leaving for the Fightin' Blue Hens.

Kenny's three heralded recruits – Albuquerque's "Niecy" Taylor, Houston's Rachel Adomat, and Pennsylvania's Megan McGrath – were still coming to UMass as of press time.

According to Adomat, Kenny called her last week. She told The Collegian that Kenny apologized to her, explaining why she left. She wouldn't say what those reasons were though, saying only that she didn't "want to get into it."

What Adomat would say is that Kenny did not try to recruit her to Delaware.

"I'm a little upset, but I am still planning on coming up [to play at UMass]," Adomat said. McGrath and Taylor could not be reached for comment.

Adomat, McGrath and Taylor are expected to help a team that finished last season with a strong 15-11 record.

Jim Pignatiello contributed to this story.

Bonnie Kenny

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Bonnie Kenny will reportedly be coaching at Delaware next season.

The Pats just didn't have a chance

And now they are the Champs

DR. DAVID ROSE

I am going to start this column with three words that pain me: I was wrong (damn, the room's spinning). I should never admit that again). I thought that even though the Patriots would give St. Louis a strong showing, the Rams' depth would come back to haunt them at the end. However, it came down to the coaches for this game, and that is where the Patriots gained the ultimate advantage.

Rams Head Coach Mike Martz took a woodshed beating by Patriots Head Coach Bill Belichick on game planning. The only argument I can think of to what Belichick did to Martz on Sunday is the Bud Light commercial in which the minifridge beats the living crap out of the other robot with its hammer while the other robot is reaching for the beer.

Belichick's scheme was a thing of genius: taking control of the Rams' offense for most of the first 40 minutes of action. His defense was as aggressive as I have ever seen a defense play this group of Rams. He did it by compiling a defense that could get to Kurt Warner using just the front four. Then, every once in a while, he would come with an unexpected blitz from a line backer. The results were three turnovers and 17 points off of those turnovers.

While Tom Brady was named the game's Most Valuable Player, the best player on the field might have been Ty Law. The Pats cornerback was a wrecking crew against the Rams wide-outs, making eight tackles and returning an interception for a touchdown. Plus, he held down both Isaac Bruce and Torry Holt for most of the game, particularly Holt, limiting him to just five catches for 49 yards. It was Belichick's game plan that called for the Pats to bust the Rams' receivers in the mouth at every chance they had.

Most, with many people (including myself) saying the Pats should not chance a turnover with just over a minute left and no timeouts left and play for the first overtime in Super Bowl history, the supposedly conservative Belichick went for the jugular. Knowing that if he got the ball inside the Rams' 40-yard line, he had Mr. Automatic, Adam Vinatieri, waiting in the wings. That is why I am writing about it and not on the sidelines actually deciding things.

On the other hand, Martz might need to be put in a straight jacket for his game plan to use less and less of Marshall Faulk. When the Rams fell down by a score of 14-3 at the half, it looked like they panicked. Considering they had not trailed by more than eight points all season, it could be understandable. What is not understandable is the fact that Martz's game plan proceeded to do the one thing that opposing defenses only dream about doing: he took Faulk out of the game.

When Faulk has as many carries as the Rams' point total, normally the outcome is at least 28 points for St. Louis and 28 carries for Faulk. When the Rams' point total is 17 and Faulk has the same amount of carries, then you have a problem. Seventeen carries are not even close to enough for quite possibly the greatest offensive player the NFL has ever seen. Giving Faulk only 17 carries in a Super Bowl is like the Pope dragging down Michelangelo off of his scaffold after he has completed painting 3/4 of the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel and telling him, "You've done a great job, but I am gonna

Turn to PATS, page 9

Troy Brown

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Not as big as the Patriots' Super Bowl win, this hat was found in Southwest Sunday night.

Problems on stripe continue

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

AMHERST – Even though basketball is a team sport, at times it can be just one player that makes the difference between a win and a loss.

That was the case last Saturday at the William D. Mullins Center, when Amy Waugh looked like a woman among girls despite her 5-foot-6-inch stature, scoring a career-high 32 points on 9-of-14 shooting (6-for-9 from three-point range) and leading Xavier to a 68-55 victory over the Massachusetts women's basketball team.

Waugh's 32 points were almost half of her squad's total, and were 19 more than anybody else on the court garnered for either team; as Ebony Pegues was a distant second for UMass with 13.

"She had a game," said Minutewoman Head Coach Joanie O'Brien about Waugh, after watching her team fall to 6-15 (4-6 Atlantic 10) on the year. "She is one of the best guards in the league, and you know she is going to have free reign. We gave her open shots in the first half and let her get into the flow."

Xavier	68
UMass	55

As impressive as she was from the field, Waugh also shined at the charity stripe, improving her 85 percent free throw shooting with an 8-for-8 performance. The junior from Fort Wayne, Ind. has missed only 12 free throws all season, while converting on 77.

However, despite Waugh's performance, UMass would have had a decent chance for victory if not for its 8-for-22 showing from the line and 3-for-14 output from behind the arc.

"You can't miss that many free throws and uncontested layups and expect to win," O'Brien said. "It is the same old story.

"That's the difference," the eleventh year coach added. "They hit their open shots and we didn't."

The game became out of reach for the Maroon and White midway through the second frame, when Xavier extended a 10-point halftime lead to 21 behind five consecutive Waugh points and an Aida Sarajlija (12 points on the day) three-point play.

From there, the Minutewomen went on an 8-0 run of their own to close the gap to 13, but Waugh drilled a long three with 8:14 left to end the run any realistic chance of a UMass win.

In the final minutes of the contest the Maroon and White hustled valiantly to get back in the game, but despite a ferocious full court press, never got it under 10 the rest of the way.

"If we played the first 30 minutes like we played the last 10 then maybe we would never have been down by 20," O'Brien said. "We have some cats feeling sorry for themselves out there."

In the first half, the Minutewomen got out to a good start when Siiri Liivandi drilled a 12-footer from the baseline on her team's first possession, but Xavier promptly ripped off nine straight points to gain a lead they would never relinquish.

Of course, Waugh was the instigator of that run, totaling nine of her team's first 12 points off two threes and three free throws. Overall, she would go into the locker room with 15 points, a total only six less than the entire UMass team.

For the Maroon and White, Pegues led the team with 13 points (all in the second half) while Katie Nelson contributed a solid 12. However, leading scorer Jennifer Butler was held to seven points on 1-of-7 shooting, and Paige Harris shot an abysmal 0-for-5 (all three-point attempts).

Besides Waugh, the Musketeers also got significant contributions from Shavon Bell (10 points) and Sarajlija, while Ashleigh Cuncic totaled six points in only nine minutes of action. With the win, Xavier improved to 8-14 (3-7 A-10) on the season, which is still a far cry from last year's squad that upset Tennessee on its way to the Elite Eight.

GERALD GAYLEGIAN

Amber Sneed shoots a free throw.

Diary of a madman

For the last few years, I have watched the Super Bowl at an annual party thrown by one of my friends from back home. Always a good time with friendly wagering, funny people, and friends from the Boston area that I don't get to see as much. Would this get together change because of the home team's involvement? I decided to keep a diary of the events.

8:30 a.m. – I can't sleep any longer. My head is aching in anticipation and my body refuses to stay in bed any longer.

I spend the rest of the morning feeling like a complete traitor for choosing the Rams in the picks portion of the Sports section in Friday's paper. It is an impossible scenario.

JIM PIGNATIELLO

Unbiased, levelheaded sportswriter and super fan just don't mix. I should have admitted my bias and picked the Pats.

3:30 p.m. – I arrive at my friend's place. One of the first there. I pick out the seat with the best view in his living room and mark my territory with my reporter's notebook.

4:00 p.m. – The handheld version of whack-a-mole is introduced to me. The house record is 39 "whacks." Hmmm.

4:06 p.m. – Ladies and gentlemen, we have a new record, 40 "whacks." I don't think it will hold up, though, because this crowd is the type to play the game for as long as it takes to set a new record.

4:30 p.m. – The rest of the guests arrive, filling in the seats around the living room, surely jealous of my luxurious digs.

4:45 p.m. – I can't help but get a

Turn to DIARY, page 9

JOHN AND JOEL ARTS PAGE 5

ED/OP TAKES A LOOK AT BUDGET CUTS ON PAGE 4.

SPORTS P

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
WEDNESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY FIVE ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.06.02

Police responsible for riot, says SGA's Speaker Saunders

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

A recommendation for a five percent administrative pay-cut will be just one motion up for vote in the Student Government Association's Senate, in an ongoing effort to deal with the recent 14 million dollar budget cut.

The motion, which has been under the direction and influences of Speaker Aaron Saunders and Student Trustee Jon Laubinger requests that the University of Massachusetts-Amherst cut the salaries of non-unit employee's, the President and his staff. The motion also urges employees of the University to forego their scheduled merit raises for the coming fiscal year.

"We're recommending that the administration take a pay cut because they're the only group not directly being affected by the budget cuts," Saunders said. "People are being laid off, students are being asked to pay a $500 increase in tuition, and they're sitting in Whitmore, not being affected."

Senators will also be requesting that if the University administration does not take a pay-cut, that the University's Board of Trustees impose a salary cut upon them. The motion further requests that all funds raised from non-unit employee salary cuts be used towards academic departments for undergraduate students.

"Everyone needs to take their fair share in the budget cuts," Saunders said. "The University needs to be creative in how they distribute these budget cuts on campus. They can't just target a few departments."

Aside from asking the administration to take a pay cut, the Senate will also be reviewing a motion requesting that the Escort Service still be pervaded to students on campus. The Escort Service will be under the UMass transit system as of late March.

"We'll be presenting a motion stating that we need to provide safety for students, and we therefore can't afford to lose the University Escort Service," Senator Blake Kleppe said. "We want to make a statement as a Senate that we won't let this happen."

Aside from University budget cuts, the Senate will also be discussing this past Sunday night's Southwest riots. Issues surrounding police and University administrative involvement will be under the discussion of the Senate as well.

"Sunday night's celebrations in Southwest went well until 35 police officers decided to line up in riot gear in front of the Berkshire dinning hall," Saunders said. "It was like the whole crowd stopped cheering for a second, and that's when things went wrong."

Saunders further stated that he felt that the administration handled the situation poorly by explaining that he felt the UMass police should be held responsible for damages done.

"People were more safe without the police there. There were three small fires going in Southwest, and one person was injured after he set a tree and himself on fire," Saunders said. "I'm not saying that the police should not have been present, but 35 cops in riot gear was completely unnecessary."

Aside from being dissatisfied with the administration, Saunders explained that he hopes any student's assaulted by a police officer during Sunday nights events writes a formal complaint to the administration.

Senators are also gearing up for this Thursday night's open forum with state Representative Ellen Story (D-Amherst) and members of the administration and student body. The forum begins at 6 p.m. and goes until 8 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center.

"I'm very excited for the forum because I want the opportunity to question the administration about what's going on," Kleppe said.

Saunders agreed by explaining that he hopes students let the administration know that they are interested in what is going on with the University.

"The administration has a tendency to push things over to students because they don't think they care," Saunders said. "This gives students the chance to demand answers and let the administration know that they won't be pushed aside."

Tonight's Senate meeting will be held at 7 p.m. in room 168C of the Campus Center.

TIM WAGNER/THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN

Alive With Dance

"To be ..." was performed in the Student Union Ballroom to help promote the UMass Arts Council

TIM WAGNER/THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN

Yield!

These signs offer a helpful warning despite the non-icy appearance

Hillel hosts Arab relations talk

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Professor Emeritus Haim Gunner will speak at 7:00 tonight at Hillel House about recent Arab-Israeli relations, and the potential for peace.

Gunner, a retired Professor of Environmental Microbiology, will deliver a lecture titled, "Current Events and Options For Israel." In his lecture, he will discuss the importance of recent developments in the Middle East, and his hope that they could lead to greater recognition of the state of Israel.

Gunner told The Collegian that he plans to concentrate on "the Arab-Jewish relationship, and the history that drives it."

"I'll be speaking about the patterns that pre-date today," Gunner said, "and how they changed fundamentally with the Oslo Agreement."

The secretly negotiated Oslo Accords of 1993 allowed for a gradual phasing of land and power from Israel to the Palestinians, and the signing of the Accords is widely seen as one of the key turning points in Arab-Israeli relations.

"[The Accords] were the first time in 100 years that an Arab constituency officially recognized Zionism," Gunner said. "Previous to that, the official policy was 'no recognition, no peace, no negotiations.' It took 100 years to break out of that refusal.

"Oslo was a really critical point," he continued. "We have to build on that."

The Oslo Accords, Gunner maintains, has already allowed for many advances in the peace process.

"Oslo made it possible for Jordan to sign a peace treaty," Gunner said. "It also allowed for various emirates, as well as Tunisia and Morocco, to open up representation to Israel."

Gunner said that the attacks of Sept. 11 will also figure into his lecture.

"After Sept. 11, there are basically only two sides to the issue of terrorism," he said. "There are terrorists, and those who are opposed to terrorism. Palestinians can no longer claim that terrorism is their way of struggling for liberation."

Ultimately, Gunner feels that lasting peace in the Middle East will come as a result of "mutual recognition and on-going negotiations," and the cooperation of the PLO.

"Either Yasir Arafat or someone who has inherited his mantle will have to commit," he said. "That's the only way."

Gunner has spent much of his life in Israel, where he served as Coordinator of Agricultural Research for the Israeli Research Council. He was also a founding member of Kibbutz Sasa, located on the Lebanese Frontier, and participated in the establishment of the Arid Zone Research Center in Beersheba.

Now retired from his studies at UMass, Gunner runs Ecorganics, an ecosystem management company located in Amherst. He is a Professor Emeritus of Plant and Soil Sciences.

Michigan wins budget cut battle

By Louie Meitlish
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR, Mich. – The University of Michigan agreed not to raise tuition more than 8.5 percent next year after a compromise was reached late last week between the heads of the state's 15 public universities, Gov. John Engler and legislative leaders. In exchange for keeping tuition increases relatively low, the colleges, including the University of Michigan, will not see any cut in state funding for the coming fiscal year.

Spokeswoman Julie Peterson said the University was pleased with the agreement and recognized the "need for restraint."

With state revenue projections showing the state in a relatively steep fiscal hole, many lawmakers began predicting late last year that many programs would face cuts in the coming fiscal year.

But Central Michigan University's announcement late last year threatening a 28 percent tuition increase seemed to be a warning signal, indicating that many state universities might be on the verge of raising tuition at record increases.

Following that announcement, lawmakers rushed to prevent such events from occurring.

But funding is not officially contingent on universities' keeping tuition low. Instead, it is more of an informal agreement.

"We're hopeful that the Presidents Council (of the State Universities of Michigan) which was part of this agreement, will stand by it," said Engler spokesman Matt Resch.

But Sen. Alma Wheeler Smith (D-Salem Twp.), ranking Democrat on the Senate Appropriations Committee and a member of the committee's subcommittee on higher education, cautioned, "if we have consecutive years of no increases and tuition held at a minimum, the institutions will be faced with the responsibility of cutting academic programs or cutting faculty and staff."

Nevertheless, Smith said, "My understanding is that the budget will be advanced as quickly as possible so nobody can change their minds."

Rep. Chris Kolb (D-Ann Arbor), a member of the House Appropriations subcommittee on higher education, said the agreement had a "better than average" chance of sailing through the House of Representatives, which takes up the appropriations bill after its approval by the Senate.

Assuming the bill is approved as quickly as Kolb and Smith predict, it will be in stark contrast to last year's process, which took about five months to complete following the state budget director's presentation to the Legislature last February.

The appropriations bill was signed by Engler after several months of disagreements between the House and Senate.

But Rep. Charlie LaSata (R-St. Joseph) said he would vote against the agreement in its current form. LaSata said he was opposed to higher education being given higher priority than other state-funded programs and also questioned whether voluntary restraint language would work.

"I'm not convinced that tuition restraint language will be effective. We had tuition restraint language in the budget two years ago and two schools raised their levels above that level," he said.

Smith, however, cautioned that 0 percent increases in funding may not always be manageable by the universities.

State Budget Director Don Gilmer's formal presentation of the governor's budget proposal is scheduled for Thursday before a joint session of the House and Senate appropriations committees.

DIVERSITY CALENDAR

PERFORMANCES

HAMPSHIRE – Pianist Sarah Cahill will play music by Pauline Oliveros and other women composers at 7:00 p.m. in the Recital Hall of Hampshire College's Music and Dance Building on Friday, Feb. 8. This event is free.

UMASS – Alberto "Beto" Araiza's one-man show, On the Difficulty of Sustaining Compassion for Chrome Magnum Man, will be presented at the East Street Studio on Friday, Feb. 8 and Saturday, Feb. 9 at 8:00 p.m. The play, set in Compton, Los Angeles, deals with the relationship between two Hispanic brothers. The East Street Studio is located at 47 East Street, Hadley. Tickets are $15 for the general public, $8 for low-income patrons and seniors, and $5 for students. Call 545-2511 for reservations.

FILMS

UMASS – The Mad Songs of Fernanda Navarin, a film about a Mexican-American woman searching frantically for her children, will be broadcast in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 7:30 p.m. This event, part of the 9th Annual Multicultural Film Festival, is free. John Giannito, the film's director, will be on hand to discuss it.

UMASS – SASA will present the film Kabhi Kushi Kabhie Gham in the Commonwealth Room on Thursday, Feb. 7 at 7:00 p.m. Donations of money or non-perishable food items for an upcoming charity drive will be appreciated.

UMASS – The Community Development and Health Issues Committee will present a film series on the week of Monday, Feb. 11. On Monday, at 7:00 p.m. in Dwight Basement, the film Positive: A Journey Through AIDS will be shown. On Tuesday, Feb. 12, at 7:00 p.m., the film Sex Matters will be shown in Greenough Basement. On Wednesday, Feb. 13, at 7:00 p.m., the film, Not Me: Innocence in a Time of AIDS, will be shown in Prince/Crampton Lounge.

AMHERST – Steven Soderbergh's film Traffic will be broadcast on Monday, Feb. 11 at 7:00 p.m. in Amherst College's Stirn Auditorium. This event, part of the Mexican-American Film Series, is free.

UMASS – The German film Alles Wird Gut [Everything Will Be Fine] will be broadcast at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 13 in room 227 of Herter Hall. The film, a lesbian romantic comedy, is being screened as part of the 9th Annual Multicultural Film Festival. Director and co-screenwriter Fatima El-Tayeb will be present to discuss the film.

PARTIES/DANCES

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Mount Holyoke College Chinese Student Association will be holding an authentic celebration in honor of Chinese New Year on Saturday, Feb. 9 at 7:30 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium. This event will be followed by a DJ dance party in Blanchard Campus Center from 10:00 p.m. to 2:00 a.m. Admission is $5.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Association for Pan-African Unity will be sponsoring a Black History Month Party on Saturday, Feb. 9 at Mount Holyoke's Betty Shabazz Cultural House from 11:00 p.m. to 4:00 a.m. Admission will be charged at the door.

UMASS – Israeli Dancing will be held at Hillel House on Sunday, Feb. 10 at 7:00 p.m. Dancers with all levels of experience are encouraged to attend.

LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS

HAMPSHIRE – A Report Back on the World Conference Against Racism NGO Forum will be held in Franklin Patterson Hall's East Lecture Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 7:00 p.m. Social justice activists from around the U.S. will discuss the events of the forum, and the issues that arose. The speakers include Arnoldo Garcia, director of WRAR project of the National Network for Immigrant and Refugee Rights- [Oakland, California] and Aijen Poo of the Committee Against Anti-Asian Violence.

UMASS – University of Massachusetts Professor Emeritus Haim Gunner will deliver a lecture, "Current Events and Options for Israel," on Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 7:30 p.m. in Hillel House.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Barry Werth, author of "Scarlet Professor: Newton Arvin, A Literary Life Shattered By Scandal," a book about the 1960 Smith College homosexuality "scandal," will discuss his work in the New York Room of Mary Woolley Hall on Thursday, Feb. 7 at 4:00 p.m.

SMITH – Stanford University Professor Linda Poolaw and Rayna Green, Director of the American Indian Program, will present a lecture, "War Bonnets, Tin Lizzies, and Patent Leather Pumps: Native American Photography in Transition" in room 201 of Smith College's Seelye Hall on Thursday, Feb. 7 at 4:30 p.m. Poolaw will discuss her project of reprinting her father's negatives of Native Americans and returning the images to the communities where they originated. Green will address the return of cultural resources to communities denied their own heritage.

AMHERST – Actor Edward James Olmos, star of the film Stand and Deliver, will deliver a lecture, "We're All in the Same Gang," on Thursday, Feb. 7 in Amherst College's Johnson Chapel at 7:30 p.m. This special event is scheduled for the college's annual celebration of the life of Martin Luther King, Jr.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Elizabeth Pallitto will deliver a lecture, "Laura's Laurels: Platonism and Petrarchism in the Work of Tullia d'Aragona," on Thursday, Feb. 7 at 7:30 p.m. in the Five College Women's Studies Research Center. The lecturer will discuss the work of the 16th-Century Italian poet Aragona, whose project eventually entered into the "woman question." The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley, on the Mount Holyoke campus.

HAMPSHIRE – Professor Marshal Segall, Exporter of the Exhibit on the Illusion of Biological Races currently on display at Hampshire College, will deliver a gallery talk on Thursday, Feb. 7 at 7:30 p.m. in the West Lecture Hall of Hampshire's Franklin Patterson Hall. Additional comments will be provided by Hampshire Professors Alan Goodman and Flavio Risech-Ozeguera.

UMASS – UMass English Professor John Wideman will read from his work Hoop Roots on Thursday, Feb. 7 at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. A reception will follow the reading. This event, part of the Visiting Writers Series, is sponsored by the MFA Program in English.

AMHERST – James Oles, independent curator at Wellesley College, will deliver a lecture, "From Picadilly to Cuernavaca: A Traveler's Guide to Mexican Popular Arts" in Amherst College's Stirn Auditorium on Friday, Feb. 8, at 4:30 p.m. A reception will follow. See "EXHIBITIONS" for more information.

UMASS – Rabbi Elyse Wynick of KOACH will deliver a lecture, "The Jewish Conservative Movement: A Transformative Experience" on Friday, Feb. 8 at 8:00 p.m. in Hillel House.

HAMPSHIRE – A symposium, "Women in Experimental Music," featuring Pauline Oliveros, Sarah Cahill, Kim Gordon, will be held in the recital hall of Hampshire College's Music and Dance Building on Friday, Feb. 8 at 8:30 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Kum Kum Bhavnani will deliver a lecture, "Feminism in the Third World? Some Reflections," on Monday, Feb. 11, at 4:30 p.m. in the Five College Women's Studies Research Center. Bhavnani's lecture will center on contemporary arguments about the meaning of development, feminism, and culture, with particular reference to the Third World. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley, on the Mount Holyoke campus.

SMITH – University of Hawaii Professor George J. Tanabe, Jr. will deliver a lecture, "Lucky Charms: Eliminating Change in Japanese Religions" on Monday, Feb. 11 at 4:30 p.m. in room 201 of Seelye Hall.

SMITH – A panel on "The Japanese-American Buddhist Experience," featuring presentations on "Buddhism in Hawaii" by George Tanabe, "Buddhism in the Internment Camps" by Duncan Williams, and "The Prospects of Pure Land Buddhism" by Taitetsu Unno, will be held in the lower level of the Smith College Club on Tuesday, Feb. 12, at 7:00 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Erica Harth will discuss her book, "Last Witnesses: Reflections on the Wartime Internment of Japanese Americans," in Odyssey Bookshop on Wednesday, Feb. 13 at 7:00 p.m. The Bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

EXHIBITIONS

AMHERST – Casa Mañana: The Morrow Collection of Mexican Popular Arts, will be on display in the Fairchild Gallery of Amherst College's Mead Art Museum from Feb. 8 to Apr. 21. The Morrow Collection is one of the most important collections of Mexican decorative arts in the United States. Museum hours are Tuesday through Sunday from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Thursdays 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., closed Mondays and holidays. See "LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS" for information about a related lecture on Friday, Feb. 8.

Patriots' Super Bowl win sparks bonfire at UNH

By Lisa Arsenault & Jessica York
The New Hampshire (U. New Hampshire)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.H. – Flames about 20 feet high lashed into the cold night air as couches, chairs and tables were burned in a roaring bonfire in the middle of Madbury Road Sunday night. The crowd chanted "U.S.A.," celebrating their sense of spirit and paying homage to the Patriots for winning the Super Bowl.

Some enthusiastic fans even added their clothes to the blaze.

"I knew it was gonna be crazy. We came straight up here because we knew everyone would be celebrating," said University of New Hampshire senior Anne Kelly, who lives in the Greens apartment complex on Madbury Road directly across from where the bonfire was started. "It was pretty crazy. I was excited."

Durham Deputy Police Chief Rene Kelley estimated that 2,000 people gathered on Madbury Road for the celebration. According to Kelley, of the 2,000 people and other fires reported on Young Drive, only two arrests were made.

Greater concern was expressed for the throwing of illegal fireworks into the fire, the one fan who precariously shimmied high to the top of a nearby tree at the urgings of the crowd, and how these events may affect Spring Fling weekend.

The scene was reminiscent of the rowdy 1999 gathering that followed the UNH hockey team's big win in the America East finals. As for whether or not this will go down in history as another riot or not, Greek Coordinator Steve Pappajohn said at the scene, "Well, I would call it a celebration riot. There was some damage; a street sign was ripped down. I guess all we hope for is that nobody gets hurt."

Both Durham and University Police responded immediately, videotaping the scene and keeping it all under control. The Durham Fire Department was also on hand.

Assistant Fire Chief Michael Blake said the crowd was very well behaved for the most part. According to Blake, the fire department "let the kids celebrate" and let the fire burn itself out.

"The theme was just to celebrate something good that happened in the general area – a way to release tension," said Blake. "If one kid takes his shirt off and runs down the street it would give the impression of general craziness."

University officials are treating the celebrations very seriously though.

Leila Moore, who was called into campus from her home in Somersworth in order to have a University authority present, said, "We can presume that alcohol was associated with this and that people would call this fun."

"It's tough on the people," said Moore. "There were some of them just buck naked. I guess they're going to be sorry when they discover that we can identify more than their shining faces."

According to Moore, the University is now involved in discussions about the event and the arrests that were made. Members of her staff review the videotapes taken to determine what repercussions will follow for students.

"[We] tape the incident to see if anyone was instigating the activity and who were responsible for either inciting the crowd to continue rolling and doing really stupid things – endangering their own lives," said Moore.

Aside from the consequences for individuals that may come of the Super Bowl bonfire celebration, the event could have wider implications for the university. The incident comes "on the heels" of the University's Spring Fling Weekend proposal. The president's staff will be discussing the proposal in a week, said Moore. Due to problems last year, which will possibly be compounded by this year's Sunday's Super Bowl celebration, the University had placed a moratorium on Spring Fling.

"Dr. Leitzel and I have not discussed the proposal for a different spring event and how it is affected by the Sunday celebration," said Moore.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
JoleneRousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club

UltimateFitness THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER

Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9

For more information call 253-7571

- Full Aerobics Programs including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more
- Nutritonal Consultation
- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & Supplements
- Fitness Testing & Programming

Semester Special $160

- Stairmasters
- Precor Treadmills
- Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
- Lifecycle Upright Bikes
- Precor Crosstrainers
- Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
- Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"

THE
BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(32 years of service—and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

EARN 1–2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE
REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2002 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Room 163C of the Campus Center for all meetings •Feb. 4 (Mon) •Feb. 5 (Tues) •Feb. 6 (Wed)
*Assignment notification ONLY Thurs, Feb 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse.
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Brown University's "Africa House" celebrates it's nine year anniversary

By Brian Baskin
Brown Daily Herald (Brown U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVIDENCE, R.I. – One of Brown University's largest program houses for nine years running, Harambee House has become a permanent fixture next to the Ratty in Patriot's Court. But when the Organization of United African Peoples first proposed the idea in early 1993 for an "Africa House" dedicated to students interested in African studies, it sparked a heated debate about the nature of race relations at Brown.

Ellen Hunter presented her study of Harambee House's founding as a moderated discussion to a small group in the House's lounge Monday night.

Hunter collected news articles, columns and editorials from The Herald for her fall 2001 seminar, UC110, The Public Side of the University. Hunter discovered a significant but often overlooked conflict involving racism and the founding of the house, she said.

The house's charter stipulated that the house would be open to those "who identify themselves as having African roots, who speak an African language, who concentrate in Afro-American Studies or who have a strong desire to learn about black culture." This caused many students to interpret the program house as restricting membership to African-Americans, Hunter said.

Those who ascribed to this interpretation misunderstood the philosophy behind the house, which does not limit membership to any one race, she said.

OUAP members also found some students from within the Third World community who opposed the plan. These students worried that the house would decrease the importance of the Third World Center, Hunter said.

Hunter said the "Africa House controversy," as it was known at the time, interested her because while race issues still play out on campus, the existence of Harambee House seemed like a strange point to debate.

"It's so fascinating to me," Hunter said. "Now nobody would dare say get rid of Harambee."

Dionne Boyd said that while she agreed nobody would publicly deny Harambee House's right to exist today, many students are still uncomfortable with the idea of what is widely perceived as an exclusively African-American house, despite the diverse backgrounds of its members.

"Some people wonder why I came to Brown University and live in a black house," Boyd said.

A common argument made against Harambee House in 1993 was that it would allow for self-segregation, denying all students the benefit of a diverse student body.

"One of the greatest educational opportunities a Brown student has will be eliminated," P.E. Brill, a letter writer, wrote in a 1993 open letter published in The Herald and addressed to then-President Vartan Gregorian. "A visible center of the black community at Brown will serve to isolate black students from the community at large."

Boyd said Brill's argument would make sense to her if Brown were an integrated community to begin with. Pointing to tables segregated by race in the Ratty and many events attended predoninantly by students of one race or another, Boyd said most students do not take the opportunity to learn about students of different backgrounds.

Though she said she understands where Brill and other critics of Harambee House were coming from in their desire for mutual education, Boyd questioned how such ideas were implemented and whose interests were being considered. She said she was unsure if interaction between whites and blacks for the purpose of cultural education was mutually beneficial, because true intellectual growth requires everyone to step out of their comfort zones.

Miranda Craigwell spoke about a recent encounter with a white friend, who expressed his discomfort with joining her at an all-black table in the Ratty. The emotions her friend expressed were in many ways similar to what she felt entering situations where she was the only African-American, Craigwell said.

Boyd said that since blacks were so outnumbered within the student body, opportunities for cultural education invariably involved one or two blacks in a predominantly white environment. As one of two blacks in her freshman unit, Boyd said she constantly felt she was "on display."

Living in Harambee House, Boyd said she is now able to make a conscious choice to step out of her comfort zone, rather than being forced into serving as an example for the University.

"I didn't want to feel that way anymore," Boyd said. "I was looking for something a little.

U. Houston loses retaliation lawsuit

By Ken Fountain
The Daily Cougar (U. Houston)

(U-WIRE) HOUSTON – In a Monday verdict whose rapid speed stunned even the attorneys involved, a jury ruled after less than an hour of deliberation that the University of Houston and the UH System retaliated against former assistant general counsel Susan Septimus and forced her to resign for making complaints against her then-boss, UH General Counsel Dennis Duffy.

The four-woman, three-man jury awarded Septimus a total of $296,000 in past and future economic damages and $100,000 in compensatory damages (for mental anguish and other injuries).

While the compensatory and "backend" economic damages (those Septimus has suffered to date in lost wages and benefits) are fixed, U.S. District Judge Vanessa Gilmore has discretion to change the "front-end" damages, those Septimus may suffer in the future.

"I'm so gratified by the decision," Septimus said in brief remarks to reporters after the verdict. She referred other questions to her lead attorney, Andrew Golub.

"We're absolutely thrilled (with the verdict). The jury confirmed what we've been saying for four years," Golub said.

"The University of Houston has never been willing to take responsibility for what it did. Maybe they will pay better attention next time," he said.

In a written statement, the University said it was reviewing the jury's findings.

"It's important to note that prior to the start of the trial, (Gilmore) granted summary judgment in favor of the University regarding claims by Septimus of gender discrimination, sexual harassment and hostile work environment involving the University's Office of General Counsel," the statement said.

Citing the fact that the case is still ongoing (that is, it can be appealed), the University declined further comment.

Following Monday morning's closing arguments, Gilmore gave the jurors her instructions as to the questions of law they were to decide.

As in all civil lawsuits, Septimus as plaintiff had to make the case that the "preponderance of the evidence" supported her claims that the University retaliated against her for filing her charges against Duffy, and that it later made her working conditions so intolerable that she was forced to quit.

Expecting the jurors to take a lunch break before beginning deliberations, Gilmore asked them to first choose a foreperson. A few minutes later, they sent word they would begin deliberations right away.

Within an hour, the verdict was in. Golub told reporters that he had just begun eating lunch when he received the word.

Septimus was one of three female staffers of the Office of the General Counsel who lodged internal complaints of discrimination against Duffy in March 1998. In order to avoid a conflict of interest, the University hired outside lawyer Deborah McElvaney to conduct an investigation.

McElvaney submitted a 20-page report of her findings to UH System Chancellor/UH President Arthur K. Smith in April 1998. She found, in part, that Duffy had discriminated against Septimus when he failed to consider her for a promotion to associate general counsel, and that he had created a "hostile and abusive work environment" toward women.

Smith appointed a committee of three top UH administrators to evaluate McElvaney's findings.

After interviewing the complainants and Duffy, the committee found in its own report that there was insufficient evidence to support the women's claims of discrimination and retaliation. But it did suggest Duffy undergo management training to improve his communication skills with subordinates.

Jury foreman Wesley Wallace said the jurors decided within 20 minutes that "the University and the UH System were responsible" for retaliating against and constructively discharging Septimus.

Wallace said jurors determined that Septimus "was almost set upon" for filing her charges against Duffy.

The remaining time was spent determining Septimus' damages, said Wallace, a retired sales and marketing executive of the Vallen Corporation, a Houston-based industrial safety supply company.

"It was just a matter of doing the arithmetic," he said.

There was no indication Monday whether the University and the UH System would file future motions seeking a lessening of the damages or appeal the verdict to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Another of the original complainants against Duffy, Glena Sue Yerby (who currently serves as business manager in the UH Facilities Planning and Construction Office), has also filed a similar federal lawsuit against the University. Her case is scheduled for trial in September. Golub represents her as well.

The other complainant, former OGC secretary Carolyn Williams, did not pursue her charges.

Catnap

"Ziggy" stays warm in her owner's [illegible]

COMING SOON...VALENTINE'S DAY!

Whether you...
Want to be funny/play a joke • Want to make a good friend smile
Be a secret admirer • Want to say a little "I love you"

Reserve Your Valentine's Day Collegian Personal by Tuesday, February 12th for the Collegian's Thursday, February 14th Valentine's Day Issue.

For more information call the Collegian @ 545-3500
Drop off order forms @ Collegian in the Campus Center basement or mail to 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003 (by 2/12)

Client: Date: Taken By: Office Use Only
Date to run: February 12, 2002 Headline: Personals
S.S.#: Total Words: X .10¢ rate =
Total Cost (w/specials): Authorized signature:

Specials

Free Red Spot Color w/purchase of a Graphic
$2 Heart Graphic at Beginning & End
$4 Heart Graphic Border
$5 Heart Shadowed Behind Message
Graphic #1 ♡
Graphic #2 ♥
Graphic #3 ❤
Graphic #4 ❦

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN/UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
VALENTINE'S DAY CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING INSERTION ORDER

Cash ❑ Check # VISA/MC# Exp.

ADVERTISING COPY

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Insert one character, space, or punctuation mark per box - use capital letters where they apply - Cost figured on each line of form used

STUDENT TRAVEL
It's YOUR trip, take it!
London.....$274
Amsterdam....$351
Paris.....$349
Los Angeles.....$198
New York.....$115
Washington D.C.....$78
Fares are round-trip from Hartford. Restrictions may apply. Tax not included.
BUDGET HOTELS for as little as $18 A NIGHT!!!
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

SPRING BREAK '02
ARE YOU READY?
SUPER SPECIALS!
Check Out www.sunsplashtours.com for Last Minute Super Specials
Includes Airfare, 7 Nights Hotel, FREE Parties, Drinks & Activities. Over 15 years experience!
SPECIALS!* SAVE UP TO $100 ON SELECT TRIPS!
*Can not be combined with any other offer. New Bookings Only
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.06.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

No classes?

Problem is just going to get worse

The University of Massachusetts just becomes more and more depressing by the day. Entering into the first day of classes this year, many students literally faced picking up fifteen credits through the process of getting signed into classes.

Typical seminar-type classes were filled to capacity with students sitting on the floors of overflowing classrooms. At this point in the beginning of the semester there are little to no available classes for students.

Is this anything new? Obviously not. Anyone who has attended this school for more than a year is aware that classes are always difficult to get, professors are rarely properly compensated and individual attention is impossible to get in most classes. This is the second round of devastating cuts to academics at this University, last time around the school eliminated majors, this time the escort service and childcare.

And it is just going to get worse. With a slew of new retirees within this coming year alone, the chances that classes will have enough spots to accommodate the number of students that will need classes are slim. The English department alone will be facing the possible loss of four faculty members and nearly 15 classes.

Hit especially hard are departments such as Sociology, which may have to eliminate the option of taking criminology classes all together and Journalism, a department in which class slots are already few and far between.

Also taking the brunt of the cuts are the foreign language departments. With the elimination of the foreign language center, an integral part of the language education of all students at the University, departments will have to work harder to supply materials and give students extra guidance. With so many students trying to complete their language requirements, the University may have to start looking into changing the amount of required courses.

Departments such as Spanish and Portuguese, who are now only operating at 75 percent of their normal capacity following the first round of budget cuts last year, will now be expected to work twice as hard with half the resources.

Why focus cuts in areas that will affect the ability for students to properly learn? Why education when we could focus on reducing the number of administrators and cut down on funding allotted to distance learning? We may not know why certain cuts are being made and by particular departments. However we will feel the burden next semester and many of us this semester when we find ourselves sitting on the floor.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

"Oh, dear dad, can you see me now?" Write for ed-op and everyone will. Collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

Athletics are placing the press on the rest

SAM WILKINSON

I just wanted to play basketball.

In the midst of an ice storm after a long first week of classes, I just wanted to play basketball. So last Friday afternoon, I climbed into my car and drove to Boyden. But I couldn't play.

Unbeknownst to me, since the last time I'd come to play basketball on a Friday afternoon – sometime late last semester – the baseball and softball teams had decided that they needed indoor practice facilities. With nowhere else available on campus, why not Boyden gymnasium?

Well, I asked somebody who looked like he was just sitting there doing nothing but who was probably actually engaged in some sort of baseball that I couldn't understand where I could play.

Practicing baseball guy answered: "Totman's open."

Me: "Great, from when to when."

Practicing baseball guy again: "From 2:15 to 3:15."

In other words, if I just went back outside into the ice storm, drove up to Totman, parked, hustled inside and prayed that one of that gym's four baskets was available, I might be so blessed as to get one uninterrupted hour of court time on a Friday afternoon. To put it another way – while the 40-odd members of the baseball and softball teams used our only nice gym to sit around, the other 24,000 students on campus could have access to all of four aged baskets for one hour.

Taking this affront like a true gentleman, I wrote an email to the individual in charge of scheduling gymnasium availability, Zulma Garcia. She emailed me to back to say that it was unfortunate that I couldn't play basketball for more than an hour. She then pointed out that this very newspaper has a page dedicated to the UMass sports teams and not to campus recreation, so somebody must think they are important.

So in other words, because I don't play for one of the many sports teams on campus, I could go to hell. Now, I don't think it was unfair of me to ask that our sports teams not take student gymnasiums away because they have to practice sitting down.

What might have been unfair was if I asked for any of the following:

-a free education in exchange for my willingness to play a game.

-free sweatpants, sweatshirts, socks and infinitely expensive pairs of shoes.

-meal money to any our many fine campus eateries, as well as meal money on road trips so I can go out to dinner each night.

-free tutors, as I'll be spending so much time away from campus playing for one of our many championship teams.

-free travel across the United States so that I might spend my time playing a game.

-extra money for my coaches to take members of the press out for amazingly expensive dinners.

-extra money from a recent $495 fee increase while the rest of the campus goes to financial hell in a handbasket.

-or even the opportunity to use the Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, Totman Fields, Garber Field, The Cage, either the Baseball or the Softball field, and the Mullins Center itself.

No, I just asked why the baseball and softball teams had to take Boyden gymnasium on Fridays, especially considering that both have nice fields elsewhere on campus on which they can practice.

"...but what about the ice storm Sam?"

So cancel practice.

Those teams' apparent unwillingness to brave the elements shouldn't be taken out on the students of this campus whose twice annual checks prop up an athletic department that has never turned a god damn profit. Our sports teams shouldn't get opportunity after opportunity after opportunity while the rest of us are asked to go without. We shouldn't have to foot the bill for yet another year of athletic department largess. And we definitely shouldn't have to pay one more red cent until this campus experiences some athletic success.

Our football team went 3-8 last year.

Our basketball team is currently at a paltry 9-10.

These are two of our costliest sports and both are terrible. Football is inexcusably bad – losing in the A-10 is just pathetic – and basketball should be better than 9-10, but losing to the likes of Holy Cross will make a record look like that.

As if our athletic ineptitude isn't enough, I don't remember the last time the Athletic Department ever showed even the slightest hint of gratitude for the constant monies given to it.

Would a "thank you" or a "winning season" be so unreasonable?

Apparently so.

But if these criticisms seem pointed, just wait until departments turning away majors get wind of the huge amounts of money being paid into the Athletic Department's swollen coffers. Wait until the parents without childcare get wind of the amenities our student athletes receive while their children go without.

Just wait.

It won't be me going ballistic because baseball players are rudely turning me away from a gymnasium that I, and students like me, don't have access to anymore – it will be administrators and professors, parents and students sick of a system that unfairly benefits an athletic program that has largely failed to achieve even the lowest levels of success.

I just wanted to play basketball – they'll want heads, and maybe more importantly, money.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Dust settles over a unified front:

Hopes of change skirting the horizon

JESSE HIRSCH

At 7 p.m. on Saturday night the crowds disbanded, the police overtook the streets, and an air of melancholy settled over much of the crowd. After hours of marching, chanting, dancing and drumming, the protest dispersed with relatively little conflict. Although thousands of protesters gathered to make their voices heard outside the World Economic Forum (WEF) in New York City, many were unsure whether the event was a success. No one got anywhere near the actual Forum, never mind shutting it down, as the cops utilized very effective crowd control techniques to disperse the masses. Additionally, many feared the media would spin the story into one about unruly anarchists butting heads with America's sweethearts, the NYPD. And so, as the dust settled and I sat drinking coffee in a Park Avenue deli, I asked myself: "If this protest was such a dismal failure, then why do I feel so good?"

Before I could answer that question, I reframed the goals of the day. The WEF is essentially a massive cocktail party for global CEOs and assorted other corporate glitterati to network and make the shadowy decisions that control our world. Granted, it is not a legislative forum, and the official agenda was much less formal than the insidious policy-making of the World Trade Organization. At the same time, it was a previous Economic Forum that generated the idea for the WTO, and it is nearly certain the decisions the attendees made would not represent the interests of humanity. Therefore, it was important to let our voice be heard; most of us do not favor putting profits over people, the environment and democratic values. And, as is the American way, we needed to register our dissent and present a unified front of opposition.

Sure, there were some who wanted to actually shut the WEF down, but this struck me as public relations suicide for the movement. The police made it clear they learned from the mistakes of Seattle and would not be letting protesters anywhere close to the Waldorf-Astoria, where the Forum was being held. Thus, the prospect of "shutting it down" seemed nothing more than a distant pipe dream resting far on the other side of the concrete barricades. Additionally, not only would engaging in physical confrontation with the nearly 4,000 mobilized police officers be futile, it would create just the type of headlines the corporate media would love to broadcast:

"Agitators and outcasts incite Sept. 11 heroes to violence."

Being that closing the WEF was not a very realistic goal, the standards for the day's success were a bit elusive. So I thought about what I saw. An elderly woman with a two-foot tall hat, fresh from work, came over to our march and gave me sips of her coffee. A Chinese restaurant owner threw his door open wide, giving marchers a bathroom oasis in the stark glass-and-chrome financial district. Late in the evening, a well-dressed young woman stopped us and asked to read our buttons and stickers. Braced for a confrontation with her, my friends and I instead got a "God bless you," and an affirmation that the world is listening. And, as important as all this community support was to our morale (even some of the police we talked with believed in our goals), the most inspirational thing, to me, was the solidarity of the massive numbers of protesters. There were thousands of red, white, brown, and green faces, young and old, from all over the country and the world, joined in a common cause, yelling with one voice. And for me, that is success.

So it was not with a heavy heart that I boarded the charter bus bound for the Pioneer Valley. I was uplifted, hopeful, and certain that change will come. I looked around at my friends and fellow freedom fighters, listening to murmurs of hip-hop and talk of vegan cravings, sensing the common exhaustion, yet reveling in the common pride. As I drifted off into sleep, my dreams were of the future.

Jesse Hirsch is a UMass student.

Letters to the editor: Budget cuts and Israeli relations

To the editor:

In the aftermath of Sept. 11 we all looked desperately for heroic things. And it wasn't hard to find: we saw it on that early day when firefighters and policemen and women rushed into the World Trade Center towers to help rescue people. In the following weeks we saw the heroism and efficiency of our governments as they coped with the aftermath of the terrorist attack. Many of us who believe in government and its crucial role in ensuring a just society, took some solace in the belief that maybe the two-decade-old tide of privatization – and the starving of our public institutions – might begin to be turned around.

Then here in Massachusetts the assault on the public sector continued unabated. In the state that invented the notion of public education for children, we are experiencing the most massive assaults on public higher education ever in the 21st century. Commonwealth: perhaps some of the worst cuts in public higher education any time, anywhere. Those cuts are in order here: in 2001, UMass cut its education budget more than any other state in the nation. There we are so superior to Mississippi, Alabama, South Dakota? Guess again – Massachusetts has cut the education budget by 6.2% – the next worst decrease was Utah, where they cut the higher education budget by 3.4%. That did better when you count the cuts over the past two years: we beat out Mississippi to secure ourselves the 39th spot at 39th out of 50). This hurts even more when you realize that all but five states increased their budgets to start because investment in higher education means economic growth. Even New York, which has obviously suffered the hardest by the Sept. 11 bombings, has maintained level funding for the SUNY system. And to finish off the depressing paragraph, the cuts are going to hit this campus disproportionally harder than any of the other state and community colleges.

Why all the statistics? To let you know that this is not some "regular" budget crunch that we have seen at perennially under-funded UMass for years and years. Many of you are in your third, or even fourth generation UMass students, and so you have inevitably heard about past budget crises and might feel like it's just one of those things that happens here at UMass. This is, I want to be sure you know, something different. This is a drastic attack on the standing of public higher education in this state, and especially on the status of this, the flagship campus. And, as bad as it is now, unless we do something next year will be much worse. The legislature passed an "early retirement" program to encourage faculty and others to retire early – but if they retire we don't get to replace them. The official numbers aren't in yet, but it looks like UMass will lose dozens of faculty – perhaps nine in music, four in sociology, and three in German.

What does all this mean for you? In the short-term, it means higher fees and higher tuition – already pushing the $10,000 mark – larger classes and fewer openings in required courses. How many of you are already spending five or six years in college simply because you can't get into required courses? It will mean fewer student performances, fewer visiting speakers, deferred maintenance on dorms rooms and classrooms and gym facilities. And these will happen immediately – don't think that you'll graduate a year or two from now having "missed" the cuts. Your experience as a student at UMass is going to suffer.

As painful as these immediate effects are – and I don't underestimate their impact on your lives – are the longer-term effects of these cuts. When UMass declines in quality – as it must with this level of slashing – so does the value of your degree. Despite being consistently under-funded for a generation or more, UMass is a widely respected institution, far beyond the Commonwealth. This might not have meant so much to you when you chose to come here, but it matters a lot when you go out to find a job and begin a career.

These cuts are particularly painful for me. I grew up in Amherst, and my father taught here at UMass, in the English Department, for more than thirty years. In high school, I took a German class and a Political Science class here – in Herter Hall, where I often now teach. UMass is where I learned what the phrase "higher education" means: UMass inspired me to becoming a teacher and scholar. And it goes even further: my fundamental belief in public life and in public education was in large measure inspired by growing up around UMass. I have had the great fortune to achieve the dream of returning to teach at UMass, just as the state decides it wants to eviscerate this great university.

I write this letter to you, the students of UMass, because in this crisis we can't count on the administration to help us fight for our university. Administrators have been expressly told that they will be fired if they actively campaign against these cuts. The rest of us – students, staff, and faculty – are going to have to fight these cuts together. And fight them now. Start by contacting Dan Clawson (clawson@sadri.umass.edu) about how you can help.

Max Page
Assistant Professor of Architecture and History

To the editor:

While reading Mr. Munayyar's article, one must ask the question – what does he wish to accomplish? His opening remark: "Israel is filled with terrorism and socialism" is quite peculiar; is socialism tied to terrorism? Many countries are "filled with socialism" and this is usually considered to be good while terrorism is universally considered inherently wrong.

As we proceed through the article we find Mr. Munayyar ridiculing Israel for being the very thing which it was founded to be – a Jewish State which has a national religion. That this nation might make distinctions in its citizenry based on religion is quite natural and cannot be faulted. It joins dozens of nations around the globe in this practice. However, Mr. Munayyar claims that Israel labels its citizenry as either Jew or Arab, and as "Arab" is not a religion these are obviously ethnic identifiers. Israel is hardly alone in identifying its citizenry based on ethnicity; our own United States does the same. We must remember that there are citizens of Israel who are neither Jewish nor Arab, therefore Israel must use more identifiers than the two which Mr. Munayyar offers.

As the fifth paragraph of the Article concludes, we are filled with yet another question: why does the author presenting this information about Israel, a country very distant from our own, instead of presenting us with the fact that profiling is a very common practice in the United States? I am reminded of a Christian friend of mine who said, "Take the beam out of your own eye before searching for the speck in your neighbor's."

The sixth paragraph opens with questions of equal funding. Again, why ridicule Israel, or any other nation, when the same complaint can easily be lodged against our own Massachusetts?

As the article continues, more charges are brought against Israel even though they are properly brought against the United States. The Government treating one group of people better than another, or refusing to obey rulings of the Supreme Court – talk with the First Nations (American Native Peoples) concerning this.

As Mr. Munayyar continues to lay charges against Israel he neglects to inform us that these same actions are practiced in many Arab-Muslim and non-Arab-Muslim nations to this very day. Apparently Mr. Munayyar is not aware that in most of these nations a person reading the Christian New Testament in Public, or attempting to convert Muslims to another religion is a crime punishable by many decades imprisonment or death, or perhaps he does not feel this is a problem in these other countries.

Mr. Munayyar's invoking of U.S. Civil-Rights leaders is somewhat misplaced. These leaders would first be most troubled by the current state of affairs in their own country, then they would be concerned with the fact that the US supports oppressive governments around the world in the Caribbean, Central and South America, Africa, the Middle East, Asia – nations in which the US has often assisted with the overthrowing of the legitimate, often democratically elected, governments and supported the new, oppressive regimes simply because these new regimes would bow to the will of the US.

Mr. Munayyar concludes his article by assuring us that he isn't Anti-Semitic, but is anti-racist. Perhaps, but it would seem, from his own words, that he is quite anti-Israel. This tirade against Israel – which includes no quotable nor supported facts – could have been a truly informative essay regarding the poor current state of affairs in so many of the nations with which we share this globe, especially our own United States. Unfortunately, any thinking individual quickly realizes this is nothing more than an attempt to raise anti-Israel sentiment, instead of an examination of the full situation in and around Israel (where Israel, the Palestinian Authority, and the surround nations have much to answer for, especially the continued support of terrorism and terrorist activities) offering valid and workable solutions to the deplorable situation; solutions with which all inhabitants of the Middle East can live.

Editorials are for offering opinions that are well thought out and constructive. Television talk shows are for inciting ill will.

W. David Zuk
University of Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.06.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

An Ultimate Comic Twist

Gutter Culture with Christopher Scott Kenny

Marvel Comics unveiled the Ultimate imprint last year in an attempt to bring back old readers and make new ones by taking their iconic characters and shaving off all thirty years of mired continuity and fuss. This attempt at accessibility also opened the way to rethinking the characters in putting them in a more modern context. Brian Michael Bendis' Ultimate Spider-Man and Mark Millar's Ultimate X-Men have been met with both critical and financial success, re-invigorating the characters that seemed to be getting a little creaky and worn over the last five years or so. Marvel has recently released a new title to the Ultimate imprint, called—aptly enough—The Ultimates. And this book is absolutely amazing.

Like the X-Men and Spider-Man books, the premise and characters are similar: iconic Marvel characters like Captain America, Iron Man, Thor, Wasp, Giant Man, and the Hulk team up to combat evil forces that they cannot stop individually. Of course, the book is written by Mark Millar now, who is best known for his subversive work on The Authority, which featured a gang of superheroes who had the vanity of celebrities and the philosophies of militant left-wingers, even making enemies of the first-world nations. Rather than being an enemy of the Establishment, however, Millar's new team is sponsored by the government. In the first arc of Ultimate X-Men, Magneto made the President lick the dirt of his boot completely naked on national television. In attempt to avoid this catastrophe again, the government tries to gather their own metahumans to combat forces that could threaten national security.

The story itself is rather simplistic but, like all good comics, it manages to suck you right in from the first page. It was bold of Millar to start the first issue of an updated retelling of a team book with one character in the 1940s, but the action is paced at such breakneck speeds that you don't even care. Millar is shrewd enough to borrow from media outside of comic books, particularly in film. The whole issue had a vibe similar to many of the recent war movies that came out recently.

While the story deals with the present, the entire first issue takes place during the Second World War as a battalion of soldiers is trying to stop Nazis from launching an experimental hydrogen bomb from Iceland to the White House. Captain America himself leads the soldiers. From the first panel to the last, the art is absolutely breathtaking. Bryan Hitch, who just came off of a disappointing run over in DC's JLA (Justice League America) redeems himself with this work, which is quite possibly the best of his career. Everything from the planes to the soldiers is convincing and seemed to be meticulously researched. Rather than showcasing an ideal picture of the American soldier in war, like the propaganda Captain America comics did in the 1940s, Hitch draws the characters in all their griminess. The cinematic storytelling enhances the effect the comic is trying to put across, especially since it looks as though it is taking a cue from Saving Private Ryan.

The other star of the book is the colors. Contrary to other Captain America books, which tend to be much brighter and utilize primary colors, this book uses browns and olive green to accentuate the war aspect of the comic and not the superhero aspect. The effect brings realism to the book.

My one complaint about the comic is that it is too short. It seems more like a prologue chap-

Turn to GUTTER, page 6

Joel and John – Legends Live in Concert

COURTESY JOHN CORMAN

Is that Billy Joel with Elton John? Oh no, 'tis just another hairy, bearded man.

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

BILLY JOEL AND ELTON JOHN
Hartford Civic Center
Feb. 4

Even though I was only a toddler when Billy Joel and Elton John hit the zenith of their careers, I can still see a notable, and somewhat heartbreaking change between the rock stars they once were and the music legends they have become. They've both filled out in stature, lost some hair, and quite understandably gotten worn down by the demands of the road, and record companies knocking down their doors for more music. During their show at the Hartford Civic Center Monday night (one of four sold-out performances), Elton John admitted to the crowd, "We'll all be tired by the end of the night," and Billy Joel briefly spoke of his struggle with Colombia Records continually nagging him for a new CD of rock tunes (his last being River of Dreams in 1994).

I've seen Billy Joel once before on a solo tour in 1996 and Elton John twice (once on this campus). In the half-decade between those appearances and their latest one, I've come to an epiphany of just how valuable these guys are to the music world, and what a great loss it will be when they decide to trade in the tour buses for Cadillacs, even though it would be well-deserved on their parts. The truly talented musicians nowadays are either part of this dying breed, or haven't been discovered yet by major album labels. The music industry has pretty much sold out in recent history, opting instead for properties that record executives can cash in on right away, instead of finding real talent to harvest and nurture. It may sound like a melodramatic rant, but as far as Joel goes, he has said this is his last tour ever, while John has also hinted at retirement quite a bit recently. It's because of this that the concert held a special place for me personally, as it possibly marks the finale of two beloved and brilliant careers.

Nonetheless, the piano men still know how to rock n' roll like the good old days. For three-and-a-half hours, they kept the audience on their feet and cheering for more. First they performed a brief set of songs together (alternating between songs by John and Joel), and then Elton played his set of eleven songs with his band, then Joel did the same, and finally coming together again for another set of tunes.

After an opening instrumental from John's Broadway musical Aida, two grand pianos rose up through the stage floor, followed by the British anthem announcing John's entrance, and followed by the national anthem to which Joel strolled onto the stage. After a cordial high-five and a hug, they took their seats behind the pianos and began with a duet of Elton's classic ballad "Your Song." At times like this, when they play and sing together, it's a double thrill; the song takes on a new energy and angle by the other singer, while still being able to find comfort and familiarity with the original performer, too.

While the Civic Center seats several thousands of people, John and Joel's interactions with the audience made the concert feel more intimate. Instances evoking laughter were those like Joel stating, "For these ticket prices I should be doing the windows," or John dedicating "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me" to Husband #33 (right after Joel had said that the previous song, "Just the Way You Are," was written for Ex-Wife #1).

It was to be expected that there would be at least some talk about the Super Bowl, and during Joel's set he not only let the audience choose the next song to be played because of our team's victory, but also joked, "It was actually a good game." From a choice between "Vienna," "Summer, Highland Falls" and "Don't Ask Me Why," the latter was the victor. While Elton didn't have an audience vote, he performed two songs from his new, adored album, Songs from the West Coast: the hit "I Want Love," and the new single "This Train Don't Stop Here Anymore." The audience found great pleasure in these plus the thrilling rendition of

Turn to CONCERT, page 6

Nothing like a good self-indulgent rambling book

By Kurt Polesky
COLLEGIAN STAFF

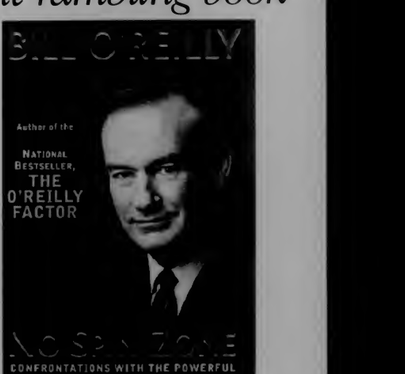
THE NO SPIN ZONE: CONFRONTATIONS WITH THE POWERFUL AND FAMOUS IN AMERICA
Bill O'Reilly
Broadway Books

Email from "Abdi:" "O'Reilly, I don't like the way you disrupt your guests. Please get some help from Larry King. He might teach you how to interview."

Bill O'Reilly: "I doubt it Abdi. But then again you never know. By the way do you think Hillary and Al Gore are afraid to go on Larry's broadcast?"

Email from "Michelle:" O'Reilly, I quit watching the Factor because I find you so egotistical. So now my mother calls me every evening to tell me what I missed. I don't know what is worse.

Bill O'Reilly: "Michele, Michele, and Michele.... listen to your mom. She obviously knows what's best."



Such is the world of Bill O'Reilly, one of the FoxNews Channel's resident "don't call me conservative" blowhards and host of his own highly rated "News" and editorial program, "The O'Reilly Factor," each weeknight. Now O'Reilly brings his self-proclaimed "No Spin" approach to his new book The No Spin Zone. With his talk show at the top of the cable news ratings, two best-selling books (counting this one), and rumors of a nationally syndicated radio talk show, what's the deal with this O'Reilly character? And what is a "No Spin Zone" anyway?

"No Spin" is not just the title of O'Reilly's book, it's the credo that he lives his life by. As he puts it in the book, "To anybody who uses the power and fame to exploit the less powerful, the Zone is a very dangerous place." Furthermore, "In the No Spin Zone, rationalizations are scorned, lies are rejected and equivocations mocked."

Most of all "No Spin" represents O'Reilly's ruthless interviewing style, which has earned him popularity and also caused him to be labeled as an egomaniac, or outright rude by others. Transcripts of some these interviews along with commentary from O'Reilly, are the center of the book. This makes for some good and some bad. While on one hand the interviews with O'Reilly's political enemies like Rev. Al Sharpton, and Mario Cuomo are entertaining, they don't provide much more than what one would see on a typical viewing of O'Reilly's television program, which is mainly comprised of O'Reilly and his guest yelling back and forth at each other. The No Spin Zone uncovers no new ground about O'Reilly, as most of his commentaries are short and unrevealing. The book hits on so many issues ranging from the War On Drugs, to immigration, to taxes, to his wars with the "liberal" media during his days at CBS and ABC news (very interesting stuff), that there is little focus, and instead often reads like the self-indulgent ramblings of a conservative egomaniac.

Ah, but wait, what makes O'Reilly and the The No Spin Zone interesting is that O'Reilly is not simply a knee-jerk conservative. Sure, most of his opinions fall on the conservative side of the track, but O'Reilly resents being labeled as such. As he shows in the book, his views fall on both sides of the ideology track, and often times don't neatly settle into either. For instance, he is anti-capital punishment, but for curious reasons, as he puts it killing someone is "too lenient" of a punishment. He would prefer "a lifetime of hard labor in Alaska," as punishment. He thinks the War on Drugs has been a failure, but he certainly isn't for legalization. Rather, it's his opinion that "The War" hasn't been tough enough, especially on the supply side. But the main area in which O'Reilly separates himself from the conservative pack is his championing of the common man against corporate America. It's easy to tell that

Turn to SPIN, page 6

COURTESY BROADWAY BOOKS

"In the No Spin Zone rationalizations are scorned, lies are rejected and equivocations mocked." Oh really O'Reilly? Well your tie sucks.

Citizen Cope would find it a lot easier to cope if he had a band backing him up.

FU MANCHU
California Crossing
Mammoth

Sufficient. Acceptable. Not bad. Alright. OK. These aren't phrases most musicians would want associated with their music, but Fu Manchu has been consistently average for so many years and albums that one has to wonder if they have some inherent Zen-like quality to being so non-anything. The saga of mediocrity continues with California Crossing...

Granted, it would be just as unexpected now if Fu Manchu crafted a truly bad album as it would if they pressed a masterpiece. There's nothing that makes this most recent attempt bad, and the fact that it's not particularly great doesn't make it any less solid and dependable. It's that CD that sits on your shelf that you just can't sell, 'cause you don't not like it, and geez, if all your other CDs mysteriously combust at least you'll have something you don't hate to listen to.

Granted, again, Fu Manchu is an above-average live band, kicking their songs in the ass, injecting a little adrenaline, and riding them until they burst at the seams. And on the bill they're right where they belong: the middle. Not the prestigious top, not the sometimes toothworthy bottom. That dependable band you may or may not catch depending on how long the line at the bar is.

Other places Fu Manchu would be comfortable in: the middle of a mix tape, on the stereo at a party you go to. You can't start or end a good mix tape with stuff this inconsequential, and the music you hear at parties (that you aren't the DJ for) seems to exist in a trivial vacuum:

"Hey Sam, who is this?"

"Uh, I think it's Fu Manchu maybe."

"Oh."

(Michael Delano)

THE PASTIES
Platonica

Take Weezer, drown the lead guitar, and highlight the album with a little bit of Coldplay's Yellow and you've got The Pasties. In their album, Platonica, The Pasties have bundled together the emotional trauma and bittersweetness of the phrase "I think we should just be friends" with witty sarcasm and playful melodies.

With cheesy keyboard sounds, simple guitar riffs, and semi-interesting bass lines, the music itself is bubbly but nothing special – although it serves as a good backdrop for humorous but meaningful lyrics, sung by either Devon Copley or Eric Casimiro.

This album makes for good background music or for playing while eating ramen for lunch in your dorm room, but it is not recommended for those Friday night beer pong keg parties or a first date. The tunes are too mellow for such party events and the lyrics are far too depressing to get your date in a "favorable mood."

The basically laidback feel to this album is spurred to life at several points throughout the CD with a couple of upbeat, but not necessarily optimistic, tracks. Songs like "Stayed With Me" and "Romantic Man" bring humor to otherwise depressing ballads, while "Shameless" and "Happy 4 Our Friends" are reminiscent of harps-go-lucky filler you would hear in a teen girl's clothing store at the mall.

Platonica, as its name suggests is all about the friendships, either welcome or otherwise, that fill the lives of The Pasties. It's pleasing to listen to, and yes, even reassuring when you wonder if anyone else ever feels the way you do. The music needs to be a little more developed and brought out of keyboard crazy tackiness, but it's an overall good effort.

(Jenny Thomson)

CITIZEN COPE
Citizen Cope
Dreamworks

Citizen Cope is one-man show Clarence Greenwood. Greenwood is one of those artists that are simply too ambitious to be tied down with a band, and have to arrange every note and write every lyric themselves. Wisdom dictates that unless you're a genius, not every one of your ideas is going to be da bomb, and everyone could use a little editing and filtering from their peers. Such is the case with this debut, an over ambitious and underdeveloped attempt that screams for a band dynamic to create a more cohesive and focused outbook.

Things Citizen Cope's imaginary, non-existent band might say to him in the studio:

a) "Clarence, put the pen down." Greenwood's lyrics are impressive in scope: he shuffles from love songs to cries for social justice, folk tales to street drama. The range is interesting; his actual lyrics aren't. The love songs are painfully complacent, the street tales similarly ragged but less soulful than Everlast's, and the socially conscious approaches are half-baked and unconvincing.

b) "Clarence, bro, reign it in." Greenwood sometimes takes a minimalist approach to the music in order to highlight his raspy, assured delivery, but it's never for the better. "Salvation" and "Holdin' On," among others, go on too long and say too little in words and music.

c) "Clarence, put the pen down." Greenwood's electronic accents throughout the album spice things up considerably, most noticeably on "Let the Drummer Kick." That song also showcases his other strength, choruses, the creation of which he has a knack for (the catchy head bobbing kinds).

Citizen Cope is an admirable shot at bringing together many different elements, now all Greenwood needs are some buddies to help shape them.

(Michael Delano)

More bands should be named after facial hair like Fu Manchu. Can I get an "Amen" for the Dandrearies? (Yeah, we had to look it up too – it's a term for sideburns.)

■ spin

continued from page 5

O'Reilly has a certain disdain for big business that thinks it can get away with anything it wants.

Sure, he might have an unhealthy disdain for the likes of Hillary Clinton, Al Gore, and Jesse Jackson among others, but O'Reilly is truly an equal opportunity offender. All one has to do is read the transcript of the grilling interview O'Reilly conducted during the 2000 Presidential election with then candidate George W. Bush (included in the book) to see that O'Reilly won't let any politician, liberal or conservative to "spin" in his presence. It is precisely this, his ability to forgot politics, examine an issue, and form his own opinion regardless of what ideologs it agrees with, which separates O'Reilly from the Rush Limbaugh's of the world.

Some might not like O'Reilly for that he believes, which is fair...but simply dismissing him as a stuck up conservative is missing the point. After all, if you want a book of spin and sucking up, read Larry King or Dan Rather. If you want a book that doesn't care who it pisses off, read The No Spin Zone.

■ gutter

continued from page 5

ter than the first one. But, in a sense, the book succeeded if the only criticism is that there wasn't as much as I wanted.

I look forward to seeing how Millar and Hitch continue to take the classic characters and twist them around in new ways. Thor is going to be a militant environmentalist; Iron Man is going to be a self-involved industrialist; Giant Man is going to be addicted to Prozac. Hulk is going to be a beer-drinking, sex-loving hormonal maniac. This is a far cry from Stan Lee and Jack Kirby's vision thirty years ago.

Christopher Scott Kenny is a Collegian columnist.

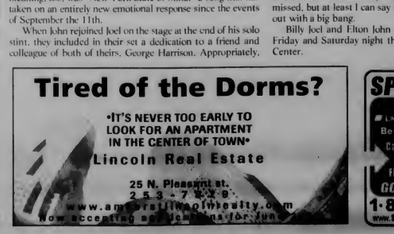
■ concert

continued from page 5

the timeless "Levon" and the surprise performance of "Candle In the Wind," a song that John swore he would never play live again. (Again, another hint that he might be hanging up his spurs.)

John concluded his set with "Crocodile Rock," a usual closer to his concerts, and Joel began with the lesser-known but greatly loved "Scenes from An Italian Restaurant." Joel treated the audience to a brief selection of his recent CD of classical music, Fantasies & Delusions, but quickly returned to his rock repartee with "Movin' Out" (which is the title of the forthcoming Broadway musical that he has in the works), and took to playing the guitar on "We Didn't Start the Fire." Once in awhile it sounded like his voice was wavering (perhaps from the cold he was nursing), but he still dedicated all he had to it. A little later on was the moving "Lullabye (Goodnight, My Angel)," dedicated to his daughter Alexa Ray, which had the audience completely silent as a sole spotlight illuminated him at the ivories. Seeing Billy croon at the keys reminded me of how fortunate I am, and others too, to have been part of such an amazing concert. Of particular meaning, too, was "New York State of Mind," a song that has taken on an entirely new emotional response since the events of September the 11th.

When John rejoined Joel on the stage at the end of his solo stint, they included in their set a dedication to a friend and colleague of both of theirs, George Harrison. Appropriately, they played one of the late-Beatles best-known songs, "Here Comes the Sun," with great proficiency and respect. Additionally, they covered the Jerry Lee Lewis tune "Great Balls of Fire," which they ended the show with too.



The excited crowd wouldn't let them get away without an encore (one woman was so ecstatic that she threw her bra onto the stage at John, who then passed it onto Joel with a small wink), and they appropriately closed with "Piano Man," which brought down the house. My girlfriend and I were among the youngest people in attendance at the concert, but even those people there who are my parents' age found the same delight in the show as we did, and could hoot and holler as though they were my age. The noticeable age difference between myself and the others in attendance was not a negative factor, but actually something that made it the environment more friendly, safer and further illustrated the meaningful difference between the generations of music.

Music plays a very large role in my life, and I'm grateful that I could be a part of such an important concert event. If this is the last I see of Joel and John, they will be sorely missed, but at least I can say that I was there to see them go out with a big bang.

Billy Joel and Elton John will also perform Wednesday, Friday and Saturday night this week at the Hartford Civic Center.

www.dailycollegian.com

UMass sails by drowning Rams

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

This was not a good weekend to be a Ram.

One day before the New England Patriots stunning Super Bowl victory over the St. Louis Rams, the Massachusetts swimming program set the stage for the weekend, as the men and women dominated the Rams of Fordham University.

The men won 187-110 on solid efforts from junior Justin Houck and freshman Dylan Smith, while the women used multiple individual wins from senior Becky Hunnewell and juniors Lauren Bulkeley and Kate Allery to defeat the Lady Rams.

Allery and Smith each garnered Atlantic 10 Weekly award honors for their efforts. Allery, who would go on to win the three-meter dive event, set a school record in the one-meter event, earning an impressive 287.75 score, and the A-10 Performer of the Week nod.

"That's the best diving I've seen [Allery] do," women's coach Bob Newcombe said. "I know she's getting better every meet."

Smith, who earned Rookie of the Week honors for the second time this season, took the 1,000 yard freestyle, and burned his Ram competitors in the 200 yard Butterfly with a time of 1:53.88, the second fastest time in that event in the Atlantic 10 this season.

However, UMass relied on more than just the Super Rookies to take the meet. Houck won both the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke (53.16 and 1:56.08, respectively), and placed second in the 200-yard Individual Medley. On the women's side, Hunnewell also took both the 100 and 200-yard backstroke competitions (1:00.03 and 2:06.99), and Bulkeley showed her mettle in the 100-yard breaststroke (1:09.04) and 100-yard butterfly (59.71), winning both events.

"This meet's always good for us because Fordham has good swimmers there, and we can focus on our kids that are resting a little bit," said men's coach Russ Yarworth. "And we can get our kids that need to swim their prime events to swim, and just fine-tune before the championship."

The Minutemen followed up the individual wins with an inspired effort that earned them first place in the 200-yard relay. The team, comprised of freshmen Andrey Kurmakov and Ryan Matthews, and sophomores Sean Collins and Connor Townsend, swam the relay in 1:38.13, beating the closest Fordham squad by nearly a second. Matthews' quick anchor leg (21.60) sealed the deal for the Minutemen.

The Minutewomen also put together a victory in the 200-yard relay, as sophomores Lauren Rowell and Christen Dexter, junior Lizzy Boyle and senior Andrea Kazanjian posted a time of 1:51.69, edging the top Fordham entry by a mere 11 hundredths of a second.

The women also saw victories from senior Anne Dettloff in the 200-yard freestyle (1:56.97), sophomore Diana Alberti in the 200-yard butterfly (2:10.62), Dexter in the 200-yard breaststroke and freshman Lynette Sweeney in the 200-yard IM (2:14.86).

This weekend's meet was the final one for the swim teams, as they will be heading to the Atlantic 10 Championships, held in Buffalo, NY, Feb. 21-23. Said Newcombe of the Championships, "I think we definitely have some momentum going in...this team has shown everybody how good it really is."

Newcombe also mentioned that Richmond, who he calls a runaway favorite, is the team to beat at the championships. The men, on the other hand, will be looking to dispatch favored St. Bonaventure, but Yarworth contends that his squad can hang with the Bonnies.

"I don't know if today's performance changes my opinion at all, but my opinion all year long watching them swim was that I think they can defeat St. Bonaventure."

Becky Hunnewell led her team to a victory over Fordham by winning the 100 and 200-yard backstroke.

Alabama falls to well-oiled Wildcat machine

By Dan Komyati
Arizona Daily Wildcat (U. Arizona)

(U-WIRE) TUCSON, Ariz. – In a not-so-typical weekend of Arizona softball, the defending national champions began their season much like they left off last May – as the victors.

Top-ranked Arizona overwhelmed No. 13 Alabama, 8-2, 13-5, and 11-1, during the season-opening games at Rita Hillenbrand Memorial Stadium.

The Crimson Tide managed to take a first-inning lead during each contest of the weekend, but for three consecutive games, the Wildcats' bats responded with some timely hitting and the long ball.

Sunday was no different, as senior all-American pitcher Jennie Finch gave up her second home run in as many starts – both to Alabama sophomore all-American Jackie McClain – to stake the Crimson Tide to an early 1-0 lead.

But in the bottom half of the inning the Wildcats reminded their Southeastern Conference opponent of exactly why they are coming off their sixth national championship in the past decade.

Sophomore first baseman Leneah Manuma stepped to the plate with two runners aboard and drilled a three-run home run that was still rising as it bounced off the Ina E. Gittings building beyond the right-field fence.

After sophomore catcher Mackenzie Vandergeest lined an RBI single in the second, the Wildcats put the game away in the third.

Freshman third baseman Jackie Coburn came to the plate with two runners on after being held hitless in her first six at-bats of the weekend. She promptly delivered the first hit of her Wildcat career with a blast over the right-center field fence for a three-run shot and a 7-1 lead.

Manuma ensured that all in attendance would be home in plenty of time to catch the Super Bowl pre-game show as she delivered a two-run single to help stretch UA's lead to beyond the eight-run mercy rule.

Finch shut down the Tide over the final two innings for her second victory of the weekend in the five-inning game, allowing four hits and striking out four.

The third win of the weekend was the most complete victory for the Wildcats and most pleasing for head coach Mike Candrea.

"(Sunday) was a lot closer to the type of performance that I expect," Candrea said. "First weekends are your chance for the new kids to gain a little confidence, and I really believed that happened."

Manuma's effort Sunday was especially gratifying as it came on the heels of a bizarre turn of events during Saturday's game. She had a home run taken away from her after she passed a runner in the baseline, and after hitting a ball over the fence she was only credited with an RBI single.

"That's the first and last time that I think you will see anybody on our team do something like that," Manuma said of the early-season blunder.

On Saturday, the Wildcats again relied on their All-American Finch – but this time it was her bat that decided the outcome of the contest.

After the Crimson Tide scratched across three runs on one hit off of sophomore pitcher Jenny Gladding in the first inning, Finch tied the game with one swing of the bat during the bottom half of the frame.

The Wildcats' lone returning senior was just getting started.

Two innings later she came to the plate with the bases full and the Wildcats trailing 4-3, and again erased the Crimson Tide lead with another blast to left - giving her seven runs batted in on just two swings.

The total was just two shy of a UA single-game record that Finch tied with a nine-RBI effort a year ago.

After a slow start at the plate during the exhibition season, a red-hot Finch finished the weekend with six hits and nine RBI.

"I was seeing the ball really well and just trying to get the barrel out and not think about too many mechanics," Finch said of her 3-for-3 afternoon. "With runners on base, I was just trying to hit the ball somewhere hard."

With plenty of run support, Gladding battled through six innings that saw her walk a career-high eight batters but also strike out nine in the 13-5 win.

The opening game of the series set the tone for some of the more unusual events of the weekend, when - after three consecutive exhibition no-hitters - Finch surrendered two hits and two runs in her first inning of the season.

After Finch helped herself with a RBI single in the Wildcat half of the first, Vandergeest ignited the weekend's offensive fireworks with a grand slam over the right field fence off of Alabama's all-American pitcher Shelley Laird. She finished the game with five RBI, and freshman outfielder Courtney Fossatti started her career with a perfect four-hit day in the 8-2 victory.

Finch only allowed a single over the game's final six innings and struck out 10 batters in the opening night win.

Head coach Mike Candrea was left shaking his head several times during the weekend, but in the end he was happy with the outcome of the series that extended the Wildcats' home winning streak to 47 games.

"I think offensively there were a lot of bright spots – especially in the middle of the lineup," Candrea said. "We need to keep making adjustments, but, truthfully, I think that this team is going to be very good."

UMass Sports Briefs

Men's Track

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team garnered 49 points Saturday and finished fourth at the URI Invitational held at Mackal Field House. Leading the way for the Minutemen was junior Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng (Accra, Ghana) who won the 55M dash for the third consecutive week.

Frimpong-Boateng turned in a time of 6:44 seconds, his second-fastest of the season and a shade under his school record 6.37 seconds set Jan. 19, in the 2002 New England Challenge Cup at the Boston University Armory.

Also contributing was senior tri-captain Mike Howell (Haverhill, Mass.) who finished third the 500M run with a time of 1:07.33 and sophomore David Falvey (Billerica, Mass.) who finished sixth overall in the event with a scoring time of 1:07.42.

Other highlights included senior tri-captain Brian Cronin (Weymouth, Mass.) who finished fourth in the 1000M run with a time of 2:29.36 while classmate and tri-captain Sal Nastasi (Merrick, N.Y.) finished sixth overall with a time of 2:30.93. Junior Ken Sheider (Wood Ridge, N.J.) finished third the pole vault at 14'9," and junior Eric Uliano (Haverill, Mass.) finished second in the shot put throwing 49'03.75". UMass also had a season-best time in the 4x800 relay completing it in 8:04.32, good for third overall.

Women's Track

The University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team garnered 94.50 points Saturday, and finished fourth out of seven teams at the URI Invitational held at Mackal Field House. UMass won the weight throw and set a new school record in the pole vault.

Senior co-captain Rhianna DaCruz (Pawtucket, R.I.) cleared 11'6.25" to set a new school record and qualified for the ECAC Championships to be held Mar. 2-3 at the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury, Mass. The old record was set last weekend by DaCruz who cleared 11'6" at Northeastern. DaCruz also holds the top mark in the Atlantic 10 Conference. Overall, DaCruz finished second in the event behind Lauren Contursi of Brown who cleared 11'11.25.

Freshman Christina Bizon (Warwick, R.I.) won the weight throw with a toss of 49'10.50," tying her personal-best, and the fifth-best throw in UMass history.

Senior Sarah Thorn (Gloucester, Mass.) set a new season-low in the mile for the second consecutive week with a time of 5:19.85 and in the 500M dash, senior Jen Tacchias (Wallingford, Pa.) set a new season-best of 1:18.96.

Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Salt Lake City next for UNH hockey players

By Karl-Sven Bertelmann
The New Hampshire (U. New Hampshire)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.H. – You think you know, but you have no idea...

No, this is not another one of those MTV diaries, but some background information on how the women's New Hampshire hockey team is being represented in this year's Olympics in Salt Lake City.

You think you know that our women's hockey program here at UNH is legit as they have been crowned ECAC/EAIAW champions nine times since the league started in the 1979-1980 season, and were National Champions in 1997-1998. But did you know that the current U.S. Women's Olympic ice hockey team has three UNH alumnae on its roster?

Didn't think so.

Tricia Dunn (class of 1996), Karyn Bye ('93), and Sue Merz ('94), are three former UNH women's hockey players that will be wearing the red white and blue come next week, as the USA tries to defend its title in Salt Lake City.

"UNH has been a pretty successful breeding ground for developing national team players," said UNH assistant coach Erin Whitten. "Our program is thrilled to have them represent us, they are three great players."

Dunn (Derry, N.H.) a forward, Bye (River Falls, Wisc.) a defenseman/forward, and Merz (Greenwich, Conn.) a defenseman, were all part of the 1998 Olympic team that won the inaugural women's ice hockey title in Nagano, Japan. Bye was also the assistant captain of the team and led the team in scoring with five goals.

"Karyn (Bye) has a pretty strong shot," said Whitten. "She'll add great size, speed, and leadership to the team.

"Tricia (Dunn) is one of those blue-collar workers," said Whitten. "She's a great role player who will add lots of physical strength and who is very smart with the puck.

"Sue (Merz) is a very talented defenseman," said Whitten. "She's someone who is very crafty, who knows what to do with the puck at the right time."

These three UNH players won't be the only ones representing New Hampshire though, as two other N.H. natives, Tara Mounsey from Concord, N.H. and Katie King from Salem, N.H. will also be on this year's squad, and played on the Nagano team as well. Both attended Brown University.

"These players are definitely doing it for the "love of the game," said Whitten. "I mean this is it. This is the highest level you can achieve as a woman hockey player, there is no NHL for us, so they'll be giving it 100 percent to achieve that ultimate goal (in getting a gold medal)."

The women's Olympic hockey team just finished its pre-Olympic tour Thursday with a 7-1 win over China, and Tricia Dunn chipped in a goal for the U.S. The women's hockey team finished with an outstanding and flawless record of 31-0 during that tour.

USA starts defending its title Tuesday, Feb. 12, against Germany, when the preliminary round starts.

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit

Interested in joining a sorority Rush Chi Omega Tues 8-10 pm wed 5-7 pm for a ride call Joana 549-9624 47 Olympia Dr.

LAST CHANCE TO GO ON DOMESTIC FALL 02 AND SPRING 03!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! Information sessions Wednesdays and Thursdays 5:00-5:45 through February 21 in 614 Goodell or call 545-5351. Final application deadline March 1.

APPARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a new or used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

'92 Geo Prism auto, AC, 70000 k miles $2800 B/O 323-4676

1985 Cadillac Seville excellent condition 50,000 miles like new $4000 firm call 545-4013

1987 Volvo Wagon $1000.00 978-724-0061

1990 Eagle summit $500.00 253-9511

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

Laptop AST Ascentia 200MHZ. Very light. CD Rom, Floppy, bag, many exteras. Windows ME. $400. 413-478-9338 LV Msg

Compaq Presario 5360 with 15" monitor and printer. Call for info. 546-3152. $500 or B.O.

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5797

More than a summer camp, an experience of a lifetime. Trail's End Camp (Beach Lake, PA) –Baseball, Basketball, Golf, Volleyball, Mountain Biking, Tennis, Ropes Course, Hockey, Arts & Crafts (Woodworking, Photography, Fine Arts, Video/Film), Waterfront (Waterskiing, Boat Drive, Canoe, Sailing, Kayaking), Pool Instructors and Male General Counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! www.trailsendcamp.com or 800-408-1404.

Stage hands wanted at Fine Arts Center $6.75/hr. Variable schedule week day availability preferred 9-noon, 1-5pm. Applications at Production Services RM 146 FAC

Office help positions. New Students Program looking for year-round office help. Preferably freshmen and sophomores. Please call 545 4940 for more information and application Deadline is Feb 8.

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMPLOYMENT

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseasreers.com

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for tour guides, student admissions reps and summer orientation counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 8.

FOR SALE

Penny a minute phone cards. Best deal for calling family and friends. Machine in U-Store.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing lessons with retired pro. Djata Bumpus. In Amherst Call 413-731-1450.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David GoodRich (Pmulrey, Emekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_GoodRich@hotmail.com

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

TRAVEL

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 available occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. Plus 10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

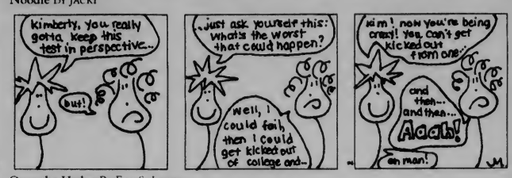
#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

We no longer run fyi's. Please send all briefs to Jessica May, 113 Campus center basement.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Monty By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Noodle By Jacki

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Be who you are and say what you feel, because those who mind don't matter and those who matter don't mind."
–Dr. Seuss

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 35 LOW: 13	HIGH: 31 LOW: 18	HIGH: 37 LOW: 16

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Don't play games today. It's important that you keep things honest and businesslike at all times. You can't afford to lose someone's support.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – If you find yourself away from home today, you'll want to be sure to check in on a regular basis. You can't afford to lose someone's support.

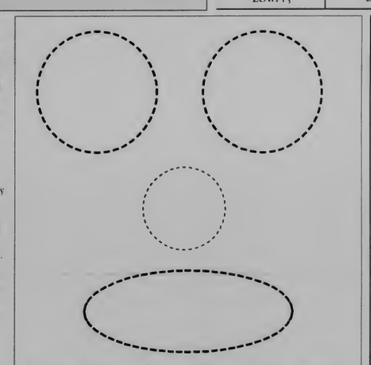
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can avoid monotony today simply by doing what comes to you at any given moment – provided, of course, that you respect another's rules.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may feel as though you're running out of fuel, but the fact is that you have plenty in reserve. The current slowdown is an energy-saver.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may find yourself in a position that requires you to behave in a manner that doesn't come naturally to you at first.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Today, you may have to ease back into a routine that you were accustomed to in the past, but which has not been a part of your day for a while.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Today, you're likely to receive some good news: that you will need to finalize your plans and prepare for something big on the horizon.



VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Anyone who tries to rush you today is in for a big surprise, as you're not likely to take kindly to any such manipulation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Are you waiting for things to happen to you, rather than taking positive steps to ensure that you are able to do what needs to be done?

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – It may be harder than usual today to put your best foot forward. Concentrate on doing things according to the rules, and you'll avoid trouble.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Take a cue from your Scorpio native above, and focus on the big picture today. In this way, you'll have a better idea of what the future holds.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You'll find it easy to progress today, provided you listen to others and concentrate on the few things that you have to get done on schedule.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Farmer Market Soup

Sausage Cacciatore

Ravioli Alfredo

Beans & Rice (vegan)

DINNER

Farmer Market Soup

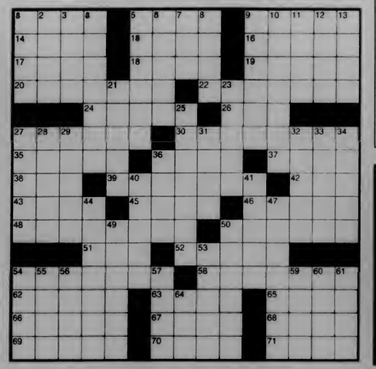
Mandarin Chicken

Roast Beef with Gravy

Garden Burger (W Basics) (vegan)

Mandarin Tofu (vegan)

YOUR AD GOES HERE.



ACROSS
1 Melting-watch artist
5 Tenets
9 Arrow part
14 Important mineral
15 Orange Bowl org.
16 Wahne's greeting
17 — -serve gas sign
18 June honorees
19 NBA coach Pat
20 Require
22 Wailers
24 Sky-high
26 "Vive le —!"
27 Small quake
30 Rained
35 Like an old sock
36 Lloya neighbor
37 Hindu prince
38 All-purpose truck
39 Bring
42 Seine
43 Like early LPs
45 Olden times
46 Mel's Diner waitress
48 "Seven Years in Tibet" star
50 Relies on
51 Bear's digs
52 More certain
54 Supermarket buy
58 Cutting remarks
62 Film award
63 Dappled
65 Listen
66 Quiet
67 Land measure
68 Bullpen stats
69 Unhappily
70 Monster hunter's loch
71 Shoe bottom

DOWN
1 Compact —
2 Territory
3 Relax
4 Excite
5 Not outside
6 Wolf down
7 Impractical
8 Impudent talk
9 Thin
10 Noted Hamlet portrayer
11 Decorated inmate
12 The ex-Mrs Bono
13 Alfalfas
21 Boxer Patterson
23 Wash away
25 Jeans' partners
27 Leaf through
28 Turbine part
29 Actress Verdugo
31 Own
32 San wearers
33 Bail out
34 Goes steady
36 Coagulate
40 Giving the once-over
41 Harder to find
44 Flake
47 Rolls
49 Like teeth
50 Gridiron deals
53 PC owners
54 Throw
55 Is in Madrid
56 Sour
57 Extend across
59 Flying prefix
60 Animal that barks
61 Consumer gds
64 Chill

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

D	O	T	E		P	O	S	T		M	A	C	E
A	X	E	L		R	I	A	T	A		I	G	O	R
M	E	R	E		U	T	T	E	R		N	E	I	L
S	N	I	V	E	L		H	A	M		I	S	L	E
			A	L	E	C		M	A	A	M
F	A	S	T	F	O	O	D		C	R	A	B	B	Y
L	O	P	E		U	K	E	S		C	L	A	R	A
O	R	O		T	E	M	P	E		Y	O	W
S	T	O	O	L		S	O	A	P		N	O	O	N
S	A	N	D	E	D		S	T	A	D	I	U	M	S
			Y	A	R	D		S	U	E	S
W	E	D	S		E	O	N		L	E	E	R	E	D
H	M	O	S		A	G	A	P	E		R	O	D	E
A	I	D	E		M	I	D	S	T		L	U	I	S
T	R	O	Y		S	E	A	T		Y	E	T	I

12.27.01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff

Melissa Hammel

Tibora Gircyc-Blum

Jim Pignatiello

riki Alcid

Mike Kulak
Cara Horowitz
Lizzy Nielsen

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.06.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

Queens of the diamond

DAN SANTILLAN/COLLEGIAN

Softball coach Elaine Sortino heads out to the mound to talk strategy with her entire infield. Her team begins its season this upcoming weekend in the Coca-Cola Classic against No. 1 Arizona.

Spring comes early for No. 24 Minutewomen

By Andy Vogt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An undefeated 19-0 record in conference play. An Atlantic 10 conference championship. A 24 game winning streak – tied for the longest in school history. A berth in the NCAA regional for the eighth straight year. Let an ordinary college softball squad, surpassing these accolades might require nothing short of a miracle.

However, the Massachusetts softball team is not your ordinary college squad.

The Minutewomen (No. 24 in the USA Today/NFCA Coaches poll), who start competition this weekend at the Coca-Cola Classic in Tempe, Ariz., will be more than up to the task of filling the shoes of last year's team, mostly because they return so many members from the 2001 lineup. With 13 of 16 letterwinners returning to the reigning A-10 champions, including two of the top players in the conference, this squad very well could inflict even more damage to unsuspecting opponents.

"We return a seasoned team of veteran players that have tremendous pride in the tradition of the program," head Coach Elaine Sortino said. "We are definitely committed to a mission this year."

"I definitely think that we're going to make it a lot further and we're going to pull off the big wins," senior Jen Hadley said. "Our ultimate goal is the World Series, and I think we're well on our way."

The Maroon and White are led by a strong senior class which includes Hadley, last year's Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Year, and Scooter Wheeler, the reigning A-10 Player of the Year. The team undoubtedly has the talent to repeat as conference champions and has the confidence to complement the talent, but it isn't going to let the successes of 2001 cloud what it is striving for in 2002.

"I think they're confident, but not because of last year," Sortino said. "Who can take away the 2001 Atlantic 10 championship for this team? We can pursue a new one, which is what we're doing."

"Right now we're more involved in playing the game."

"Our expectations are definitely higher with returning so many people," senior Teri Rooney added. "We know how we were last year, and we expect to improve on it."

Rooney and Hadley will be the captains of the Minutewomen for the second straight season. The senior duo provides not only the skills on the field, but the guidance off the field as well, which, according to Sortino, will help this team immeasurably.

"Our upperclassmen have tremendous leadership on this team," she said.

On the field, the Maroon and White are returning two of the conference's premier pitchers in Hadley and junior Kaila Holtz. Hadley will be looking to improve on her 19-win season in which she finished with a minuscule 1.48 ERA. Sortino mentioned how her senior has added two more dangerous pitches to her repertoire, which will make her all the more fearsome for opposing batters.

Holtz, meanwhile, will be able to bring her experience from recently competing with the Canadian National Team to the Minutewomen, something that should help the junior pitcher this campaign.

"The maturity she gained and the competitive edge that she gained coming from making the Canadian National Team over the summer, it's just really helped her mature tremendously," Sortino said.

Jamie Cahalan will be returning as the backstop for the Maroon and White for the second straight year. The sophomore was thrown right into the fray as a newcomer to the team, and "never missed a beat" according to her coach.

"Jamie's a gamer, she's a tremendous catcher and offers great leadership... and has all the qualities you want in a catcher," Sortino said.

The UMass infield is returning all four of its starters from last year, including Wheeler at third base, who will look to duplicate her torrid hitting year at the plate (.333 AVG, 6 HR, 43 RBI). Her batting average was tops in the Atlantic 10, but Sortino said Wheeler shines just as much with the leather as with the bat.

"Scooter is a better defender this year, she's increased her range; you're not going to find a tougher third baseman," Sortino said. "Hopefully she will stay in the same hitting coma she was in last year."

Joining Wheeler will be shortstop Emily Robustelli, a "tremendous leadoff hitter," according to Sortino, as well as second baseman Ashley Bakken and first baseman Brandi Cross.

"Brandi's a very good first baseman in terms of receiving our throws, whether they're good or errant," Sortino said.

The outfield is just as deep, as it features Rooney and Anna Perey, the "queen of hustle" as Sortino calls her. Rooney hit a robust .325 at the plate in 2001, but her real strength lies in her ability to track balls down, not to mention her off-the-field attributes.

"She's a tremendous leader, and has a very strong arm," Sortino said. "While she might not be the fastest centerfielder in the U.S., she gets one of the fastest jumps."

Traditionally, the Minutewomen play the top competition in the United States, and will continue to do so this season. This weekend alone, UMass will compete against some of the best teams in the nation, including No. 1 Arizona, and with Stanford, Cal State-Fullerton, and UNLV coming up. Some of these teams will present a daunting task, which makes playing this type of competition all the more fun.

"We're really excited to get started," Rooney said. "It's a little bit hard right now when we've just been practicing nine days.

"But it will give us a great measure of where we are," she added.

Moreover, having all of the experience of the returnees will give the Minutewomen the confidence to be able to compete with the best of the best.

"Having the experience gets rid of the jitters and the nervousness because we know what to expect," Hadley said.

Ultimately, the team has the mindset for winning, and the talent to back it up. This year's UMass softball team has all the tools to become a winner; now all that is left to do is for the team to go out and prove it.

"Last year was good, but we're definitely setting the bar a bit higher," Rooney said.

DAN SANTILLAN/COLLEGIAN

Sortino and assistant coach Danielle Henderson (pictured here as a player) attempt to come up with a game plan for the defending National Championship Wildcats.

Minutemen try to Duke Duquesne out of victory

Off maybe its most disappointing loss of the season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team hits the hardwood tonight inside Duquesne's A.J. Palumbo Center with hopes of ending its present two-game slide.

Last Saturday in Kingston, R.I., UMass fell, 70-59, to Rhode Island, a team that had lost all but five games to that point. Four days prior, the Minutemen failed to provide Dayton with any sort of threat in an 83-68 Flyer victory.

A loss tonight to the Dukes would send UMass (9-10, 3-5 Atlantic 10) on a 3-game losing streak for the third time this season. Its worst run of failures is five, one that began with Marshall (81-66) on Dec. 29 and ended at Richmond (63-54) on Jan. 16.

And to many, Duquesne doesn't really stack up as a formidable opponent. Coming in at 6-14 (1-8 A-10), the Dukes' record includes an 8-game losing streak that's comprised of all conference losses.

But that run actually ended Saturday in Pittsburgh, Pa. when Duquesne crushed visiting Fordham by a score of 95-66, an impressive victory for such an unsuspecting crew that hadn't won since New Year's Eve (64-48 over George Mason).

In that game, the Dukes shot 61 percent in the first half and went 8-for-16 from behind the 3-point line. Jamal Hunter led four Duquesne players in double figures with a career-high 26 points while Wayne Smith followed with 17 points and 11 rebounds. Kevin Forney chipped in 16 points for the Dukes and Aaron Lovelace scored 15.

"The key for us was the no turnovers [in the first half]," first-year Duquesne coach Danny Nee said. "We just played solid. Fordham never had a run with 3-pointers the whole night. We shot a high percentage because of our defense, which led to layups. I though Jamal Hunter came out and played at a very, very high level. I'd like to think he can do that every time out."

But Fordham's Head Coach Bob Hill wasn't as excited.

"I've never seen anything like that in 34 years of coaching," Hill said. "I thought in the first half we had guys quit. I didn't think they were ready to play. A lot of guys think talent is the answer to all your problems. I tried to get it out of their heads that this would be an easy game. All in all, I'd say this was a major disaster."

Fluke or not, Duquesne should definitely be refreshed come tonight and the Minutemen must we wary of the Dukes' likely lift. UMass relies heavily on its defensive command in the half-court, but with Duquesne's reliance on its full-court pressure and its fresh breath of air, the Minutemen need to stop the Dukes early, build up a quick lead and take the home crowd out of the game. In the past, UMass has tended come out slow, especially on the road. But if it does that tonight, Duquesne will surely be ready to take advantage – especially without Micah Brand in the UMass paint.

Hopefully for the Minutemen, the Rhode Island game was a fluke. Hopefully for them, Shannon Crooks won't shoot 1-for-15 from the field and Kitwana Rhymer won't get into foul trouble. And hopefully Anthony Anderson will continue shooting well from the outside.

Then, hopefully for the Minutemen, history will continue. Duquesne has dropped its last 16 games to UMass since 1991.

-From Staff Reports

GERALD LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks and the rest of the men's hoop team will try and end a two-game losing streak today against Duquesne.

...MANO. CORKY ROMANO. ...TS PAGE

WHAT'S GETTING CUT? ED/OP PAGE 4.

WE NEED TO SCORE SPORTS PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
THURSDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY SIX ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.07.02

TO UNIONIZE OR NOT TO UNIONIZE

By Jennifer Eastwood
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Residential Assistants (RAs) work and live in dormitories across the University of Massachusetts campus. Their roles range from aiding residents in times of need to keeping the order in outright chaotic situations.

In recent years, RAs have begun to speak out against unfair policies and the lack of respect they feel is directed toward their position. Last spring, the majority of RAs on campus signed a petition in favor of unionizing in order to take action against these grievances. The University ruled that such an action was not permissible, so the issue lay low for months in the minds of students as that ruling was contested in court.

On Jan. 18, 2002, a ruling from the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) said students do have a right to vote on whether or not to unionize. That election will now take place on Tuesday, March 5 from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in room 1001 in the Campus Center.

*****

The union, if formed, will fall under the umbrella of the United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW), an international union claiming on their website to be "one of the largest and most diverse unions in North America."

Tim Scott, the union organizer from the Local 2322 chapter of UAW (reported to now represent about 3,000 employees in western Massachusetts), expects to see the RA union come to pass.

"This is definitely winnable," said Scott.

Quite confident. However, do others share his view? Many, even those who have expressed opinions unfavorable to the union, say yes.

"Basically, at this point, the administration anticipates a union election. We'll proceed once that occurs," said Barbara Pitoniak, a University spokeswoman. She did not however provide any further information as to what that procedure would be.

Scott and RAs closely associated with the union formation feel that the most important step now is to get word out to new RAs who entered the program at the beginning of this year.

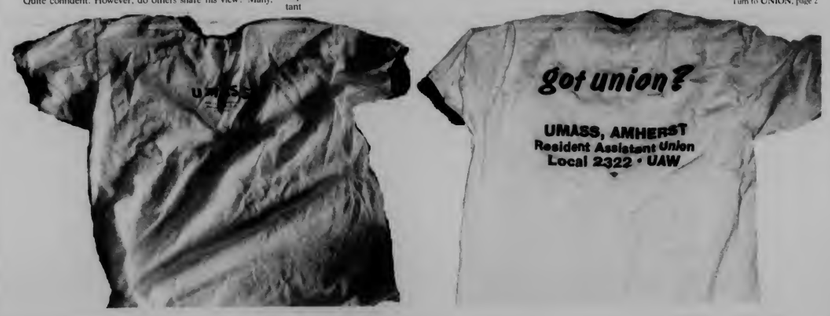
"There're a lot of RAs out there who are new, and we've got a lot of work to do to make sure they are all well informed."

Approximately half of those who signed the petition last spring are new, he noted, so now it's a matter of union members reorganizing to gain the support they once had.

The University however has been in the face of recent budget cuts. Just how do these union supporters feel the cuts will affect their abilities to make change? A panel of RAs in support of the union, accompanied by Scott, attempted to answer.

"We want to work within our means," said Troy LoRusso, a junior Plant and Soil major. "A lot might be worried where this money might come from with all the budget cuts, but the fact is we're paying for our workspace."

More on the workspace later. What about the money?



Scott reported that the union would hope to attain only for what they could fairly negotiate, with no plans on going to any monetary extremes.

Heather Robbins, a sophomore Social Thought and Political Economics major, explained that she was concerned that some fellow RAs might be turned off to the union because of cost. She sought to assure individuals that they would not.

"Housing Services does not show their budget [to RAs] as of now," she began. "Their budget comes from students paying residence fees, and only a low number of that goes towards RAs."

The union, she explained, would examine this budget in order

Turn to UNION, page 2

Fee increase approved for 2002-03 year

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The budget situation for students at the University of Massachusetts just got worse. Yesterday it was announced that fees for the 2002-2003 academic year are to increase.

Following a meeting of the Board of Trustees, the decision was made to hike fees and tuition for undergraduates by seven percent.

For students, this means an additional $386 dollars that will go toward reducing the current fiscal crisis at the school. The new state undergraduate fee and tuition rates are now slated to be $6,482 for the Amherst campus for in-state students.

John Hoey, Director of Communications for the University explained the new fall increase.

"Essentially the Board took a vote to adjust the curriculum fee. That would make tuition and fees $6,482 for an instate undergraduate. We've experienced about $28.5 million in budget cuts in recent months. We've initiated a significant cost cutting initiative," he said. "The University of Massachusetts had, for six years, about the best record for containing student costs. They've gone up 18 percent since 1996, and that's less than inflation."

Inflation has been 19 percent in the area.

Hoey went on to explain that the fee increase effected different campuses in different ways putting more financial burden on students depending upon location.

"The average for all four campuses is $5,801. That is an average increase of $386. It's roughly a seven percent increase," he explained. "Amherst pays more."

This increase falls on the heels of a $495 fee hike implemented last December; this new fee adjustment will come into effect for the Fall 2002 school year.

Other initiatives that were addressed within the meeting included eliminating the foreign language requirement for all students and the potential of combining both majors and departments. The Childcare Center, the Escort Service and the Foreign Language Center have already been closed.

President William Bulger made a statement following the meeting explaining that the Board of Trustees was attempting to both decrease spending while at the same time increasing student fees as a way of dealing with the budget issue.

"We have a fiscal challenge that should not – will not – be addressed on the revenue side alone. To that end, the campuses are going forward with workforce reduction steps that will result in the elimination of 300 positions by the end of the fiscal year," Bulger said. "These actions are painful but necessary."

Aaron Saunders, speaker for the Student Government Association saw these steps as being a burden to students.

"Even though they try to downplay it, the school is no longer affordable," Saunders said. "You can't expect the students to pick up all of the additional cost in a year."

Hoey remained optimistic about the financial burden upon the students, pointing out that the school was still among the most affordable in New England.

"When you count room and board, it is still less expensive than the University of Connecticut, University of Vermont, and the University of Rhode Island. The bottom line reason to why we did this...the University is going to do everything it has to do to maintain the quality of the academic endeavor," he said. "It's a challenging time. It's a manageable situation."

Saunders disagreed, explaining that students have been forced to fight their way into classes. He argued that the quality of the education at UMass would be jeopardized by cuts to the academic sector of the school. He explained that

Turn to BUDGET, page 3

State of the schools

SOM's construction to "build morale" for University

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(This article is the first in a series dedicated to the impact recent budget cuts have had on the nine schools and colleges on campus.)

Monday afternoon, Tom O'Brien was all smiles.

"We've got a wonderful new building on the way," O'Brien was saying. Although its opening has been delayed – "It's going to be ready for the Fall Semester," O'Brien said – the Isenberg School of Management's Dean is excited.

"It's going to boost morale. It's good for the students and it's state of the art."

He was talking about the Harold Alfond Management Center, slated for completion in early August. Currently the only major construction project ongoing at the University, the Center will house four new classrooms, additional meeting and teaching space, and a student center.

But maybe the center's biggest boost will be the morale that O'Brien mentioned – on a campus where department's are getting demolished by cuts, O'Brien's SoM is one of the few departments with something, anything, to look forward too.

Like most departments, O'Brien acknowledged that his greatest concern was losing faculty. But unlike the Music and Dance or Mathematics departments, who expect to lose 12 faculty apiece to retirements and early retirements, O'Brien has already close to thirty percent of SOM's faculty leave over the past few years.

"When I started in the late 1980's, we had something like 75 employees. Now we're down to 57," O'Briend said. Rough estimate on damage that a faculty drop like that does? "We'll graduate 350 in the next few years. That's down from 600 when I first started."

According to O'Brien, SOM has begun the torturous process of rejecting interested majors. Students transferring into the department have also faced difficulty and often rejection. There just aren't enough professors to teach the School's large number of students.

SCOTT LORIVER/DAILY COLLEGIAN

The School of Management construction continues as budget cuts and expense issues arise across the UMass campus

Further complicating O'Brien's day-to-day, he was asked to give $350,000 of his seven million dollar budget back to the school. While most of that loss will be covered through an aggressive fund-raising campaign, the fact remains that faculty leaving the School won't be replaced.

Which is why the new building is the School's current savior.

"It isolates us from the terrible despair," O'Brien said.

Which is one reason the school has taken criticism, both in the pages of this publication and in the under-the-breath-utterances of various members of the University community. The Alfond Center didn't come cheap – SOM had to raise some $12 million to pay for the building. The project was at first aided by the Kresge Foundation. The University picked up the rest of the building's $16.2 million price tag.

Money well spent?

O'Brien contends that the School's area competition – Boston College and the University of Connecticut – have added new buildings while UMass has not.

"Our facilities are subpar,"

Turn to SOM, page 3

union

continued from page 1

to determine what sort of finical situation would be feasible. LoRusso provided as an example that any such union would never ask for a ridicules rise in wages.

"We're residential assistants, not residential-take-their-moneys," he said. "It's just they [Residential Life] are not really affected by budget cuts [since their budget derives from students' housing fees, which have not been altered]."

LoRusso added that the main issue of the union, perhaps even more so than any gain in money itself, is to create an equal playing field for RAs to share their issues with the administration. The RA Council was created for such a purpose, he explained, its goal is to allow RAs to bring their issues to the table and be heard by officials.

"But what we said wasn't taking seriously," LoRusso pointed out.

"With a union, they have to listen to you," Scott added.

Some RAs went to the council meeting a few months ago, asking for some consistency in the procedures of firing an RA, the group told to provide such an example of not being heard. The group, they reported, was "basically told" to stop wasting their time in trying to change policy.

The issues of those in favor of the union range from a raise in wages to a free dorm space to more respect. There are those who argue that these issues can be solved without unionizing. So, what are the messages RAs find in their daily life about union formations in general?

According to the section of the Housing Services website focused towards RAs, three websites for and about RAs nation-wide have been spotlighted as the best sources of information: Residentassistant.com, RAsource and Reslife.Net.

Out of each of these sites, only one article (by Gary Kimble and Dan Ulters-dorf and seen on Residentassistant.com) addressing the theory of an RA union can be found.

"If higher education has any chance for success in achieving its goal of truly educating individuals, then basic concepts like cooperation, collaboration, compromise, and consensus must be seen as effective tools to be learned," Kimble and Ulters-dorf wrote. "The only means of testing those concepts is through making every attempt to utilize, reinforce or apply them. Having student staff work through a union to have their voices heard may not always be the most effective way of accomplishing this."

The authors assured the reader that their article is not meant to minimize RAs' positions or concerns or to speak against union formations. However, the article continued with pointers for RAs to deal with administration without forming a union and questioned whether a union would do more harm than good for RAs. No further commentary on the formation of a union was provided.

So what are the issues those in favor of the union seek? Well, this takes us back to the issue of workspace.

LoRusso explained that the money taken out of RAs' paychecks for housing cost is currently the amount for a double single, even though the extra space in RAs' rooms is defined in their contract as "counseling space," an area in which to sit down and talk with residents who need help at any time of the day.

"I like to use the metaphor, we're like office workers paying for our own cubicles," LoRusso remarked.

RA Kaste Curtis, a senior Economics major, agreed with her comrade, adding that it's a lie to call the room free.

Pat Colvario, also an RA and a senior History and Legal Studies major, explained that another grievance is the fact that a works study program for a student who is an RA must be that RA position, rather than being an RA and having a work study job. He said that such logic actually hinders those with less financial security.

"So you can't go out and find another works-study job," Colvario added. "You become an RA, your financial aid packet becomes reduced."

He provided the example of RAs' duties of this past weekend during the Super Bowl. RAs were notified on the Wednesday before the famed football game that they had to remain in their dorm buildings on duty during the hours of the Super Bowl or go to the Mullins Center to supervise, providing their residents accompanied them.

"I don't think it's that we don't want to fulfill a duty asked of us," Robbins said, remarking on why this is considered such a dire grievance. "It's that we weren't told till the last minute, and..."

"...Some of us had made plans for the day," Curtis finished her thought.

The reason RAs could be legitimately notified at a late date was due to the "memo of understanding" each RA must sign upon accepting the position, which mandates that RAs can be told to do "anything" at the last minute. This is something these union supporters plan on rendering.

Rendering cannot begin however without the union itself.

A representative of the MLRC, a state agency that oversees state employees like that of UMass, will conduct the election as a neutral party to ensure a fair election. An RA observer, chosen by the organizing committee, and an observer from the University administration will both be present as well. The vote will be a secret ballad election. RAs must vote in favor of the union with a rate of 50 percent plus one.

In preparation, RAs were informed about the logistics of unionizing and the upcoming vote a meeting held for all RAs last weekend (in which local UAW members helped those RAs in support of the union in the program). The question on many students' minds seemed to be the required dues.

According to Scott, once a union vote is affirmed, RAs in the union pick a bargaining committee. That committee would then sit down with the UAW and review various proposals on the amount of member dues until an agreement can be reached.

The stipulation for the local chapter of the UAW is 2 percent of a member's gross income. However, this amount is only a starting point for the bargaining. No RA would pay any amount to the UAW until a ratified contract can be met.

"In all our cases though, members' pay increases [with the union formation] offset the dues," said Scott.

Robbins noted that the specifics of the union contracts would come into place only after the union would be voted upon. So now the group of supporters begins its work on getting the union put into place.

"We've had such a high turnover rate in RA jobs this year," Robbins said. "There's lots of new RAs since last year, so a big part of what to do now is to talk to RAs who haven't been following this from the beginning and didn't sign the petition last spring."

Scott looks forward to getting more people get involved, adding that after all, "a union relies on member's participation."

The consensus of the union-supporting forum was that the situation looks hopeful for them and that they look forward to generating as much support as possible.

"There's nothing to loose," Robbins continued. "It's a very simple thing to move yes on behalf [of the union]. Up to this point, there's been a lot of questions and uncertainty, but it's very simple to mark yes to something that will benefit you and those who will come after you."

Colvario, who has been involved with the possible formation of the union since its early stages, noted that the movement has crossed political ideological lines.

"Most people associate 'a union' with liberal and Democrat-thinking, but I've had students who consider themselves conservative come up and ask me when the vote is and say they are going to vote yes," he explained. "This is just the right thing to do. With a union, students will get a better degree of service. Statistics show that members of a union perform their job better than those not."

As the date of the vote approaches, RAs across campus take in the information provided to them by supporters like Colvario and decide whether or not a union is something they wish to support.

Perhaps they will look towards already existing union organizations on campus such as Graduate Student Organization, which has been in formation as a part of UAW for 12 years and is an organization that Scott hopes to see support – possible – fellow union members in solidarity. Perhaps their heads will turn and look more at the financial repercussions. Or perhaps they have a story to tell that is the basis of their decision for or against the union. Whatever, the reasoning behind their choice, these UMass students will vote on something that can potentially affect this University or even the country for years to come.

COMMENT ANYONE?

How do Residence Directors (RDs), being that they train and supervise a Residential Assistant (RA) staff ranging from eight to 24 students, feel about the possible formation of an undergraduate RA union? The search began on Tuesday afternoon and carried on through Wednesday to find out. Their responses are listed below in alphabetical order.

Derek Bratten*, RD of Cashin Cluster:
No comment.

Abdul Jaradat*, RD of McNamara Cluster:
"We're still thinking about it. I don't knew... We're all in the process of talking about it. I'm not sure yet... it's their [RAs'] right, but I haven't seen anything clear yet. We will wait and see."

Jennifer Hurst*, RD of John Adams Cluster:
Leaving office when reached and said left with no time to comment.

Shari Lamont*, RD of Crabtree/Knowlton/Mary Lyon Cluster:
"Honestly, I don't really have an opinion on the matter. Even a lot of my RAs on staff aren't talking about it."

Kathy Murphy*, RD of Patterson/MacKimmie Cluster:
"I really think you're hitting a bad source. We really don't have that much information, other than putting information out there for the RAs to know what's going on."

Jessica Osit*, RD of Gorman/Wheeler Cluster:
No comment.

Eunice Ro*, RD of Thatcher/Lewis/Johnsen Cluster:
"I don't really have any comment."

Jennie Seyer*, RD of Dickinson/Webster Cluster:
"I really don't have any comment."

Susan St. John*, RD of James/Emerson Cluster:
"I actually would prefer not to comment."

Sam Tabari*, RD of Krett/Brooks Cluster:
In a meeting when reached and unavailable to talk as of press time.

RDs of the remaining clusters, listed alphabetically, could not be reached for comment as of press time: Baker/Chadbourne/Greenough Cluster; Brown Cluster; Coess Cluster; Coolidge Cluster; Grayson/Field Cluster; John Quincy Adams Cluster; Kennedy Cluster; Melville/Thoreau Cluster; Leach/Hamlin/Dwight Cluster; Pierpont/Moore Cluster; Van Meter/Butterfield Cluster; Washington Cluster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the World Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri World Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Eilen Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginczye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

COMING SOON...VALENTINE'S DAY!

Whether you...
Want to be funny/play a joke • Want to make a good friend smile
Be a secret admirer • Want to say a little "I love you"

Reserve Your Valentine's Day Collegian Personal by Tuesday, February 12th for the Collegian's Thursday, February 14th Valentine's Day Issue.

For more information call the Collegian @ 545-3500
Drop off order forms @ Collegian in the Campus Center basement or mail to 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003 (by 2/12)

Client _____ Date: _____ Taken By: Office Use Only
Date to run: February 12, 2002 Headline: Personals
S.S.# _____ Total Words: _____ X .10c rate = _____
Total Cost (w/specials) _____ Authorized signature: _____

Specials

Free Red Spot Color w/purchase of a graphic — Graphic #1
$2 Heart Graphic at Beginning & End — Graphic #2
$4 Heart Graphic Border — Graphic #3
$5 Heart Shadowed Behind Message — Graphic #4

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN/UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
VALENTINE'S DAY CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING INSERTION ORDER

Cash ❑ Check # _____ VISA/MC# _____ Exp. _____

ADVERTISING COPY

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Insert one character, space, or punctuation mark per box - use capital letters where they apply - Cost figured on each line of form used

It's the Annual Campus-Wide Career Fair!

Wednesday, February 13, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Full Time Opportunities for Graduating Students

All Majors Welcome

Bring your resume on diskette to register online at the fair!

Campus Career Network

Presented by the Campus Career Network
For more information, call 545-2224 or see our web page www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

budget

continued from page 1

while the school was still listed as the second most affordable in New England, that the quality of education was significantly diminished.

"Even though they downplay it, the school may cost less but we are providing less," Saunders said. "We need more creative ways to go about dealing with these budget cuts."

As an alternative solution, the SGA is suggesting that the University start making cuts to the salaries of the administrators rather than force academics to face cuts. They are suggesting that non-academic and non-unionized staff face pay cuts and change the types of raise options available to them in order to help with the budget issue.

"We are going to lose nearly 100 professors," Saunders explained, addressing the effects of the early retirement program. "The administrators have not been touched."

Saunders also emphasized the need for student involvement in preventing academic budget cuts.

"What we need to do as students is get out there and talk to the state legislators," he said.

Ken Campbell contributed to this story.

SOM

continued from page 1

O'Brien says, quickly adding that the School's teaching, "is superb."

But the fact remains: the money the University bonded to pay for the Alfond addition is almost a quarter of the $15 million gone from this year's budget. Would UMass have had that money to defray the budget cuts had it not invested in the Center?

Probably not.

Besides, O'Brien charges that the money spent on his addition was similarly spent to build the new Polymer Research Center and the new Computer Science building. He also says that, while there might be critics of the University's expenditure on campus, none have approached him.

If they did, SoM's Dean has precious time to respond to criticism; his new fundraising project is about to begin. What with the loss of faculty over the last decade – SoM has only three non-tenured faculty working for it now – the School's new fundraising goal is designed to fund new junior faculty.

And that's O'Brien's top priority: faculty.

"We have a new building that gives us the ability to house the numbers of faculty we once had," he said. He'd love to get back to those earlier faculty figures, he says, but acknowledges that no more money will be forthcoming from the University's administration.

"There's no goodie locker. There's no hidden source of golden doubloons," he said. Not that it gets him down. O'Brien is an economist and foresaw the cuts. "There are always seven fat years and seven lean years. We've hit the lean years."

"We'll get through this someday," he said, quick to acknowledge the current condition of the University, "but yeah, it's tough now."

Heli-travel
The UMASS ROTC cadets traveled to Westover Air Force Base by helicopter as part of their in-school military training.

U. Rhode Island Women's Studies Colloquium focuses on sex industry

By Greg Elias
The Good Five Cent Cigar (U. Rhode Island)

(U-WIRE) KINGSTON, R.I. - Believe it or not, the international trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children is a multi-billion dollar industry. Mail order brides and "romance tours" are a reality, with the women involved often becoming victims of violence, threats, and even forms of slavery.

On Tuesday evening, the most recent installment of the annual Dana Sugar Women's Studies Spring Colloquium took place in the Galanti Lounge at the University of Rhode Island. This year's speaker, Donna M. Hughes, the Carlson Endowed Chair of the URI Women's Studies program, gave a presentation on transnational sex commerce in a lecture titled "Meeting Men's Demand: Trafficking Women for the Sex Industry."

Hughes, who has given presentations to the United Nations, and whose research has been funded by the National Institute of Justice, put forth her years of research in an hour long presentation.

The trafficking of women for prostitution and "new forms of slavery" is a multi billion dollar global market, Hughes said. There are few industrial pitfalls, as it is both highly profitable and low risk for those involved, with the money going to the transnational networks of traffickers, pimps and corrupt officials within governments involved with the network.

Hughes also said that the industry, like any other, is based on supply and demand. There are sending countries and receiving countries, and both have telltale characteristics.

"Sending" countries are quite often poverty stricken and wrought with unemployment. With little offer of a future, women accept offers of employment in other nations, thinking their lives could not be worse.

The majority of the sending nations are those in Eastern Europe and Asia, where the breakup of the former Soviet Union has left a lawless land and scarce opportunity. This facilitates the ease of trafficking and makes these countries prime targets for those looking to move in and exploit the women there who are looking for any opportunity.

More often than not, women do not know what they are signing on for, and could never expect that they would be exploited, beaten, raped and enslaved when they are transported to their destinations.

The number of women (and children) involved in trafficking annually is difficult to determine, but estimates from the United Nations have the number at 700,000 to 2 million, with most coming from the former Soviet Union. The CIA has estimated that 50,000 women and children are trafficked into the United States each year, but they will not confirm how they came to this number.

Women are recruited through public ads for low-skill/high paying jobs, and often are lured in through modeling jobs and women who have come back into the system to recruit.

Once they are into the network and have been trafficked to the receiving nations, women find it difficult to leave, with the use of violence, confinement, threats against family, and debt all keeping them tied to their new, unwanted lives. They get to keep very little of the money they make, as most of it goes toward their travel expenses and the repayment of the buying price their trafficker paid for them.

If they do somehow make it back to their sending nation, women are often resold many times to different pimps who then force them into situations similar to the ones they managed to leave.

Hughes attributed the lack of knowledge of these organizations to what she calls the "patriarchal attitudes and laws that exist on a global scale."

There is often little sympathy for victims, who are treated as victims and illegal immigrants by the nations who received them, and as a result an attitude forms that the women are willing victims, and they are often the ones blamed.

The prospect for change is a real one, however, and Hughes believes it starts with nations pressuring their governments to realize that trafficking is a global issue with far-reaching negative implications.

"We have two important tools right now, and that is the new United Nations Transnational Organized Crime Convention [which outlined new laws, in particular regarding trafficking and exploitation of women and children]," Hughes said. "We also need to pressure countries around the world to ratify it."

"There were just hearings in Congress in November which involved testimony that the Bush administration is not moving fast enough to implement the laws. One of the things we can do is make sure the tools that now exist, and were hard fought for, are being used," Hughes added.

Another issue Hughes said is overlooked is the issue of demand, which is what primarily keeps the trafficking network alive.

"I think another thing that we could do is start to talk about the demand, because I think a lot of people will say 'we could do a lot to reduce sending countries but we're really not going to be able to completely solve the problem until we get out the demand,'" Hughes said. "That being said, I think there still needs to be a lot of money spent in sending countries on awareness and prevention programs."

Hughes believes that the first and most important step in the fight against the trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children is education. Most people don't understand the magnitude of the problem, and the only way to change that is to increase understanding of what is really going on, and how far reaching it is.

"There has been so much legitimization of the sex industry that people don't see the harm," said Hughes. "All kind of education and awareness helps."

WRITE FOR NEWS!

Come talk to Catherine, Ken, or Melissa.

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com

POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS

549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

Have you ever taken a boring class?

What about a great class?

Why not share your opinions with other students?

Wouldn't it be helpful to see what other students are saying about classes, fraternities & sororities, off-campus housing, music, movies, local businesses and much more...

Before it's to late?

TheUndergroundWire.com
Helping you make the most of your campus.

Attention: Science Majors

Explore a career in Alternative Healthcare

College of Chiropractic (Doctor of Chiropractic)
- ▸ First University-based Chiropractic College in the United States
- ▸ Accelerated Science Pre-requisite Program Available
- ▸ Only Chiropractic College located in New England and the greater New York metropolitan area

College of Naturopathic Medicine (Naturopathic Physician)
- ▸ Only College of Naturopathic Medicine that is part of a major University
- ▸ Clinical Experience and Integrative Care Setting
- ▸ Only college on East Coast and one of only four in the United States offering this degree

For more information and an application:

▸College of Chiropractic
1-888-UB-CHIRO
e-mail: chiro@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/chiro

▸College of Naturopathic Medicine
(203) 576-4108
e-mail: natmed@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/naturopathy

UNIVERSITY OF BRIDGEPORT

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.07.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Student fees increase

As budget plummets

A story in the Boston Globe yesterday reported that the University of Massachusetts plans to increase student fees by at least 10 percent beginning in the 2002-03 academic calendar. The hike in fees, which comes after the $495 addition that landed this semester, is just one of many potential remedies being constructed to help offset the budget cuts currently bearing down on the UMass system.

According to the Globe, the new fee would become a permanent student charge under the new tuition-and-fees plan proposed by President William M. Bulger, and will affect nearly 58,000 students attending to their higher education at a University location.

As frustrating as that is in itself, simple math paints it even darker: an annual cost that may top $6,000 in the fall, compared to the $5,200 that stood nearly two months ago. The national average for combined tuition and fees is $4,200, which places UMass in the upper echelon, cost-wise, of public higher-education institutions. These aren't opinions or conclusions sparked by bias or anger; rather, they represent a disappointing truth each of us will have to face.

Also significant is the proposed elimination of the foreign language requirement, which currently insists that thousands of students work through four semesters of a language and display adequate proficiency. A cut here would markedly reduce the course offerings and allow the rapidly shrinking budget some room to breathe.

Most unsettling, however, are the continued losses that existing departments and majors will suffer.

"This is the worst financial crisis in 30 years," secretary of the UMass faculty senate Ernest May told the Globe. "Basically our problems are of such a magnitude that it requires reinventing the entire university."

Where that reinvention begins or is ultimately headed remains unclear. The only "reinvention" students on this campus have seen so far are the cutbacks, the professors opting for early-retirement and the disintegration of necessities, from computer labs to the escort service. And now, of course, that includes the increased fees.

We've written this before. It's been said a hundred different ways, between professors and students, between classes, and between the front and back pages of this newspaper. The repetition only reflects the repeated actions that are weighing on us all: anticipating the world upon entrance here, students are ultimately paying more for less. If that trend continues, what's the incentive for any student to apply here?

What's the incentive to even stay?

Information from Boston.com was used in this article

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Here's the chance to be heard

CARA BEDICK

Attention all UMass students! There will be a rally today at 6 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center! It's going to be the biggest riot in the history of UMass! It's the place to be!

Now that I have your attention, it's time to be honest. There isn't going to be any riot today, as far as I know. I am writing this because by taking a look at the coverage of this weekend's past events on campus I have come to the conclusion that UMass students are apathetic. So I told a little, white lie to get you to come on down to the Student Center at 6 p.m. tonight.

I'm doing the reason why I'm resorting to this occasion is BIG-TIME: Since the Patriots winning the Super Bowl. Take a breath everybody. I know that's hard to believe.

Even if there's going to be a riot, I bet a dozen has been put together by the SGA in order to enable maximum student participation, all members of the UMass community along with our representatives will talk about how the budget cuts [illegible] will affect [illegible] when you return to campus next semester.

This is why it is so important to attend the riot. I mean forum, tonight at 6 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center. I can't promise that anyone will flash you, but it's sure to be the event of the semester. Don't allow your safety to be put at risk due to the whims of the administration.

Did you know that members of the security force/escort service sent a five page letter to the chancellor questioning that their department was being cut not due to budget cuts, but in retaliation for union activities? I picked that up from just sitting in the escort service van, and by having a conversation with the driver.

Listen to what is going on around you. Keep up with action on campus. Attend this meeting tonight, and if you can't — tell your friend about it. Make sure that we are represented at this meeting tonight. The only way to ensure that our voices are heard and taken seriously is in masses. The Southwest riot over the Super Bowl made headlines in newspapers all over Massachusetts. Why shouldn't we make headlines over something so important as our education and safety?

Cara Bedick is a UMass student.

The downward spiral of UMass

ROB SCHULTZE

You know it's time to graduate when you think to yourself about how things were so much better when you first started college. I just feel bad for people who are still stuck here for a couple years.

I mean, really, I recall the biggest concerns on campus in the fall of '98 being Bruiser Flint, the ugliness of the repairs on the Chapel, and a raise in the prices of parking stickers. I never thought, that September when I was 17, what I'd live through in the next four years.

There was the controversy over changing admissions standards to decrease the weight given to race. The campus was split; people were literally fighting each other. The word 'racist' was tossed around like a Whiffle ball.

Many won't believe it, but there was a time when rioting was not taken for granted. I remember the first time it happened after the Sox game in '99; I was living in Dickinson on Orchard Hill and heard the roar of the crowd from my seventh floor room like they were sitting in bed with me. And that was ORCHARD HILL, goddamn geeksville – when word of what had happened in Southwest got around, it was amazing. Now it's a truly pathetic tradition for idiots to crowd the pyramids and chant and burn things whenever the power goes out or a Boston team wins/loses or the NASDAQ drops a slight percentage or a freshman girl from a tower actually consumes a square meal without subsequently tossing it right back up. Can't have eating, you know; frat guys won't want to bang you if you aren't unhealthily underweight, and that would be the real tragedy.

That same year, '99-00, was when the campus was paralyzed by fear of rape. No one seems to remember this, but I'll never be able to get the memories out of my head. I remember walking girls home from my job at the DC because it was considered unsafe for them to be alone on campus at night. I remember the looks I'd get, looks of suspicion or even just outright terror, if I chanced to be out at night alone and passed a girl going the other way. Was I the guy? Was it her turn to be violated? No one knew; that's what was so scary. No one was ever caught; no one's even sure anything happened at all now. Even now when I'm driving through campus late at night and see the drunk chicks swaying, trying to stand up, all alone on the way home, I get a shiver. Because no one remembers. And that makes it easier for it to happen again.

> "...there has even been an erosion in the quality of the little things that made UMass so special."

Aside from such serious things like that, there has even been an erosion in the quality of the little things that made UMass so special. The Campus Center used to be a cool place to hang out, with a real variety of places to spend a couple of hours in the afternoon between classes, each with its own personality. First the messed up the Bluewall, but that was not a big deal; it was always the McDonalds of the Campus Center anyways, and no one really cared. Then the Hatch went tits-up, with fast food coming in, the grill going from short order to premade food and then closed altogether, and the sandwich shop buried under a layer of cobwebs. That I minded a little, but at least I still had my favorite.

Then they took my Coffee Shop away from me, and for that there can be no forgiveness. The Campus Center is a hollow wasteland without my Zane-crafted cheese omelet with white toast and lukewarm home fries. The Coffee Shop is now identical to the Bluewall grill which is the exact same thing as the Hatch grill, and they all suck. I don't know where Zane went; hopefully he found someplace where his godlike spatula abilities were properly revered, but I will miss him and his ever-present threat of physical violence. R.I.P., Coffee Shop.

There's more. The selling out of the UMass stores to private industries. Faculty cuts. Deferred maintenance. This year's assortment of garbage: budget cuts, layoffs, day-care closings, the games room going bye-bye, fees increase, and all the rest. It really is a bittersweet ending to a college career at an institution that will always have my affection.

Let's look on the bright side, though: wearing a pastel vest over an Abercrombie shirt with stripes down the sleeves finally went out of style around the turn of the century. And that's something we can all be thankful for.

Rob Schultze is a Collegian Columnist.

A training in love

SHARON STIMPFEL

"The early bird catches the worm."

It's funny how such a common expression can hold a renewed sense of power in the utterance of a ticket man at the Dublin Centre Train Station.

The 9:15 morning express to Cork was almost always stirring with commuter traffic at least 15 minutes before departure. That is, even even the most lenient of us don't really mind being stuck in an elevator for an hour and a half, no matter how charming those who we are stuck with are.

So now that 26 percent of the from-the-reformed public safety people on campus are being eliminated due to budget cuts, where does that leave the next students who get stuck in an elevator? Will they be stuck there for three hours? An entire day?

The security force not only helps out with elevator problems, but with people who get hurt (we all know that New England ice is killer). They also patrol the dorm areas to keep us safe, and man our escort service that makes sure that we arrive to and from our destinations safely.

Budget cuts may not sound so interesting, but phrases like "trapped in an elevator," "unsafe living conditions," and "riot" catch the eye. When the Patriots won the Super Bowl, did people wait days, weeks, until the next Super Bowl to celebrate? We know the budget will be cut NOW. We need to do something NOW. We can't sit around and wait until all of our services are taken away from us to act. Our security force is being eliminated, and in the words of whoever wrote the security alert flyers that are being handed out at the DC's and on the Escort Service, 'u're paying the bill with your very own safety.

Safety isn't the only issue here. Child care is being attacked as well as various departments on campus. Speak to your professors – everyone is affected by these cuts. You may not be feeling it now, but you definitely will when you return to campus next semester.

This is why it is so important to attend the riot. I mean forum, tonight at 6 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center. I can't promise that anyone will flash you, but it's sure to be the event of the semester. Don't allow your safety to be put at risk due to the whims of the administration.

Did you know that members of the security force/escort service sent a five page letter to the chancellor questioning that their department was being cut not due to budget cuts, but in retaliation for union activities? I picked that up from just sitting in the escort service van, and by having a conversation with the driver.

Listen to what is going on around you. Keep up with action on campus. Attend this meeting tonight, and if you can't — tell your friend about it. Make sure that we are represented at this meeting tonight. The only way to ensure that our voices are heard and taken seriously is in masses. The Southwest riot over the Super Bowl made headlines in newspapers all over Massachusetts. Why shouldn't we make headlines over something so important as our education and safety?

Cara Bedick is a UMass student.

Of course my (don't-leave-home-without-it) list of reasons why I shouldn't be facing such absurd injustices, in this case not being guaranteed a seat on the 9:15, proved as blank as the face the ticket man returned to me after standing on line for five minutes fumbling with my words and fidgeting with my money.

And just as anything or anyone appears different once the light of meaning is cast upon it, I use the reality of this trite phrase, "The early bird catches its worm," to secure a position with my readership. I awake at the dawning of cupid and his large and pointed arrow to share with you some thoughts for Valentines Day.

It's only now that I wish I had taken a note of his name. As they always say, "Hindsight is 20/20." Let's call him TM (Ticket Master) for the sake of this article.

TM taught me more than how to make a cliché fresh again. Ah, yes.

Taking my appropriate seat, on the platform bench in wait for the 10:35 train, I began to use my time imaginatively and think of a metaphorical advice piece to pass on to my cousin Rosemarie, who's last letter I had received plagued me with confusion.

A beautiful girl of twenty-four, quite the charmer with the gentlemen, and lovable in countless ways, Rosemarie claimed a life of predestined spinsterhood, as she has waited long enough for love to find her. Lest we forget, the all-too-famous vision of the "always-here-for-you" quirky kitten she will have perched on the windowsill, awaiting her day's return, I wrote:

Rose,

Finding love is in many ways like catching a train. Opportunities arrive on the hour. The key is to know ahead of time where it is you're going. Destination, my pet. If in fact, you feel it is somewhere you want to be, or somewhere everyone's telling you that you should be. If, indeed, you are ready to catch the train at all. Sometimes the asking price is too much.

You see, people catch trains all of the time. Sometimes one might have the misfortune of missing their train. That is why it is important to be waiting at the right gate. Trains just don't find you – you have to meet them halfway.

Don't fret a missed train, though. Perhaps it was meant to be missed. It could have been 'smoking seats only', and I know how you hate the stench of smoke on your clothes.

The beauty is, it won't be long before another train presents itself. So it might not be B58. D19 is known to have the more scenic route, however... You could always get off at the first stop if you feel a change of heart. But if it's B58 you feel somehow compelled to catch, then give it some time. It might be discovering the rolling hills of Galway or the valleys of Connemara on its present journey, but when your time comes to meet up again you'll both be better for it. Maybe B58 will finally have that "seemingly daunting" light FM love songs feature installed for passenger satisfaction. Maybe you will have learned to be the low-hassle, traveling light sort of gal – at last able to leave all that needless baggage behind.

It's not catching the train you must concern yourself with, Rosemarie.

The art lies in what you do while you're waiting for your train. And simply this, don't wait! Do you know how much longer the wait seems when all you are is anticipating its arrival? Ages and ages and a lifetime. That's where I find you and that last letter of yours, with your fat forever feline. Read up on the news, grab a cup of coffee, and strike up a conversation with the nearest interesting character to you (TM always has one catch-phrase or another to share).

Grow. Learn. Be.

Whistle, whistle, Chug, chug. It always rolls into view when you least expect it. Take time for yourself in the meanwhile. For although finding love has with it many wonders, it's all about sharing your arm and elbow room on the train. Embrace the single life.

Your "Dimishly Delighted" cuz

Sharon Stimpfle is a Collegian Columnist.

ARTS CRAP

<page_5>

Siegfried?

Roy?

St. Louis?

Hilarium?

Layout: Niki Algio

The Collegian's fringe benefits

By Michael Delano
CRAP BARON

Working for a college media outlet has its obvious perks. But when the illicit sex, recreational drug use and purchasing of elected officials becomes tiresome, one is left with the crap. All sorts of crap has been mailed to the Collegian offices over the years, its sole purpose to smash productivity and awe the entire staff with its general hideousness. From horrifying CDs to shocking apparel, publicity hounds nationwide have been merciless in subjecting the Collegian to their very worst. The anomalous Zobmondo!! book and the questionable value of the board game Hilarium!, both examined on this cover page, are only recent additions to the ever-growing heap. Here are some lowlights from years gone by:

The Corky Romano mask

Many nationwide thought, incorrectly, that the release of Chris Kattan's film Corky Romano signified both the insufferable beginning and humane ending to all things Corky Romano-related. Not so, as a Popsicle-stick mounted cardboard mask of Corky, with eyes and mouth punched out for maximum terror, was sent by the studio to ensure that scenes from the film can be acted out at the maniacal mask-wearers leisure.

Out Cold posters

Eventually the publicity people in Hollywood realized that the Collegian's extensive reviewing and previewing of their various product wasn't sufficient when we could be sending each other The Royal Tenenbaums postcards or plastering the walls with Out Cold posters. So we received a big ol' stack of both, but the glut of Out Cold posters remain the most offensive of the bunch, as the studio rudely assumed that we students needed an incentive to go see such a deliciously madcap comedy romp!

Siegfried & Roy pictures

The first time former Collegian editor-in-chief Seth Koenig received an envelope of unexplained photos from sassy Las Vegas stalwarts Siegfried & Roy, it was funny. The fourth or fifth time the same package arrived, always showcasing the two tiger tamers flanking a different horrified celebrity, plans were made for 'adjustments' among newsroom personnel.

First Love

Although overshadowed by the superior 2gether, boyband juggernaut First Love didn't even have to parody the bosband lifestyle to

Turn to INTRO, page 6

Would you rather...?

By Shauna Billings
CRAP DUCHESS

ZOBMONDO!!
Randy Horn
Workman Publishing

Okay, answer me this – "Would you rather... have frequent spurts of uncontrollable drooling – or – be a bed wetter?" Yeah, it is a tough one. Ben Joseph, a senior Political Science major chose the drooling option, as he prefers not to sleep in his own filth.

ZOBMONDO!! not only serves to irk grammaticists everywhere (it's either one or three exclamation points – never ever two you fools) but it provides hours of disturbing and bizarre conversation for boring dinner parties and those down times in conversations with a friend. Note to readers – perhaps whipping ZOBMONDO!! out of your pocketbook on a date is not the best idea to get the conversation rolling. You may not want to hear the reasoning behind a response to the question, "Would you rather... Shove your whole head into an elephant's butt – or – lick a corpse clean after an autopsy."

What kind of sick and twisted individual would write this garbage? Apparently a guy named Randy Horn. Horn created ZOBMONDO!! the board game as an assignment for an academic competition while studying for his M.B.A. at UCLA. The game, bought by Hasbro, has since sold 180,000 copies (yeah, we'd never heard of it either) and a television series is currently in the works. ("Fear Factor" meets that annoying "You are the weakest link" lady? Doesn't sound like it will do too well.)

So how do people react to these bizarre questions? Horn says, "Watching your family and friends justify and defend their answers is half the fun, the other half is the insight you get into their warped and twisted minds." Hmmm... With a comment like that, some investigative journalism is in order.

"Would you rather... Have a little man that lives in your mouth and incessantly hammers on your teeth with a pick - or – coexist with a small bird that lives on your nose and yanks out your nose hair at its discretion?" David "Flappa" Lipinski, a former UMass exchange student from Australia, replied, "I'd have to go with the nose hair bird, 'cause at least the bird is doing a favor for me sometimes. Plus nothing would piss me off more than someone hammering on my teeth for no reason." Amen.

Turn to ZOBMONDO, page 6

The spirit of St. Louis

By Sam Wilkinson
THE MAJESTY OF CRAP

St. Louis – it's more than the home of the Super Bowl blowing St. Louis Rams.

Thinking that the Massachusetts Daily Collegian had a travel section – which it will...someday – the St. Louis Convention and Visitors Commission sent us a copy of "The 2002 Official St. Louis Visitors Guide." Apparently thinking that Collegian staffers have loads of disposable income, the guidebook was supposed to help us ease into a city that's more than a very large arch.

The Tennessean wrote, "The Arch is only the beginning. Simply stated, St. Louis offers more than most can imagine."

As the natives say, "there's more than meets the Arch."

Or as St. Louis native Nelly likes to say "andelay andelay mama e l e l o o what's poppin' tonight?"

Get the picture?

Nelly isn't the only individual rocking the city's bouncing nightlife. According to Woman's World magazine, apparently the national leader on such things, "Once the sun goes down, this river city gets the St. Louis blues." If anybody knows about the wild nightlife, it'd be the crazy Woman's World magazine.

Bank Travel Management said of St. Louis, "recently named America's best sports town, St. Louis is playing to packed crowds." Packed crowds that are watching the teams from "America's best sports town" lose to the Patriots! Woo Patriots! Go! Yeah!

Getting hungry? The Copley News Service warned eaters to "pack your appetite when you come to St. Louis." Indeed, as St. Louis serves more food than anybody else in the United States – and it has exactly 1,000 "one-of-a-kind" restaurants. A nice round number for a nice round city that makes people to have nice round bellies.

Of course, the pride of Missouri, and Southeastern Illinois, isn't all Blues, blues and barbeques – St. Louis is also for lovers...and murderers. The Quad City Times called it a "first class get-away city." That's good for lovers, but especially for murderers – St. Louis led the nation just ten years

Turn to ST. LOUIS, page 6

Rotting In Hilarium's Hell

By Nick Pizzolato
PRINCE OF CRAP

Hilarium. What is it? Well, according to the research and development team at Mattel it's "the game of pandemonium in motion!"

This game of nonstop laughter has been gathering dust since the fall of 2001 down here in the Arts library of crap (which includes various polka CDs, a Dr. Ruth book about college, and first editions of the MTV book line), just waiting for someone bold to attempt and decipher the game that Phil Jackson, Vice President of Games and Puzzles Marketing for Mattel Inc. (a position that is in high demand and the only pre-job training you need is to be around "buzz words" for 20 plus hours) believes "players will love" due to "the fact that winning the game is based not only on their acting skills, but also on their perception of the game being played around them."

According to Jackson you need to be a Mensa member to play this game. Why not just say 'you act what's on the card, and your people guess,' because that's really all this game is. If you take this guy literally, you'll need teams made up of Shakespearian actors and abstract artists, and if this is the case I would like to represent me the team of Sean Connery and Jackson Pollock (and since he's dead I'll settle for Ed Harris).

Hilarium might be fun, but some things are stopping it from achieving higher goals. First of all, it's by Mattel. We know Mattel for creating toys straight from our youth. With

Turn to HILARIUM, page 6

Zobmondo

continued from page 5

Happa, amen.

"Would you rather... Chew on a wild rat's severed tail for a half hour – or – thoroughly brush your teeth with a toothbrush from a prison's community toothbrush bowl?" Lipinski, eager to answer another question responded, "I guess the teeth brushing. Just because they are criminals it doesn't mean that they neglect their teeth. So it is probably way more hygienic." Theoretically, yes – but when you're serving three life sentences, are you really going to worry about flossing?

When asked, "Would you rather... have two fingers cut off each hand – or – lose 1/3 of the length of your penis?" male Collegian staff members answered with a resounding, "Yes" to the finger option. "I would cut off my middle and ring fingers," said one staffer. "Then I could make the sign of the devil, surfs up or that "I'm a rocker" symbol." Another male staff member who walked into the middle of the conversation scoffed at their remarks and said, "Take a third. I've got some to spare." Big words, big words.

The very polite Emma Thomas, a sophomore Environmental Science major, looked a little frightened when asked, "In a fight, would you rather be armed with an eight-inch knife – or – a crowbar?" Though she's never rumbled with anyone, Thomas picked the crowbar because it would give "more leverage." Beware of gentle looking environmentalists.

Fiona Coxe, a junior Political Science major, and Jeff Goodwin, a senior Communications and Legal Studies major, were barraged with inane ZORMONDO!! questions while they were trying to eat lunch. When asked "Would you rather... Chew a piece of toenail off a dirty man's foot – or – thoroughly lick his unshowered armpit?" the pair responded in kind.

"Somehow I'm leaning towards toenail, but I don't know why," said Coxe. "I think it's just that I don't want my tongue anywhere near a hairy, smelly armpit."

"Definitely the toenail," said Goodwin. "When I used to play basketball, there was this really hairy guy who was always lifting the ball over his head and shoving his hairy, disgusting pits in my face. I'm still scarred from that experience. Damn he smelled."

Yup – nothing promotes intelligent conversation like a good ol' fashioned nauseating question. Pick up your own copy for that hot Valentine of yours. No girl wants a dozen roses when she can receive the gift of a conversation like, "Would you rather... Sweat green liquid from your pores – or – fart blue smoke?" Sigh, that is amore, no?

intro

continued from page 5

reach the same comedic heights as their MTV peers (albeit unintentionally, or is it?). Nope, lyrics like, "girl be my lover/ let me discover/ your nasty limits/ and nothin' can stop us now" established their modus operandi quite clearly. Somethin' can stop you guys, and it's called 25 to life if ya don't button it up! Props for sending yours truly an autographed glossy, though, after failing (?) to capture the sarcasm of my review.

Choices: The Movie

The accompanying insult to the tragic Choices: The Album, the movie featured members of Southern rap crew Three Six Mafia 'acting' out a moral fable about avoiding a life of crime. Even sparkplug talent Gangsta Boo couldn't save this ship from sinking. The only bright spot in this dismal tale was the guest appearance by Arts peep Shauna Billings as a depraved underworld kingpin.

St. Louis

continued from page 5

ago and although its standing has slid considerably, down to ninth last year, the city is doing its darndest to make a comeback.

Not as anxious about going, considering the town's horrific crime rate? Be resolved to risk it, especially at the chance to visit any of the town's wacky museums. "St. Louis might be the offbeat attraction capital of America," says the guide. See the Dental Health Museum, the Miniature Museum of Greater St. Louis (where everything's there, just smaller), the International Bowling Museum and Hall of Fame, and the American Kennel Club Museum of the Dog. American Flyer magazine named one of these "the hippest museum on the planet." No kidding.

Does it all seem too far away, too majestic?

We didn't think so either.

Does any of this sound appealing?

We certainly don't think so. Which is why we think it's pretty damned strange to be sent a travel brochure for St. Louis. Most students from Massachusetts head toward the warmth of the Caribbean for trips, not the banks of the beautiful Mississippi.

Hilarium

continued from page 5

exception of Othello (whose slogan "a minute to learn a lifetime to master" is the most accurate slogan ever). UNO (which teaches kids how to team up on one person, just because I...I mean he is the best damn Yahtzee player that ever existed), and Scrabble (also known as the game grandma always brings with her), we know. Mattel is a Barbie, G.I. Joe and Transformers.

See-sully, the game is described as "pandemonium in motion." Too long. Better slogan would be, "play charades and pay $24.99 for it (suggested retail price)."

OK, in all fairness maybe I should actually tell you guys what the game is. It boils down to when you and another person pick a card and start acting out what's on the card, your partners begin going through cards until one of their cards matches yours. That's it. That is the game. However, this brings me to the third problem with this game: it's too complicated. You get money, you get "GOTCHA" cards, and you lose and gain money.

Let's make one thing absolutely clear: charades is brilliant in its simplicity. You pick a topic (movie, people, books) and you act it out while the other team guesses it's not that hard. Mattel has found another way to make money, much like putting a different set of clothes on Barbie and charging an extra 20 dollars as a "collector's edition" (my personal favorite is Barbie in sweat pants with three kids, in a mini-van or Soccer-Mom Barbie). Mattel once again scraped the bottom of the barrel for story ideas.

You know the game is bound for nowhere when these following things happen: the directions state that there may be a sand timer in the box, but you don't need it. I'm sure this was an attempt at humor, but leave the comedy writing to Louis Anderson.

Jackson says in the press release, "This game allows players to let loose and enjoy getting crazy in order to win the loot." First of all, it just said that the execs think this game will work because you "make money." It's not real money. Why do I care? What's my incentive to win this money? Where can I use this money? It's ridiculous. For once I agree with the radicals when they say that money runs our society, because according to the good people at Mattel, charades can't be any fun with out money.

The funny thing is, money is not even needed. You could pitch this game as a drinking game and it would fly off the shelf. College students couldn't get enough of it. It would be bigger than Six Degrees of Kevin Bacon. Mattel would see it being played in every teen comedy and on "Dawson's Creek" every week. Even I would buy it. Suggested title: "Alcoholism."

Super Ratings/ Super Coverage

Last Sunday marked not only perhaps the biggest event in Boston sports history, but also the biggest audience in the 15-year history of the Fox network. Sunday's game between the New England Patriots and the St. Louis Rams scored big with a 33.0 rating/50 share, which means that roughly half the country was watching the big game (I can imagine what the other half was doing), making it the fifth most watched program in television history (the Top 10 are all Super Bowls), and beating last year's Baltimore/New York Super Bowl, which is the sixth most watched show in television history. It was also the most watched of the Patriots' three Super Bowl appearances.

Locally in Boston, the last Sunday's Super Bowl was the third most watched event in Boston's sports history. The top 5 are 1. 1986 World Series, Game 7: Red Sox/Mets, 2. 1975 World Series, Game 7: Red Sox/Reds, 3. Last Sunday's Super Bowl, 4. 1994 Olympics: Women's short program featuring "why me" Nancy Kerrigan vs. Tonya Harding, 5. 1975 World Series, Game 6: Red Sox/Reds.

Fox's coverage of the Super Bowl and the events surrounding it showed why Fox provides the best NFL coverage of any of the networks. The slick production and graphics always give Fox's games a "bigger than life" feel, as compared to CBS's "old man" feel. Speaking of old men, the final ever game call of legendary announcing tandem Pat Summerall and John Madden was what we've come to expect from the two over the years: insightful, but at times rather boring. With little fanfare, Summerall will exit Fox Sports after declining an offer by the network to move down to announcing "B" or "C" teams. Rumor has it that Fox has plans to team their baseball play-by-play man Joe Buck with Madden as Fox's "A" team for NFL coverage starting next year.

Help Wanted: Survivor 5 Contestants

Looking for a new job? Applications are available online through Friday, February 15th at CBS.com to become a "Survivor" contestant. Qualified candidates should be "21 or older and in excellent physical and mental health." All applications should be accompanied by a VHS video, no longer than three minutes, explaining why the applicant would be a great contestant. The taping of "Survivor 5" will take place in June at a thus far un-announced location.

Tempted Not To Watch

Although it's supposedly more entertaining than the first season, ratings have sagged for the second season of Fox's "Temptation Island," aptly titled "Temptation Island 2." While the first season averaged 16 million viewers per episode, this season's numbers have been hovering around the six million mark per episode. "Temptation Island" takes four couples on a island getaway where their fidelities to their significant others are tested as they are exposed to various tempting members of the opposite sex. A slew of theories have been batted around for the soft ratings, from a lead-in "that sucks" according to show producer Jean Michelle Michenaud, to the stiff Thursday night competition from NBC and CBS. The biggest reason for the drop-off besides the stiff competition is the fact that "Temptation Island" is a novelty show.

Historic Documentary

A CBS special scheduled to air on Sunday, March 10th, will feature the only known footage of the first plane hitting the World Trade Towers on September 11th. According to zap2it.com, the images were captured by filmmakers Gedeon and Jules Naudet the morning of September 11th as they were making a documentary about the firefighters at Engine 7, Ladder 1, one of the oldest fire companies in New York. They then followed the firefighters into one of the Towers shooting footage of the rescue effort. President and CEO of CBS Les Moonves told zap2it that "It is not an exaggeration that nothing quite like this has ever been broadcast before."

HBO also has their own Sept. 11 documentary in the works. Titled "In Memoriam: September 11, 2001: New York City," the film includes footage of rescue efforts, with much of it shot by everyday New Yorkers with their own video cameras.

Information from the Boston Globe and zap2it.com was used in this article.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

Dancin' in the Ruins

This Sunday, February 10 at the Academy of Music in Northampton, the Northampton Arts Council continues its "Four Sundays in February" series with the critically acclaimed homage to legendary dancer Martha Graham entitled "Martha @ The Academy."

The show, which was a cult smash in New York City in the fall of 1996 and has since seen the talents of Mikhail Baryshnikov, Merce Cunningham and Murray Louis take the role of narrator to the career of the "Grand Dame of Dance," Martha Graham. In Northampton this Sunday, the role of the storyteller will be Richard Move and will be performed by Martha Grahm Dance company member Katherine Crockett.

Director of the Northampton Arts Council Bob Cilman calls this show "a history lesson of contemporary dance." The show is described as being a satiric restaging of Grahm's epic ballets. The event is committed to presenting both emerging and established artists as well as historical reconstructions. "'Martha @ the Town Hall' series has been a huge hit in New York," said a very exuberant Cilman.

"It evokes and pays tribute to the legendary mother of contemporary dance," said Cilman.

This is a show that Time Out New York called "Richard Moves channeling of the modern dance diva is to brilliant for words." The Village Voice says that it's "sophisticated, dead on, letter perfect parody. A dandy education in modern dance."

Tickets are available at For the Record in Amherst at 104 North Pleasant Street and can be reached at 256-6134 or from the Academy of Music at 584-9032.

The Best Things In Life...

Soprano Jane Bryden with members of the Aulos Ensemble will perform pieces from Montreverdi, Purcell and others at Sweeny Concert Hall, Sage Hall at Smith College on February 9 at 8 p.m. The event is free and open to the public.

FILM SCREENINGS

AMHERST COLLEGE – The "At Human Cost Film Series" will be showing the film In Cold Blood, based on the Truman Capote book, which traces the true story of two drifters who become murdering criminals. It will be shown at the Amherst College Campus Center Theater at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, February 12.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – There will be a showing of Terri Priest and her works of contrasting colors and optical illusions at the Hampden Gallery, Monday through Thursday 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5. The exhibition is free to the public and will run until March 4.

UMASS – An exhibition of work by eight UMass undergraduate students will be on display until Sunday, February 24 at Central Gallery. The gallery is free to the public and open for viewing Monday through Thursday 5 to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5. There will be an opening reception on February 7 from 5 to 7 p.m.

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery will be displaying works of Pioneer Valley self-taught artists from Wednesday, February 13 to Thursday, March 14. It includes paintings, sculpture, photography, drawing and collage. It is available for viewing Monday and Tuesday between 1 and 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday 1 to 5 p.m. There will be an opening reception on February 15 between 5 and 7 p.m. Admission is free.

UMASS – The University Gallery will be showing the exhibition "The Culture of Violence." It showcases works by twenty artists who explore violence in the U.S. and cover timely and controversial issues of war, hate crimes, youth violence, and terrorism. It is available for viewing between the hours of 11 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. during Tuesday through Friday and 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays. The showing is free to all.

AMHERST COLLGE – The Mead Art Museum at Amherst College will present "Casa Manana: The Morrow Collection of Mexican Popular Art." the works exhibit the importance of Mexican Folk Art in American culture. Amherst College alumni Dwight W. Morrow and his wife Elizabeth Cutter have donated the works of art. It runs Friday, February 8 until Saturday, April 21. On February 8 at 4:30 p.m. the exhibition will kick off with a lecture by curator Oles.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

THEATER

UMASS – New WORLD Theater presents the show "On the Difficulty of Sustaining Compassion for Chrome Magnum Man," written and performed by Alberto "Beto" Araiza. This compelling satire tells the story of two brothers at odds because of conflict brought up by their life choices. The show will take place at the East Street Dance Studio at 47 East Street in Hadley at 8 p.m. It is $10 for general admission and $5 for students and seniors.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Amherst College Department of Theater and Dance presents the new comedy TOO MANY PEOPLE IN THIS HOUSE, "a comedy that redefines the meaning of stuffed porcupines on stage." The show combines old-fashioned humor and modern stagecraft when a brother and a sister who live in New York's Greenwich Village look at loyalty, family, love and friendship just to end up saving the world. The performance will take place on February 14, 15, and 16 at 8 p.m. at Kirby Theater at Amherst College. Admission is free but reservations are recommended. To save a place in the audience for yourself call 542-2277 between 1 and 3:30 p.m. and until 8 p.m. on performance nights.

CONCERTS AND DANCE RECITALS

UMASS – On February 21, 22, and 23 The Five College Dance Department Faculty Concert will take place featuring the premier of a commissioned work by Jawole Willa Jo Zollar. The event will take place in Bowker Auditorium in the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. General admission in $12 and for students, seniors and children $5. For reservations call 413-545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS.

SMITH COLLEGE – A program of modern dances by Carol Huncik, Donna Russo and Cheri Soule. The event will take place on February 7, 8, and 9 in theater 14 at Smith College. General admission $7 and students and seniors pay $5.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – The Poetry Center at Smith College will present poet Cornelius Eady. His latest volume entitled "Brutal Imagination," "explores the vision of the black man in white imagination." The event will take place on Tuesday, February 19 in Stoddard Hall Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. A book signing and selling will follow the reading.

AMHERST – On Thursday, February 7 at Food For Thought Books, John Stauffer, author of the new book The Black Hearts of Men, will be having a book reading at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – Poet Ellen Dore Watson will be reading from her new book of poetry called Ladder Music. The event will take place on Wednesday March 13 at 7 p.m.

AUDITIONS

The Country Players will be holding auditions for three one-act plays. The auditions will be held on Saturday, February 23 at the Northfield Church in Northfield from 6 to 7:30 p.m. and on Sunday February 24 at the Shea Theater in Turners Falls from 2 to 3:30 p.m. For more information call Jeanne Closson at (413) 498-2205.

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club

UltimateFitness THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER

Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9

For more information call 253-7571

- Full Aerobics Programs including:
  -Cardio Kickboxing
  -Sports Step
  -and many more
- Nutritonal Consultation
- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & Supplements
- Fitness Testing & Programming

Semester Special $160

- Stairmasters
- Precor Treadmills
- Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
- Lifecycle Upright Bikes
- Precor Crosstrainers
- Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
- Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment "Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"

Arts...bears without...nevermind.

CINEMARK
The best seat in town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
schedule for Fri. 2/1 - Thurs. 2/7
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

Barbados Gal (R) 12:15 4:50 7:45 10:15*	Orange County (PG-13) 12:05 4:35 7:10 9:50
I Am Sam (PG-13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25*	The Royal Tenenbaums (R) 12:20 4:40 7:50 10:30
Kung Pow (PG-13) 12:50 3:55 7:40 9:55*	A Beautiful Mind (PG-13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
The Count of Monte Cristo (PG-13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00*	Lord Of the Rings (PG-13) 12:00 3:45 7:30*
The Mothman Prophecies (PG-13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05*	* - no passes/super savers
A Walk To Remember (PG) 12:25 4:30 7:35 10:20*	Senior Movie 2/7/02 -
Black Hawk Down (R) 12:05 3:50 7:15 10:25	- I Am Sam - doors open at 11:15 a.m.
Snow Dogs (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45

4 DAY BARGAIN MATINEE SALES (NO PASSES ACCEPTED)
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

LIQUORS 44

EVERYDAY PRICING!!!

DOMESTIC ½ KEGS
BUD, BUD LIGHT ..... '49*
COORS LIGHT ..... '48*
MICHELOB, MICH. LIGHT '49*
NATURAL LIGHT & ICE ... '41*
ROLLING ROCK ..... '47*

MICRO BREW ½ KEGS
BERKSHIRE BREWING CO. '88
(STEEL, TRADITIONAL, PORTER, WHITE ALE IPA, BLACK & TAN)
SIERRA NEVADA PALE '112
SAM ADAMS ..... '112
(LAGER, SEASONAL)
HARPOON ..... '99
(LAGER, SEASONAL)
WILLIAMS IRISH RED ..... '73*
DUNDEE HONEY BROWN '60
MAGIC HAT #9 ..... '109
*MUST BE ORDERED IN ADVANCE. ALL KEGS PLUS DEPOSIT

LITE & GENUINE DRAFT 30 12 OZ CANS
30 PACK $17.49 + DEP
KEYSTONE LIGHT 24 12OZ BOTTLES
30 PACK $11.49 + DEP
GUINNESS STOUT & DRAUGHT 6PK BOTTLES
6 PACK $5.99
SAM ADAMS 12PK BOTTLES
12 PACK $9.49
MOLSON 12PK BOTTLES
12 PACK $8.99
MAGIC HAT 6PK BOTTLES
6 PACK $8.99
PABST BLUE RIBBON 24 12OZ BAR BOTTLES
CASE $9.49

FEBRUARY WINE SPECIAL
Australian WINE SALE
FEATURING WYNDHAM & JACOB CREEK WINES
20% OFF ANY 750ML
FETZER CABERNET/MERLOT/CHARDONNAY/FRENCH COLOMBARD 1.5L $12.99
CAVIT PINOT GRIGIO 1.5L $9.99
KENDALL-JACKSON VINTNER'S CHARDONNAY 750ML $9.99
BALLATORE SPUMANTE 750ML $5.49
MARTINI & ROSSI ASTI 750ML $8.99
CARLO ROSSI 4 LTR $6.99

SKYY VODKA 1.75L $21.99
JOSE CUERVO GOLD TEQUILA 1.75L $30.99
FLEISCHMANN'S PREFFERRED 1.75L $11.99
CLAN MACGREGOR SCOTCH 1.75L $13.99
SEAGRAM'S GIN 1.75L $14.99
GOLDSCHLAGER 750ML $15.99
POPOV VODKA 1.75L $11.99

KEG OF THE WEEK
MICH. LIGHT
$47.99 + deposit

HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4555

FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS

DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

All February Murphy's Stout Special

$2.50 PINT THE HARP $3.25 20oz.

Thursday
Urban Family Band
Soukous
Reggae

Saturday
Valley Divas
Cinamon
Shanti w/ Special Geust

163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
(413) 548-6900
Just off the bus route next to Cowl's Lumber

No Cover
"Start Your Own Tradition"

Write for Arts!

Semester Special $179 with valid student ID

The Areas Most Complete Club 2566446

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB

- CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
- CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
- 25 YD. POOL
- AQUA AEROBICS
- FULL COURT BASKETBALL
- VOLLEYBALL
- RACQUETBALL
- INDOOR TENNIS
- YOGA
- AEROBICS
- STEP
- JACUZZI
- SAUNAS
- CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road Off Rt. 9
2 miles East of Town Center

Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($179) & get a free HFC T-shirt

MARDI GRAS NIGHT
Sponsored by the Newman Student Association
Newman Center Cafeteria
Saturday, February 9, 2002
8pm-Midnight
Music, Food, & Fun
Beads & Chances to win T-Shirts
FREE ADMISSION

The Catholic Community @ Newman Center invites you to join them to begin the 40 DAYS of the Lenten journey

Ash Wednesday Services
Wednesday February 13, 2002

Distribution of ashes at Masses and at Prayer Service
8am, 12:15pm, 5:15pm, 7pm
9pm Prayer Service

Remember that you are dust and into dust you shall return.

Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St. 413.549.0300

UMass Sports Briefs

Football

Coach Mark Whipple yesterday announced the 2002 incoming class for the Massachusetts football team. Ten players have signed National Letters of Intent to come to UMass for the 2002-2003 year, while four have enrolled for the 2002 spring semester.

"We have brought in a very solid class this year including some players who will have an immediate impact," said Whipple yesterday. "With these players we should be able to create more competition in practice and add a lot of depth to our roster. We expect this class to come in and help us to contend for an Atlantic 10 title this season."

The list is as follows:

QB Tim Day
DT Ryan DeClavo
DT Malik Hall
LB Kyle Harrington
QB Jeff Krohn
LB Jason Leonard
OT Brandon McAfee
OL Alex Miller
TB Justin Montgomery
OL Mike Pearson
OL Olavinka Samusi
OL David Thompson
OL Jake Ward
DL Keron Williams

Swimming and Diving

The Eastern College Athletic Conference yesterday named Junior Kate Allers its Women's Diver of the Week for her performance against Fordham University, Feb. 2, at the Joseph R. Rogers pool. On Monday, the Atlantic 10 Conference awarded her with its Performer of the Week honor.

Allers set a school record in the one-meter dive event with a first place score of 287.75, and also claimed the three-meter dive (286.05) as UMass defeated the Rams 184-112 on Saturday. The one-meter mark eclipsed the old UMass record of 265.65 in the one-meter. Allers has been named Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week two times this season.

Women's Track and Field

The A-10 yesterday named co-captain Rhianna DaCruz its Women's Indoor Track and Field Performer of The Week for her school-record-setting performance in the pole vault at this past weekend's Rhode Island Mega meet. The senior cleared 11'6.25" on to set a new school record and qualify for the ECAC Championships to be held Mar. 2-3 at the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury, Mass.

Men's Track and Field

The A-10 yesterday named Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng its Men's Indoor Track and Field Performer of The Week for his win in the 55M dash. The junior turned in a time of 6.44 seconds, his second-fastest of the season and a shade slower than his school record 6.37 seconds set Jan. 19 in the 2002 New England Challenge Cup at the Boston University Armory.

– Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Fordham awaits Minutewomen

Freshman Katie Nelson heads up court

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After an impressive three wins in four games, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (6-15, 4-6 Atlantic 10) hit a snag Saturday in its 68-55 loss to Xavier. Now, with just six games remaining before the A-10 Tournament, the Minutewomen must bounce back quickly – starting with tonight's contest at Fordham.

The teams faced off against each other just 12 days ago at the William D. Mullins Center, a game that resulted in UMass' most lopsided victory of the year, 68-44.

Center Jennifer Butler dominated the Lady Rams in the blowout. The Brooklyn, N.Y. native scored 23 points, tore down 10 rebounds, dished out three assists, blocked four shots, and made three steals. Butler's frontcourt mates Caroline Nehls and Amber Sneed complimented her post play perfectly – combining for 29 points, 18 rebounds, and zero turnovers in the contest.

UMass then lost two games out of its last three.

The Maroon and White lost to Xavier Saturday, 68-55. The Musketeers were carried to victory by guard Amy Waugh. The junior dropped 32 points on the Minutewomen behind 9-for-14 shooting from the field, including a 6-for-9 performance from behind the arc.

Free throw shooting continued to haunt the Minutewomen. The squad missed more shots from the charity stripe (14) than the point differential in the final score (13).

Butler, whose shooting touch continued to escape her in the contest, made up for those struggles by taking the rest of her game to another level. The junior grabbed 12 boards, forced three steals and made two blocks in the contest while limiting herself to just one turnover.

Unfortunately, the rest of the Minutewomen couldn't step their scoring up enough to propel their team to victory.

The Jan. 26 loss to UMass was Fordham's eighth in a row. The Lady Rams snapped their losing streak in the very next game with a 62-60 win over A-10 cellar dweller La Salle. Freshman guard Monica Mack drilled a 15-foot jumper with 2.2 seconds left in the contest to give her team the victory. Fordham then dropped its next matchup 59-54 to St. Joseph's Sunday, after giving up 41 points in the second half.

The Rams must find more offensive options in tonight's game to have an opportunity to win. The team shot just 12-for-46 from the field in the teams' first contest with only sophomore Lara Hanson shooting over 50 percent from the floor. The guard was also the only Ram to reach double-digits in points scored as well.

Fordham's top scorers, Mobolaji Akiode and Patty Williams must create better scoring opportunities in the rivalry's second game. UMass limited the two players to a combined 2-for-15 from the field the first time out – one of the main reasons for the blowout.

The Minutewomen must be similarly successful tonight at the Rose Hill Gym in what should be a step back in the right direction with just enough time to pick up momentum heading into the postseason.

Ephedra ban raises issues

By Scott Bair
DAILY BRUIN (U. CALIFORNIA-LOS ANGELES)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – Unlike the normal UCLA population, student-athletes cannot go down to the local store, purchase and consume ephedrine-based products. They can't because the NCAA banned the drug in 1997. It was banned after an NCAA survey on over-the-counter drugs showed that there was not a high volume of reported ephedrine usage, but when used, ephedra was used for performance enhancement.

After the results of the survey were introduced, the NCAA disallowed use of ephedrine products and arranged for punitive damages should the student-athlete be caught consuming the product. The penalty for ephedrine use is a one-year suspension under current NCAA law.

"As with any group of 18- and 19-year-olds, they don't care as much," UCLA football head trainer Geoff Schaat said. "You can come at them with the 'it's not good for you' stance, but they really only pay attention when you tell them that they may lose a year of eligibility. That's what makes their ears perk up."

It may be harder for student-athletes to lose that year of eligibility under the current NCAA testing policies. As of now, the NCAA only tests for ephedrine-based products during championship situations. A 2001 survey of NCAA athletes discovered ephedrine usage in 4 percent of the athletes.

"We've seen increased numbers of positive in the last few years," Dr. Gary Green, UCLA associate professor and NCAA chair of drug testing and drug education committees said. "A few years ago we never saw positives, but now it has definitely increased in the last few years."

According to Dr. Green, ephedrine use has gone up significantly within the last four years, especially in women's sports.

"Female athletes would be more susceptible in sports that emphasize thinness, like gymnastics," Green said. "We saw a very high (ephedrine) use there."

The 9,000 annual random regular-season drug examinations performed on student-athletes across the country do not include a test for ephedrine-based products.

How close is the NCAA to providing a test for such a potentially harmful substance during the regular season?

Not very close, says Mary Willert, the program coordinator in education outreach, the division that oversees drug-testing programs. A change in drug-testing policy would require a change in NCAA legislation.

A legislative change must go from a recommendation based upon acquired data to a committee vote before it is even presented to the NCAA membership for its consideration.

"It could be a year or more from someone making the formal recommendation, and we're not even to that point yet," Willert said.

Adding ephedrine to the regular-season drug test would increase the cost of each examination by $25-50 per test. The National Office of Drug-Free Sport dismisses cost as an issue, stating that if the NCAA wanted to add the drug, cost would be the least of its concerns.

"It's not a cost issue, it's a philosophical issue," said Frank Uryasz of the National Office of Drug-Free Sport. "In sport drug-testing, stimulants are tested for at the time when an athlete would receive a competitive advantage (in championship situations) by using them, and that would be in competition. An athlete could use ephedra right before a contest, and that would give a competitive advantage."

Ephedrine-based products only stay in the body for 24 to 48 hours, eliminating, therefore, the long-term performance-enhancing benefits of the drug for athletes. But the NCAA ban does not eliminate the potentially harmful side effects of using the product in general, which an athlete could get away with in non-championship situations.

■ hoop

continued from page 12

Wayne Smith drove the baseline for a layup to put the Dukes up 64-63, and just over a minute later, the senior added a 3-pointer from the left wing.

UMass senior Ronell Blizzard tipped in a missed shot with 4:14 remaining to cut the Duke lead to a bucket, but a successful drive from senior Aaron Lovelace and a 3-point play from junior Kevin Forney helped Duquesne pull away. The Minutemen missed two free throws and a multitude of long-range attempts in the final minutes.

"We just didn't get it done," Lappas said.

Smith lead all scorers with 23 points, seven of those coming in consecutive trips down the court during the Dukes' second half run. Joining him in double figures was Lovelace and Forney with 12 points apiece.

Crooks led the Minutemen with 19 points and is now just 10 points shy of the 1,000-point plateau. Classmate Kitwana Rhymer followed with 17 points and 12 rebounds while Anderson added 14 for struggling UMass. Eric Williams, who replaced the injured Micah Brand, netted 13 for the Minutemen including two big 3-pointers in the first half. Somewhat pleased with the performances of those four, Lappas wasn't too thrilled with the rest of his roster.

"The bench was horrendous tonight," he said. "It gave us no lift at all. And Raheim Lamb too. We only had four guys that did anything."

The four in mention scored all but six of UMass' points. Lamb, a freshman, had had four of those and Blizzard had the other two. Blizzard's bucket was the only tally in what totaled as 41 minutes of bench play from four Minutemen.

UMass returns to action Saturday when conference foe LaSalle visits the Mullins Center for a 7 p.m. start. Lappas is still unsure to whether Brand will dress for that game.

– From Staff Reports

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

FILLNATION.

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
SPRING 2002
Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $15 for five college students

Saturday, February 23
Academy of Ancient Music
Christopher Hogwood, Conductor
Robert Levin, fortepiano soloist
A night of Mozart! Renowned for their baroque and classical performance style, including playing instruments of the appropriate period, the Academy of Ancient Music gives audiences the experience of hearing music as it might have sounded at the time it was written. Their program includes the Symphony No. 35 in D Major, and Piano Concertos No. 21 in C Major, K. 467 and No. 24 in C Minor, K. 491.
Concert Hall at 8pm
Sponsored by TIAA-CREF
With generous support from the Frederick C. Tillis Endowment for the Arts

Wednesday, February 27
Children of Uganda
Tales of Light 2002
With the abundant vitality of East African music and dance – infectious rhythms, dazzling silver movements, powerful drums, lyrical flutes, songs of joy and hope – the award-winning Children of Uganda come to the Fine Arts Center. Hailed as "first rate and inspiring" by The New York Times, the group is composed of 18 orphans – ages 5 to seventeen – who serve as ambassadors for the 1.4 million other AIDS and war related orphans living in Uganda.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by WRNX 100.8FM and FamilyFun Magazine

Saturday, March 9
The Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio
Joseph Kalichstein, piano, Jaime Laredo, violin, and Sharon Robinson, cello
Celebrating 25 years together, the Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio is one of the best-blended, most sensitive and intelligent piano trios in the world today. Join them for a special program titled "Two Faces of Struggle: Beethoven and Shostakovich." Bowker Auditorium at 8pm

Tuesday & Wednesday, March 12 & 13
The Who's Tommy, The Musical
It began as a revolutionary rock album throwing off dazzling sparks such as "Pinball Wizard," "We're Not Going to Take It," "See Me, Feel Me" and "Acid Queen." This infamous tale of the "deaf, dumb and blind kid" speaks to each generation. This latest touring production has been hailed as "the latest, and maybe the best version of one of rock music's grand creations."
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Florence Savings Bank, The Daily Hampshire Gazette and WRNX 100.9FM

For tickets call: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line to www.fineartscenter.com

Sweet Specials
For Your Valentine
Cash & Carry Specials
Special 1: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar $11.95
Special 2: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar Valentine Mylar Baloon $15.95
Special 3: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar Valentine Mylar Baloon Teddy Bear $21.95 plus many other Valentine Arrangements & Cut Flowers Available
Open & Delivering: Wed, Feb 13th Thurs, Feb 14th
Knowles Flower Shop
172 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
253-3805

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

Declining dunkage

Slam Dunk contest not full of the league's best

Full court Press with Glen Straub

In 1998, the National Basketball Association put an end to one of its most entertaining activities during the annual All-Star weekend – the Slam-Dunk Contest.

It was pulled from the Saturday night's festivities because it just wasn't entertaining anymore. The good old days of great rivalries and spectacular dunks seemed light years ago.

Michael Jordan and Dominique Wilkens had dunk-contest battles in the 80s that fueled the same intensity as the Boston Celtics-L.A. Lakers playoff match-ups.

In 1986 "Spud" Webb amazed the world by elevating to heights where not many 5-foot-7-inch men have ever been. Not only did he get above the rim but he also successfully threw each dunk down beautifully.

However, by 1998 times had changed.

The superstars of the game at the time such as Shawn Kemp, Latrell Sprewell and Michael Finley refused to compete due to the fear of injury (no owner ever pays the big bucks to a hurt star).

Players in the second and even third tier of basketball talent became the competitors, resulting in an unrecognized group of dunkers to the casual basketball fan.

In the 1996 contest, Brent Barry – the son of the great shooter Rick Barry – was named Slam-Dunk champ after he successfully took flight from the foul line and slammed it home.

Taking flight from the foul line... sounds familiar? Of course it does.

It was invented by the Doctor – Julius Erving – perfected by the greatest, Jordan.

NBA commissioner David Stern was forced to end the contest because the stars were missing and the element of originality was gone.

A nice shooting contest with teams of two – consisted of one NBA player and one WNBA player from each city – called NBA 2-Ball replaced the Dunk contest in 1998.

But in the words of Joni Mitchell, "you don't know what you got till it's gone," Stern and the rest of the NBA posse didn't know what they had till it was gone. So they brought it back, all in thanks to one man.

In the year 2000, the Slam-Dunk Contest made its long-awaited comeback and one of the biggest stars in the NBA shined in front of the entire world.

Vince Carter, at the time a young and budding star from the Toronto Raptors, was pronounced "half-man, half-amazing" after he constructed one of the best Slam-Dunk contest performances in the history of the event.

His toughest competition came from his distant cousin and teammate, Tracy McGrady. However, when Carter hung on the rim by his elbow after a one-handed jam, it was over and Carter was the outright champ.

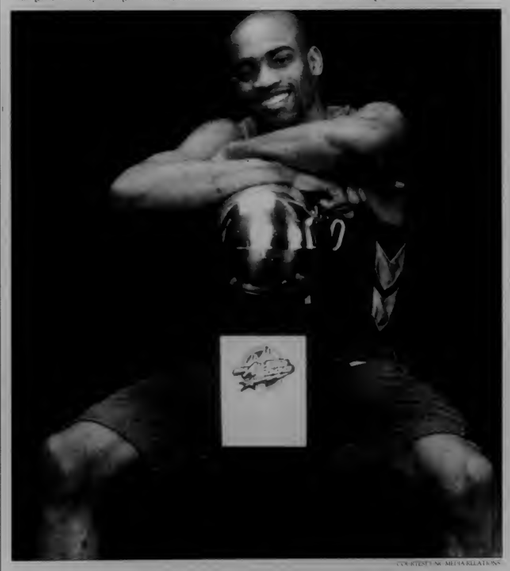
The 2000 dunk contest was one of the best in the history of the event. Carter's performance shocked the world just like when Wilkins and Jordan would entertain basketball fans everywhere back in the day.

Today, the excitement is slowly returning to the level it was at in 1996 and 1997 – little to none.

On Saturday, Desmond Mason of the Seattle Supersonics will look to defend his 2001 dunk title in Philadelphia at All-star weekend. Although Mason is a quality player, averaging 11.0 points per game, he is no star. He is at best a third tier star.

Another competitor, Golden State Warriors rookie Jason Richardson will look to de-thrown Mason. But once again, is this guy appealing to the average NBA fan?

There is actually one superstar in this year's contest – Houston Rockets All-Star Stevie Francis. I will admit that Francis is a quality dunker and he is my pick to win it. However, we need more stars like him to step it up and compete in the event. Vince, Kobe, Tracy where are you?



The NBA should do a better job of encouraging its All-Stars to compete.

The National Hockey League has its stars compete in the skills competition during All-Star weekend. Why can't the NBA?

In a time when the NBA is desperate for high television ratings, it is utterly important for them to expose its stars because other than the Lakers, that is what sells.

Oh, I totally forgot to tell you the fourth competitor in this year's competition. He is Sacramento Kings rookie forward Gerald Wallace. He averages 6.7 minutes a game in garbage time for the Kings.

Glen Straub is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY OF MEDIA RELATIONS

After winning his inaugural dunk contest, Vince Carter refuses to return.

■ Olympics

continued from page 12

respective careers. But if Brian Rafalski isn't healthy and Tom Poti can't be responsible in his own end, than the U.S. will find itself with a very experienced but aging blue line.

Big Question: Goaltending?

Everybody knows that Mike Richter is capable of stealing the gold by himself. He did it in the 1996 World Cup of Hockey in two successive games against Canada on their own turf. The question is which Richter will show up?

Player to watch: Jeremy Roenick

Roenick is easily the American's most complete player up front. He has exceptional speed and vision, a heavy shot and he's one of the best pound for pound body checkers in the NHL. He was arguably the team's best player in Nagano, although he did not register a single goal.

Russia

The Russian team, like most of the Russian players, is enigmatic. Anyone would be hard pressed to find one Russian forward who has been consistent over the last five years. Even superstars like Sergei Fedorov and Pavel Bure have had their ebbs and flows as far as point production.

The one thing that the Russians do have plenty of is talent. Every single player on the team can skate and score. And they will need that talent because some players such as Alex Mogilny have decided not to represent their country in the games.

Big Question: Which team Russia will show up?

It's unquestionable that the Russians have the talent to match up with any other squad, but they need all that talent to peak at the right time. Last Olympics they managed to come up just one goal short of the Czech's for the gold, again without some of their top players. They will have to do the same to compete this time around.

Player to watch: Ilya Kovalchuk

There may not be a more talented player in the NHL than this high-flying rook. He embarrassed Canada in the World Championships so he has a flavor for international dominance. His play could provide depth for his squad, and this Olympics could be a coming out party for the World's best young player.

Finland

The Finns are the odds on favorite to finish third in this group. Their talent is simply not at the level of the Russians and Americans but that didn't stop them from playing themselves to a bronze medal game win over Canada.

Finland is notorious for playing above itself in international play so don't count them out here. They have a lot of speed and one of the best big time goalscorers in NHL history in Teemu Selanne. The loss of number one center Saku Koivu to cancer will certainly hurt though.

Big Question: Jani who?

Jani Hurme is the starting goaltender for Team Finland – enough said. Hurme is the least established of any starting goalie in the top six and his performance will likely make or break Finland's medal chances.

Player to Watch: Sami Kapanen

Kapanen is having another career year and again he is the least known superstar in the NHL. He has lightning speed, which he proved by winning the fastest skater competition at the All-Star game. And he has a nose for the net, shown by his 21 goals in 56 games.

Group B

Canada

If any team has more pressure on them than the Yanks, it's Canada. Hockey's hotbed hasn't seen a gold medal in over 50 years and if it is going to happen this year, the Canadians will need a top effort from all positions.

The Canadians have the depth to put together about three Olympic teams of equal talent, the problem has always been finding the right mix. Having Wayne Gretzky at the helm helps but the proof will only come when the medals are being handed out.

Big Question: Who will replace Roy?

The biggest hit to Canada's shot at gold has already happened in Patrick Roy's refusal to join the Olympic festivities. Losing the greatest clutch goaltender in the history of mankind tends to have an affect on your team. But if any squad has the depth to cope it's Canada. Right now it looks like Curtis Joseph and Martin Brodeur will battle for the starting job. Both are capable goaltenders, but none have Roy's ability.

Player to Watch: Joe Sakic

Sakic has proved time and time again that he can be the world's most dangerous player when it matters most. He didn't perform well in Nagano, but with his wicked wrist shot and lethal first step, he has the tools for redemption.

Czech Republic

The defending gold medalists are back and as talented as ever. Dominik Hasek looks like he has regained his MVP form with Detroit Red Wings while the Czech's crop of talented forwards has only grown since their 1998 run.

Young stars Martin Havlat, Petr Sykora and Milan Hejduk have only gotten better since last run around and with Roman Cechmanek backing up Hasek, the Czechs actually have depth in net.

Big Question: Was it luck?

The Czech's had more tight squeezes last Olympics than a fat guy on the subway. With the shootout win over Canada and the 1-0 win over Russia in the title game, they were only inches away from finishing out of the medals. Will they have that same luck again?

Player to Watch: Jiri Dopita

Last year he was known as the best player outside the NHL, while this year he's become one of the best players in the league. After a slow start with the Flyers Dopita has come on lately. He has the ability to pile up points in a hurry, especially with talent around him – which he certainly will have in the Olympics.

Sweden

The Swedes would certainly be one of the favorites for the gold if Peter Forsberg were healthy. But since the best all around player in the world won't be wearing the three crowns come next week, Sweden will have a difficult time matching up.

The positive is that their goaltending situation is the best it's ever been with Tommy Salo at a peak in his career. But without Forsberg it's tough to give them a chance.

Big Question: Can Mats Sundin step up?

For a long time his countrymen looked at Sundin as the best Swedish hockey player. Forsberg and his more balanced game have since replaced him. These Olympics give Sundin a chance to regain his title by leading the Swedes to a medal or even the Gold.

Player to Watch: Daniel Alfredsson

Alfredsson has been a legitimate MVP candidate for the entire season and he will have to keep that form if he and his teammates hope to account for Forsberg's absence on the attack. He certainly has the talent to do that and by captaining a young team in Ottawa, he has shown that he has the ability to dominate in the locker room, as well as on the ice.

Prediction
Gold: Canada
Silver: Czech Republic
Bronze: USA

■ hockey

continued from page 12

been doing something different all season.

"I think we outplayed [Lowell] in both games earlier in the year," Cahoon said. "We outshot them 27-15 in one game and the other game we lost 3-2 after giving up three early goals."

UMass played a pair of games against BU earlier in the year with a similar storyline. The first game was a 5-2 loss that the Terriers blew open in the third period.

"[In the second game] we had a 2-0 lead but we couldn't get a third to put the game away," Cahoon said. "And we didn't make the lead hold up."

So three one-goal losses and a game they had tied up in the second period add up to zero points against this weekend's road opponents.

Friday night the Minutemen face their toughest challenge of the season, heading to Walter Brown Arena for a date with the Terriers. UMass has never won at Walter Brown. As if that isn't daunting enough, the Minutemen will face a BU squad on its most ferocious tear of the season. In the Terrier's last game, the team pasted Boston College in the Beanpot.

"We can't waste our time thinking about those sort of things," said Cahoon of both facts. "We just have to concern ourselves with putting the effort on the ice."

Besides, Cahoon said, "I've won a lot of games at Walter Brown Arena."

Thankfully, UMass has had far more success against Lowell. At least compared to its record against BU. The Minutemen have already surrendered the Alumni Cup to Lowell, battled over by both Massachusetts state schools annually.

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
THE VALLEY ADVOCATE
"THE BEST PICTURE OF THE YEAR!"
THE NEW YORK TIMES
"FABULOUS!"
OVER 130 CRITICS AGREE
"ONE OF THE BEST FILMS OF THE YEAR!"
Amelie
DAILY 7 & 9:15
12th week! Last Weekend to see it! Ends Thurs. Feb.14
Downtown Northampton's Academy of Music
support by the Valley Advocate • www.valleyadvocate.com
Movie-Line 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

MORE ALL-NIGHTERS THAN A 24-HOUR DINER

NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM
THIS FILM IS NOT YET RATED
ARTISAN

SPRING BREAK '02
ARE YOU READY?
SUPER SPECIALS!
Check Out www.sunsplashtours.com for Last Minute Super Specials
Includes Airfare, 7 Nights Hotel, FREE Parties, Drinks & Activities. Over 15 years experience!
SPECIALS!* SAVE UP TO $100 ON SELECT TRIPS!
*Can not be combined with any other offer. New bookings Only
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit

APPARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES.
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Geo Prism auto, AC, 70000 k miles $2800 B/O 323-4676

1985 Cadillac Seville excellent condition 50,000 miles like new $4000 firm call 545-4013

1987 Volvo Wagon $1000.00 978-724-0061

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Eagle summit $500.00 253-9511

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5797

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruisesareers.com

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for tour guides, student admissions reps and summer orientation counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 8.

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMPLOYMENT

Office help positions. New Students Program looking for year-round office help. Preferably freshmen and sophomores. Please call 545-4940 for more information and application. Deadline is Feb. 8.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

FOR SALE

Mac Quadra 630 face 32 Ram w/ 17 in. view Sonic monitor. Perfect for word processing $125 (413) 665-6833.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David GoodRich (Pmulrey, Emekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_GoodRich@hotmail.com

ROOMMATE WNATED

Female only 1 room available ASAP HT/HTW included cummingsm@elms.edu

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 days $279! Includes meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, night life! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

Spring Break Super Sale! Book your trip with StudentCity.com and save up to $100 per person to Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, Padre and Florida. Most popular student hotels including the Oasis and the Nassau Marriott Crystal Palace! Prices start at $399! Sale ends soon! CALL NOW! 1-800-293-1443 or go to StudentCity.com!

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@sun-coastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007.
www.endlesssummertours.com

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

SERVICES

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

We no longer run fyi's. Please send all briefs to Jessica May, 113 Campus center basement.

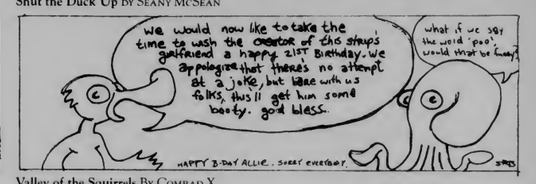
HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 · HSCN Bulletin Board
3 · CBS 3 Hartford
4 · CBS 4 Boston
5 · ABC 40 Springfield
6 · FOX 61 Springfield
7 · HSCN Movie Channel
8 · UPN 30 Hartford
9 · HSCN New Movie Channel
10 · NBC 10 New Britain
11 · Fox 61 Hartford
12 · UPN 24 Hartford
13 · NBC 22 Springfield
14 · International Channel
15 · UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 · WB 59 New Haven
17 · ESPN
18 · ESPN2
19 · UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 · Weather Channel
21 · Closed to Guest
22 · C-Span
23 · CNN
24 · CNN Headline News
25 · Lifetime
26 · USA
27 · TBS
28 · TNT
29 · E!
30 · Sci-Fi
31 · Discovery
32 · Nogin
33 · Cartoon Network
34 · Nick at Nite
35 · TV Land
36 · Comedy Central
37 · BET
38 · Univision
39 · Bloomberg Financial Network
40 · College TV Network
41 · MTV
42 · MTV2
43 · VH1
44 · The Learning Channel

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Noodle By Jacki

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"I watched the Matlock marathon...I thought I was invincible."
–Overheard

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 26	HIGH: 42 LOW: 17	HIGH: 41 LOW: 24

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're likely to get a surprising amount of cooperation today from someone who is usually quite aloof. With this help, success is assured.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're not likely to do what you are supposed to do today simply because you're supposed to do it. You must follow your own instincts.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Your presence will be requested on more than one occasion today. Your reputation precedes you; everyone knows you're the life of the party.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Avoid empty flattery today, but do praise others honestly whenever you have the opportunity. Be generous with your time whenever possible.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Take things in order today, and don't let yourself get bogged down in the kinds of details that are, ultimately, merely distractions.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – There is something new in your life that may prove exceptional to you today for the first time. Things may take on a new importance as a result.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You cannot afford to be indecisive today. Choose early on, and stick to the path that feels right to you. Avoid any kind of vacillation.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You'll enjoy getting involved in something that is quite "your style" today – but, in fact, you can learn to adjust quickly and easily.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You're going to want to do things in a manner that highlights one or two particular skills today. Someone "in charge" is watching you.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You natural magnetism will surely be difficult to resist today, and you needn't come on too strong in order to get the results you're after.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Don't let someone else tell you that you're on the wrong track today; only you can supply yourself with that kind of "inside" information.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Focus on those things that are unorthodox, and you'll discover that you have a talent for doing that which others may consider "impossible."

What do you think Budget Cuts will cut next?

a) SGA

b) Sylvan

c) The library

d) The PVTA

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Tomato Rice Soup

Chicken Pesto Pasta

Sloppy Joe

Vegan Sloppy Joe

Native American Stew (W Basics)

DINNER

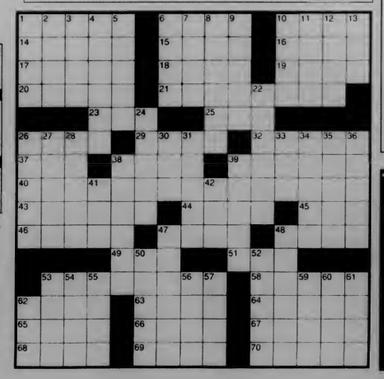
Tomato Rice Soup

BBQ Chicken Quarters

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Falafel Burger with Sauce (W Basics) (vegan)

Every empty space needs an ad...will you be that ad?



ACROSS
1 Seasons
6 Ocean goer
10 Farm baby
14 Kill feature
15 Island near Corsica
16 Done with
17 Love dearly
18 Semester
19 Paraphernalia
20 Cowboy's beat
21 Dessert, as fog
23 Koch and Wynn
25 Review harshly
26 Piece of insulation
29 Punk hairdo feature
32 Maravich and Seeger
37 Vigoda of "Barney Miller"
38 Tiny hole
39 Agency
40 Type of loan
43 Dreaming, maybe
44 Tabloid topics
45 Lipstick color
46 Update a watch
47 Tijuana Ms.
48 Ceremonial fire
49 Devotee
51 Twosome
53 Crossroads
58 Broadway hit
62 Lunar phenomenon
63 1980s hairdo
64 Zen master's poem
65 Governess in Siam
66 Escaped
67 Ace Rickenbacker
68 "— night"
69 Actor Parker
70 Enjoys a novel

DOWN
1 Ship's mast
2 Actor Alan
3 Boxer Sprinks
4 Bull's-eye
5 Warrior's horse
6 Gambles
7 Muffin spread
8 Sudden
9 Devil Rays' home
10 Mezzanine
11 Wide sts
12 Ravel's title
13 "It's freezing"
22 Enters data
24 Bend
26 Storybook elephant
27 Humiliate
28 Divulges
30 Coffee brewer
31 Thigh bone
33 Unit of work
34 Most-eyed
35 Keen
36 Soft leather
38 Lyrical
39 Roomy
41 Actor Majors
42 Many times
47 Repress
48 Hair ointment
50 Employees
52 Groom's attendant
53 Tarzan's mate
54 Humerus neighbor
55 Wordsmith Webster
56 Minerals
57 Drowses off
59 Verdi heroine
60 Fahlail
61 Tints
62 Fodder

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

D	A	L	I	■	S	M	S	■	N	O	T	C	H
I	R	O	N	■	N	C	A	A	■	A	L	O	H	A
S	E	L	F	■	D	A	D	S	■	R	I	L	E	Y
C	A	L	L	F	O	R	■	S	E	R	V	E	R	S
■	■	■	A	L	O	F	T	■	R	O	I	■	■	■
T	R	E	M	O	R	■	S	H	O	W	E	R	E	D
H	O	L	E	Y	■	C	H	A	O	■	R	A	J	A
U	T	E	■	D	E	L	I	V	E	R	■	N	E	T
M	O	N	O	■	Y	O	R	E	■	A	L	I	C	E
B	R	A	D	P	I	T	T	■	T	R	U	S	T	S
■	■	D	E	N	■	S	U	R	E	R	■	■	■	■
T	E	A	B	A	G	S	■	S	A	R	C	A	S	M
O	S	C	A	R	■	P	I	E	D	■	H	E	E	D
S	T	I	L	L	■	A	C	R	E	■	E	R	A	S
S	A	D	L	Y	■	N	E	S	S	■	S	O	L	E

12-28-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Editor's Staff

Sam Wilkinson
Scott Eldridge II
Jess May
Mike Kulak
Andrea Mangini
Melissa Hammel

DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.07.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

The point of scoring

Mass Attack remains stalled in conference

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Hey coach, need a goalscorer?" goaltender Mike Johnson shouted as he sauntered out of the UMass locker room in full forward gear.

Don Cahoon's responded with laughter, but it was as transparent as the rink glass he was sitting in front of. Not only does he need a goalscorer, he needs one now.

"It'll be nice if we just breakout and score a bunch of goals in one of these games," he said. "Right now we need goals to come from a bunch of different sources."

As has been the case all season, the team's lack of finishing has kept it from creating breathing room between it and Merrimack.

The Minutemen (seven points) stand a lone point behind the Warriors (eight points) for Hockey East's eighth and final playoff spot. UMass would be in a far better position compared to its cellar-dwelling rivals if it had managed to turn one of its nine one-goal losses in conference into even a tie.

Instead, with only six games remaining, UMass finds itself desperate for points.

"We can't come into this weekend's games [against Lowell and Boston University] screaming for points," Cahoon said. "Points are a bi-product of good play."

If good play is the formula for points, UMass has

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

Thanks Puck tribe! Up away from the UMass hockey team at present because he is playing for the Austrian National Team in Olympic Qualifiers. He is joined there by Tom Sokolosky.

Best pucksters unite in Utah

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Journalists must be licking their chops at the myriad of storylines teeming from this year's Olympic hockey tournament in Salt Lake City. Almost every team has something to prove or redeem itself for.

Canada needs to prove that it can win a gold medal for the first time in over 50 years. The Czech Republic is looking to show that its first place finish in Nagano was not a fluke. The United States can answer questions about its character and will with a good showing in Utah. Finland looks ready to take another giant leap from its bronze medal four years ago. While Sweden and Russia are out to prove it can win without some of its brightest stars.

SALT LAKE 2002

COURTESY OLYMPICS.COM

This year's tourney has the makings to be the most exciting and press garnering of any since the Miracle on Ice in Lake Placid more than 20 years ago. On the heels of Sept. 11, patriotism is at its peak and not just in the U.S.

The world will be watching as the best players in the universe take center stage, wearing their nation's colors and striving for gold.

Group A

United States

The host country has maybe the best collection of speed, strength and talent upfront of any other team in the tournament.

On the blueline the Yanks certainly have experience and talent but what they may be lacking is depth. Brian Leetch and Chris Chelios are both having stellar seasons in the twilight of their

Turn to OLYMPICS, page 8

GERALD ENSCOE/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks is 10 points away from 1,000

Dukes drop Minutemen

UMass blows 10-point first half advantage

The Massachusetts men's basketball team's season hit the depths of college basketball inferiority last night at the A.I. Palumbo Center in Pittsburgh as the Minutemen dropped a 78-69 decision to Duquesne.

Duquesne	78
UMass	69

Down 47-37 at the half, the Dukes made a 20-4 run midway through the second half to send UMass to its third-consecutive defeat.

The Minutemen are now 9-11 (3-6 Atlantic 10) on the season; Duquesne, after its second-straight win, is now 7-14 (2-8 A-10).

Senior Shannon Crooks found freshman Anthony Anderson slicing through the lane early in the first half to give UMass a 12-2 lead and the Minutemen extended their advantage to 17-4 just minutes later. But the Dukes crawled back and kept the game in reach thanks largely to their 78 percent proficiency from the free throw line (14-of-18), a number aided by UMass' sub-par defensive effort.

The Minutemen shot 57 percent from the field in the first half and 24 percent in the final stanza, but Steve Lappas assured the entire contest wasn't an anecdote of inconsistency.

"The game wasn't a tale of two halves, just the first half was," offered Lappas after the game on the UMass Radio Network. "It was not a really good defensive effort in the first half. We should have been up at least 15 at halftime. We had a good offensive first half, but a terrible defensive one."

Duquesne's first lead of the game came with 5:48 left when

Turn to HOOP, page 8

An early Patriot's Day in Boston

Crazy New England fans swarm Beantown parade

MATT BRADY

BOSTON – Patriot's Day came a little early this year. And though the Red Sox weren't in action and there was no Boston Marathon, the number of people in the city of Boston was still astronomical.

Tuesday's parade and reception at City Hall Plaza was a fantastic event – one where you just had to be there to understand the pandemonium of it all.

Late on Monday, I realized that there was no choice in the matter – class or no class, it made no difference. I had to make the trek to Boston to cheer on the first world champion in my years of being a sports fan. Sure, the Celtics won it all in '86, but I was still trying to figure out the difference between a.m. and p.m. back then.

So I went home the night before to make the journey a little bit easier. I caught the 7:42 train into Boston with a couple of my friends, not knowing what to expect upon arriving at the Plaza, and when I got there at 8:45 I thought I might have beaten a decent percentage of the crowd.

And then I looked out over the crowd, stretching back a long way from the platform on which the Pats were going to be the center of the day's festivities, so we set up shop on the side of the stage with a clear view in front of us.

Then the droves of people showed up. I had never in my life been a part of anything that could prepare me from being immersed in a crowd of hundreds of thousands of people with a total of maybe eight square inches of free space around me. I decided I should record the events of the day to remember what had happened and when. Some of the highlights:

9:03 – There are people everywhere. If I don't go to the bathroom now, I don't think I will be able to until this is all over.

9:24 – Got back from trying to find a bathroom. The trip was a miserable failure, since no two cops could agree on what the proper procedure was for getting to a place to relieve myself.

9:45 – Some kid pissed in a cup and put it on the ground before his friend shoved him and he fell on it and crushed it. Not a pretty scene in the least, as the guys to my right tried to hit the friend for getting piss all over the ground.

You get the idea. It was complete pandemonium being stuck in a place where you are surrounded by maybe a million people who you have never seen before. The best moments were when stupid people tried to do the dumbest things...mob mentality is entertaining in a way that is not quite paralleled, and the bigger the mob gets, the dumber the people get.

So after about 10:00, the place was packed almost all the way back to the barriers, with little to no room to spare, a bitter chill that could overcome any number of layers (there were times when I thought, "Wow, I should have put on 17 pairs of socks today), and, of course, the ceremonies were set up in the shade.

These people decided that instead of shoving their way to the front of the mob, it would be a much better idea to get hoisted up and try to surf their way toward the front. Needless to say, the people who got there before said individuals were none too pleased about this attempt. Soon, anyone who began crowd surfing was attacked, usually being stripped of their shoes, warm hats, or socks, if possible.

Then there was the guy who climbed the lamppost. He got up on top of the post, and received mixed reviews, getting a few cheers, but more so getting assorted bottles and crumpled paper thrown at him. The funniest part was that once he got up there, he couldn't get down. Each time he got back on top, more things were thrown at him, until finally he got himself down after nearly eight attempts, doubtlessly directly put into the arms of the Boston Police force.

And finally (this was the shining moment for me), my friend told me not to turn around, whatever I did. Of course, the 10-year-old to my right decided that he couldn't hold it anymore and found a bottle that he could relieve himself in. And then, needless to say, he decided to drop the bottle on the ground so that there was no dry ground around me. Fantastic. And to boot, the youngster's father didn't even bother to apologize to me since I had to stand in urine for the rest of the day.

After noon finally hit, the crowd calmed down in anticipation of the arrival of the Pats. Portable televisions were all around, and those listening to them were glad to give updates to everyone around them. The helicopters hovering overhead seemed to calm everyone as they realized not only that their team really did have the title of World Champions, but that the championship trophy they had been clamoring for year in and year out was actually on its way.

And then, some five hours after I had arrived, so did the Patriots, with Bob Kraft leading the way, trophy in hand. Everybody stretched out as high as they could, to try to get a glimpse of the shining Lombardi trophy as it sat within plain view to most.

And then came the team. As a team. The crowd's cheering was deafening as the Pats took the stage to see something that they had likely never seen before. And when Gil Santos said those immortal words, "this is YOUR trophy," I felt my eyes well up with tears in pride. It was beautiful.

OUR trophy.

As each different member of the championship team came out on stage to say his piece, the togetherness of the team seemed to jell more and more. Lawyer Milloy leading the "We're number one" chant. Ty Law getting everyone to do a different dance. Troy Brown saying his piece. And finally, Adam Vinatieri telling reporters and experts from around the league the team's motto to naysayers – "Don't talk to me."

Sure I couldn't see a thing and certainly hadn't been able to feel my toes since, well it seemed like sometime in the Reagan administration, but I still felt happy to be there. It certainly wasn't worth getting no sleep, missing classes and freezing halfway to death, but at the same time it was something that I will always treasure. Hopefully Boston will have many more championship parades in the years to come, but if not, at least the beloved Patriots brought one home.

This is our trophy, Pats fans, and no one can ever take that away.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

BRITNEY S... SHE DRIVES US CRAZY
TIME TO PROTEST ED/OP PAGE 4
MINUTEWOMEN DEFEATED

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
FRIDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY SEVEN ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.08.02

Grappling with the budget

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Room 163 in the Campus Center was packed with rising budget cuts tension.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

The Provost and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs, Charlena Seymour.

Administrators provide budget answers

By Ken Campbell
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts community discussed budget cuts and fears for the future in a forum with faculty, administrators, students and state Representative Ellen Story (D-Amherst) last night in room 163C of the Campus Center.

Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams and other panelists addressed the crowd, which overflowed the room. Williams explained that the issue was communication – not just on campus, but also between the campus and the General Court.

"Our students come from the Commonwealth, and when they graduate, they stay in the Commonwealth," Williams said, explaining that the state was investing in its own future when it invested in UMass.

The only way to increase that investment, Representative Story explained, was voter participation in government.

"The only thing that can make representatives listen is to call them and ask them 'what is your position on funding the University of Massachusetts?" Story said. "And make sure you are registered to vote, because if you are not a registered voter, they will not listen to you."

One of the largest issues of the night was how the University's academic mission would be affected by budget cuts. It was one question that had few answers. UMass has a fine reputation, said Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charlena Seymour.

"We do not wish to lose that status," Seymour said. "Nor jeopardize everything we've accomplished, nor jeopardize the educational quality and research."

However, the picture is bleak.

"This year our state appropriation was reduced by 14 million dollars," Paul Page, Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance, said. "A reasonable middle level assumption would put us out of balance by another 15 million dollars."

The reductions in funding, as well as declining faculty numbers, worry Secretary of the Faculty Senate Ernest May.

"[The decline in faculty] will present a serious challenge," May said. "But we'll find a way to get through it. There's going to be some heavy lifting for a while."

Turn to MEETING, page 3

Save UMass attempts to stop budget problems through student awareness

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Faculty, members of the community, and students convened last night in an effort to come together and formulate ideas regarding the recent 14 million dollar budget cuts.

The meeting was under the direction of members of the Graduate Student Organization (GEO) with the help of members of the Save the University of Massachusetts coalition. Save UMass, a recently named coalition on campus, was established by the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) and has acquired members from all areas of the campus.

"It seems that everyone has been having meetings regarding the budget cuts, and we wanted to bring people together in a larger coalition," Labor Educator and graduate student Chris Vails said. "We want to let people know what is out their for them to do, as well as alert them about the situation were facing."

The meeting began with an information session regarding the recent budget cuts, and lead to an open discussion between faculty members and students. Members of Save UMass presented four main committees and encouraged student and faculty involvement.

"We've come up with four committees: publicity and research, lobbying and local events, activities and a committee dealing with issues surrounding the Board of Trustees," Vails said.

Students discussed the need for not only UMass Amherst to be involved in the coalition, but for the other four UMass communities around the state to be involved as well. Vails stated that relationships have been made with students on other UMass campuses. Those attending responded by explaining that UMass Amherst should head up the initiative.

"This campus should be the leader," Sociology Professor Dan Clawson said. "We can't count on the campus administration anymore. It's up to us."

Faculty members of Save UMass explained that one of their main efforts in order to spark student involvement is to hold a teach-in on March 6 and 7.

"We want to get as many faculty to participate as possible," Clawson said. "We're going to take 10 minutes and talk to our students about the budget cuts and then as a class write letters to the state."

Students further discussed the effects of the budget cuts, and more directly, the effects that they will be taking on Childcare. Students explained that the cuts would not only just affect students, but faculty and community members as well.

"Eighty-five to 100 children will be without childcare at the end of the semester, and 25 union members will be without a job," GEO Vice President Tom Roberts said. "We're going to be holding a campus wide rally for the rehabilitation of the Childcare Center at noon on Feb. 21 in an effort to get people out their and aware of what's going on."

Students and faculty addressed the administrations involvement in the budget cuts as well, explaining that internal affairs were part of the problem.

"The administration is not going to solve our problems," Clawson said. "We need the administration to advocate for us, instead of looking for ways to incorporate this new budget into the University."

Letter writing campaigns, phone calls to state legislatures and voter registration were also ideas brought up by those attending the meeting. Vails explained GEO's idea to put out a table with cell phones for students to call the state house.

"We've held a legislative call day, where 500 calls were made to our states legislature, and that can make a huge impression," Vails said.

As the meeting came to a close, Save UMass members, GEO members and faculty encouraged students to take action against the budget cuts.

"Tonight was the first step," Vails said. "Getting students and groups on campus to come together in one large coalition is going to be our biggest challenge as a University."

Students respond to the budget situation

By Melissa Hammel
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Why? Why? Why? Why?"

This question uttered by American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Union representative Francis Martin seemed to echo the sentiments of nearly everyone at the budget meeting yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

The Student Government Association sponsored event featured a panel of speakers addressing every facet of the budget issue to a standing room only crowd of faculty, staff and students.

While the panelists tried to address student questions and offer some form of reassurance, tempers and emotions still ran high at through the duration of the two-hour meeting.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos addressed the situation realistically, admitting that the cuts that were to be made would be painful for students.

"I don't think that the University of Massachusetts has ever been in a situation like this before," he explained. "We are going to have to make some very painful decisions."

Peter Tomas of the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) did not have an optimistic point of view either.

"Six months from now, are we going to be a large community college with enough graduate students to TA?" he asked. "We are a land grant University, let us work together in a way that we recognize as valid."

Members of the Student Government Association as well as students struggled with the news of the dire situation surrounding the budget situation, asking how some of the cuts could be avoided and how they would deal with other issues relating to it, such as diversity.

"For years there has been a drop in ALANA enrollment," Chris Rue Secretary of Diversity for the SGA said. "Diversity is very important. That is why people come here, to learn from each other."

Other individuals such as graduate student Seth Avakian expressed hope that if we united with other schools and contacted

Turn to BUDJET page 4

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

This student voiced her opinions regarding campus safety.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

By Tibora Girczyc-Blum

"If you could participate in any Winter Olympic event, what would it be and why?"

Justine Bernhardt 2002
Accounting
"Figure skating has been a dream of mine since I was little, and they get to wear fancy outfits."

Dan Gosselin 2005
Undeclared
"Slalom looks like a lot of fun. Strap me on a pair of skis and throw me down the hill."

Corey McCraw 2002
Political Science
"Bobsledding seems awesome. It'd be a thrill."

Caitlin Vassallo 2005
Biology
"Ice skating. I don't know how, but I love watching it."

Ben Hoisington 2004
History
"Mogul skiing and doubles figure skating. Because I love skiing, and the skaters just flow together."

Alexis Williams 2004
Philosophy and Sociology
"Bobsledding, because it's fast and exciting."

SGA demands pay reduction from administrators to control budget situation

By Kristin Shrewsbury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students spoke out at Wednesday's Senate meeting against the recent 14 million dollar budget cuts and the newly increased seven percent tuition fee to take affect at the University of Massachusetts - Amherst in the fall of 2002.

"We cannot sustain these losses, and we all have a right to call our state and national representatives and lobby for our school," Aura Spivak, a junior English major said. "What they are doing is wrong, and we deserve a first rate education."

Senate members shared their disappointment in the University administration as well. Student Government Association President John Sheehan explained that he felt blindsided by the recent seven percent increases by the Board of Trustees. Speaker Aaron Saunders agreed by explaining that after all the increases implemented on students, that another increase was unnecessary.

"It's absolutely ridiculous," Saunders said. "With so many students unable to get into classes because of cuts, with a new alcohol policy including a $50 fine for anyone caught drinking, and so many other issues on campus, this absolutely knocked the wind out of us."

Student Trustee Jon Laubinger reacted to the recent seven percent increase in disappointment and stated that the increase is the first of more budget cuts to come in the future.

"We're fighting a losing battle right now, and what I'm focused on is ensuring that financial aid is unaffected," Laubinger said. "I met with the Board of Trustee's, and they stated that they are looking to cut 8.5 million dollars in Academic Affairs in the near future. The exact numbers are not all together yet, but we need to come together and take this to the state."

Senate members were presented a motion called the Fair Share Act, requesting a five percent pay-cut by all administrators on campus as well as for all non-union employees on campus as well.

The motion faced mixed opinions within the Senate as friendly amendments were proposed as well as debate amongst the Senate.

"The President (William Bulger) claims that we are a family, yet if you're the mother and father, you don't give yourself a seven course meal and then give your kids Cheerios," Sheehan said.

Questions arose over the impact the motion may hold on the Board of Trustee's and members of the administration. Senators claimed that demanding a pay reduction on behalf of the administration might set the Senate up for failure.

"We don't have any authority over the Board of Trustee's, and by asking that this be enacted, I feel like we might be setting ourselves up for rejection," Senator Michael Whitehouse said.

Sheehan responded by stating that it was a necessary first step in taking their demands to the administration. Saunders agreed by explaining that he felt the motion will send a message to the administration.

"Let's put this to them and tell them that if they won't take a pay-cut for students, that it's their duty too," Saunders said.

After much debate, the Senate voted unanimously in favor of the Fair Share Act motion.

"It was really good to see Senators looking at this motion critically and looking at all angles of it," Saunders said. "This will give it all the more power when it's presented to the administration because it shows that we didn't just take the motion and vote on it."

Senate also passed a motion requesting the administration to reexamine their decision of eliminating the Escort Service on campus.

"Safety should be one of the Universities most up-front concerns and it is imperative to have on this campus," Senator Tracy Kirschen said.

Senator Blake Kleepe who seconded the motion further explained that the Escort Service is there to serve students and make them feel safe on this campus.

"We want the administration to reevaluate their decision," Kleepe said. "We feel differently about having the Escort Service on campus because we're the ones who feel safe when it's around."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the Index Collegian in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
JoleneRousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Goten

Open for Valentines Day Cooking

now accepting OCMP

at your table

Goten Valentines Lunch Special 12:30 pm to 4 pm
Free Beer or Soda with entree order
On Rt 116 Sunderland / Call for reservations 413.665.3628

Semester Special $179 with valid student ID

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB

The Areas Most Complete Club 256-6446

- CYBEX/NAUTILUS CIRCUIT
- CYBEX FREE WEIGHTS
- 25 YD. POOL
- AQUA AEROBICS
- FULL COURT BASKETBALL
- VOLLEYBALL
- RACQUETBALL
- INDOOR TENNIS
- YOGA
- AEROBICS
- STEP
- JACUZZI
- SAUNAS
- CARDIO-VASCULAR EQUIPMENT

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road Off Rt. 9
2 miles East of Town Center

Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($179) & get a free HFC T-shirt

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

South-messed
Workers replace a broken window below the Berkshire Dining Commons.

Police issue public safety alert

The University of Massachusetts Police Department put out a Public Safety Alert warning students about two incidents that took place during the course of the week.

The first incident occurred on Feb. 1 at McNamara Dormitory in the Sylvan living area. Police received a report that at 8:10 p.m. an individual was shot in the back with a pellet gun while he was walking outside the dormitory. The bullet penetrated both his clothes and his skin. The incident is listed as assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Another unrelated incident took place the next day on Feb. 2 in the Southwest living area. At approximately 1:00 a.m., individuals in John Adams Dormitory reported that individuals had entered their room and attempted to steal their property.

The police are actively investigating the incident however the only description provided was that the perpetrators were "four black males." The police urge students as preventative measures to keep their doors locked when they leave their rooms and to report any unusual individuals or circumstances.

Anyone who has any information on either of these two incidents can contact the UMPD's Detective Bureau at 545-0893, the Tips Line at 577-TIPS (8477), email the department at umpd@admin.umass.edu or visit the anonymous witness page on the UMass website.

—Melissa Hammel

POLICE LOG

January 31

Larceny
Items such as a backpack and a checkbook were reported stolen.

Vandalism
The driver's side mirror was swiped off of a car parked in lot 13.

Graffiti was written in black magic marker on the walls of Mary Lyon Dormitory. It was erased by a custodian.

February 1

Larceny
Two friends left their laptops outside of Knowlton Dormitory prior to break. When they returned they could not find them.

Suspicious Person Activity
The Hampden Munchies Store called the police about an individual who they believed may be stealing something. He refused to let them check his coat.

An officer reported seeing two men behind Hills House heading up a hill. One of the individuals, the officer reported seemed to be holding a flame thrower.

Vandalism
Something was thrown against a housing van, and the driver's side window was splintered.

The side mirror was broken off of a car in lot 13.

February 2

Intoxicated Person
There was a male found in front of Coolidge Dormitory breathing but not conscious. He was taken into protective custody.

Vandalism
There was a window broken from a flying bottle.

February 3

Suspicious Person
Officer reports seeing people bumping into cars and attempting to set off their alarms. No vehicles were damaged.

There was a report of three males riding in an elevator playing cards and drinking soda. They seemed to be approximately 18 and were assumed not to go to the school.

■ meeting

continued from page 1

Hope still remains, Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, called the cuts "painful" but believes that the University will emerge stronger.

"It's painful. It's difficult," Cevallos said. "We will emerge out of this somehow, in two years, or three years, and we will be stronger."

Peter Tamas, president of the Graduate Student Senate, was outraged that this was the first time he could represent his constituency to the administration.

"Nobody has been consulted in student governance in these decisions," Tamas said. "I know rhetoric when I see it. We are a land grant university, let us work together in terms we recognize as valid."

The Student Government Association's speaker of the Senate, Aaron Saunders, complained that the fee increase was too high and would prevent students from continuing their education.

"I didn't make 1,280 dollars over the break," Saunders said. "It affects everyone and everyone needs to be involved."

The lack of input from the campus in the cuts was also a sticking point with Leo Malley, a member of the Graduate Employee Organization and representatives of organized labor.

"The unions are in complete agreement," Malley said. "We are not going to accept some of the decisions that we have been hearing about."

■ budget

continued from page 1

state representatives that some of the cuts may be avoided.

"We are not alone, there are four other [UMass] Unisities out there," he said, explaining that the state needs to fund college education in a similar way that it funds K-12. "Does public education end when you graduate high school?"

Another major topic addressed during the meeting was the fact that information and student input surrounding the cuts was made scarce to students.

"The only time we hear about budget cuts is if you want more money from us," freshman Physics major Max Soffe explained. "The only people that give me information about cuts are the SGA."

"How do you sleep at night?" Junior English major Jennifer Eggers asked Chancellor Marcellette Williams about her budget decisions that lacked student input.

However despite the sometimes volatile tone that the meeting took, many students felt that the forum itself was a success.

"I think that this was useful because it gives students an idea of what steps to take next," sophomore Biology major Michelle Monestime said. "There is now a little more hope."

Rachel Feuer-Beck, a junior Art and Art History major, expressed similar sentiments.

"I thought it was great to have a forum," she said. "I think it needs to happen again."

Sushi bar makes splash at DC's

By Rachel Smith
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts Dining Commons added sushi to their culinary repertoire this semester.

Hampshire Dining Commons introduced the sushi bar concept last year, a program that was met with surprising success.

"Originally we were cautious, but sushi is trendy right now. The students just love it," commented Kenneth Toong, Director of Dining and Food Services at UMass. Due to the sushi's bar popularity, students can sample the Japanese dish at Worcester, Franklin and Hampshire Dining Commons.

Toong explained that some people may hesitate to try sushi is because its almost synonymous with raw fish in American culture, but the dining commons are only beginning to add raw seafood to their sushi rolls.

"We're experimenting with raw salmon and considering raw tuna," Toong said. He added that raw fish is not an essential ingredient in sushi.

"That's a misconception," he said. "We have vegetarian rolls that are very authentic."

About 20 percent of the Dining Commons staff is Asian, according to Toong, so several members of the food services staff was already adept at preparing sushi.

"Many of our employees come from India, Japan and Korea," Toong said. "They use their personal experience and recipes to create authentic, very authentic sushi. Its as good as you'll find in a restaurant, if not better."

Not all students are fans of sushi naturally.

"I've never tried it," sophomore Courtney Marzano commented. "The idea of seaweed, raw fish and all that stuff just doesn't appeal to me."

Marzano conceded that while she would not enjoy eating sushi, she does appreciate the diversity the food lends to the dining commons.

"I think its great," she said. "Since the population on campus is so diverse, it's only fair to accommodate the diversity of the students."

For those students who can't get enough of the sushi at the dining commons and want to prepare it at home can take advantage of free sushi-making seminars.

"The classes are very popular and are free for students on the meal plan. There is a nominal fee for students who are not on the meal plan," explained Toong. "We will continue the classes indefinitely as long as there is interest."

Along with the mechanics of preparing sushi, participants can learn how to properly use chopsticks. The Dining Commons will award certificates to everyone who completes the one-hour class.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Topo-mapo
Brendon Collins, left, and David Elia are gathering data to help create a topographical map of the area between the Campus Pond and the Morrill Science Buildings.

The Catholic Community @ Newman Center invites you to join them to begin the 40 DAYS of the Lenten journey

Ash Wednesday Services
Wednesday February 13, 2002

Distribution of ashes at Masses and at Prayer Service
8am, 12:15pm, 5:15pm, 7pm

9pm Prayer Service

Remember that you are dust and into dust you shall return.

Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St. 413.549.0300

MARDI GRAS NIGHT
Sponsored by the Newman Student Association

Newman Center Cafeteria
Saturday, February 9, 2002
8pm-Midnight

Music, Food, & Fun
Beads & Chances to win T-Shirts

FREE ADMISSION

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.08.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Protest for change

The time is now

If ever there was a time for University of Massachusetts students to protest, that time is now.

The damage that has been caused by the new budget cuts has already been thoroughly documented and does not need to be reiterated. All UMass students are aware of the cuts to academic departments and the Child Care Center, as well as the soaring costs of tuition, and virtually all of them are justifiably angry.

UMass has been renowned for its devotion to political activism in the past, and now is the time to revive that tradition. The budget cuts represent the biggest threat to the quality of the University that its current batch of students has ever faced.

But what we need to realize is that, ultimately, change will come only in appealing to the politicians that enacted the budget cuts, rather than protesting outside of Whitmore. It won't be as easy to travel to Boston to air our concerns as it would be to line up outside Chancellor Williams's house, but we must remember that the success of a protest comes not from the convenience of organizing it (or the "fun" that comes with chanting and screaming), but rather from seeing the academic situation at UMass improved.

This isn't to say that no good can come from taking our complaints to the University administration. Certainly there are programs that are far more worthy of being abolished than the Child Care Center. Students ought to question why this program is suffering under the budget cuts. Perhaps UMass could try to lessen the obscene amount of red tape that plagues every aspect of campus life and reduce costs in the process, rather than axing institutions that are vital to many students and employees.

But the issue of how to best cut corners would not even have to be made if the Commonwealth had not decided to slash the University of Massachusetts budget. While it's unlikely that the decision will be reversed, state legislators ought to know that they will be held accountable for their actions.

The best way to hold politicians accountable for their actions is, of course, to vote against them. However, shockingly few UMass students are registered to vote. Even fewer bother to do so when November elections come around. Local politicians tend to ignore the campus when they campaign, despite the thousands of potential voters, because of this low turnout. Now, more than ever, UMass students need to make their voices heard to the political "powers that be" in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

One cannot walk across campus without hearing a student grumbling about the extra hundreds of dollars paid for their education or the way that budget cuts have affected their ability to get classes. Yet most of these disgruntled students have done nothing but complain about their situations, rather than trying to see progress achieved.

The best way to see the damage from budget cuts minimized is not to whine to one's friends, or even to complain to administrators. The best way is to take our grievances to those that enacted the cuts: Massachusetts politicians.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian

Ed/Op: We don't enjoy reading the same Life in Hell day after day any more than you do. Fill this space. Write to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

Dulling effect of the media:

Commercialism outweighing creativity on television

"Oh greatest of the mass media, thank you for elevating emotion, reducing thought, and stifling imagination. Thank you for the artificiality of quick solutions and for the insidious manipulation of human desires for commercial purposes."
- Calvin, to his TV set (Calvin and Hobbes)

JASON CLEMENCE

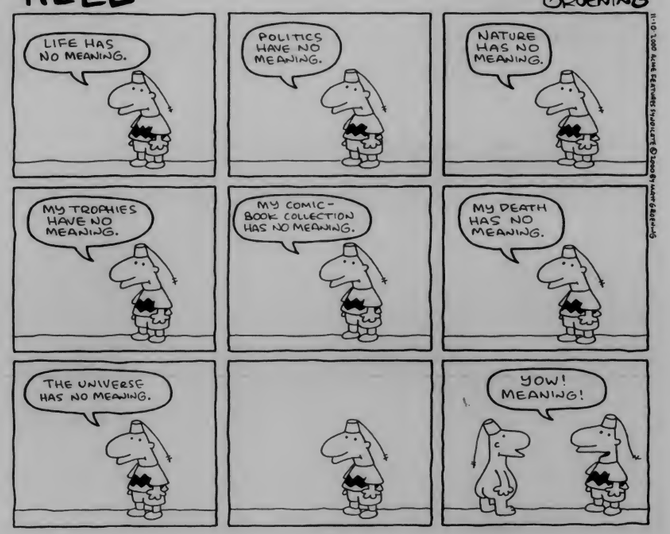
I spent this winter break working with elementary and high school kids, observing firsthand the complex psychology behind the younger members of America. Whether such an opportunity was a blessing or a curse is a question that I haven't yet answered for myself. Kids display minimal respect for their peers and only a bit more towards ostensible authority figures. The whole experience made me wish I had treated substitute teachers with a little more respect back when I was in school. What goes around comes around, I suppose.

Attention spans are shorter than a 30-second television commercial. The most prized accomplishment is instant gratification through any means necessary. As hesitant as I am to admit it, this problem is largely the result of society's easiest and most common scapegoat for almost any problem with kids: the ubiquitous negative examples that are bombarding children through the magic of mass media. Mainstream television, music, advertising, and film have created a pit of anti-intellectualism and immorality.

I overheard one teacher attributing a child's stunted reading skills to his love of television. She told how she had mentioned this problem to the child's father and even commented that if the boy was so infatuated with the TV, there were at least some educational programs on channel two. The father's immediate response was: "He only likes the cool shows." I hate to play the "poor parenting" card, but a father reinforcing his son's idea that education is lame and that exploitative fodder is cool will not help the kid's reading skills. If parents cannot set limits on the amount of time their children spend staring at mindless commercialism and get them interested in something with a little more substance, then I can only assume that their kids have far too much power over them.

Mainstream entertainment is reflected more strongly in children's behavior than any other recognizable influence. Effectively, we have a culture of children at a delicate and vulnerable point in their lives being bombarded by stupidity. As much as they seem to enjoy it now, kids raised on this sort of so-called entertainment will ultimately be at a disadvantage to the minority among them who spend their time doing almost anything but basking in the numbing output of Hollywood and Madison Avenue. Instead of growing up with a clearly-formed, individual personality, these kids will be constantly trying to adapt their existence to whatever the corporate media (and, by extension, their peers) tells them is cool.

"There is a world of difference between titillation for an artistic purpose and titillation for gratuitous amusement."



People whose solutions tend to be reactionary might suggest censorship. But who gets to draw the line between pointless programs that exist for the sole purpose of generating money and actual art? The problem with censorship is that it sets a precedent. If they can censor seemingly innocuous television programs, what's to stop them from suppressing worthwhile art that has a challenging intellectual message? The majority of great books, movies, music, and even television shows contains subversive themes and disturbing plots that the powers-to-be would leap at the chance to censor. Censorship of anything would lead to the dreaded slippery slope: allow one form of expression to be toppled, and others are sure to follow.

I would appeal to the purveyors of mass entertainment to be more creative and meaningful. I'm not saying violence, sex and drugs shouldn't be acknowledged, but acknowledgment and exploitation are entirely different. The best forms of art will take on these issues and many more, but instead of outright glorification or condemnation, it satirizes them and comes to terms with their significance. There is a world of difference between titillation for an artistic purpose and titillation for gratuitous amusement.

However, I'm not so naive to believe that production companies are at all worried about the stupefying effect their product is having on the young. We are talking about an industry that remains disturbingly wealthy and influential by following the idea that monetary gain trumps all other concerns. They will continue to air material that their advertisers, sponsors, political lobbies, rigged focus groups and lawyers tell them is profitable, and to hell with any concern for anything else.

Which inevitably brings us to the Super Bowl, an extravaganza of pre-packaged nationalism, commercialism, sexism and propaganda. It's a corporate sponsor's dream come true. Its outcome had the Pavlovian effect of inciting thousands of people into an unrestrained display of meaningless destructive behavior. The riot in Southwest was undeniably a product of the biggest media event of the year and manifested itself in acts of blind conformity and minimal independent thought. Apparently it's not just grade schoolers trapped in the manipulative grip of the mass media.

Jason Clemence is a UMass student.

Lighthearted "You might be…" approach to living in Southwest

UMass is an amazing learning space that is populated by many people of all ages and backgrounds. For some who visit UMass (and for some who attend as well) it can be hard to differentiate the students from the teachers or the graduates from the undergraduates. However, one phenomenon that sets UMass apart from any other institution or community is the recognition by students of the correlation between your residential area and whether or not you are a horrible person who should be promptly deported or burnt at the stake.

THOMAS NAUGHTON

To clarify, a seasoned UMass student (anyone who has been here longer than a week) can recognize a person who lives in Southwest at 20 paces. It's that simple. One may not be able to distinguish a Northeast resident from a Central resident with ease, but when one has a Southwest resident in their midst, they are identified immediately. However, because this is the millennium, and some people's perceptions may not be as apt as others, I will outline for the untrained eye the art of spotting a Southwest resident. This outline is also perfect for Southwest residents who may have somehow forgotten that they live there. It can be for people who want to test their character or personality to see whether or not they belong in Southwest or are just bad people. (Before delving into the criteria, I would like to mention that I have friends who live in Southwest who are wonderful people that I trust.)

To start simply:

If you were involved in the riots on Super Bowl Sunday in Southwest, you may be a Southwest resident.

Now for the more strict criteria:

If you find yourself using the word "dude" and the word "kid" in various combinations forming sentences lasting over 5 minutes ("dude, kid"; "Kid—kid, dude"), you may be a Southwest resident.

If you are still stuck in a high school world in which you believe that your life, the sports you play, the people you harass, and the numbers of people who think you are "nasty," "sick," or "sweet" has any meaning to the 25,000 people who attend this University, you may be a Southwest resident.

If you frequent your lecture classes in platform shoes, glittering or leather pants, and a piece of yarn across your breasts, you may be a Southwest resident.

If your self-worth is measured by how many beers you drink or how much you can bench-press, you may be a Southwest resident.

If you think that stumbling around in a drunken stupor, dancing around with glow sticks, vomiting or crapping in elevators, or just being an idiot is your idea of a kickin' "party," then you may be a Southwest resident.

If you think that a Super Bowl victory by New England gives you free reign to be an obnoxious embarrassment to UMass, you may be a Southwest resident.

"…there is a solution to the problem of being a Southwest resident: Grow up."

If you think that by heeding the requests of stupid boys to flash an entire crowd of people that you are "breaking ground for women," you may be a Southwest resident.

If you are a male and think all girls should just lie submissively and receive you as "God's gift to womankind," or if you think that forcing yourself on girls is a great way to get dates, you may be a Southwest resident.

If you are a female and now a fresh shade of orange from frequent tanning sessions, you may be a Southwest resident.

If you use the uber-verb "party" in every sentence that you say, you may be a Southwest resident.

If after reading this column you throw down the paper and yell "dude, kid, Yankees suck," if you set the paper on fire and chant hoping to attract girls who will flash you, or if you make an emergency tanning appointment, you may be a Southwest resident.

If you are a Southwest resident (or live somewhere else and have a similar mentality), have no fear, there is a solution to the problem of being a Southwest resident: Grow up.

Other interesting criteria:

If you go to UMass and are not upset about the budget cuts and/or plan to do nothing to help, you don't deserve to be a resident or a community member (which is worse than living in Southwest).

If you were Jane Swift, you would have lived in Southwest if you were a student at UMass, that is if republicans were not opposed to public education or education that isn't only for white people.

If you think that the police actually caused drunken frat boys, trashy girls and imbeciles to "riot" in Southwest, you are an idiot.

Thomas Naughton is a UMass student.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.08.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Newest pop princess may be next Britney

COURTESY LINDSAYPAGANO.COM

Pagano, the latest teen pop up-and-comer, has collaborated with Paul McCartney, which may just lend her legitimacy.

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

LINDSAY PAGANO
Love&Faith&Inspiration
Warner Bros.

Fifteen-year-old songbird Lindsay Pagano is the newest in a long line of post-Britney/Christina/Mandy teen pop princesses. Unlike the first wave, many of these young singers will go unnoticed or have one minor hit before fading away – which is understandable because none of these wannabes are all that remarkable, crafting generic bubblegum that is either too similar to what has been successful before, or too awful, or both (like, oh say, Willa Ford). Pagano will likely fly under the radar, much like Brooke Allison or Tanya Mitchell (who? exactly), which is a shame because Pagano is far better than one would expect. With more artists like her in the field, teen pop might possibly get more respect.

Pagano's music is funkier, more soulful and more exciting than any of the cookie-cutter computerized beats that are the tools of her competition. She isn't an instrument driven musician like Michelle Branch or Vanessa Carlton; her music is still dance music set to an electronic beat. But her sound is more naturalistic and less synthesized, and unlike someone such as Ford, this girl can sing. Vocally, she's got chops and can hit a high note that will send a chill down Mariah Carey's spine. She also uses a bluesy wail that will give Nikka Costa a run for her money. Her voice alone shames the opposition.

First single "Everything U R," which has been used in a commercial for AOL, is a lovely song. But it's the title track in which she really lets you know she means business. It starts with willowy electronica, and Pagano gives her voice a helium quality – kind of like a lighter than air Janet Jackson. She then switches over to a breathy vibe, then back, and then goes into an aggressive snarl.

You can search the teen pop catalog all you want, but you won't find another song like it by any other hubblegum artist – which can be high praise considering that a lot of the genre can sound the same. Love&Faith&Inspiration may take some getting used to as a song, but once you let it envelope you, you find yourself enraptured. There is some filler on the album, but even then the more forgettable songs are highlighted by Pagano's voice. The production of Jude Cole is a plus, as Cole studiously avoids any comparison to Max Martin.

If my recommendation isn't enough for you (and, let's face it, there are some people who will write off all teen pop just because it is teen pop, no matter how good the reviews), then I'll give you another expert opinion: Pagano's gentle ballad "So Bad" was written by none other than Paul McCartney, who also provides vocals on the song. How many teen pop acts actually get to work with a Beatle? That's what I call an endorsement.

COURTESY LINDSAYPAGANO.COM

Donnie's nightmarish vision

COURTESY FC FILMS

This ain't Harvey. We are shocked and appalled.

COURTESY FC FILMS

Jake "Bubble Boy" Gyllenhaal stars in Donnie Darko.

By Jake D. Lewis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

DONNIE DARKO
Starring Jake Gyllenhaal, Drew Barrymore, Patrick Swayze and Noah Wyle
Directed by Richard Kelly
Playing at Pleasant Street Theatre

A movie about a young man with an imaginary rabbit friend might remind one of the 1950 Oscar-winner Harvey, but Donnie Darko does not even come close to the aforementioned James Stewart classic. There is no feel-good quality found here, but a much deeper and, as the title suggests, darker tale of an out-of-the-ordinary boy with daunting delusions.

His primary vision is of a giant hare named Frank who sends him on sleepwalking excursions, including flooding the high school and burning down the house of a local self-help guru (Patrick Swayze). Donnie's initial encounter with Frank (at least as far as the film goes) is lucky, however, since it leads the title character out of his house only moments before a jet engine from a 747 falls out of the blue and into his bedroom.

No one (not even the airline) can explain the sudden occurrence of this jet part, and it's not the only mystery that the twisty plot gives the viewer. Donnie also sees timelines stretch out in front of him, appearing as liquid arrows that point him and carry him in a specific direction into the future.

He becomes captivated with the book The Philosophy of Time Travel, written by a neighbor of his who is now 100 years old and nicknamed Grandmother Death, always seen walking back and forth from between her house and her mailbox, waiting for a letter to be delivered that never arrives.

In his search for answers, Donnie consults a friendly but reserved science teacher (ER's Noah Wyle) and a radical English instructor (Drew Barrymore), but no one seems to be able to give him all the logic he needs to fill in the missing pieces.

It's only when he consults his psychiatrist that a vague inclination of a solution to these ambiguities begins to dawn on the audience, but it never comes full circle to meet the audience's expectations. Audiences of independent and art-house fare often relish in films that mess with the mind, and this movie certainly does just that. Yet by its end, writer and director Richard Kelly has steered his vehicle through so many twists and turns, that most audience members are stuck in their seats even through the closing credits, in awe of the sheer experience that just occurred before their eyes despite it making very little sense.

This is a frustrating feeling because the threads of a slam-bang mystery are there, but few strands are tied up and many left hanging. Not everything needs to be clarified, and in fact, the film would be even more delicious if a few doors were left swinging wide open, but in its current state, it lingers in the mind not as an outstanding movie, but as a befuddling one that you neither loved nor loathed.

Kelly is able to wrap the film around the viewer so tightly because of the disquieting atmosphere he creates on screen. Not only does he set the story in a peaceful suburb of California in 1988 (retrospectively a much calmer time), but he also uses hushed colors by cinematographer Steven B. Poster and a minimal score, both creepy and beautiful, by Michael Andrews to give the twisty plot a third dimension that crawls into the audience's brain. Maybe it was the tiny theatre in which I saw it, but I prefer to think that it's Kelly's masterstroke of direction in these departments that make it so easy to associate with Donnie (and even Frank) and the urge to wreak a little havoc in this serene setting.

Gyllenhaal's performance as Darko is a relief after suffering through his last disaster in Bubble Boy, a character choice that could not have been more misguided. Here, he appears more inquisitive than terrified by such nightmarish appearances, and projects control in the role that adds to the film's quirky attitude. "What kind of name is Donnie Darko? It sounds like a superhero," Gretchen Ross (Jenna Malone) chides the protagonist, to which he replies, "how do you know I'm not one?" This element is another dash of fantasy that is thrown into the soup-mix, offering another angle on what could be going on. In a Jekyll-and-Hyde fashion, Donnie does not know what tremendous tasks he's been up to in Frank's hands, and if he is a semi-superhero, he's the most humble one that I've ever seen.

As it approaches its jumbled climax, though, the movie slams on the breaks and derails from the smooth course it was traveling. Despite frantic efforts to get it back on track, Donnie Darko cannot reassemble its broken pieces to meet the standards that it has built up. Donnie Darko is a thrilling ride, but is one that got away unnoticed.

COURTESY FC FILMS

Patrick Swayze. That's right, Patrick Swayze.

COURTESY FC FILMS

Also starring Drew Barrymore.

Gyllenhaal and this guy. Uh, gal. Uh…?

Britney and Cosmo together forever

By Melody Zagami
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Cosmo

I'll start worrying when I see Britney on the cover of TIME…but as long as she stays on the cover of Cosmopolitan, then all is right with the world.

This month's issue features Miss Spears as the Fun, Fearless, Female of the Year. You'll find a bunch of the Fun, Fearless, Females of 2002. There's a great variety of powerful women ranging from political activists to models. My personal favorite of any edition of Cosmo is the Agony column where women seek wisdom dealing with everything from boyfriends who masturbate in public to groupies addicted to sex with rock stars. I've said it a hundred times, and I'll say it again, women's magazines really know how to focus on the issues.

MELODY ZAGAMI

This issue also features Hair-a-scopes in the bonus "Beauty Astrology" section. All Geminis better purchase the $40.95 TIGI Wave Runner or face total astrological misalignment.

Since V-day is looming closer and closer the Cos (as I affectionately call it and insist you do as well) is crammed with red heart-related ideas to get you in the mood for all that good lovin' and chocolate coming your way on Feb. 14. Articles like "The Sweet Way He Took Me by Surprise" and "8 Ways to go Wild With Your Mate" will get you and your guy in the mood. You know he reads your magazines, though he'll deny it repeatedly.

Spin

Spin's February cover photo is Kiss, band number 32 in Spin's "The 50 Greatest Bands of All Time." What I've always liked about Spin is that it's not Rolling Stone: no pretentious P.J. O'Rourke political commentary - no exposes on the drug abuse of Ohio teenagers - just music.

"The 50 Greatest Band" list is a misnomer. Spin doesn't list the 50 greatest bands of all time, but rather the 50 greatest influences on music through history. There's no other excuse as to why Led Zeppelin (number three) is placed directly behind The Ramones. Greatest rock band lists have been done to the death.

This list consists of different music genres (P.Funk, number six, Sly and the Family Stone, number 12, and Radiohead, number 15, for example) Why The Who are number 39 (behind Blondie, number 37) is beyond me, but they can sure as hell count on a complaint letter when I get a chance.

In their Noise section entitled "Hooras for Boobies' Girls Go Wild; Boys Profit," we learn about an important Internet resource, concertflashing.com. The article opens, "Could anything be more American than getting shit-faced at a rock concert, climbing on your boyfriend's shoulders and flashing your tits at the band?"

The man's got a point. He goes on to explain how even the flashing business is suffering from these tough economic times, and I have to ask, is nothing sacred?

Wired

I bought Wired Magazine strictly for the cover, which is usually why I buy magazines. Something catches my eye and next thing I know I'm pulling my wallet out of my purse and giving my money to some media conglomerate.

Speaking of which, Feb.'s Wired cover is a lampoon-ery of soldiers holding up the flag at Iwo Jima. Instead of soldiers there's Mickey, Donald, Goofy and Peter Pan under the Special Globalization Report, "Disney Invader: Inside the Ultimate Culture Machine."

Turn to MAGAZINES, page 6

To tattoo or not to tattoo

By Sara Plummer
DAILY O'COLLEGIAN (OKLAHOMA STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) STILLWATER, Okla. – Britney Spears has one. So does her boyfriend Justin Timberlake. Tattoos have transformed from a prisoner's badge of honor to a college student's rite of passage.

As more athletes and celebrities adorn their body with art, tattoos are becoming less taboo and more "cool."

Sara Sadjadi, a human nutrition freshman, said her idea of a stereotypical tattooed person has changed dramatically.

"My idea used to be of a rugged biker-type of guy, but now, going through high school and college, it's really changed," Sadjadi said. "People I would never have pictured having a tattoo have gotten one, so I really don't have a specific picture of a tattoo-type of person anymore."

According to a U.S. News and World Report article, 15,000 tattoo studios are in operation in the United States.

Gabby Tweedy, a freshman Sociology major, knows firsthand what it is like to get tattooed.

"I've always wanted a tattoo but I wasn't always sure what I wanted," Tweedy said.

Tweedy got a purple iris tattooed on her lower back in June. She got the tattoo in memory of her grandmother.

"It means something to me," she said. "It was her favorite flower."

Tweedy didn't jump into the parlor chair right away. She did her homework on tattoo shops and the risks.

"I got on the Internet and looked at every tattoo site I could," she said.

Tweedy not only looked up tattoo parlor locations but also researched information about tattoo care, risks and how to choose a tattoo parlor.

Because tattooing is illegal in Oklahoma, Tweedy had to go out of state to get her tattoo.

"I got it in Siloam Springs, Ark. at Smilin' Jack's Tattoos," she said. "I saw his website on the Internet, and I called ahead of time to make an appointment."

Tweedy said the first step in the tattoo process was picking the design.

"I found the picture I wanted, and it was scanned, so it could then be traced on my skin," she said.

"They shave the area, no matter what body part, put the paper up to your skin, go over that with deodorant, pull it off and it's traced on your skin," Tweedy said.

Next is the more painful part.

"They do the outlining of the tattoo and then fill it in," Tweedy said. "They will do a little bit, stop and wipe the blood away and do a little more. I look back, and it didn't hurt that much. I was too excited to think about the pain."

After getting the tattoo, Tweedy was given instructions on how to care for it. "They bandaged it, and they told me to keep it on for two hours," she said.

She was told to wash it with lukewarm water, pat it dry and apply Neosporin cream to the area to keep it from itching. She was also told to put sunscreen on when out in the sun and not to swim for 7-10 days.

Tweedy is pleased with the result, but her mother was a little apprehensive.

"I told her I was going to get a tattoo, and she wasn't too happy about it," she said. "She just asked if I get it to get it in a place where it couldn't be seen."

Her mother's reaction wasn't the only thing Tweedy had to worry about. According to an article in WebMD, people with tattoos are nine times more likely to be infected with hepatitis C. This has caused many states to place regulations on tattoo parlors. Texas was the first state to pass a law requiring regular inspections of equipment and sterilization procedures.

According to www.tattooartist.com, a website for Patrick Tattoo, a tattoo parlor in New Jersey, there are four things his parlor does to keep customers safe. One-time-use needles and disposable ink containers are used for each customer. Latex gloves are worn by all employees, and medical grade disinfectants are used.

Tweedy had no medical or health problems but said Oklahoma should legalize tattooing because illegal tattooing is unsafe and causes major health problems.

The reaction Tweedy said her tattoo received has been positive, despite the old stigma attached to tattoos.

"My mom likes it," she said. "She thinks it's pretty."

"Some people are shocked because they don't think I'm the kind of person who would get a tattoo."

Tweedy said there are always going to be people who disapprove.

"Some people just don't like tattoos," she said, adding that she has no regrets.

"I love my tattoo," she said. "It's exactly what I wanted. It's perfect. I love it."

COURTESY PETE CHECCHIA

The age of wood and string

The Johannes Quartet will perform works by Beethoven, Berg and Haydn on Friday, Feb. 15 at 8 p.m. in Sweeney Concert Hall, located in Sage Hall at Smith College. Tickets are $3 for students. Call 585-3197 for reservations

COURTESY SMITH COLLEGE

Running on Thin Ice

The Smith College Dance Department presents Running on Thin Ice, a concert by MFA candidates in dance, Feb. 7-9 at 8 p.m. in Theatre 14 of the Mendenhall Center. Tickets are $5 for students and may be purchased by calling 585-ARTS.

■ magazines

continued from page 5

I only buy Wired if I can understand something within the pages and I figured this was a good bet. Jonathan Weber paints a great picture of the Disney Presence in China where they're building a new theme park scheduled to open in 2005. The photos accompanying the story are truly scary with images of people in the farthest reaches of the world touting Disney merchandise. I discovered that China and I both hold the same mindset about America. China is enthralled by America and repelled by it, and at the same time overwhelmed by it.

Who knew we had anything in common? I'm going to add Chine to my buddy list. You can also see a difficult, easy-to-use guide to the Office of Homeland Security organizational chart. I still have no idea what Tom Ridge does.

Wired doesn't deal strictly with electronics, as its name implies. There's also a story about the tight regulation of the British fertility industry in embryo police and its eventual extension to the United States.

COURTESY PATRICK DEMARCHELIER

She's a slave for Cosmo

COURTESY PATRICK DEMARCHELIER

She can't deny it.

it's not for everyone, but that's [the point].

In Army ROTC you'll push yourself. Test your limits. And in the process, learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. You could even get a scholarship. Register today for an Army ROTC class. Because you're not just like "everyone."

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/8 - Thursday 2/14/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ROLLERBALL (PG13) 12:50 4:50 7:45 9:50*
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 12:05 4:30 7:40 10:20*
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 3:55 7:10 9:50*
BIRTHDAY GIRL (R) 4:50 10:15*
I AM SAM (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25*
THE COUNT OF MONTE CHRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
THE MOTHMAN PROPHECIES (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
A WALK TO REMEMBER (PG) 12:25 7:35
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
SNOW DOGS (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30
*ALL ADVANCE TICKET SALES • NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Free on Tuesdays?
Come work for photo
email
collegianpics@yahoo.com
if interested

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

UMass Sports Briefs

Volleyball

As reported earlier in the week by the Collegian:

University of Massachusetts athletic director Bob Marcum announced Thursday that Bonnie Kenny has resigned her position as head women's volleyball coach at UMass. Kenny has accepted an offer to become the new women's volleyball coach at the University of Delaware.

"We thank Bonnie for all of her dedication and hard work with the UMass volleyball program over the last nine years," said Marcum. "We wish her well in her future endeavors at the University of Delaware."

Kenny served as UMass' head volleyball coach from 1993-2001, leading the Minutewomen to an overall record of 169-115, including three 20-win seasons, four semifinal appearances at the Atlantic 10 Championship and two trips to the National Invitational Volleyball Championship (NIVC). Her .595 winning percentage ranks her second all time at UMass, behind only Elaine Sortino (.616). Kenny owns a career record of 340-225, including a 171-110 record in nine seasons at the University of South Carolina from 1984-1992.

— Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Pro Football

The Super Bowl Champion New England Patriots announced yesterday that offensive coordinator Charlie Weis has been re-signed. contract extension worth a reported $1 million. Weis' contract had expired last Friday and was rumored to be in the running for jobs with the Carolina Panthers and Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The Patriots submitted their list of five players available for the Houston Texans' expansion draft Tuesday.

The list is as follows:

LB Ted Johnson
DE Willie McGinest
DB Terrance Shaw
DB Matt Stevens
WR Charles Johnson

Pro Basketball

L.A. Lakers center Shaquille O'Neal was placed on the injured list yesterday and will not be participating in this weekend's NBA All-Star Game due to pain in his arthritic big toe. The injury will force O'Neal to miss his second straight All-Star Game.

O'Neal missed last year's event with an inflamed arch in his right foot.

– Information from patriots.com and cnnsi.com were used in this article.

When someone needs a moderator, where do they go?

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Yeah, Baby!

High expectations with OSU recruiting class

By Travis Sawchik
THE LANTERN (OHIO STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) COLUMBUS, Ohio – It has been a while for Ohio State, the 1968 season to be exact, since its last national championship. Wednesday, the Buckeyes made their 2002 recruiting class official, and it has a chance to rain on a 34-year drought.

"I think we are going to have a lot of fun," said OSU coach Jim Tressel. "It's an impressive group. Is it a home run? A home run is nothing till you hit home plate. I guess a recruiting class is nothing till they go out there and get it done."

Experts agree.

"I'd say OSU's recruiting class is No. 1," said Chris Pool, recruiting expert from The Insiders Recruiting Network. "Everybody says Texas's class is one for the ages, but they have six or seven guys that might not qualify," he said.

To cap off the class yesterday, Derek Morris, a six-foot-six, 350-pound offensive lineman from South Carolina, announced he would be joining the Buckeyes. Pool tabbed him as his top offensive lineman in the nation and OSU quarterback's coach Joe Daniels tabbed him as an aircraft carrier.

He could handle a Super at La Bamba.

"Derek Morris is as good a catch as you could ever hope to have out of state," Tressel said.

Of the 25 players that signed with OSU, Rivals.com rated 17 as either five-star or four-star prospects. Of those 25 recruits, 18 are Ohio natives.

Morris joins the four top recruits by the Buckeyes, which include linebacker Mike D'Andrea, acknowledged as the top linebacker in the country, running back Maurice Clarett, who was named Mr. Ohio Football last season and co-recruiter man himself. Parade All-American and Division I Associated Press co-Offensive Player of the Year – Massillon quarterback Justin Zwick.

"These guys know each other. They carry around their cell phones and pagers and they communicate so much more than was done in the past," Tressel said.

OSU has only 12 seniors on its 2002 football team, which means this freshman class could have a huge impact on the field.

Clarett said earlier that he would give Lydell Ross, Jala Riley and Maurice Hall a run for the starting running back position. Yesterday Clarett said he was just joking with his elders.

"D'Andrea, (linebacker Bobby) Carpenter, (defensive tackle Quinn) Pitcock, Clarett and Morris are instant impact guys. They will play right away," Pool said.

That group does not even include Zwick, who has been tabbed the golden boy and has just Craig Krenzel – a quarterback with two career starts – in his way.

"As the recruiting class has continued, as we all got to know him more and more, it became more and more obvious this is the kind of kid we want," Daniels said.

Pool thinks Zwick will get a shot to start – next season.

"I think [OSU] is going to give him that chance to start," Pool said. "It's very rare for a freshman to start, (Indianapolis Colts quarterback) Peyton Manning couldn't do it."

Wednesday the Woody Hayes Athletic Center was exploding with electricity it had not seen since Michigan week.

"I just like the sound of the voices as I heard the guys talk today when they called in. 'Coach, we faxed it, we're excited.' They're very proud to be at OSU; they are very excited to be with each other," Tressel said.

Losing streak forces Florida to refine game

By J.P. DeGance
INDEPENDENT FLORIDA ALLIGATOR (U FLORIDA)

(U-WIRE) GAINESVILLE, Fla. – Looking back at the Florida basketball team a month ago, things seemed as if they couldn't get any better.

The Gators were on a school-record winning streak and jumped out to a 4-0 start in Southeastern Conference play. UF coach Billy Donovan's squad scored 100 points on two conference foes and disposed of one league rival by 32 points.

The Gators earned a number two ranking and several first-place votes. Things may have been good then.

Now they are just two games removed from a three-game losing streak and have tumbled in the national polls to number eight. UF is no longer controlling its own destiny for a regular-season SEC title. But Donovan doesn't think his squad has played better.

"We played an unbelievable game against LSU – we beat them handily at home," Donovan said. "We're a better team today than we were during that game."

And that game caused many to start throwing UF's name among the national elite much more readily. However, the Gators have come a long way in the last few weeks, Donovan said.

The loss against Top 10-ranked Kentucky and consecutive wins against Mississippi State and South Carolina have shown UF's coach that his team is becoming much more unselfish and disciplined.

Guard Brett Nelson is getting more assists and center Udonis Haslem is not forcing shots when he is double-teamed.

Statistically, UF's defense improved plenty during the last three games as opposed to the first 18 games.

The Gators have allowed just 60 points per game by opponents in the last three games. They were allowing nearly 70 points per game through the first 18 games. UF allowed 82 points per game against its first six conference opponents.

Donovan said the adversity of losing three consecutive games was the key factor in UF becoming a better basketball team. Although he said he hates to go through it, the skid probably will be a good thing for UF in the long run.

"If it can help us in February and March, then going through it is good. Because you can maybe win some games here and there along the way and never really realize your true potential," Donovan said. "Because we dropped three games in a row we were smack in the face of reality."

And reality did not look good. That's when UF pulled together as a team, Donovan said. Leaders stepped up and UF became more unselfish. The turnaround has continued for three games.

Donovan said he realizes that there is no guarantee that it will continue.

"I don't know if that's going to go forward the next month," Donovan said. "We're a better team. So if that three-game skid helped us improve and get better than to me it was all worth while."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Play ball!

Ashley Bakken and the No. 24 UMass softball team will open the season in Tempe, Ariz. this weekend with five games.

www.dailycollegian.com

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
THE VALLEY ADVOCATE
"THE BEST PICTURE OF THE YEAR"
THE NEW YORK TIMES
"FABULOUS!"
OVER 130 CRITICS AGREE
"ONE OF THE BEST FILMS OF THE YEAR!"
Amelie
DAILY 7 & 9:15
12th week! Last Weekend to see it! Ends Thurs. Feb.14
Downtown Northampton's
Academy of Music
Movie-Line 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com
support by The Valley Advocate • www.valleyadvocate.com

Expires 2-16-02
HAIR EAST
Be Tan
Bring this Ad in
Get 3 sessions for $20
(Separate tanning entrance next to Panda East)
Hours:
M - TH, 10 - 10
FRI, 10 - 9
Sat, 10 - 7
Sun, 12 - 6
413 256 0052
103 N. PLEASANT ST.

SPRING BREAK '02
ARE YOU READY?
SUPER SPECIALS!
Check Out www.sunsplashtours.com for Last Minute Super Specials
Includes Airfare, 7 Nights Hotel, FREE Parties, Drinks & Activities. Over 15 years experience!
SPECIALS!*
SAVE UP TO $100 ON SELECT TRIPS!
*Can not be combined with any other offer. New bookings Only
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

MORE ALL-NIGHTERS THAN A 24-HOUR DINER
NATIONAL LAMPOON'S
VAN WILDER
IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM
ARTISAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES.
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

'90 VW Fox runs excellent $1400.00 585-0599

'95 Mercury Villager Minivan, LS, all power (no AC), VG cond., no rust, 140 K miles (Trans. Rebuilt 105 K), $3500, Rick 548-9911.

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

'92 Geo Prism auto, AC, 70000 k miles $2800 B/O 323-4676

1985 Cadillac Seville excellent condition 50,000 miles like new $4000 firm call 545-4013

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Volvo Wagon $1000.00 978-724-0061

1990 Eagle summit $500.00 253-9511

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance to apply. Applications are due for Tour Guide, Summer Orientation Counselors, and Admissions Reps. Applications are available on the campus center concourse.

Mothers helper/ PCA. Help disabled mom with driving and household chores. References and drivers license required. Own transportation to south Deerfield 2 to 3 afternoons/ week, $8/hour. 665-3914.

After school care positions available. 20 years and older. Experience with school age children required. Call Matt or Brett at the YMCA in Northampton. 584-7086.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseasareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for SAT and MCAS courses, held year-round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $13/hr; paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job; flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4939.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5797

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

Office help positions. New Students Program looking for year-round office help. Preferably freshmen and sophomores. Please call 545-4940 for more information and application. Deadline is Feb. 8Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions

EMPLOYMENT

Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for tour guides, student admissions reps and summer orientation counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 8.

FOR SALE

Futon Platform bed very attractive $190. Electronic keyboard plus, stand, plus Amp. $290. And Dell inspiration laptop 3 months old, $1075. Call 549-7202

Mac Quadra 630 face 32 Ram w/ 17 in. view Sonic monitor. Perfect for word processing $125 (413) 665-6833.

FURNITURE

Couch Green/ floral pillows, $350.00. Recliner/ Lazyboy $100.00 259-1020.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David GoodRich (Pmulrey, Emekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_GoodRich@hotmail.com

LOST AND FOUND

VW car keys reward! 545-3639.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female only 1 room available ASAP HT/HTW included cumingsm@elms.edu

SERVICES

Know your rights. Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

TRAVEL

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlessssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

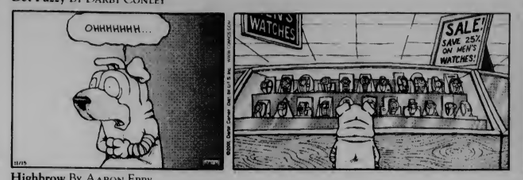
WANTED



Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

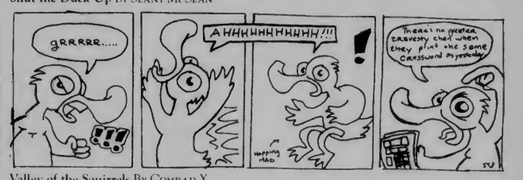
We no longer run fyi's. Please send all briefs to Jessica May, 113 Campus center basement.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Noodle By Jacki

Monty By Jim Meddick

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"We like looking at you. We look at you all the time. Even when you don't know it."
–Night Graphics

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 41 LOW: 14	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 45 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – There is no reason for you to be frustrated or bored today; there are plenty of opportunities for you to spread your wings at this time.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You must react quickly today if you are going to parlay chance meetings into something permanent.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Get together with someone who shares your ideals, and both of you can come up with a very realistic plan that can pay off handsomely.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Now is the time to fulfill that promise you gave someone only a day or two or so.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Surprise someone you love, and you'll receive a great deal in return.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Take care that you don't say anything that could be considered tactless or out of place.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What seems to others to be a crisis is actually a routine development for you.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can climb a personal peak today, but you must also be sure that you don't remain too long at the heights.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can turn your work into a great deal of fun if you look at the bright side.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – An optimistic outlook is good for everyone around you today.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Don't forget that someone you know may be in need of a little more privacy today.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – This is a good day to thank someone special for looking out for you in a time of need.

This space needs a comic...will you be that comic? (hey, it worked for the ad down there)

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

N.E. Clam Chowder

Roast Turkey

Onion Quiche (vegetarian)

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

DINNER

N.E. Clam Chowder

BBQ Salmon

Veal Madeline

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Garden Chili (vegan) (W Basics)

Are you looking for something different?
Do you know what being in a local sorority means?
COME MEET THE SISTERS OF I G U
-the only local sorority at UMass!
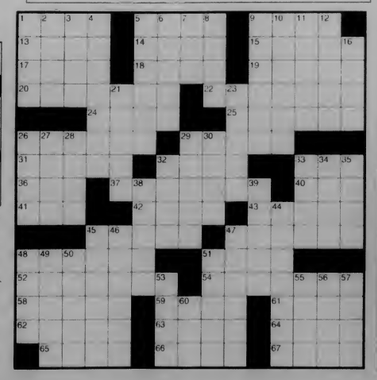
Recruitment party times: Sunday - Wednesday 6:30-8:30 406 N.Pleasant St. (on fraternity row)
Call Arlene for info or rides! 256-6874

ACROSS
1 Bantu people
5 Dog paddle
9 Moby Dick's pursuer
13 Before long
14 Voucher
15 Home in the woods
17 Columbus' ship
18 Drizzle
19 Shudder
20 Perpetuate
22 Ambie
24 Sulk
25 Roman orator
26 Obstruct
29 Brooks of country music
31 Coast downhill
32 Feng —
33 Movie quickly
36 Pacino and Unser
37 Extra helpings
40 Nabokov heroine
41 Maiuna —
42 Like the sky
43 Gambol
45 Quick to learn
47 Frothy dessert
48 Fumbled
51 Zoo staffers
52 Kin
54 Hook up
58 Burning
59 Talk wildly
61 Great Lakes port
62 Coral-reef explorer
63 Early Peruvian
64 Crevice
65 Hardy's dairymaid
66 Bucket
67 Has supper



DOWN
1 Grey of westerns
2 Apartment
3 Solitary
4 Defenseless
5 Abrade
6 Largest mammal
7 Jr.'s son, perhaps
8 Atlas abbr
9 Clear
10 — of venison
11 Diminish
12 Sturgis visitor
16 Ruler before Galba
21 Knots or bumps
23 Pungent
26 Writer Dinesen
27 Fr. life
28 Galileo's home
29 Halloween disguise

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	A	L	T	S		B	O	A	T		L	A	M	B
P	L	E	A	T		E	L	B	A		O	V	E	R
A	D	O	R	E		T	E	R	M		G	E	A	R
R	A	N	G	E		S	O	U	P		I	E	S	T
		E	D	S			P	A	N
B	A	T		T	U	F	T		P	E	T	E	S
A	B	E		P	O	R	E		B	U	R	E	A	U
B	A	L	L	O	O	N	M	O	R	T	G	A	G	E
A	S	L	E	E	P		U	F	O	S		R	E	D
R	E	S	E	T		S	C	R	A		P	Y	R	E
			I	S	T			D	U	O
J	U	N	C	T	I	O	N		S	M	A	S	H
H	A	L	O		A	F	R	O		H	A	I	K	U
A	N	N	A		F	L	E	D		E	D	D	I	E
Y	E	A	H		F	E	S	S		R	E	A	D	S

12-29-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

30 Cousin's mother
32 Blemish
33 Shocks
34 March 15, in Rome
35 Fix potatoes
38 Hedge
39 Dundee citizens
44 Forbidding
45 Has mercy
46 Gauges
47 In the head
48 Degree holder
49 Do a tailoring chore
50 Popeye's girl
51 Painter Leonardo da —
53 Faucet problem
55 Soprano's piece
56 Pick up
57 Grants approval
60 Santa —, CA

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Matthew F. Sacco
Photo Coordinator: Tibora Gircys-Blum
Copy Editor: Jennifer Eastwood
Production Supervisor: Pete Preston
Production Staff: Frank DiMeglio, Adam DeYoung

DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.08.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Jameel Pugh brings a 5.3 points per game average into Saturday's contest at the William D. Mullins Center.

Saturday night fever

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

If you ever want to see a person or a team's true mettle or intestinal fortitude, all you need to do is put said team in the bleakest of situations and tell it to find its own way out. It is against these, the most difficult of situations, that you get to see the true character of your squad.

That will be the case on Saturday evening when the Massachusetts men's basketball team hits the Mullins Center hardwood against Atlantic 10 rival LaSalle. The Minutemen (9-11, 3-6 A-10) come into the game reeling on the heels of a three-game losing streak, a skid that has seen them lose to a pair of conference perennial doormats, Rhode Island and Duquesne.

If UMass wants to avoid falling three games under .500 for the first time this season, it will need to shoot the ball better than it has as of late as well as rediscover the defensive intensity that saw it hold opponents to an average of under 60 points and 35-percent shooting in the first four games of the season.

"Whoever steps on the court has to become one unit," said senior tri-captain Eric Williams. "It can't be four people on one page, it has to be all five people on one page."

One player who will not be on any page very often against the Explorers (9-13, 2-7 A-10) will be Micah Brand. The junior power forward is expected to return Saturday after sitting out the last two games with a sprained ankle. Brand, who is averaging 10 points and six rebounds per contest, is expected to play 10-15 minutes barring any further flare-ups.

"We worked him out [Thursday], and I think we'll have him for some minutes," said UMass head coach Steve Lappas. "We're going to have Micah for some, but he's not going to be close to 100 percent."

If Brand plays he'll be thrown straight to the wolves as he will be asked to help shut down the A-10's fourth leading scorer, pre-season all-conference pick Rasual Butler. Butler, a six-foot-seven senior is averaging just more than 20 points and almost 10 boards per contest while playing both small and power forward.

"He's playing a lot at the four spot for them, which is not a good matchup for us," said Lappas. "I'm leaning toward putting Raheim [Lamb] on him, but the only question I have is do I want to start our small lineup with Raheim at the four or not."

Whether he is asked to defend Butler or not, Lamb will need to produce at the offensive end of the floor for the Minutemen. On Wednesday night, Lamb scored just four points on a career-worst 2-of-10 shooting. If he can attack Butler and make him work on the defensive end of the floor, that may be the best defense on a player who relies so much on fresh legs to knock down his mid-range jumper.

With Lamb defending the Explorers top threat and the possible return of Brand, the pressure to put forth a five-star performance has been lifted from the Maroon and White's other big men, Williams and Kitwana Rhymer. That pair combined for 30 points and 16 boards in 57 minutes against the Dukes and will be asked to put up similar numbers on Saturday. If the tandem of Williams and Rhymer can stay out of foul trouble and shut down LaSalle's big men Reggie Okosa (12 points and 8 rebounds per game) and Joel-Jean Baptiste, the Minutemen will have taken a major step toward their fourth conference victory.

Whether they win on Saturday or not, the Minutemen must look at the big picture. They sit just three games out of second place in the A-10 East, and with seven games remaining on the slate, anything is possible.

"There isn't one of those seven games that we can't win. We're probably not going to win all seven, but I'm not going to jump out of my mind if we did," said Lappas. "But as I've told the guys, on the other hand, we could lose all seven games. We just have to approach each game as a new day."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Ronnell Blizzard and the Minutemen will focus on team defense Saturday against La Salle.

Battered UMass Opens Spring

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

To most, February signifies blizzards, freezing temperatures, Black history month and Valentine's Day. Yet, for Coach Judy Dixon and the Massachusetts men's tennis team, the month signifies the start of its spring season.

Despite injuries in the fall, the squad posted a 3-2 record, which served as a warm up for their upcoming Atlantic 10 conference matches. As the Maroon and White embark on a four match road trip this weekend in Ithica, N.Y. against Binghamton College, the University of Buffalo, Assumption College and St. Bonaventure, it faces a similar predicament with injuries to two key players and ineligibility issues.

"Rory Thiele is out for the season with back problems, and Steve Prisco has a recurring back problem and is out for the weekend (remaining day to day," said Dixon. "Jed Greenberg almost transferred for academic reasons and just made the choice to stay a few days ago. He has only had a few practices but should be ready next week.

"We have a new player from Temple named Jeff Albert who is ineligible until next year. But we have another player named Phil Cullen a junior, who is ineligible for these matches but will be able to play next weekend."

As a result of these hardships the Minutemen will be forced to forfeit every doubles point in Ithaca as they only have five healthy, eligible players for a six-man lineup. This weekend, Todd Champeau will replace the injured Steve Prisco at number one, and freshman Scott Sam-Teeh will start at the two slot. Junior Eric Rebhun, Floridian freshman Reid Stubbs and newcomer Mark Porter round out the rest of the line-up.

Though the UMass men would like to come away from Ithica with a few victories under their belt, they are fully aware of their weaknesses under these new circumstances.

"We're going to look at these matches as practice," said Dixon. "When Steve is healthy and Jed gets in good shape, we'll be on track. But for now we're going to go out and just do our best."

In terms of matches, the Maroon and White defeated Binghamton in the fall, but with a stronger roster. Conference foe St. Bonaventure consistently plays tough with its two top players on scholarship. Last year, the Minutemen lost a heartbreaking match to St. Bonaventure 4-2 in the finals of the A-10 tournament.

"St. Bonaventure's one and two are back from last year and are scholarship athletes," said Dixon. "It's difficult for us to play against the scholarship teams because they have more funding available. We didn't beat their top two and we fought for points down low which will be the same thing this time around."

Dixon's outlook for the rest of the season remains positive but grounded as the weakened squad faces the tougher half of their schedule including fierce opponents like Yale and Colgate.

"We're struggling and just looking to do the best that we can this year," said Dixon. "We're not looking for any huge big deal. All we want are improvements and effort. This weekend is about match play and not victory."

Nothing new for the Minutewomen

Strong "D", Weak "O" plagued team all season

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

It was the same old story for the Massachusetts women's basketball team (6-16, 4-7 Atlantic 10) last night in the Bronx, N.Y.

Good defense
Poor shooting
Being out shot from the free throw line.
All three have been the overriding plot in the book entitled, The UMass Women's Basketball Season, version 2001-2002

Fordham	71
UMass	55

With a consistent six point second half lead, Fordham (15-17, 5-8 A-10) sprinted to the final horn with an 18-6 run en route to a 71-55 win over the Maroon and White.

The Minutewomen defense was on display for the first seven minutes, as the squad held the Rams to zero made field goals and just one point in that time period.

"Defensively, we played good for stretches," Coach Joanie O'Brien said after the game.

As has been the case all season long, the UMass offense couldn't take advantage of Fordham's ineptitude, managing to score just 3 points in the same timeframe. The game's lone field goal in the first seven minutes was a fast break layup by Monique Govan.

"Right now we are just an awful offensive team," O'Brien said. "We have to find somebody to put the ball in the basket."

There were 14 lead changes in the first half, but it was a buzzer beater to end the half that ended UMass' turns of holding the lead.

Fordham senior Kady Kanoute was on the court for just 11 seconds of action last night, the final 11 of the first half and drilled a three to end the half. The trey gave Fordham a 31-27 lead at the half.

The defense unraveled in the second half, allowing the Rams to go 12-for-21 from the field (57.1 percent).

"We gave up layups [in the second half]," O'Brien said. The Rams held the lead for the entire second half behind a 27 of 33 from the free throw line.

Their second half lead shifted between four and eight throughout the final frame and didn't reach double-digits until a 60-49 lead with just 2:52 left to go in the game.

Fordham guard Patty Williams scored a team-high 19 points. The sophomore shot 7-for-12 from the floor in 39 minutes of play.

UMass junior Jennifer Butler's field goal shooting continued to struggle (3-for-8), but managed to reach 13 points behind a 7-for-8 performance from the charity stripe.

"Jen got played one on one tonight and she didn't finish her shots," O'Brien said.

Coach O'Brien was also quick to call out the play of her young backcourt.

"We are struggling because our backcourt is struggling," O'Brien said while pointing out that it was the guard's decision-making processes with which she was less than impressed.

Freshman point guard Katie Nelson did lead the team in scoring last night. The Ellicot City, Md. native went 4-for-10 from three-point land (6-for-14 overall), scoring 18 points. The 5-foot-7 Nelson also made three steals in the loss.

The Minutewomen have little time to iron out their problems, with a home game against St. Bonaventure Sunday.

O'Brien summed up her team's problems best after the yesterday's loss:

"Right now we are not a very good basketball team."

Troubles the team are unlikely to change prior to Sunday's game against the third-place Bonnies (12-9, 6-4 A-10) at the William D. Mullins Center.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Monique Govan (in white) was one of many Minutewomen to struggle in the UMass' 16-point loss to Fordham. The freshman point guard committed three of her team's 18 turnovers last night in Bronx, N.Y.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

MONDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY EIGHT ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.11.02

Story blames speaker for school budget issues

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts community discussed budget cuts with state Representative Ellen Story (D- Amherst) on Feb. 7 in room 163C of the Campus Center.

Representative Story laid the problem bare.

"The reason that we are in this situation in because the Legislature has not funded the University in the away it should be funded," Story said. "It is a crucial part of the state and it has been devastated.

"The majority of them went to private schools, most of them are based in Boston," Story added. "They know nothing about the value of public education."

And she was right.

Educational information was not available for all 160 members of the House of Representatives, but only 57 representatives did either the whole or part of their higher education at a public university. In the Senate, only 15 senators attended a public university. There are 40 senators in the General Court.

Story urged the audience to contact their local representatives and senators.

"Tell them that unless they pay attention to the University they will not be reelected," Story said. "There are enough of us to make sure that doesn't happen."

Again, she was right.

Over 13,000 UMass-Amherst students are represented in the General Court, according to State Government Relations office. Students need to contact their representatives, Story said.

"They need to hear more from constituents about the importance of this," Story said. "They need to hear, from people who vote for them, or who don't vote for them, that the University is an absolute top priority."

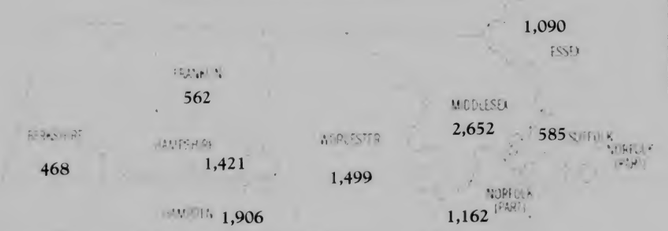
Story places much of the blame for the budget on speaker of the House Thomas Finneran (D- 12th Suffolk).

"There are so many people that pay attention to what the speaker wants them to do and do not want to do something that he does not want to do, or does not want done. There are some people who are close associates of the speaker who vote pretty much the way he wants them to vote," Story said. "The only thing that can get legislators to vote in a way that the speaker does not want them to vote is if they hear from the folks back home that you are watching how they vote and that you depend and expect them to be championing the cause of the University.

A supplemental funding bill to fund the negotiated contractual raises is being held up by Mr. Finneran, Story said.

"This is one of the issues that will absolutely be decided by Tom Finnernan. It is the obligation of the state to fund it," she said. "It could be funded tomorrow, if the Speaker allowed it to."

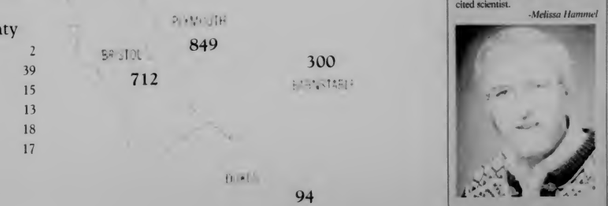
Although the bill is in the House Ways and Means committee, Story said that Chair John Rodgers (D-12th Norfolk) "does exactly what the speaker tells him to."



In the Senate, Story explained, there is a complex situation because of the politics surrounding President Thomas Birmingham's (D-Middlesex, Suffolk, Essex) decision to run for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

"Birmingham has been supportive of the University in the past and the University did extremely well when Stan Rosenberg (D-Hampshire and Franklin) was chair of the Ways and Means committee, and as soon as he was no longer chair of Ways and Means the University did not do so well."

Senator Rosenberg is a 1977 graduate of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst and a former University employee.



"Stan Rosenberg is a very active supporter of the University," Story said. "And if you think about it, if Stan Rosenberg could possibly become the president of the Senate, that would bode so well for the future of UMass."

UMass-Amherst enrollment, by county

House of Representatives, by county

Barnstable	4	Hampshire	2
Berkshire	4	Middlesex	39
Bristol	14	Norfolk	15
Dukes and Nantucket	1	Plymouth	13
Essex	17	Suffolk	18
Franklin	2	Worcester	17
Hampden	13

SOURCE: STATE GOVERNMENT RELATIONS. GRAPHIC BY ALICIA UPANO

Faculty recognized by Trustees

Some good news did come out of last week's University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees meeting in Dartmouth when the Board named two professors from the Amherst campus as Distinguished Faculty members.

Geoscientist Raymond Bradley and mathematician Donald Geman were awarded the honor following a nomination from both interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams and from Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Charlena Seymour.

Both professors have worked for the University since the 1970's. Bradley is a paleoclimatologist who studies the effects of global warming and the greenhouse effect. He has also written 9 books, including Paleoclimatology: Reconstructing Climates of the Quaternary, contributed to a number of other books and has written several articles. He has served as the head of the Geosciences Department since 1993 and has garnered nearly 7 million dollars in grant money from agencies such as the National Science Foundation and the U.S. Department of Energy.

German is best known for his work in image processing and in computer vision. The goal of his research is to devise a way for a computer to mimic the function of the eye and its connections to the brain. He is a fellow at the Institute of Mathematical Statistics and has been recognized by the American Society for Information and Technology as its most frequently cited scientist.

-Melissa Hammel

Raymond Bradley

New professors hired at UMass

Despite cuts and freeze, programs expand

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Amidst budget cutbacks at the University of Massachusetts, there have been those who have joined the UMass faculty in recent months.

Nursing Joan M. Culley joined the School of Nursing as both the administrative director of the Office for the Advancement of Nursing Education and a clinical associate professor (in which she will teach one class each year starting next fall).

"I am passionate about nursing and the many exciting opportunities available to nurses," she said last month. "Nursing is a career that demands lifelong learning. My career choices have provided a way to give something back to my profession, community and the country."

As the office director, she will oversee undergraduate and graduate programs within the School, including the Learning Resource Center. The office also supports the Undergraduate and Graduate Academic Matters Committees.

Prior to working at UMass, Cully served as the director of nursing and as a professor at Holyoke Community College.

Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning

Elisabeth M. Hamin and Ethan Carr were appointed as assistant professors in the landscape architecture and regional planning department last semester.

Hamin, who received her doctorate in city and regional planning from the University of Pennsylvania in 1997 and taught at Iowa State University from 1997 to 2001, now teaches classes in growth management, sustainable communities and regional planning.

Carr's focus is on history and theory lecture courses and design studios. He earned his master's degree in 1981 in landscape architecture from Harvard University's Graduate School of Design.

Since then, Carr has worked as both a part and full-time instructor at the Harvard University Graduate School of Design, landscape historian for the National Park Service, program director for Scenic Hudson, Inc. in New York and historical landscape architect at the Denver Service Center of the National Park Service.

Humanities and Fine Arts

Last semester several professors were also added to various departments in the Humanities and Fine Arts as assistant professors.

Timothy Rohan joined the Art department. Rohan earned his Ph.D. at Harvard University and was a visiting lecturer at Vassar College as well as a teaching fellow at Harvard University preceding his acceptance to UMass.

After serving as assistant professor at the University of North Florida, James Smethurst, who earned his Ph.D. at Harvard University, joined the W.E.B. DuBois department of Afro-American Studies.

Banu Subramaniam, who earned her Ph.D. and graduate certificate from Duke University, joined the Women's Studies department.

Subramaniam served as a visiting professor at the University of California at Irvine and a University of Arizona research assistant professor prior to coming to UMass.

Margara Russotto, who previously worked as a professor and researcher at the Universidad Central de Venezuela, joined the Spanish and Portuguese department. Russotto earned her Ph.D. at the Universidad de Sao Paulo.

After serving as a visiting faculty member for the Naropa Institute in Boulder, Colo., Peter Gizzi joined the English department. He earned his Ph.D. from the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Casey Perin, who earned his Ph.D. from the University of

Turn to PROFESSORS, page 3

SCOTT BERGER/COLLEGIAN

Service learning?

The community service resource fair was held with the accompaniment of a band.

INTERNATIONAL BRIEFS

Cuba

By Anna Chaloupka
THE BATTALION (TEXAS A&M U.)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE STATION, Texas – The United States could gain millions of dollars from agricultural exports if federal authorities lifted the trade barrier with Cuba, according to a Texas A&M University study.

The United States, under a moderate export growth forecast, could generate $419 million in business sales and create 11,000 jobs from exporting $411 million in agricultural products such as rice, soybeans, wheat, chicken meat and corn, according to the study, "Economic Impacts of U.S. Agricultural Exports to Cuba."

Under a high export growth forecast, agricultural exports could reach $1.24 billion, generating $2.8 billion in business sales and creating 31,000 jobs, the study reported.

Dr. Claude P. Rosson, director of the Center for North American Studies at A&M and lead researcher for the study, said the forecast is the most optimistic trade scenario with Cuba, but it would be the hardest to achieve.

"The high export growth forecast would be very difficult to obtain in a short time," Rosson said. "But the moderate forecast is quite attainable over the next five years. The prospects are more important on impact."

Rosson said Cuba's economy also could benefit from the lifted trade barrier, advancing in telecommunications, textile and apparel production, and oil and gas exploration.

"We would expect their economy to experience positive growth and economic development," Rosson said. "Their economy would be much more diverse."

Flynn Adcock, A&M research associate and economist, said the United States and Cuba could benefit if trade barriers were eliminated with Cuba.

"The study shows that if the trade barriers were lifted between the U.S. and Cuba, then it could be advantageous to the U.S. economy if allowed to export and if Cuba refined its own economy," Adcock said.

Adcock, a Republican candidate for Congress, declined to say whether he would support lifting the trade embargo. Critics of Cuban dictator Fidel Castro argue that eliminating trade barriers with the Communist nation would strengthen a regime that is widely criticized for human rights violations and that benefits would not affect the Cuban people.

Texas, No. 5 among the top export states, could ship up to $34 million in agricultural exports, leading to increased business activity and the creation of 1,400 new jobs.

Texas would benefit from increased export activity because of its close proximity to Cuba and because of its strong production of rice, the highest valued export to Cuba, Rosson said.

The federal government has held an embargo against trade with Cuba since 1962. A proposed amendment to the Senate farm bill could ease or eliminate the trade barriers, Rosson said.

"There are attempts being made, but it's a slow road ahead," he said.

Middle East

By Leta Shy
DAILY CALIFORNIAN (U. CALIFORNIA-BERKELEY)

(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. – In a speech Wednesday at the University of California-Berkeley, Secretary General of the League of Arab States Amre Moussa implored the United States to intervene in the ongoing Arab-Israeli conflict.

Sponsored by the Center for Middle Eastern Studies and the Chancellor's Office, the speech drew more than 100 people to Alumni House.

Moussa, who was prime minister of Egypt for 10 years, said Israel's military occupation of Palestine is "the root of all the problems we are seeing" and will not end without more world attention.

"The cycle of violence seems unstoppable," he said. "The future has never looked bleaker."

When asked why the United States should mediate, Moussa said the two conflicting camps needed guidance and that the United States was the only country that could "push us in the right direction."

"Since we live in the world with one superpower and this superpower has major interest in the Middle East, and since all agreements had been signed under supervision, we need the U.S.," he said.

Moussa also commended UC Berkeley on its "student activism" and proposed a series of workshops held on campus that would help increase awareness of problems in the Middle East.

"Some of the finest academic minds are being groomed here," Moussa said. "Universities such as Berkeley could do humanity a great favor."

Organizations such as Students for Justice in Palestine, which held a protest Wednesday, have been especially active since the September, 2000 Palestinian uprising. Last year the group held educational workshops in honor of the uprising's anniversary.

Nezar Alsayyad, chair of the Center for Middle Eastern Studies, agreed with Moussa's call for UC involvement in Middle East education. He said the university has already been involved with making sure its students have opportunities to learn about Arab-Israeli disputes.

"In Berkeley we're very aggressive in pursuing the Model Arab League," Alsayyad said.

Moussa also touched on terrorism and the consequences of the Sept. 11 attacks, saying there is a fear that U.S. attacks in Afghanistan could "spread to other countries, including Arab ones."

He also said the increase in discrimination against Arabs and Muslims following the attacks was another reason UC Berkeley should join others in educating the nation.

Audience members eagerly conversed with Moussa after his speech ended, although some later commented that his lecture lacked key elements of Palestinian history.

"Everything he mentioned was post-1967," said Abdul Rahim, a senior majoring in biology. "He didn't mention the 1948 aggression. He basically legitimized Israel's right to exist."

Ruhim added that Moussa's reasons for using the United States to referee Middle Eastern violence was unjustified, saying the country is "biased" in favor of Israel. He said the United Nations would be a better mediator.

Omar Nagati, a fourth-year graduate student, agreed that Moussa's speech was not as detailed as he had hoped.

"He is, after all, a politician," Nagati said. "He has to weigh his answers."

Nagati, however, said he was "quite satisfied" with Moussa's speech.

"This is what the American people needed to hear," he said.

Briefs compiled from wire sources

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri (Week) Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 week days between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lillien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gircsye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Have you been wondering...
"What educational and career benefits are there to doing a co-op?"
"How do I apply for an internship?"
"Which employers have summer & semester Co-op Jobs?"

Find out the answers to these questions (and more!) at the 19th Annual Co-op and Summer Job Fair

Thursday, February 14, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Open to all students and majors.

Have YOU thought about doing an internship or co-op?

The following is a partial list of organizations that are attending the COOPERATIVE EDUCATION JOB FAIR. Employers will have table displays throughout the day and several will offer formal presentations in the afternoon.

Boston Globe
Compaq Computer
Federal Reserve Bank
General Electric
IBM
ING Aetna Financial
The May Institute
Millipore
National Park Service
Reebok International
Spirit of Boston
TJX Companies
United Technologies
US Fish & Wildlife Service
Walt Disney World

A co-op position offers you an opportunity to gain valuable experience and helps you become a more competative canidicate when you graduate. Through cooperative education you can explore your chosen field while earning a salary.
For more information, call the Campus Career Network Field Experience Office at 545-6265 ~ www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Goten
Open for Valentines Day Cooking at your table
now accepting OCMP
Goten Valentines Lunch Special 12:30 pm to 4 pm
Free Beer or Soda with entree order
On Rt 116 Sunderland / Call for reservations 413.665.3628

The Catholic Community @ Newman Center invites you to join them to begin the 40 DAYS of the Lenten journey

Ash Wednesday Services
Wednesday February 13, 2002

Distribution of ashes at Masses and at Prayer Service
8am, 12:15pm, 5:15pm, 7pm

9pm Prayer Service

Remember that you are dust and into dust you shall return.

Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St. 413.549.0300

■ professors

continued from page 1

California at Berkeley, joined the Philosophy department and served as a graduate student instructor at UC Berkeley and Stanford.

Teresa Ramsby joined the Classics department. She earned her Ph.D. from Indiana University and taught Latin and Roman culture there prior to her acceptance at UMass.

Anne Broadbridge, who earned her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago and bachelor's from UMass, joined the History department.

Susan Shapiro, who previously taught at Columbia and Syracuse Universities, joined the Judaic and Near Eastern Studies department as an associate professor. She earned her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

U. Connecticut 7th least tolerant college

By Melissa Flynn
THE DAILY CAMPUS (U. CONNECTICUT)

(U-WIRE) STORRS, Conn. – The Princeton Review Guide that came out in August 2001 selected University of Connecticut as the seventh least tolerant college of alternative lifestyles. The book is called "The Best 331 Colleges."
The director of the Rainbow Center, Stephanie Marnin, said she was somewhat suspicious of the survey.

"The Princeton review's pool seems to be very selective," Marnin said.

She said no one she knows responded to the survey, but said that it does not mean UConn is free of homophobic issues.

Unlike Marnin, students at the Rainbow Center were not surprised by the results.

"Everything on this campus just seems one-sided," said Zachary Stewart, a first-semester chemistry major.

He said he thinks that whenever he is around heterosexuals, people want to presume that he is heterosexual.

Other students at the center also felt uneasy about homophobia at UConn.

"When I first came here as a freshmen, I felt uncomfortable right away," said Carrie-Lynn O'Donnell, a 7th-semester English major.

She also said she felt homosexuality was something you were not supposed to talk about.

Over the past few years the center has endured criticism from several students.

"People constantly drive by the center and yell out obscenities," O'Donnell said.

The center's website states that they are committed to the diversity and civility of the entire UConn community.

"UConn itself has shown a commitment in that they have the Center and they were willing to hire a new director," Marnin said.

At the center there are books, movies, a TV room and a kitchen. It aims to be a place where people can be comfortable no matter what their beliefs are.

"When you come to the center, it is not assumed that you are gay or straight," O'Donnell said.

"It is just about respect," said Jorel LaTorre, a 5th-semester music major.

She also said she feels that people don't have to agree with people's choices, they just have to tolerate it.

"I think we here at UConn do tolerate alternative lifestyles," said Debbie-Ann Ellington, a 9th-semester nursing major.

Other students agreed with the fact that alternative lifestyles are not looked down on.

"I have seen people who are homosexual and they seem to be accepted," said Kristen Wood, a 1st-semester biology major.

Rob Franek, the author of the book that published the survey, said he thinks the most important thing to remember is that the survey is based on students' opinion.

"Remember these are not my opinions," Franek said. The website, survey.review.com, is the most highly trafficked for prospective college students, said Franek.

The survey contains 73 questions with different topics. The Princeton review received 233 surveys back from UConn students.

"If prospective students see this list they may tend to be uncomfortable about considering [UConn] as an option," Franek said.

Even though students interviewed outside of the Rainbow Center said they felt welcomed and made to feel comfortable, all the students interviewed from the center felt differently.

"Oppression is oppression is oppression: all hate crimes need to be addressed by the administration," said Bethany Hamilton, a 9th-semester English major.

Marnin thought that statistics are not always the best indicators of what an atmosphere is really like.

"Often there is an increase in reports when people are being educated on who and where they can go to talk about these things," Marnin said.

Many students also feel that education on alternative lifestyles is important.

"I totally advocate for cultural centers, but there should also be hotlines and people who deal with these things exclusively," Hamilton said.

One student was very surprised that homophobia could even exist at UConn.

"I am just surprised that something like this would exist here because I only would expect something like that at a school in the south or somewhere small," said Eric Buchholz, a 5th-semester economics major.

Enron collapse costs U. Minn. endowments $8.3M

By Maggie Hessel-Mial
MINNESOTA DAILY (U. MINNESOTA)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS – The University of Minnesota's endowment investments were not immune to the chaos and backlash of the Enron debacle, an investment company informed the University Board of Regents on Thursday.

The University lost approximately $8.3 million of its investment returns on the once-soaring, now-crashing Enron stocks.

"Enron seemed to be one of the most visionary companies of the time," said Alfred Harrison, vice chairman of Alliance Capital, one of the investment companies with which the University works. "A lot of evidence came forward to indicate (Enron management) were misleading."

The amount the University lost because of Enron's bankruptcy and falling stock value is less than 1 percent of the total amount of the institution's endowment, said Sheila Warness, University director of asset management.

The endowment investments – a combination of money from private donations and the University's land grant investments that totals more than $600 million – are invested into a diverse portfolio of stocks. The money made from these ventures used for programs, including scholarships, research and academic support.

After the initial drop in stock prices and allegedly false information from Enron, Alliance Capital investors chose to purchase more of the stocks, a process that is typically sound when company managers are honest, Harrison said.

"This is a very sorry part of my career. It was a mistake," Harrison said. "I hate to say I was duped, but that's the bottom line."

The University's endowment returns dipped the last two years, but University officials say they are hopeful of improvement once the economy sees an upturn.

Will you be my Valentine?
Nancy Fletcher, Executive Director of ACT NOW!, browses handmade valentines at the Center of the Arts in Northampton.

WWW DAILYCOLLEGIAN COM

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice!
Log on now! www.carloansok.com
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

Tired of the Dorms?
CANCUN
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2002

SPRING BREAK '02
ARE YOU READY?
SUPER SPECIALS!
Check Out www.sunsplashtours.com for Last Minute Super Specials
Includes Airfare, 7 Nights Hotel, FREE Parties, Drinks & Activities. Over 15 years experience!
SPECIALS!* SAVE UP TO $100 ON SELECT TRIPS!
*Cannot be combined w/ any other offer. New bookings Only
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

Costaway Lounge
Will proudly present another successful
Amateur Night
Monday February 25th starting at 7 pm
PENTHOUSE PET DOMINIQUE STCROIX
◆ Cash prizes awarded
◆ All ladies over 18 must apply in person
◆ Open on Mondays at 10pm with 10 Beautiful Exotic Entertainers. Food and Prizes given away
Open Tuesdays - Saturday 11am - 1am
VIP Room available for private engagement parties
Phone# 413 665 8733

Webstaff Needed!
Get Small Paychecks for easy work.
Contact Sam at 545-3500 or visit the office

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.11.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

Capital tunnel vision:

Rest of state left in dark

It was just this time last year when the University of Massachusetts looked like it was truly taking steps toward joining the nation's elite public universities. But fast forward to the present and the lack of support offered by the Massachusetts state government, namely the recent budget cuts, has for all intensive purposes knocked UMass back into the stone age.

So instead of moving ahead, UMass has taken a step back and frankly, there is reason for concern. In a quick scan of higher education institutions across the United States, it is clear that public universities are flourishing.

The academic reputations of state schools are at an all time high, as are the number of applicants. With most public universities offering a top notch education for a third of the price of most private schools, and even less for in-state students, people have really caught on to getting the best education out of their money.

What allows these schools like the University of Texas, the University of North Carolina and the University of Florida to thrive is the statewide support they receive and the government backing they deserve.

The common justification for this huge gap in government support between these schools and UMass, is that the state schools outside New England don't have the top notch private institutions to compete with – which is blatantly untrue.

It may be the case in Florida where UF, Florida State and Miami rule, but in North Carolina, UNC-Chapel Hill must deal with Duke, as is the case in California where UCLA and Cal have Stanford to contend with.

With that, it is easy to see that the argument has no merit. The fact of the matter is that the Massachusetts state government has for some time seen it convenient to forget about its flagship university to the west.

As far as the powers that be in Boston are concerned, Amherst and maybe the whole of Western Massachusetts might as well be another state.

Look at the way The Boston Globe continually supports Boston College and takes every shot it can get at UMass. The Globe, like any cowardly schoolyard bully, finds it easy to take its pokes from afar. But with the exponential growth in respect and reputation that UMass had been enjoying for the past couple years, the Pioneer Valley seemed to be making Bostonians a little claustrophobic.

So down comes the boom with a school-wide budget cut that no one – not students, faculty, employees or parents – can hide from. Now instead of heightening its reputation, UMass will likely be blacklisted by applicants who are informed of the largest faculty decrease in public university history.

A future that once looked so bright for UMass has been turned pitch black by a state government that lacks the vision to see outside the borders of it's own capital.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

I'm as mad as hell

And I'm not going to take this anymore

KEN CAMPBELL

Hey, UMass. Can I talk to you for a minute? Not reporter to source, not student to University, but person to person.

What the hell is wrong with you?

It is utterly reprehensible for the University to hold its students responsible for the brunt of budget cuts. By increasing, yet again, the cost of attendance to your quality – excuse me as I choke on my own sarcasm – institution, you are strangling the best and brightest thing at this University: the student body.

Which will ultimately suffer and die, having been blooded time and again to pay for your economic shortfalls.

I understand that times are hard. I understand the states have seen a fall off in revenues.

But when I keep hearing how we all have to make our fair share of sacrifices, I'm ready to smack the smile off that Minuteman. As of fall next year, cost of attendance will be higher by at least 800 dollars than last fall semester. And to hear that the University is doing this to protect the academic quality of UMass makes me angry. How can John Hoey, Director of Communications, say, "the University is going to do everything it has to do to maintain the quality of the academic endeavor" and not choke on those words? I say them, and my gag reflex kicks in. I don't believe it anymore.

I once covered a meeting my freshmen year. The Chancellor (Davey K. Scott at the time) had just announced that affirmative action was being adjusted. One woman stood up and said that the diploma she would get would just be a receipt. At the time I thought it a pretty strong stance. Now I realize that the only thing that Boston sees students as is a revenue source. UMass was told to cut costs, so of course the ax falls on student services – because after all, we're just students. We're just walking wallets to the University.

Personally, I'm glad I'm graduating. I'm getting out while the going's good. I wonder whether in twenty years there will be a University of Massachusetts or not. The flagship campus is sinking, not from severe times but from severe mishandling on all levels of responsibility. If the trend of poor leadership continues, this will be nothing more than an overgrown community college. Officials keep saying that yes, we will lose faculty, but those who remain will make us better than ever. This isn't boot camp. We aren't trying to wash out the slackers. We're going to lose quality faculty, and with it the quality education that the University used to provide.

> "It's time the University stopped "communicating" and started listening."

I cannot believe that the Commonwealth's government – which this University is an extension of – has decided to let this place whither on the vine. The Board of Trustees actually does have an emergency fund, in case the University hits hard times. Hey Grace Hey: the wolves are at the gate, okay? We're crying 'uncle' here; give us the damned money. How many times must we beat the dead horse? How many other colloquiums will I have to use? How many cliches will I have to burn?

The University is hemorrhaging money on administrative payroll and programs that are not vital. And let me explain what vital means, because apparently there are some people in Whitmore that don't understand the concept. Vital means that without it, you cannot survive as an institution. And instead of cutting one or two high cost programs (such as, and it pains me to say it, athletics) Whitmore has instead targeted several small, and in the opinion of a large segment of the population, vital programs. Teachers cannot teach, staff cannot work and students cannot learn if they are home with their children. Students cannot circulate if they fear for their safety. Students cannot learn in a filthy environment.

The entirely illogical reasoning behind these decisions strikes me as absurd. Sinking money into new buildings for SOM and science when the rest of the campus goes to Hades in a hand basket is ridiculous. And before you even start in on me SOM, I know you aren't getting diamond hallways – I'm just saying that we must hang together, for we will surely hang separately. Part of those buildings are built with private funds. Great. Seize the money and float the campus for a time. The University needs it, not just one segment.

I'm sorry if this seemed to be all over the place, but I'm angry. I'm angry when I see people that don't know what their priorities should be. I'm angry when I see the campus being actively destroyed by forces that should be in our control. I'm angry when I hear words of reason 'appreciated' in the value of 'communication.' It's time the University stopped 'communicating' and started listening. Much like the legislators who we are told to vote out of office for not listening, the administration – on all levels – must remember that this is an extension of the government. All of them get their salaries paid by our fees and our taxes. You work for us. It's about damn time you remembered that.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Ed/Op is always accepting column submissions. Send yours to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com. Spread the word.

Please don't ask, please don't tell:

Examining the things better left unsaid

BRIAN LOHNES

The world is full of questions. Asking questions is how we learn and how change comes about. Unfortunately, there are many questions that just aren't worth asking. You know the ones I am talking about. The quintessential professor: "Everyone has done the reading, right?" to the drunken, "Where's the D.P. Dough menu?" These are the kind of questions that get ingrained in you because they always have the same answer.

When the teacher asks if everyone has the reading done, nobody says no. Instead the entire class begins nodding their heads up and down like a bunch of trained animals. Note to professors: the reading did not get done.

We all know the dreaded two week period at the beginning of the semester when you see everyone that you had been away from on either winter or summer break, or on your academic suspension. "How is your schedule," "How are classes," "How was the prison term?" There is only one way to answer these inquiries. "Not that bad, how about you?" Then the person who posed the question will usually launch into some lengthy diatribe on how they wanted to get into Class A because the professor is awesome, but it was overenrolled. So, for the next 15 minutes you will hear about every class the person considered taking instead of the original one that was full. I know I wince when I see someone coming that I have to say hello to and make some small talk, but after we get through, "How was your break?" we've officially run out of things to say to each other. That's the time to fake an illness and head off to health services.

Here's a classic, "Guess how late I was up until last night?" This question cracks me up because it is a double-edged sword. From Sundas to Wednesday, this is a negative question, "I didn't finish the paper until 5:30 this morning, man, I just want to die." Magically on Friday morning the answer to this question is to be worn as a badge of honor, "I was up until 5:30 this morning partying! It was insane! The crazy thing is I don't feel that bad!" This isn't saying much pal. Your head hurts from writing a paper, but after sucking down a large volume of alcohol, you are clear as a bell. Here's a tidbit of advice for you. Nobody gives a crap how late you were up doing homework. The partying is a different story because more often than not you will have done something so humorously stupid it is worth hearing about. Everyone gets stuck up late doing work, suck it up.

> "…the entire class begins nodding their heads up and down like a bunch of trained animals. Note to professors: the reading did not get done."

Here is the staple question come mid and end of semester," Professor, can you move the exam back a week? We have so much work in other classes and it is all at the same time." I cannot stand the whiney bastards that ask this question. Listen, when the real world lands on top of you like a fat kid on a trampoline you will realize that deadlines, schedules and dates in general are all fixed propositions. When you go to work for Large Corporation Inc., and you have work due on a certain date are you going to walk up to your boss and say, "Can you please move the presentation back a week? I have a bunch of other stuff going on this week." No you're not, because if you ask that question you will be packing your desk and being escorted out by security. Grow up and bite the bullet.

I enjoy meeting people from other colleges and universities, except when they spring the, "Hey do you know?" C'mon pal, there are 27,000 people here. What the hell are the chances I am going to know some kid from your hometown that is going here (alright engineers, I know, 1-in-27,000)? I usually try to be polite and ask where the person lives and usually get some response like, "I don't really know ummm, I think it's called like Southwest Hill or something?" Do everyone a favor and stop these people before they get started. Friends don't let friends ask stupid questions.

My favorite of these questions always comes about when out to eat at a restaurant. Upon finishing the food, the waiter (or waitress) walks up and says in an overly dramatic tone, "How about some dessert?" Instead of just saying no, everyone seems to answer this question as if they were a Shakespearean actor. "Oh NO Way! I am stuffed, jeez, dessert…are you insane?" Not only do you have to say all that stuff, you also have to say it in a comical way to ease an uncertain laugh from your server. I know the question has to be asked, but in the future I am just going to say no.

These questions fill our daily lives. I know most of them are necessary and they have to be asked, but it does get annoying, doesn't it? Oh yes, there is one more question that thankfully I don't have to worry about anymore, but it did annoy the hell out of me for a long time: "Can I see your ID?"

www.dailycollegian.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.11.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

Audience victims of Collateral Damage

By Sam Wilkinson
COLLEGIAN CYNIC

Arnold Schwarzenegger is terrible.

With the exception of the Terminators, and maybe the occasionally tolerable Predator, he hasn't made a career of making good movies.

Collateral Damage is no exception. Schwarzenegger is a firefighter whose wife is killed by a Colombian terrorist. Predictably, Arnold seeks revenge, getting it in the end. He also mutters a catchphrase or two. Essentially, Arnold made Commando 25.

At the movies

with Sam Wilkinson

The only difference being the controversy surrounding Damage's release – it was delayed in the aftermath of Sept. 11. Why? Hollywood claimed the plot held the movie back – apparently terrorists just weren't as vogue after the World Trade Center fell – but the real reason is the general suckiness of the film.

Did any of this dissuade the American public from making Damage this week's number one box office draw? No. Unbelievably, the movie brought in $15.2 million.

Big Fat Liar took second with $11.7 million. The movie stars "Malcolm in the Middle"s" Frankie Muniz as a scorned child getting revenge. In one scene, blue dye is used to turn the aforementioned Big Fat Liar into a really blue Big Fat Liar. Oh the comic genius of Hollywood!

"This is Rollerball!" intones WWF writer Paul Heyman. The remake rolled over the competition to take a very unimpressive third place. Earning a cool nine million, Rollerball stars LL. Cool J as a not-very-good rapper whose turns on the silver and smaller screens have been bombs. Wait, that should have read: Rollerball stars, as LL. Cool J, a not-very-good rapper whose turns on the silver and smaller screens have been bombs. Wait, that isn't right either – but it's definitely some combination of all of those.

Black Hawk Down gunned down to fourth, making eight million. What jokes can be made about a poorly planned military raid that went horribly awry?

Who went out to see Snow Dogs? It made $6.8 million. A film about talking dogs starring the incomparable Cuba Gooding Jr. continued to make money. There is a reason Hollywood executives are Hollywood executives – they have faith that the American public is stupid enough to buy tickets for a buddy dog flick. No rational person would ever do such a thing.

Getting worse?

-The Count of Monte Cristo dashed its way to sixth with $6.3 million. Take that high culture! A movie adaptation of one of the "classic" books shoved down the throats of students everywhere can be made into an apparently enjoyable action film. Next on Hollywood's agenda? The outrageous story of Don Quixote.

A Beautiful Mind made $5.8 million while ignoring the homosexuality of the lead character. Face facts – Hollywood is pro-gay only as far as its political positions are concerned. When it comes to showing accurate, and not wildly stereotyped, portrayals of gays, Hollywood hasn't a leg to stand on.

-A Walk to Remember was quickly forgotten, taking eighth with only $5.8 million. Poor Mandy Moore: soon she's going to be this decade's Debbie Gibson.

-The Mothman Prophecies made $4.9 million. Debra Messing's enormous cleavage in the movie is strange, as she weighs fifteen pounds on Will and Grace. Apparently, she got breast implants for the movie.

-I Am Sam made $4.5 million. I am sick.

Independent film didn't make much of a dent this past weekend, which means the only glimmer of hope on the horizon is Britney Spear's Crossroads. Which leads to the all-important question: who is Christina Aguilera's agent? Britney got to do a movie while Chrstina only got a role in an Internet porno video?

Also opening: Super Troopers, The Return to Neverland, Hart's War, and John O. Troopers. Neverland will definitely bomb, while War and O. will remind us that, hey, Hollywood actors have to pay the bills too. If either individual willingly chose to do these movies out of anything other than debt, they should get the gas chamber.

COURTESY MGM

Rebecca Romijn-Stamos wears a scar, ridiculous outfits, but most of all intense shame in the new flick Rollerball.

Sleater-Kinney are among many women that keep the rock torch blazing, the subject of new magazine Rockgrl.

Burn, don't freeze: Rockgrl roarrrz

By Alicia Mcghee
IOWA STATE DAILY (IOWA STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa – "Sexism sells." Carla DeSantis, founder and editor in chief of Rockgrl magazine, spoke about the age-old dilemma of sexism and discrimination that women in rock have faced on Wednesday night in the Sun Room of the Memorial Union at Iowa State University.

"I think the single greatest obstacle is to get past the mindset that women can't play rock, that they just play acoustic guitar," she said.

Rolling Stone founder Iann Wenner based his fledgling music magazine on the successful men's magazine, Playboy, DeSantis said.

"When Rolling Stone said, 'Sex sells,' they really meant, 'Sexism sells'," she said.

DeSantis' speech, "Can Chicks Rock? Sexism in the Music Industry," was part of the Institute on National Affairs series, The Business of Music in America.

"I don't consider myself a journalist; I'm an advocate for women in rock," DeSantis said.

As a former member of an all-female rock band, DeSantis says she decided to quit just writing songs and start singing. However, she experienced a great deal of discrimination, something that discouraged females.

Once when she visited a guitar store, she was told not to touch anything.

"The subtext was that we were girls, therefore, we wouldn't know how to play."

Since they were girls, people treated them as if they weren't able to be rock musicians.

As the years went by, DeSantis said she kept finding so many sexist comments about women rock musicians that she decided to create a medium in which women weren't objectified by the sexist ideals of the music industry.

She asked why women, who have made strides in different careers, have found such resistance in the world to credit women rockers as musicians.

It seems likelier that women will be successful if they are "eye candy" rather than real musicians, she said.

"There's no female equivalent of Meatloaf," DeSantis said.

Women are criticized when they express violence in their music, DeSantis brought up the example of Madonna's video for "What It Feels Like For A Girl," in which she vented her anger violently; the video was shown once and then banned on both VH1 and MTV. The standards seem different for men, she said.

"I don't object to Eminem's freedom of speech, but I disagree with his mysogynistic words being heavily marketed to the impressionable minds of young boys," DeSantis said.

To address this problem and try to make a change, we need to be proactive about the "joking" manner in which sexism is dealt with, DeSantis said.

Women should stop being afraid to pick up their guitar and play, she continued. Artists like Alanis Morrisette and Courtney Love made powerful statements with their anger-themed albums.

"Feminism is one of those words that people are afraid of…it's a powerful word."

Underground labels and Internet stations provide a positive productive outlet for women rockers to put out their music, DeSantis said.

"I liked what she did with her magazine," said Amber Elias, an Ames resident. "Back when I was in college I had a radio station and she gave me encouragement."

"I love rock music and the female artists involved," said Sufianet Ortiz, a freshman in engineering science. "As DeSantis said, a lot of us [girls] have a fear about pursuing a career as a musician."

Bedroom a riveting look at a broken home

By Jake D. Lewis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

IN THE BEDROOM
Starring Sissy Spacek, Tom Wilkinson and Marisa Tomei
Directed by Todd Field
Playing at Pleasant Street Theatre

In recent years, the term "independent film" has developed an unfairly negative connotation. The first thing many people think of when those two little words cross their minds is either stuffy, British costume dramas or really drawn out and overly puzzling American fare.

In the Bedroom, then, will come as quite a shock if viewed with these expectations, because it is an inextricable web of mystery, suspense and heart-wrenching drama. It's already won a handful of awards at smaller ceremonies and will come as no surprise if it's announced as a contender for a few Oscars next month.

It's set in the beautiful quietude of a small Maine fishing town, where a college-bound Frank Fowler (Nick Stahl) is in love with an older woman, Natalie Strout (Tomei), who has two kids from a previous marriage. Frank's music teacher mother, Ruth (Spacek), isn't too happy with her son's current arrangement, sensing that it will lead to danger, but never really saying anything about it. Frank's father, Matt (Wilkinson), the town doctor, silently agrees as well, but quietly lusts after Natalie, discontented by his marriage, one can assume but not making any strides to better it either.

All this tension erupts after a tragic disaster strikes the family at the hands of Natalie's ex-husband, Richard (William Mapother), whose family owns the local cannery in town. When the unthinkable occurs, bit by bit it begins to rip the family apart, putting not only a strain on Ruth and Matt's everyday life, but also bringing their bottled relationship problems to the surface. The truest misfortune, though, is not simply the heinous crime that is committed, but the fact that the atrocity was the only way that Matt and Ruth's problematic relationship would come to the surface.

The casting of the movie by first-time director Todd Field is in perfect balance, with no actor upstaging another, each with the common goal of telling a good story. Spacek came out of semi-retirement to play this role and she's a perfect fit for it. Her world-weary eyes convey the same frustration that Ruth is clearly going through, while Wilkinson's Matt is the ideal Dad, trying to act as cool as his college-aged kid. The biggest surprise comes from Tomei, who has finally discovered that the key to acting is not to repeat the exact same type of role for which you win an Oscar (I'm speaking of her break-through in My Cousin Vinny), but to try on new shoes and see where that takes you. While her Boston accent flickers on and off throughout the film, she is captivating as the conflicted, single mother who is put in the most uncomfortable of places by her ex-husband. William Mapother (who is also Tom Cruise's cousin) takes on his first major role with frighteningly good conviction. He makes Richard one of those people who never outgrew the bully-on-the-playground phase of life, and only succeeds to where he is in society because of his family's money and reputation. And while Mapother probably had no control over it, his goofy looks make his character all the more intimidating, especially to the young Frank. Nick Stahl is superb as Frank, despite his brief time onscreen. That is perhaps another side of the coin to the crime in the movie, because the audience has grown so close to Frank, and then he's taken away from it.

The movie is a fascinating character study about how a tragedy tears a family apart at the seams. Do the Fowlers disapprove of Frank's relationship with Natalie because she's older and has two kids, or are they more concerned with the fact that Frank may defer from going to college in order to stay with Natalie, and perhaps marry her? It's never cleared up, although no matter what their motivations were, in retrospect either of these possibilities would seem welcomed after what unfortunately happens to the Fowler family.

The film is split up into three acts, with the final one most clearly separated by a change of direction in plot that comes as a surprise to the audience, even though it was slightly expected. In this way, the movie resembles this past summer's The Deep End and 1999's A Simple Plan (one of my personal favorites), about how good people can do evil things when they are put into a situation which gets worse and worse as it spins further out of control. The ending of the film may have a variety of responses to it, as it asks quite an ethical question. Because of how it's handled in the movie, this may be the deciding factor between someone loving or hating it. In terms of the relevance of the film's climax to the whole body of the movie, though, it is perhaps the only option there was to bring life partially back to the way it was before.

The script was written by Field, and was based on a story by the late Andre Dubus, a Massachusetts native who worked on the adaptation prior to his death. The two have crafted a movie that is not about sex (like the title may construe) that goes on in the bedroom, but the lies we tell, the dreams we steal and the secrets we keep when the door closes behind us.

ATLANTIC 10

ShootOut

SCORE THE CASH IN PHILLY

$10,000

Team Hoop Shooting Contest

Three Divisions: Men, Women & CO-ED

SHOOT:

Two players alternate shots from 6 spots on the court in 30 seconds

SCORE:

Men and Women division winners win ROUND-TRIP AIR-FARE to anywhere in U.S.
CO-ED Division finalists will shoot at Halftime on Weds. Feb. 13, 7 pm vs. St. Bonaventure

WIN:

CO-ED Champions of each Atlantic 10 campus will compete during the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship in Philadelphia for $10,000 and the ShootOut Crown

Official Sponsors

GMAC

U·S AIRWAYS

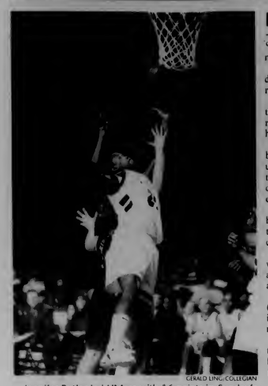
verizon

ShootOut Qualifying Round:
Tues. Feb. 12, 4 pm
The Cage

Campus ShootOut Finals:
Weds. Feb. 13, 7 pm
Mullins Center vs. St. Bonaventure

Festival Sponsor

Softsoap For Men Astrae



Presenting Sponsors

Coca-Cola

Chicago Pizzaria

wmua fm 91

Free and Open to All Students TO ENTER LOG ON: www.atlantic10.org
Or See Intramural Director for Details and Registration

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Jennifer Butler led UMass with 16 points in Sunday's 60-46 win over St. Bonaventure.

■ bonnies

continued from page 10

nine first half points.

However, the Maroon and White responded by picking up its defensive intensity and ripping off an 11-0 run of its own to retake a lead it would never relinquish.

Despite completely outplaying St. Bonaventure in all facets of the game, though, the Minutewomen only went into the locker room with a 25-21 lead, due in part to another poor shooting half from the field.

In fact, poor shooting would be a staple of the contest for both squads, and it was never more evident than with two minutes left in the game when Bonnie forward Christina Cole skied to the hoop for a wide open finger roll, only to have the ball slip out of her hand and caress off the top of the backboard without ever coming within the general vicinity of the rim.

The game became out of reach for St. Bonaventure long before that Cole miss, though, as a 11-2 UMass run midway through the second frame, sparked by two consecutive coast-to-coast drives by Ebony Pegues, extended the lead to 51-36.

"There was a five or six minutes stretch in the second half when there were a lot of scrambles and that's when we got out and running," O'Brien said of the 11-2 run. "So I think today was a day when our depth came into play."

For the Bonnies, Stefani Collins lead the team with 14 points (4-for-8 from three-point land), but Mattingly never really got into an offensive grove (eight points) and none of her other teammates significantly picked up the slack.

Now, the Minutewomen will see where they really stand in the A-10 when they travel to Philadelphia for a Friday game with first place Temple and a Sunday game with second place St. Joseph's.

"Those games will give us a feeling on how we want to prepare for the Atlantic 10 tournament, O'Brien said."

■ trip

continued from page 10

"We just stopped capitalizing on our chances," Cahoon said.

"We kind of rope-a-doped ourselves," BU coach Jack Parker said. "We had so much success in the offensive zone that we got caught and they capitalized.

"But we made the adjustment and shut them down after the second goal."

Despite the loss, it was nothing compared to the utter disgust Cahoon would draw from his team's performance on Saturday night in Lowell.

"That was a putrid display of hockey the last two periods," Cahoon said.

The rancid style of play that Cahoon was referring to came in the final 34:39 seconds of the game. A span in which Lowell outshot the Minutemen 27-6, including three third period goals that erased UMass' 3-0 lead at the second intermission.

"I don't think that there was any doubt in any of our players minds that we were going to tie the game," River Hawk coach Blaise MacDonald said after his squad's roaring comeback.

The disappointing tie, which will linger as loss, is compounded by the fact that Merrimack, who entered the weekend one point ahead of UMass, upset Maine on Saturday night to take a decided 2-point lead for the final playoff spot in Hockey East.

Now, even if the Minutemen and Warriors trade points for the rest of the year and end up tied (UMass faces MC in the last game of the season), Merrimack will still hold all the tiebreakers and UMass will simply hold a tee time.

The Minutemen must now look a weekend series at Maine straight in the chops. The Maroon and White will travel to Orono in two weeks to face-off against a team they lost to 6-1 earlier in the year.

■ playoffs

continued from page 10

"putrid," was about as good a word as anyone else could have thought of.

And while the rest of the reporters in the conference were discussing how "putrid" was spelled, the thought suddenly occurred to me – without a minor miracle, this team likely won't be able to grab the final playoff spot in the conference.

Merrimack now holds a two-point lead over the Minutemen, and while the Warriors visit the Mullins Center on March 3, making up the two points in that game will not be enough for the Maroon and White to gain the last spot. Following the Warriors' victory over the Black Bears, they now likely will hold the tiebreaker, regardless of how the Minutemen fare against them.

However, there is still a glimmer of hope for the Minutemen. With three vital conference games remaining before the Merrimack contest, the Maroon and White enters the toughest section of its schedule with two games at Maine and one game at home against New Hampshire. Merrimack, to contrast, has two games against seventh-place Boston College, one against Lowell and one against Northeastern – nowhere near the schedule that the Minutemen are facing. And Merrimack also holds a game in hand.

Assuming that UMass does, in fact, beat Merrimack in the last game of the season and the two teams are tied, the first two league tiebreakers – head-to-head record and conference wins – are likely a wash. Which means that the last spot goes to the team with the best record against other Hockey East teams from the top down.

So, with a win over third-place Maine, Merrimack holds that advantage unless the Minutemen can steal a game from Maine at Alfond Arena. UMass and Merrimack are both pointless against first-place New Hampshire and second-place Boston University.

The Minutemen have played some tremendous hockey this season, such as coming back from a three-goal deficit against Northeastern, who, had they found the gift of freshman netminder Keni Gibson earlier, might be competing for the top spot in the conference. On the other hand, as Saturday displayed all too well, the Maroon and White can also be quite mercurial from period to period. And in the case of Saturday, UMass picked a bad time to play some of its worst hockey of the year.

With only an exhibition game against the U.S. National Development Team between the Maroon and White and a trip to Orono, Maine, the following weeks would certainly be a good time to play some of the best hockey of the season. If the playoffs are in the future for this team, that is not only a good idea – it is essential.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian Sports: preparing to invade Philladelphia.

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
United Airlines Continental Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE! ...CALL NOW!
1·800·SURFS·UP
www.studentexpress.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for: Friday 2/8 – Thursday 2/14/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

ROLLERBALL (PG13) 12:50 4:50 7:45 9:50*	A WALK TO REMEMBER (PG) 12:25 7:35
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 12:05 4:30 7:40 10:20*	BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 3:55 7:10 9:50*	SNOW DOGS (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
BIRTHDAY GIRL (R) 4:50 10:15*	THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
I AM SAM (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25	A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
THE COUNT OF MONTE CHRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00	LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30
THE MOTHMAN PROPHECIES (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05

Tickets & showtimes for your theater: cinemark.com

Seeing a familiar face

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

AMHERST – Rahcim Lamb didn't realize it when it happened, but the 3-pointer he hit with 6:12 remaining in Saturday's game against LaSalle was in the face of his former high school teammate, Rasheed Quadri.

HOOPS NOTEBOOK

"That was him?" asked Lamb, the situation now brought to his attention. "Man, I have to get him for that one. I didn't even realize that was him."

Former teammates on Boston English's Bulldog squad, it was quite a reunion for the Atlantic 10 participants. Both started for their respective squads.

"That's my boy," Lamb said. "I talk to him everyday. I've been waiting for this game since high school, since we signed together."

Quadri, a shooting guard for the Explorers, had five points and five rebounds. Lamb, who spent most of the night frustrating LaSalle phenom Rasual Butler, scored eight.

"Before the game I talked to him and I told him I was going to come out and be aggressive," Lamb said.

A plethora of points

Shannon Crooks scored his 1,000th career point Saturday night, a number that includes the small integer he put up in his short stint at St. John's University.

"I wasn't really focused on scoring 1,000," said Crooks, who transferred to UMass his sophomore season. "I'm just grateful to play college ball and be able to score. I just go out there and play, and whatever happens, happens."

Crooks scored 15 on the evening, needing only 10 to reach the milestone. He is now only 48 points away from scoring 1,000 in a maroon and white uniform.

"It's a tremendous accomplishment," coach Steve Lappas said. "It's how you measure a guy who was not just good, but a real good college player. It's great. Considering he played multiple positions last year and never settled into one spot, I think it's tremendous."

Just like Brand new, almost

After playing for the first time in three games, Micah Brand said his left ankle felt just fine. The junior finished with 10 points and seven rebounds in 31 minutes.

"It was just good to get back out there and help the team win," Brand said.

■ de-fense

continued from page 10

that game Lappas challenged Lamb to redeem himself with a five-star performance on Butler. Helping Lamb on Saturday was the similar styles of both Smith and Butler.

"They're both similar players," Lamb said following Saturday's victory. "They can post up and shoot and take you off the dribble so I did learn something [guarding Smith]."

With Lamb chasing Butler all night it was important for someone to step up off the bench and follow his lead when he was catching a breather. That someone happened to be Willie Jenkins.

"He did a very good job on Rasual Butler," Lappas said of his small forward from Memphis. "That's why I put him in, I know he's one of our better defenders in that kind of situation so I thought he was the right guy to play off the bench."

Another reason for UMass' defensive dominance was the return of Micah Brand. After sitting out the past two contests with a sprained ankle Brand came back to play 31 minutes, scoring 10 points, blocking a pair of shots and collecting a team-high seven rebounds. His presence also allowed center Kitwana Rhymer to roam a bit more on the inside and he collected five blocks as a result.

"It was a tremendous contribution," Lappas said. "Having him out there for that many minutes really helped us and I didn't anticipate that."

But in the end it all comes down to the team. If all five guys on the floor are not on the same page defensively a team cannot succeed, especially a team like the Minutemen who often struggle offensively.

Those offensive struggles shown brightly during an 11-27 span in the first half in which the Minutemen failed to score. Similar droughts have been the bane of UMass at other points this season but this time the defense held strong and held LaSalle to just six points of their own.

"I thought we had good shots during those 11 minutes, we just didn't make any," Lappas said. "At least we kept our defense going so that we could at least be up at halftime and that was a big key to the game."

HARK!

Three Divisions: Men, Women, & CO-ED

SHOOT: Alternating shots from six spots on the court in 30 seconds

SCORE: Men and Women division winners win ROUND-TRIP AIR-FARE to anywhere in U.S.
CO-ED Division finalists will shoot at Halftime on Wed. Jan.16, 8pm vs. Temple

WIN: CO-ED Champions of each Atlantic 10 campus will compete during the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship in Philadelphia for $10,000 and the ShootOut Crown

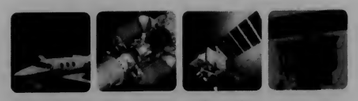
STUDENTS...



SHOOTOUT QUALIFYING ROUND:
Tuesday, February 12, 4:00 pm The Cage – Hicks Gym

CAMPUS SHOOTOUT FINALS:
Wednesday, February 13, 7:00 pm Mullins Center

Free and Open to All Students
TO ENTER LOG ON: www.atlantic10.org
Or See Intramural Director for Details and Registration

Bring it.

Bringing technology to the edge

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics to business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

Visit our Career Booth on Wednesday, February 13 or Thursday, February 14

So, you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside work, too.

Please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments) U.S. citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available in the following areas:

Computer Science
Computer Engineering
Electrical Engineering
Mechanical Engineering
Math
Physics
Chemical Engineering
Aeronautical Engineering
Finance/Accounting
Human Resources

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Raytheon

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Do you know what a local sorority is? Meet the sisters of Iota Gamma Upsilon. Recruitment party times: Sunday- Wednesday 6:30-8:30 Call Arlene for info. Or rides 256-6874 406 N. Pleasant.

Contact your Avon Representative at Umass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail rvonerica@hotmail.com.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

'90 VW Fox runs excellent $1400.00 585-0599

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

AUTO FOR SALE

1985 Cadillac Seville excellent condition 50,000 miles like new $4000 firm call 545-4013

1987 Volvo Wagon $1000.00 978-724-0061

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto. runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

More than a summer camp, an experience of a lifetime. Trail's End Camp (Beach Lake, PA) -Baseball, Basketball, Golf, Volleyball, Mountain Biking, Tennis, Ropes Course, Hockey, Arts & Crafts (Woodworking, Photography, Fine Arts, Video/Film), Waterfront (Waterskiing, Boat Drive, Canoe, Sailing, Kayaking), Pool Instructors and Male General Counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! www.trailsendcamp.com or 800-408-1404

EARN $1000 FOR YOUR GROUP. Work on campus to raise money for your student group or organization. Make your own schedule and earn great money. Please call 1-888-923-3238 EXT. 115.

Substitute teachers needed for full day and part day $7.00 an hour. Cushman Scott Children's Center 549-1167.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruisesareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Minuteman Pest Control is looking to hire 2-4 Seasonal Service Technicians. The job description includes treatment to residential exterior foundations. THE FOLLOWING QUALIFICATIONS WILL APPLY: Must be at least 18 years old Must have reliable transportation Must be able to start work in early spring (April 2002) until September Must be able to work Saturdays Take and pass a State Applicators Certification Exam in early 2002 We are offering an hourly wage of $12.00-$14.00 to start and will train. FOR MORE INFORMATION PLEASE CALL 800-586-1009.

Mothers helper/ PCA. Help disabled mom with driving and household chores. References and drivers license required. Own transportation to south Deerfield 2 to 3 afternoons/ week, $8/hour. 665-3914.

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for SAT and MCAS courses, held year-round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $13/hr; paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job; flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4939.

EMPLOYMENT

After school care positions available. 20 years and older. Experience with school age children required. Call Matt or Brett at the YMCA in Northampton. 584-7086.

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an^d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Futon Platform bed very attractive $190. Electronic keyboard plus, stand, plus Amp. $290. And Dell inspiration laptop 3 months old, $1075. Call 549-7202

Mac Quadra 630 face 32 Ram w/ 17 in. view Sonic monitor. Perfect for word processing $125 (413) 665-6833.

FURNITURE

Couch Green/ floral pillows, $350.00. Recliner/ Lazyboy $100.00 259-1020.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David GoodRich (Pmulrey, Emekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_GoodRich@hotmail.com

LOST AND FOUND

VW car keys reward! 545-3639.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female only 1 room available ASAP HT/HTW included cummingsm@elms.edu

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURETOURS.COM

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sun-coastvacations.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 Days $279! Includes Meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, Nightlife! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $ 459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

4	CBS / 3
5	NBSN
6	Fox Sport NE
7	PBS / 57
8	HSCN Movie Channel
9	WB / 20
10	HSCN Movie Channel
11	TV Guide Channel
12	FOX / 61
13	ABC / 40
14	NBC / 22
15	International Channel
16	UMATV
17	HSCN Info Channel
18	ESPN
19	ESPN 2
20	LVC-19
21	ESPN Classic
22	Greek-to-Geek
23	CNN
24	CNN HL
25	Weather Channel
26	Learning Channel
27	History Channel
28	A & E
29	Discovery Health
30	Food Network
31	NASA
32	Home & Garden TV
33	Travel Channel
34	Lifetime
35	CNBC
36	Tech TV
37	BET
38	UPN-38
39	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Galavision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 11, 2002

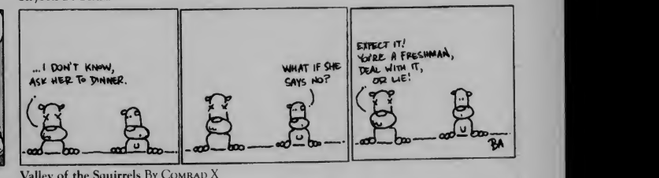
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		Masterpiece Theatre "Love in a Cold Climate"		Captain Bill Pinkney		Nikosi: A Voice
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Bocter	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Bocter	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	 "Ace Ventura: When Nature Calls" (1995) Jim Carrey				Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	7th Heaven "Hot Pants" (N)		7th Heaven "Lost" (In Stereo)		News	Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Hollywood		Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)				News
WTXX		2	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends		Just Shoot Me	7th Heaven "Hot Pants" (N)		7th Heaven "Lost" (In Stereo)	News	Home Imp.	Blind Date / Blind Date
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Boston Public (N) (In Stereo)		Ally McBeal (N) (In Stereo)		News	Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		Masterpiece Theatre "Love in a Cold Climate"		Seven Crowe	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	 "Ace Ventura: When Nature Calls" (1995) Jim Carrey				Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	NHL Hockey Boston Bruins at Colorado Avalanche (Live)						5th Wheel (N) / Shipmates (N)
WTBS	22		Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	½ "A Few Good Men" (1992, Drama) Tom Cruise, Demi Moore						"As Good as It Gets" (1997)
A&E	16		Night Court	News radio	Law & Order "Helpless"		Biography "Johnnie Cochran"		Investigative Reports		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Bad Girl"
CNN	20	43	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield / Moneyline
COM	15	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Kools	Real Comedy	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Hello-Comedy	Com.-Presents	Daily Show / Set, Night Live
DISC	23		Killer Cats		Jules Most Dangerous		Venom: Nine Ways to Die		Venom One (N)		Freak Accidents (N)		Justice Files "Prison Life"
ESPN	17		Sportscenter		College Basketball Villanova at Connecticut (Live)				College Basketball Kansas at Texas (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	12		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait Kim Fields		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Our Guys: Outrage in Glen Ridge" (1999, Drama) Ally Sheedy				Golden Girls / Golden Girls
MTV	33		Who Knows?	Flipped	Music Videos	Rock & Roll	Real World	Real World	Real World	Flipped (N)			Dismissed / Kidnapped
NICK	28		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family / All in Family
SCIFI	35		Star Trek: That Which Survives		Earth: Final Conflict "Fissures"		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		 "When Time Expires" (1997, Science Fiction) Richard Grieco				Crossing Over / Crossing Over
TLC	29	24	Bigfoot		Manhunt in the Heartland		Trauma: Life in the ER		Labor & Delivery		Sex Pills & Love Potions		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	29		NYPD Blue "Dear Priest"		Pretender "The Inner Sense"		Law & Order "Standoff"		Witchblade "Diplopia"		Law & Order "Agony"		Law & Order "Standoff"
USA	32		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Part Tense" (In Stereo)		Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show (Live)					Living Single	Martin
HBO	25		½ "Any Which Way You Can" (1980) Clint Eastwood. PG				 "Space Cowboys" (2000, Adventure) Clint Eastwood. PG-13				 "Cast Away" (2000, Drama) Tom Hanks. PG-13
MAX	26		½ "Ready to Rumble" (2000, Comedy) David Arquette. PG-13				* "Almost Famous" (2000, Comedy-Drama) Billy Crudup. R				 "Beverly Hills Cop" (1994, Drama) Eddie Murphy. R
SHOW	24		 "Rugrats in Paris: The Movie" (2000) G				Filmmaker		½ "The Green Mile" (1999, Drama) Tom Hanks, David Morse. HV (In Stereo) R				Black Filmmaker Showcase

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Noodle By Jacki

Skybox By Blake

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"You are not special. You are not a beautiful or unique snowflake. You are the same decaying organic matter as everything else."

–Fight Club

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 37 LOW: 14	HIGH: 36 LOW: 24	HIGH: 40 LOW: 15

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – The cosmos today remind you to wear your nuclear boots and drip-dry gloves, because here she comes again.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Listen to the radio today – you're just another brick in the wall. And not a particularly bright one at that.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Today's going to be a great day for you. You're just in the zone today. Man, I wish I was you, you lucky bastard.

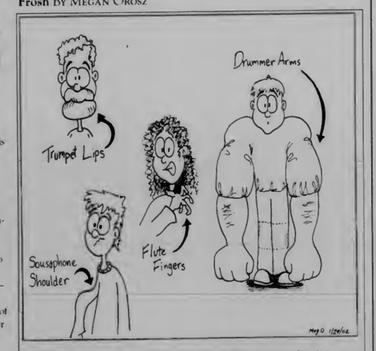
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Cosmically speaking, living your life by a three line horoscope isn't logical. Instead, you should just pick your favorite horoscope and go with that one. I think you should pick Gemini – there aren't any of those really anyway.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The stars are sending a very clear message: shake, shake, shake Senora, shake your body line! You heard the stars – work it, baby.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Later today you will face a great crisis when the batteries in your remote stop working on the Lifetime channel. I see much Bea Arthur in your future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You will be presented with the answer to a great question today. Unfortunately, it will be too late, and the rascal Ben Stein will keep his money.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Some friendly advice will seem stupid at first, but once you get good and drunk it seems like a good idea.



LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Look on the bright side – having a beagle implanted in your chest is a great icebreaker.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Finding a new friendship is always the signal of a good day. Unfortunately, your new friend makes Hannibal Lector look stable. Hide the chianti.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 21) – Good things come to those who wait. In bed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 21) – The stars reveal a new path to happiness to you during a time of great despair. Either that or your going to fail Physics. The stars, they can be real tricky sometimes.

Frosh By Megan Orosz

"A few telltale signs your friend may be involved in the marching band"

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT
COME PARTY at THE HARP
in North Amherst
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900

ACROSS

1 Trickle
5 Recital piece
9 Family man
12 Soprano Gluck
13 Pub sign
15 Ocean motion
16 Trot or gallop
17 "— Vice"
18 Stratford's river
19 Beseech
21 Skill
23 Spring bloom
24 Use a calculator
25 Large primate
28 Sleeper's spot
33 Works on texts
34 Type of lock
35 Big Foot's kin
36 Capp's Abner
37 Roamed about
38 Bruins' grp.
39 Slippery ones
41 Baseball's Tommie
42 Interstate sight
44 Like guys who work out
46 Skimpy
47 Forty-niner's quest
48 Woodlands grazer
49 Window-box flower
53 Ingenuous
57 Type of interview
58 Process cheese
60 Muffin spread
61 Imitates
62 Rabbits
63 Chowder tidbit
64 Curtain hanger
65 Most excellent
66 Wrestler of "Titanic"

DOWN

1 Poultry seasoning
2 Vivacity
3 Give off (heat)
4 New England grinder
5 Kingdom
6 Modules
7 LAX info
8 Pack firmly
9 Plunge in the pool
10 Hubbubs
11 Bears' abodes
14 Copied illegally
15 Sleazy
20 February 14 figure
22 Sonnet kin
25 Amazon port
26 Good-bye, in Cannes
27 Pay them!
28 Falter
29 Nautical position
30 Inclinations
31 Singer Merman
32 — daily; dawdle
34 Exercise system
37 North Carolina capital
40 Talent seekers
42 Bump into
43 Scull part
45 Vase with a foot
46 Least
48 Goes out with
49 Mellow fruit
50 Canadian player
51 Knotted
52 Sheik
54 Ms. Fitzgerald
55 Usher's target
56 A few
59 "— you kidding?"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

M	I	R	T	H		E	L	L	S		F	A	D	S
A	D	O	R	E		N	E	I	L		A	G	R	A
L	A	D	E	N		D	A	M	E		R	A	I	D
T	H	E	E		P	E	P	P	E	R	M	I	L	L
S	O	O	T	H	E	D		K	E	E	N	L	Y
		O	U	T		W	I	E	L	D
S	L	O	P	E		B	O	S	S	Y		Y	A	K
E	O	N	S		M	E	R	I	T		V	A	N	E
T	U	T		B	A	R	D	S		N	E	W	S	Y
		D	U	S	T	Y		H	O	T
F	L	A	I	R	S			D	E	S	E	R	V	E
L	O	N	E	R	A	N	G	E	R		R	O	A	N
O	D	D	S		G	A	L	A		F	A	U	L	T
O	G	R	E		E	M	I	L		E	N	S	U	E
R	E	E	L		D	E	B	S		E	S	T	E	R

11-9-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

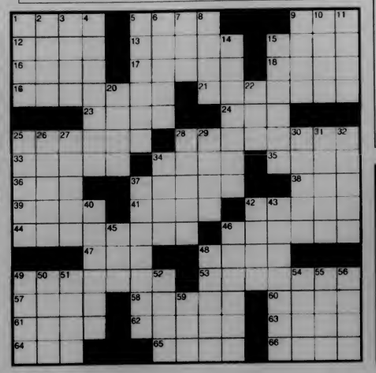
Italian Minestrone

Chicken Nuggets

Chili Nachos

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

DINNER



Italian Minestrone

Moroccan Lamb Stew

Chicken Margarita

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

Roasted Vegetable Wrap (vegan) (W Basics)

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.11.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Toni Soderholm and the UMass hockey team suffered two more losses this weekend in Hockey East play.

Blown leads in the East

By Matthew F. Sacco
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two press conferences and zero questions from the media just about summed up Don Cahoon's weekend.

But honestly, what do you say to a guy whose team encored a 4-2 loss on Friday (after leading 2-1 in the second) with a three-goal third period collapse to a bitter in-state rival with the season hanging in the balance?

The answer – made clear by the collective silence in the pressroom during the post-game – was nothing.

For maybe the first time this season, Cahoon just did not have the answers. On Friday night at Walter Brown Arena, there was simply nothing he could do to prevent a Boston University comeback win, the second of it's kind this season.

BU	4
UMass	2
UMass-Lowell	3
UMass	3

UMass was a picture of timidness in the first half of the game. Although BU outshot them (30-21) by a significant margin, the Minutemen found themselves up one on the strength of two Greg Mauldin goals. The lead was short lived, however, as a Mike Pandolfo power play tally knotted the game at two, and before the middle frame ended, the Terriers were up 4-2.

"Their speed through the neutral zone put us on our heels," Cahoon said. "And we struggled through the middle offensively. We couldn't develop an offensive rush."

There was no question that the ice was tilted in BU's favor for most of the game, but UMass' counterattack kept the game tight, until the offense stalled midway through the second.

Turn to TRIP page 7

Playoffs not a pretty picture

LOWELL – It must have been quite a long ride home for the Massachusetts hockey team Saturday night. Especially considering the fact that the wheels fell off the bus sometime during the second period of the team's game against UMass-Lowell.

With UMass up 3-0 over the River Hawks, it was almost as if someone pushed a button and the universe just changed completely. Not only were the Minutemen out hustled, outworked and outplayed from the time they scored their third goal of the evening until the final buzzer sounded, but the bad news also came from nearby North Andover – Merrimack, in the midst of a fight with the Maroon and White for the final playoff spot in the Hockey East, was leading national powerhouse Maine 4-1.

Therefore, with a three-goal lead and likely with their chances for a spot in the postseason hanging in the balance of the game they were playing, the Minutemen went out and played what was possibly their worst period of hockey all season.

It couldn't have been that bad, some might say. But it was. As ugly as the stats are for the period, seeing the sight in person was all the more telling.

But the stats are ugly in themselves. UMass netminder Mike Johnson made more saves in the third period than his counterpart in the home jersey, Cam McCormick, had to make all game, by a 13-11 margin. In fact, one more Johnson save would have put him equal with the number of shots the Minutemen had in the entire game. It seemed as if the Minutemen had possession of the puck for at most, a minute in the offensive zone in the third.

The game and the period could not have been summed up better than how UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon put it in his post-game press conference. The word he used to describe it,

Turn to PLAYOFFS, page 7

Lamb chops LaSalle

Sophomore forward clamps down Butler

By Eric Soderstrom
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AMHERST – Raheim Lamb knew what he did. But seconds before the media began its post-game inquiry in the Mullins Center's Green Room, teammate Micah Brand didn't hesitate to let him know anyway.

UMass	62
LaSalle	47

"You locked up the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year man," said Brand of Lamb's defensive effort on Rasual Butler, then the nation's 20th leading scorer. "You put him down to (A-10) second-team, automatically."

Averaging just over 20 points a game for LaSalle coming in, Butler was held to just four points on 2-of-7 shooting as the Massachusetts men's basketball team topped the Explorers, 62-47, Saturday night.

"I just went out there and denied him the ball every time I could," said Lamb, the chief element in UMass' execution of the box-and-one defense. "It's a challenge for me. [Butler] might one day be in the league and that's how I picture it. To go out there and lock him up, it just feels good."

Both teams weren't feeling too well offensively in the early goings. And despite an 11-minute scoreless stretch, UMass (10-11, 4-6 A-10) scrapped its way to a 20-18 halftime advantage. LaSalle (9-14, 2-8) carried the folly into the second stanza, but the Minutemen – behind a balanced attack at both ends of the floor – broke out in the final half to earn the victory.

Shannon Crooks led UMass with 15 points (including his 1,000th career tally) and six rebounds. Anthony Anderson added 11 points, tied his career-high with seven assists and managed just one turnover on his way to his fourth A-10 Rookie of the Week honor. Micah Brand and his bum left ankle returned to the lineup with 10 points and seven rebounds, while Kitwana Rhymer had 12 points, six rebounds and five blocks.

Reggie Okosa's 14 points proved the only double-digit offering from LaSalle, a team battered all night by a tough UMass defense. The Minutemen held the Explorers to 30.6 percent shooting, the lowest mark by a UMass opponent this year.

"Tonight, our defense worked," said Lappas of the efficiency of the box-and-one. "We could do the same thing another night and it might not work.

"We played offensively much better in the second half," he continued. "Tonight we had our usual 9-10 minutes without scoring, and I thought we had a lot of good looks during those minutes. But at least we kept our defense going so that we could be up at halftime. And that was a big key to the game."

The Minutemen opened the second half with a 14-2 run to take a 34-20 lead, but La Salle came to within 36-31 thanks to a trey from Rasheed Quadri with 12:21 remaining. The Explorers even had multiple attempts to cut further into the lead, but Lamb's 3-point-play with 10:05 to go halted the LaSalle run. Anderson's successful long-ranger with the shot clock winding down put UMass up 43-31 with just over eight minutes to play. The Explorers never again posed any threat.

"This is definitely a confidence booster, coming off a couple losses to teams that we could have beaten easily," said Brand, his team just off a three-game slide. "It was just good to come out and play the way we know we can play."

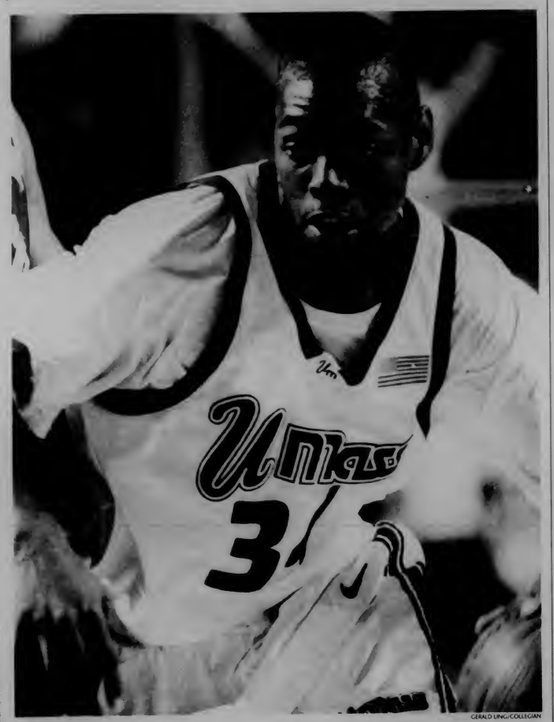
The Minutemen return to action Wednesday night when St. Bonaventure visits the Mullins Center. The Bonnies (14-8, 6-5) beat Xavier, 80-79, Saturday night, snapping the nation's longest winning streak (10 games). UMass beat St. Bonaventure, 67-65, back on Jan. 26.

Tough 'D' is the key

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AMHERST – All season long, Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas has said that his team is not good. Not good UNLESS the Minutemen play the tough, hard-nosed defense that they are capable of. But the defense had only been evident on some occasions, such as the 62-58 win over Oregon back on Nov. 27 where UMass held the high-flying Ducks to 9.9 points below their season average.

Add Saturday night to the growing list of games where the Minuteman defense did not just show up, but showed up and dominated. The Maroon and White were able to overcome some erratic shooting in the first half by locking down at the other end of the floor en route to a 62-47 victory over LaSalle. The Explorers shot a season low 30.6 percent from the floor and top scorer, senior forward Rasual Butler tied his season low with just four points.



"We've seen that all year long," LaSalle head coach Billy Hahn said of the tight defense on Butler. "When our other guys make shots it doesn't look so bad, but when the guys don't make shots it looks like it's bothering us. You don't win if you shoot 30 percent, I don' care who you're playing at this level you got to make shots."

Butler came into the game averaging 20.7 points per game, but was rendered useless by the box-and-one defense that Lappas and company employed to stop him. With the other four defenders dropping into a zone, UMass small forwards Raheim Lamb and Willie Jenkins were able to take Butler one-on-one and proved to be equal to the task.

"Raheim Lamb and Willie Jenkins did a great job on Rasual [Butler], he's a great player," Lappas said. "Tonight our defense worked, we could do the same thing on another night and it doesn't work and tonight we were just fortunate."

Making Lamb's performance all that more impressive was the fact that it came on the heels of perhaps his weakest showing of the season on Wednesday night against Duquense. On that night, the Boston native was shut down the Dukes main threat Wayne Smith and he spurred his club to a comeback victory. Following

Turn to DE-FENSE page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Raheim Lamb's stellar defense held LaSalle's Rasual Butler, the nation's 20th-leading scorer, to just four points in Saturday's win over the Explorer's.

Inside game brings 'W' for UMass

Butler, Smith combine for 29 against Bonnies

By Jesse Greenspan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

AMHERST – When things are going right for the Massachusetts women's basketball team, it is the frontcourt that dominates play.

UMass	60
St. Bonaventure	46

Yesterday at the William D. Mullins Center, post players Jennifer Butler and Nekole Smith did just that, leading the Minutewomen to a 60-46 victory over St. Bonaventure, while also improving their record to 7-16 (5-7 Atlantic 10).

Meanwhile, the Bonnies fell to 12-11 (6-6 A-10) on the year, which put them a mere game ahead of UMass in the A-10 Eastern Conference standings.

"The strength of this team is in the post and that's where you have to go with the ball," Maroon and White coach Jounie O'Brien said of Butler and Smith (13 points). "Those guys did a pretty good job of getting themselves open and available."

Butler led UMass offensively, torching St. Bonaventure for 16 points on 6-for-15 shooting, but it was really her play on the defensive end that was the difference in the contest, as she hauled down 18 boards to go along with five steals.

In addition, she completely shut down the Bonnie post attack, holding centers Jane Humble and Angela Scott to zero combined points, and helping out whenever leading SBU scorer Courtney Mattingly drove into the lane.

"[Mattingly] is a very good player and they post her up a lot because she is a big strong player," O'Brien said. "We didn't give her any open shots though and that's all you can ask for. When they tried to post her up Jennifer Butler and Caroline Nehls went off their guys and helped out, and that made a big difference."

However, Butler and Nehls were not the only Minutewomen defenders doing their share of the work. From start to finish, the UMass defensive intensity was too much for SBU to handle, and it showed in one of the lowest point totals St. Bonaventure has tallied all year.

"Everbody did what they were supposed to do," O'Brien said. "They are a team that executes their offense very well, so we just wanted to play good solid defense and for the most part, we did that. They didn't give them too many open looks and it was a great effort."

At the beginning of the contest, the Bonnies jumped out to the early 11-8 lead behind the surprise play of forward Emma Haywood. Coming into yesterday's game, Haywood was averaging a mere 0.9 PPG, but she stunned UMass by drilling two quick jumpers in the first few minutes of play on her way to

Turn to BONNIES, page 7

JOIN THE COLLEGIAN ED/OP PAGE A4
JOIN THE COLLEGIAN ED/OP PAGE A4
BLIZZARD JOIN THE COLLEGIAN ED/OP PAGE A4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
TUESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE SEVENTY NINE ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.12.02

This month at Amherst: poetry, Jesus

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

If there isn't enough to do on the University of Massachusetts in the next couple of weeks, there is plenty going on at neighboring Amherst College.

Yesterday, well-known writers Greg Williamson and Philip Stephens arrived at Amherst to read poems. Williamson, who won the Nicholas Roerich Prize for his first collection, The Silent Partner, has recently published another collection entitled Errors in the Script. Stephens read from his debut collection, The Determined Days.

The poetry reading was sponsored by the Amherst College Creative Writing Center, which puts on a yearly reading series "featuring both emerging and established authors," according to their press release.

Anyone interested in a different type of art is invited to attend a mixed-media performance called "Spicy Girl-Finding Home and the Dilemma of Belonging", by Jewish artist Siona Benjamin on Wednesday, Feb. 13, at 7:30 p.m.

Benjamin, an artist from Bombay, India, has a multi-cultural identity. She is a Sephardic Jew, whose ancestors came from the Middle East and Spain. She grew up in a predominately Hindu and Muslim society but was educated in Catholic and Zoroastrian schools, according to Amherst College. She now lives in America, and "have always had to reflect upon the cultural boundary zones in which I have lived."

Benjamin now teaches at the School of Art and Design, Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. She has received grants and awards for her work, including a Memorial Foundation for Jewish Culture Grant last year. For more information about her and her work, visit www.artsiona.com.

This event is co-sponsored by Amherst and Smith Hillel, and will take place in Room 115 of Fayerweather Hall at Amherst College. There is no charge for admission.

Since there are no classes next Monday, Feb. 18, the Amherst College Creative Writing Center invites students to another reading, this time by John D'Agata.

D'Agata, who graduated from the Iowa Writer's Workshop, will be reading from excerpts of his book, Halls of Fame, which was published in January 2001. It has already won critical acclaim by such groups as Publishers Weekly, who described it as "an inviting, elliptical puzzle of American life," according to the Amherst press release.

The reading will take place at 8 p.m. in the Porter Lounge in Converse Hall at Amherst College and is free and open to the public.

Along with the readings and performances taking place this month over at Amherst, there is a lecture on the Historical Jesus by New Testament scholar John Dominic Crossan, a professor from DePaul University in Chicago.

Crossan will give a talk entitled "Method and Meaning in Historical Jesus Research" on Thursday, Feb. 21 at 4:30 p.m. He is the first lecturer in the college's spring lecture series: "Rethinking Jesus: His Intellectual, Spiritual, and Material World."

According to Amherst College, Crossan was a founding member of the Jesus Seminar – a group of scholars working to evaluate the evidence about Jesus in 1985. He has written 20 books on Jesus and early Christianity. He published his most recent book, Excavating Jesus: Beneath the Stones, Behind the Texts, was published last year.

The lecture will be held in Cole Assembly Room in Converse Hall at Amherst College. It is also free and open to the public.

Rounding out the shortest month of the year, The Amherst College Creative Writing Center will host a reading by Novelist Judith Frank on Monday, Feb. 25 at 8 p.m.

Frank will be reading from her novel, Crybaby Butch. She has also published short stories in The Massachusetts Review, and was awarded the fiction prize of the Astraea Foundation's Emerging Lesbian Writer's Fund in 2000, according to a press release. The reading also be held at the Porter Lounge in Converse Hall at Amherst College and is free.

SCOTT ELLIOTT/COLLEGIAN

Blowin' in the wind

With strong winds on campus, going from class to class proved a cold walk for most.

Pinker to speak at first annual Freeman lecture

By Rachel Smith
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts will present Donald Freeman with the Chancellor's Medal, the highest award the University presents to individuals who work for UMass. Afterwards, Steven Pinker will speak at the first annual Donald C. and Margaret H. Freeman Lecture Friday, Feb. 15 in Room 227 of Herter Hall. The lecture series is named after Freeman and his wife.

UMass will recognize Freeman for his varied contributions to the Linguistics Department. Freeman co-founded a committee on linguistics in 1968 and helped establish the Linguistics Department in 1971. He also served as Associate Dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts and organized several linguistics programs at UMass. Freeman will accept the award on behalf of both himself and his wife, Margaret. Pinker's lecture will begin after the awards ceremony for Freeman ends.

Pinker works for the Department of Brain and Cognitive Sciences at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Cognitive science uses many disciplines, including psychology and physiology, to study scientific problems. He has published several books including The New York Times bestseller The Language Instinct, an accessible guide to the science of linguistics based on the hypothesis that language is an inherent trait rather than a learned skill.

The topic of Friday's lecture is "Words and Rules", the title of Pinker's most recent book. According to Pinker's biographical website hosted at The Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "Words and Rules" uses cognitive science to explain how language works, how children learn to speak, why and how languages are similar or dissimilar, and how the human brain processes language. Pinker's lecture will address some of the topics from his book.

Pinker is the Peter de Florez Professor in the Department of Brain and Cognitive Sciences at M.I.T. and is well known for his studies relating to where language comes from and how people learn it.

"He is an expert on language acquistion and other cognitive applications of language," explained Tom Roper, Professor of Linguistics at UMass.

While Pinker's lecture may appeal to students who are majoring in linguistics, UMass students in other departments can also benefit from the event.

"Everybody's interested in language," Roper explained, "I think linguistics is important to many of the departments at UMass. Pinker's books are widely read and quite popular." Roper also mentioned that Pinker is a talented speaker, who is world-renowned for his lectures.

Students who wish to attend the lecture may arrive at the Herter building before the award ceremony begins at 2:30 p.m. The event is open to the public and there is no charge.

Faculty Senate strives to maintain integrity of academics

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

In a time of battle between academics, athletics and the administrative powers that be, the Faculty Senate will convene to discuss possible relief to aid those departments devastated by recent budget cuts. Both the Rules Committee, and the Program and Budget Council will be presenting special reports to faculty members this coming Thursday.

On Nov. 15, the Faculty Senate heard the Athletic Council's annual report. It was at this time that the Athletic Council requested that the Faculty Senate provide a statement of direction that the faculty would like to see the University of Massachusetts' athletics to take. Faculty Senate approved of the motion (Motion 02-06) and asked the Program and Budget Council to arrive at conclusion concerning what role athletics should play on the Amherst campus and report back to the Senate early in the spring semester of 2002.

The Rules Committee, an especially prominent and important sub-council of the Faculty Senate, will report on its proposal to create a specific procedure to be followed in the merger of academic programs. This proposal comes at an extremely crucial time since many UMass programs are in danger of being cut back drastically or cut altogether. The Rules Committee's plan is to set up a special set of guidelines to facilitate the joining of separate departments into one cohesive department.

The two reports speak directly to the Faculty Senate's top priority this semester and in coming times of budget deficiencies: maintain the level of academics that UMass has offered previously while not discrediting other departments like athletics.

Faculty Senate members, primarily academic professors, have been concerned in the past of the University's dismissal of their own departments while the athletics department continued to receive satisfactory funding. According to the Program and Budget Council's special report, the requested statement concerning athletics' role at the university does not dismiss the importance and value of athletics on campus.

"The faculty does not maintain that athletics is a trivial element in the general education of our students, or that it does nothing to add to the quality of life here. It does! But athletics is not part of the primary mission of our institution, which is Education and Research," the statement read.

The report goes on to discuss the campus budget and athletic expenditures.

"It is not the absolute size of the increase in expenditures that is causing discomfort on campus as much as the relative shift in resources toward athletics and away from academic programs. It seems to be out of balance and is sending the wrong message about our priorities."

The report concludes by saying that the Faculty Senate must reaffirm through this statement that "while the University of Massachusetts at Amherst promotes excellence in all of its programs, the academic mission is primary."

Currently there is no set of formal guidelines under which to merge two existing departments. If adopted, the proposed guidelines will address the need for a way to combine departments instead of simply eliminating one and forcing another to take over the work of both. Under prior procedures a "merger" had to be termed as the elimination of one of the programs.

"It is envisioned that this document may offer a less adversarial, more evolutionary process to achieve needed structural changes in the area of Academic Affairs."

The procedure for merging departments will begin with the formal proposal of the merger by the department dean or provost, followed by a discussion and written responses by the affected academic programs. Following 205 days of meetings, department discussions and administrative procedures, the departments will either merge with the approval of the President and Board of Higher Education, or shall remain separate and vulnerable to cuts.

These reports will be heard and discussed at the first faculty senate meeting of the semester on Thursday, Feb. 14, at 3:30 p.m. in Herter Hall Rm. 227.

SCOTT ELLIOTT/COLLEGIAN

Obstacle course

The Fine Arts Center is one of the many hot spots on campus that is being dug up or built up.

National Briefs

Ohio

By Shannon Seware
Daily Kent Stater (Kent State U.)

(U-WIRE) KENT, Ohio – Even though we're now in the 21st century, America has still not come to terms with the issue of color.

This was the theme of the Rev. Al Sharpton's speech to a crowd of 150 in the Student Center Ballroom at Kent State University on Thursday night as part of Black History Month sponsored by Black United Students. Sharpton, known for his theatrical public speeches, mentioned why he addresses issues in such a manner.

"One of the problems of this country today is that far too many in public life say what they think people want to hear rather than saying what they feel," Sharpton said. "I'm not trying to win a popularity contest. I say what I say because I want to be right."

As a speaker during Black History Month, Sharpton said he felt it pertinent to speak out on the present history of being black in America. Sharpton said there is a 4.8 percent national unemployment rate but that rate is double for African-Americans. The average income of a white citizen is $42,000, while the average income for a black citizen is $24,500.

"So the economic gap between blacks and whites in America tonight – not back in the day, not in the 1960s, not during segregation tonight, is about 2 to 1," Sharpton said.

Sharpton pointed out that on Sept. 11 those who attacked the World Trade Center saw Americans differently than we see ourselves.

"They didn't ask anybody to leave the building," he said. "They didn't ask blacks to get out. They didn't ask Latinos to get out. They hit the building, and everybody died together. The problem is all of us can't live together."

Sharpton questioned how, after Sept. 11, some people said we should stand behind the same flag in unity, but only a year ago, those same people were fighting for the right to wave the confederate flag in South Carolina.

"Where was the patriotism when they argued the right of state capitals to fly a rebel flag that split the union and the confederacy of these United States?" he asked.

When it comes down to patriotism, Sharpton views blacks as the most patriotic citizens of the United States.

"We were the only people in this country that fought for the country when the country wouldn't fight for us," Sharpton said. "It's easy to fight for a nation if you enjoy it. It's much more challenging to fight for a nation if you only have some of the abilities to use."

He said students shouldn't think they're too young to be a part of changing what is wrong in society today.

"It is always students that change society," he said. "It was students that stopped the war in Vietnam, some right here on this campus. Many of them fought, believing that if they laid their lives down, that you would come behind them and vindicate their sacrifice."

Sharpton views affirmative action as a diluted form of reparations for slavery.

"The only reason we talk about the affirmative action plan for blacks is to counter the affirmative action plan that for 300 years was against blacks," he said.

Kyle Robinson, a junior political science major and a member of the College Republicans, came to hear Sharpton speak, knowing he disagreed with many of his opinions.

"I don't agree on his standpoint on affirmative action. I think it should be nonexistent. A lot of unqualified people get the job," Robinson said. "But I do agree with his support for more education of blacks."

Sharpton reached directly to the black students in the audience by addressing what he saw as a digression for respecting what blacks have achieved.

"You are not on this campus because you're smart. There were smart Negroes before you," Sharpton said. "Nobody died, shed blood and spent the night in jail for you to come and lay in a dormitory and smoke a joint."

Janira Teague, junior psychology major and affairs and grievances chairperson for BUS, reflected the same idea of apathy in students' attitudes.

"Our ancestors started something, and we need to continue it," Teague said. "My ancestors died for me to get an education, and people come here and get B's and C's and drop out."

Teague said too many students don't realize there is more to life than college. Sharpton posed a question in an effort to direct those students.

After the speech, Sharpton said to conquer segregation on the Kent State campus, people need to reach out to others.

"It takes bravery for you to go beyond your familiar circle," he said. "Some think trying to learn about others weakens who you are. It doesn't weaken who you are. It strengthens who you are.

"Every student should say 'what am I a part of in a social context larger than my own personal life?' Anyone who lives their life revolving around themselves will end up with a life that is worthless."

Utah

By Elise Christenson
The Daily Universe (Brigham Young U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVO, Utah – Sam Guo sat in quiet meditation outside the Rice-Eccles stadium during the Olympic Opening Ceremonies on Friday. From his demeanor, one would not guess he's considered a criminal in China.

Guo has been arrested in China three times and imprisoned because he is a Falun Gong practitioner. Outside the stadium, more than 500 other practitioners joined him in a candlelight vigil to raise awareness of Falun Gong persecution in China.

"I have so many friends that are tortured and put in labor camps. As a Chinese citizen, I cannot accept the fact that the Chinese government is doing this," he said.

Falun Gong, also known as Falun Dafa, was founded by Li Hogzhi in 1992. Much like yoga, it stresses meditation and exercise as a way to improve both body and mind.

Dana Bourgerie, assistant professor of Chinese said the sheer number of practitioners in China intimidates the Chinese government.

"This movement of millions pervades every level of society, even through high Communist party members," he said.

Officials from the Chinese embassy met with Salt Lake City Mayor Rocky Anderson and Gov. Mike Leavitt in January, said Josh Ewing, a spokesman for Anderson. They expressed concern about Falun Gong's presence at the Olympics, he said.

"They said the group is unruly and a security risk for their delegation," Ewing said.

Prior to the meeting, Gov. Leavitt declined to sign a proclamation in favor of Falun Gong, said Natalie Gochnour, deputy of policy and communications for the governor.

"It's an issue that's extremely sensitive to the Chinese government and we just don't feel like we're in an environment right now where we want to offend," she said.

Since 1992, Falun Gong membership has ballooned to over 100 million people worldwide, according to Compassion, a journal of Falun Dafa. Chinese President Jiang Zemin banned the practice on July 20, 1999. According to practitioners at the vigil, Falun Gong has met with extreme persecution in China ever since its inception.

Leeshai Lemish, a student at Pomona College in California, was among 33 people protesting on Tiananmen Square on Nov. 20, 2001. Chinese officials arrested the protestors within minutes, Lemish said.

"I was beaten at the police station during interrogation. I kept saying I was only there in peace," he said.

Tony Dang said he began practicing Falun Gong five years ago when his brother introduced him to the practice. Dang's brother is now imprisoned in a Chinese labor camp.

"My parents aren't allowed to talk to me about him over the phone because they are under high pressure. It's the worst thing you can imagine," he said.

Heren Lu, 22, a senior from Changchun, China, majoring in information systems paints a different picture of Falun Gong. She said she comes from the same city as Li Hungzhai.

"My friends in China tell me Li told his followers not to take medicine and encouraged suicide. Hundreds died as a result. He said he's the god of the only true religion," she said.

Practitioners at the vigil denied those claims. Falun Gong does not advocate violence, only truth, compassion and forebearance, Lemish said.

"The Chinese government creates hatred among the Chinese people toward the Falun Gong, so they can justify their persecution. They want the people to hate Falun Gong," Guo said.

Officials from the Chinese embassy declined to comment concerning the Chinese government's position with Falun Gong.

The hundreds of practitioners plan on staging peaceful protests for the duration of the Olympics, Lemish said.

"We're here to try to raise awareness about Falun Gong and the persecution. The Olympics are here to celebrate the individual spirit and humanity. Part of that is freedom," he said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzoc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

What's on YOUR horizon?

It's the Annual Campus-Wide Career Fair!

TOMORROW!

Wednesday, February 13, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Full Time Opportunities for Graduating Students

All Majors Welcome

Bring your resume on diskette to register online at the fair!

Campus Career Network

Presented by the Campus Career Network
For more information, call 545-2224 or see our web page www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

mark your calendars

THE ALANA JOB FAIR
...IS COMING SOON!

Wednesday, February 13, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium
5:30 - 8:30 PM

Be sure to dress appropriately and bring a supply of resumes!

ALL STUDENTS ARE INVITED!

Sponsored By: Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Diversity in Management Education Services (DiMES), Minority Engineering Program (MEP), United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC), Native American Student Support Services (NASSS) and the Campus Career Network (CCN)

Health bill will pass

By Alaya Johnson
Columbia Daily Spectator (Columbia U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK - After more than a year of lobbying from a coalition of pro-choice groups, the New York State Senate will pass a Women's Health and Wellness bill, mandating that all HMOs cover cervical cancer screening, breast cancer screening, osteoporosis screening and treatment, and, perhaps most controversially, contraceptive care.

Although most individuals can currently purchase extra insurance that will cover contraceptive care and health screening, this legislation would make the coverage mandatory as part of any primary care package.

Medical Director of Columbia University Health and Related Services Jane Bedell said that while she supported the move, she doubts the bill will have a very large effect on women's health care at Columbia.

Although Chickering Insurance, the University-sponsored health care provider, does not nominally cover birth control, Bedell said Columbia students actually pay less for most forms of birth control now than they would if Chickering covered it.

Columbia Health Services currently has a private arrangement with birth control wholesalers, making birth control available to students at wholesale price with a small mark up. Oral contraceptives, for example, can cost $20 to $25 a package, but students pay only $8 to $12.

Chickering already covers the cervical and breast cancer screenings that would be mandated by the new bill. Although a smaller number of students require osteoporosis screening or treatment, "we haven't had tremendous difficulty in getting that covered by Chickering," Bedell said.

The bill, originally introduced by New York assemblywoman Deborah Glick, has been strongly opposed by the pro-life Catholic lobby.

The main source of controversy, according to Christina Page, a program director at National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League of New York, is that religiously affiliated institutions other than churches would not be exempted from the law as conscientious objectors.

Catholic universities, for example, have many staff members and students who are not Catholic.

Under the Women's Health and Wellness bill, these universities would be required to provide all their students and employees with a health care plan that included the expanded coverage.

Many Catholics believe that such legislation interferes with their religious rights. "I don't think that people should be obligated to pay for things that they don't believe in," Marelisa Vega, BC '04 and president of Columbia Catholics for Life, said.

Vega said she disagrees with contraception because it is like "taking on God's job."

"[People should] let nature take its course," she said. Vega added that "health plans should be there to cure people ... I don't think it should include things [like] ... birth control."

On the other side of the issue, Chloe Cooney, BC '04 and co-chair of Students for Choice, supports the bill. "I think this is a great improvement because of the double standard we had, because they were covering Viagra and they weren't covering birth control," she said.

Sarah Nobles, CC '04, the other chair of Students for Choice, said mandatory coverage of women's health care is important enough to transcend political barriers. "It's so major," she said. "[Preventive and contraceptive care] doesn't need to be a political issue," Nobles said.

Page said the new legislation would be a "massive step" for women who currently pay 68 percent more than men on out-of-pocket expenses for health care.

Vega, however, does not see the issue as one of rights or equality, but of morals. "Obviously I'm a woman, and it's not to take away women's rights or anything ... it's for the woman, and it's for the child, and it's about respecting life from conception to natural death," she said.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Incoming

Students in the ROTC program experience the more thrilling options of campus life, like helicopter rides

Recent incidents between Boston College students, cabbies heighten tension

By Lawrence Griffin
The Heights (Boston College)

(U-WIRE) CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. – For students living in a city where public transit is not always going their way, taxis are not just a luxury – they are a necessity.

A disturbing series of violent incidents involving Boston College students and taxicab drivers in recent weeks suggests they need to be much more aware of who provides their rides.

According to the BCPD, the most recent incident in this vein occurred hours after the 102 Days Party, a senior gathering held on Feb. 7. A group of students took a MetroCab taxi home from the event, and the incident broke out when they arrived at their destination, said BCPD Lieutenant Detective Gene Neault.

"The cabbie, from what we can determine, overloaded the cab and charged them extra because of it," said Neault. "When the students got out, they may have had some disagreement. He then threatened several of them with a wooden bat he took out of the car."

Neault said that one student then fled to the BCPD station, located in Rubenstein Hall, to report the incident, and that the cab driver allegedly continued to intimidate the students.

"He's been identified and we intend to file criminal complaints," said Neault. If prosecuted, the cab driver would be charged with multiple counts of assault by means of a dangerous weapon. Neault said that Boston cab drivers are not allowed to carry any sort of weapon.

"We reported [the incident] to the Boston hackney division, which supervises his license," said Neault. "I would expect, among other things, Boston can pull his license if he's found guilty."

Neault said that a court date could be set in the near future. The first step, he said, was a magistrate's hearing to determine probable cause, and then the arraignment of the suspect.

The names of the BC students involved in this case, as well as the other cases discussed in this article, were not disclosed by the BCPD, who cited a Massachusetts judicial ruling that allows college police departments to protect students by not disclosing their names to the general public.

Neault also discussed an incident that took place on Jan. 24 involving two female BC students.

"A cabbie assaulted two young ladies," said Neault, explaining that the cab driver suspected the women were about to evade paying the fare. "He thought they were going to flee."

Several BCPD sources said cases of fare evasion are relatively common. "There's always incidents with cab drivers, it seems," said Neault. "Most of them stem from alcohol and concern over the fare."

While fare evasion is a crime, Neault emphasized that cab drivers may not assault or intimidate students in any way.

"We did have another incident a couple weeks back where a student attempted to flee without paying," he said. "It was wrong to flee, but it's more wrong to assault someone."

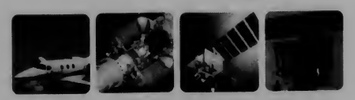
BCPD Chief Robert Morse reinforced Neault's statement while discussing an incident. "Someone ran, which is unfortunately a common occurance," he said. "They'll stiff the cab drivers. But [the cab driver] doesn't have the right to manhandle a student."

Neault indicated that when the BCPD investigates cases such as these, they typically issue the driver a trespass warning. "If they come on campus, they'd be subject to arrest," he said. "If we found that a cab company had problems, we could reach out to them. ... I think the colleges are a pretty profitable area [for the cab companies]."

Morse said that students should immediately report any incidents, even as they are in progress, to the BCPD by calling (617) 552-4444 or using a callbox.

"Any time there's a crime committed against a student, report it to us and as quick as you can," said Morse. "Make a phone call and we'll take a report."

NEWS



SPRING BREAK '02
ARE YOU READY?
SUPER SPECIALS!*
Check Out www.sunsplashtours.com for Last Minute Super Specials

Includes Airfare, 7 Nights Hotel, FREE Parties, Drinks & Activities. Over 15 years experience!
SPECIALS!* SAVE UP TO $100 ON SELECT TRIPS!
*Can not be combined with any other offer. New bookings Only
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

Bring it.

Bringing technology to the edge

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics to business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight IM technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

Visit our Career Booth on Wednesday, February 13 or Thursday, February 14

So, you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside work, too.

Please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments). U.S. citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available in the following areas

Computer Science
Computer Engineering
Electrical Engineering
Mechanical Engineering
Math
Physics
Chemical Engineering
Aeronautical Engineering
Finance/Accounting
Human Resources

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Raytheon

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.12.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRIS

Too many got hurt
Time for Law to go

As the controversy swirls, Cardinal Bernard Law remains in charge and has vowed not to step down. How can this be?

"When there are problems in the family, you don't walk away," he said in the Boston Globe yesterday.

That's true. When there are problems in the family, though, you also don't LOOK the other way. You don't sweep problems under the rug until they blow up in your face. You don't hide the weaknesses of the members in your family and hope that those weaknesses will go away because the problems are embarrassing.

Bernard Law deserves no sympathy for the situation at hand in the Boston Diocese. None.

The Catholic Church preaches forgiveness, and perhaps Father Georghan, the priest in question for its sexual misconduct against children, deserves that much. Perhaps also Bernard Law the human being deserves forgiveness for his horrific judgment error in repeatedly transferring a pedophiliac priest in hopes that his problems would go away.

Bernard Law, the leader of the Boston-area Catholic church, however, does not. Cardinal Law made the grave mistake of putting politics first. Rather than risking embarrassment, he risked the well-being of the hundreds of children that came into contact with Georghan as Law transferred him from parish to parish in a mad-dash effort to keep an embarrassing situation under wraps.

If the problem had been an isolated incident, it would still be very upsetting. Changing the lives of innocent children by exposing them to an evil like that always is. Maybe we could excuse Law for making a poor decision under extreme pressure once.

With two more criminal trials and over 80 civil suits levied against Georghan, though, Cardinal Bernard Law deserves no second chance to be the leader of the Boston Diocese. The amount of people that Georghan reached courtesy of Law's reassignments as the problem happened again and again are shocking and not worthy of Law getting a second chance as a leader.

"Let the little children come to me." Jesus Christ said this long, long ago during one of his teachings that are central to the Catholic religion. How are parents and children alike supposed to feel comfortable sending their children to the parish priest now?

Law may be the leader of the Boston Catholic church for the time being, but it's in name only. In the minds of nearly half of the 800 Boston-area Catholics polled by the Globe, Law should resign.

That's more than enough. When half of the people who should be following Law for spiritual guidance and leadership believe he should go, it's time.

It's admirable that Law would like to fix the problem that he played no small role in creating. It's too late – he can't do it without the respect of those he's supposed to be leading. Lame ducks are of little value. The Church needs someone new to fix the problem.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial staff.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF THE COLLEGIAN.

Spreadin' the Love

Melody Zagami

I was going to use my space this week to talk about the troublesome bout of pedophilia the Catholic Church is dealing with, but why not save that for a special occasion. Instead, take a moment to notice the date on today's paper, February 12, 2002. This means that you have exactly two shopping days left to find a special gift for that special someone or the appropriate animal organ to send to your ex or your current stalking victim.

Personally, I don't believe in Valentine's Day. This doesn't mean I don't want to be showered with gifts (see my address in the student directory). But I realize that this is a holiday invented by Hallmark and promoted by the evil people at Hershey's who want me to be fat. It is also to provide women with a reason to be mad when their man forgets the holiest of high holy days, Valentine's.

So I'm going to provide you with a list of fun things to do with your better half this February 14. If you have a problem with memorializing a foolish corporate-invented holiday, instead, celebrate the anniversary of Al Capone's 1929 St. Valentine's Day Massacre, where Aldo killed seven of Bugs Malone's guys, in what was the most spectacular mob hit in gangland history. You still have to buy gifts, but what says, "I love you" more warmly than a solid milk chocolate Tommy gun or a fine bottle of bathtub gin?

Kahunaville: I used to be anti-Kahunaville. When I'd think "Kahunaville," I'd think cheap-themed restaurant with fake plants and big, fruity beverages where the dregs of Western Mass. went to get girls drunk. The truth is, I had never been. I had never even stepped foot into the establishment, let alone patronized it. Sure, I'd seen it on my way through the mall and I'd think, "Well, it's no Hard Rock," or "It's no Planet Hollywood," or any other themed restaurant rapidly losing stock, but I'd never actually been in it, so who was I to judge?

One night, not long ago, my friends and I went for Karaoke Tuesday. People, if there's anything you do ever, please go to Karaoke Tuesday at Kahunaville. It's fun, it's strictly 21-plus, and you can play video games while you wait for the hilarity to commence. But why I say bring your loved one is because it's kind of romantic, in a cheesy, Tiki statue, fake orchid, Bradys Go to Hawaii sort of way. There are stars on the ceiling, there's a lovely water show every 25 minutes and there are so many options on the menu that any palette can be suited. Ladies, if your boyfriend likes to wear shorts, flip-flops and a Hawaiian shirt, just down route 116 in Deerfield at the Yankee Candle mothership, Chandler's Tavern is the most romantic restaurant in the Valley. One hundred and fifty candles, or flames of desire, as I like to call them, are lit every night. The food is good, but a bit expensive for the college budget. But hey, it's the anniversary of a big mob hit – splurge. The desserts are fabulous and the wine selection is extraordinary as well. I'd advise making a reservation as they are reputed for romantic dining.

I'm not receiving any payment for advertising here. I really enjoyed all these places and they're all perfect for a nice evening. I hope this has been helpful. Don't buy crappy candy or take her to see "RollerGames", no woman should be subjected to that. Instead, go someplace new and have a good time.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

No more charity

In case you've been spending far less time on campus than a full-time student should be, you've heard about the pending budget cuts and the Student Government Association's "Fair Share" proposal that appeals to the University of Massachusetts' school administration to take a pay cut. The administration is downsizing the faculty, laying off blue-collar workers, and charging students more to attend UMass. It's only fair that the administration shoulder a portion of the burden themselves.

Unfortunately, the administration doesn't appear too open to the idea. In fact, the UMass administration has never received a pay cut before, according to the panelists at February 7's informational forum. Since the administration makes the big decisions, I guess it deserves to be immune from the repercussions of its own actions.

The school administration refuses to take a bite out of the massive budget cuts all of us mere mortals are being effected by. Therefore, the SGA should look toward more reasonable sources of revenue. There are daily visitors to our campus who don't pay a dime to use our resources. Worse yet, these interlopers refuse to clean up after themselves and stubbornly ignore quiet hours on campus. They panhandle for food and sleep outside.

Yes, I'm talking about the UMass ducks.

On any given day, there are at least one hundred ducks lollygagging about on campus. We need to start charging the ducks. Student Activities can begin by charging an admission fee to the Campus Pond. $5 per duck is a reasonable amount, considering how little the feathered fiends contribute to our beloved UMass.

Next, we need to fine the ducks for each violation of campus policy. Campus police could enforce... oh wait, there are no campus security police officers anymore. Well, somebody can issue tickets to the ducks for each violation of campus policy. Every time a duck makes a mess of the concrete or panhandles for food, UMass should issue a $100 ticket to each and every fowl involved. If the ducks refuse to pay the tickets, they will be removed from campus. Who will remove the ducks? I don't know, but perhaps a portion of the revenue from the Campus Pond admission fees can be used to hire a "Duck Removal Task Force". Or, maybe we could just hire a few more professors. I leave the nitty-gritty decision-making up to the SGA and school administration – I am merely making a proposal.

Furthermore, if everybody would stop feeding the feathered vermin, they would be compelled to spend money at campus eateries like Earthfoods, and the Hatch. That would also generate much-needed revenue. In fact, if a duck is cited for panhandling more than three times, that duck will be the main course at the Campus Dining Commons. Why should the faculty and student body be the only ones roasted by the school administration?

The SGA may also want to propose other creative ways to generate cash. The administration can sell the books in the DuBois library on I-Bay, since the upkeep of the library isn't a major concern for the big boys and girls in charge (we won't see any new acquisitions until maybe the next fiscal year). Perhaps after the language requirement is eradicated, we can rent out the Herter language lab to juniors and seniors who can't afford an apartment in Amherst. The contents of the language lab – foreign language movies, audio tapes, VCRs, computers – can also be auctioned off on E-Bay. We don't need to bother the administration with pay cuts, layoffs, and other such nonsense when we have so many viable sources of income on campus. Come on, SGA! Those folks with six figure salaries and greater have feelings, too!

Before we explore other sources of revenue, our best bet is to start charging the ducks. The school administration refuses to alleviate a portion of the financial burden the rest of the campus is shouldering, but maybe the ducks will be happy to help us out. I can't imagine that anybody who uses campus facilities and benefits from campus resources would sponge off of UMass and refuse to help the University work through this difficult financial problem. I'm sure the ducks aren't that cold, selfish, and unreasonable.

Rachel Smith is a UMass student.

RACHEL SMITH

One year later, and still amazed

This is a great story. At one point in my three years here, I was the biggest idiot on the Amherst campus. I have no problem admitting this. The following story was written as it took place, the first day I moved back on campus for spring semester. Some of my friends know about it but no one knows exactly what happened. People deserve to read this, because I deserve to look like a fool. It's a good thing my picture isn't along side this, though.

January 29, 2001:

It takes a whole lot to make me angry. I mean a lot. I'm the kind of person that is relaxed and lets things slide. When I get mad, people need to back off because I can be mean. Today I'm really, really mad. In fact, you might just want to excuse anything I say for the next few weeks.

Today is Monday, the first full day I've been back to UMass. I've just come from the UMass Police Station, literally ten minutes ago. This afternoon I walked to my car to go to my physical therapy appointment for my busted leg, and I've come to the realization that my car has been stolen. For the past TWO months I've owned this car. A nice, blue Volkswagen Jetta. I've only had this car for two months. I haven't even gotten a yellow lot sticker yet because I'm on a waiting list. At UMass there has to be five thousand Jettas. I'm here for one day and mine gets stolen.

It's my luck that it got stolen. Something has happened to me at the beginning of every semester that I've been here. First semester as a freshman, my wisdom teeth got all infected and I had to go home the first weekend. I've since, it's gotten progressively worse, and now my car's been stolen. I'm expecting to be hit by a Mack truck at the beginning of next fall.

My car was a great car. My parents got it for me in November and it's the best gift I've ever gotten. I just put a new stereo in it a few weeks ago. It was great on gas; I only had to fill it every other week. I locked my car and the faceplate was taken off the stereo. All I had in the car was a crappy pair of North Face sneakers: I'm sure the thief didn't want them. I hope whoever stole it gets real annoyed by the broken oil sensor I hadn't gotten fixed yet. That thing is going to get real annoying because it makes this loud buzzing noise – especially since there's no stereo to listen to.

Someone really had to go to some length to pick out my car and take it. It was parked in the fifth row of yellow Southwest, in the middle of the row, locked. I didn't have anything with value showing, and a Louisville Slugger was holding up the front drivers seat. It gave the car character.

There are a few scenarios that I can think of as to why my car would be stolen:

Like that movie "Final Destination", life is just out to get me.

Someone stole it for parts. Likely situation, but out of all the Jettas at UMass, what was so attractive that someone thought, "Hey, the blue one's a good choice." They could have had black or red or any other color. The parts all work the same.

It was too cold to walk and go out last night, so my car was picked as the vehicle of choice. Another likely situation, but the baseball bat would have been in the way, only leaving room for four people.

Maybe the person was really short and trying out for baseball, and wanted the Slugger. But they could have just taken that and left my car.

There are a few things that I hope happens. If the person who stole it is a guy, I hope he gets completely ragged on for driving a girl's color car. It's a periwinkle blue, clearly a girl color. I'm also hoping that as the person was driving in a real fast getaway, the car stalled out, as it tends to do in the cold, and the thief went through the front windshield. This could be likely because the seatbelts are a little tricky. They literally buckle up, like they were electric but they're not. That'll teach a lesson. Maybe the person will have been completely stupid and gotten pulled over, and gotten themselves arrested. I can only hope. I'm kind of wishing they will get annoyed with the oil light and just leave it on the side of the road to be found, so I can have it back.

KATIE LANDERS

For the past few months that car has been my livelihood. I know it sounds kind of shallow. The Jetta was a Christmas present from my parents so I didn't have to borrow theirs to go to work anymore. I've wanted a Jetta since I've been able to drive. Before I had my car I hated driving, and having my own car made me want to drive all the time. I had even just put in a honeydew melon smelly-thing from Yankee Candle. I loved that car more than anything in my life right now (of course, besides my family and my best friend).

But now someone decided it would be fun to jack my car. I'm more hurt and sad than angry. I'll miss the Jetta. If anyone in my family's car could have been stolen it should have been my mom's. It's a '98 Lincoln and probably wouldn't get past the end of the driveway. It's a piece.

Three hours later:

So my friend Melissa, who bought me flowers because my car was stolen, and I decided to go out to dinner in light of my bad mood. We walk down to yellow Southwest, the place I hate the most in this world at this point. As Melissa and I settle into the "Scort" for a meal at Applebee's, I asked her to drive through the lot just so I could wish for my car to be back.

Lo and behold, there in the fourth row, second car in, is my car.

That's right. My car was exactly where I had said I had left it. I swear to anything that I parked it farther down in the fourth row, but nope, it was in the second spot. Somehow, two security officers and myself failed to find a blue Jetta in all 65 cars in the lot at the time. It's my entire fault really: no one really knows what my car looks like besides me. Two officers wouldn't know it was mine.

No one will ever know what Melissa's and my face looked like. I was shocked and stunned and neither of us could stop laughing. Then I had to set my embarrassment aside and go up to the police station to tell them I had found my lost car. I had to tell them that, yes, my car was right where I had left it.

I failed to find my own car in the yellow lot, and it was only in the fourth row. I keep typing this because as I write this piece, I still can't get over my own stupidity. I am a complete moron.

There are a few truths made evident in this story. One: maybe I just shouldn't own a car. I'm not bright enough to remember where the hell I put it. Two: don't go to the police unless you are ABSOLUTELY positive your car is stolen, even if I was told by security I should go to the police. Three: I can never admit that I am wrong. Even after I found my car in the same exact spot that I had parked it, I still tried to convince myself that someone got into my car, moved it up the row, parked it the same way I had it, and locked the doors as a trick against me.

Make sure that next time you park your car in a lot you write down where you put it. The fifteen times I searched the lot for my car didn't compare to the one search where I actually did find it. Fifteen times is never enough. Go for the sixteenth. I also want to apologize to Melissa, who bought me flowers. Jessica, who gave me a card, my roommate, who took me to do my errands that I needed to do, and the police officer who told me that it wasn't the first time that this happened. Yeah, right.

It figures that I would lose my car in the yellow lot. If you and me were friends, you would completely expect this. I continuously surprise myself with my own stupidity.

Present time: Remember how I said something happens to me at the beginning of every semester? Last fall, a Mack truck didn't hit me, but I got meningitis. This semester I didn't fall ill with the plague, but I did get sick and miss the first week of classes. What's next?

Katie Landers is a Collegian columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.12.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELANO

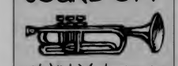
"Friends" forever!!!

By Nikolas Markantonatos
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just like you, I love my "Friends." I cherish every minute I spend with my beloved "Friends". They make me cry, they lift me up in times of need, they're always there for me and, most importantly, they make me laugh. Quite frankly, I couldn't ask for a better bunch of "Friends".

For eight seasons the sitcom "Friends" has been a favorite show for many offering plenty of sight gags, giggles, and knee-slapping hilarity. Oh, you know you love your "Friends" too! The show's incredibly consistent supply of charming, clever comedy has landed it in the Nielsen top 10 every year since its debut. Consider our mutual (and national) obsession with the following: the Friends' hair, specifically "the Rachel" for you girls, their oh-so-trendy apartment, that dead-on theme song by the Rembrandts, and-who could forget-Phoebe's own song "Smelly Cat." All together now, "Smelly cat, smelly cat/ What are they feeding you?/ Smelly cat, smelly cat/ It's not your fault."

Okay before we all get misty eyed, I'll stop. The contract of our dear "Friends" is up and network-owner NBC is aggressively trying to persuade Ross (David Schwimmer), Joey (Matt LeBlanc), Chandler (Matthew Perry), Monica (Courteney Cox Arquette), Rachel (Jennifer Aniston), and Phoebe (Lisa Kudrow) to stick around for a ninth season. There comes a point in life where we must bid adieu to even our most cherished friends. In the case of the sitcom "Friends", that time has just about come.



The way to go out, the classy way to be remembered, is to go out on top. Consider the sitcom "Seinfeld". The show about nothing was the biggest sitcom of the 90s and appropriately signed off at the top at the end of 1998 ("Friends" has since been the No. 1 rated comedy). "Seinfeld" has been remembered as one of the greatest shows of all time, and syndication ratings have remained high. "Friends" should follow in those footsteps.

One of the great things of "Friends" has been its long-lasting character relations. There was once a point where we never knew who was going to wind up loving, hating, or goofing on each other next. But the revolving door of relationship connections seems to have stalled. The fling between pregnant Rachel and Joey is a weak storyline and should end soon. Fresh material has also been a bit hard to come by. There comes a point when creators get to the edges of a room, go back where they've already been before, and basically recycle past material. And as much as the Rachel pregnancy has given the sitcom a jolt, the creators have been faced with many challenges. Reports indicate that writers were worried about Kudrow, who's largely been sidelined during the Joey-falls-for-pregnant-Rachel plot. They've been considering ways to boost her story lines and on-screen presence. In a show where Kudrow was once the most-prized star, "Friends" has now left the adroit thespian as a nearly useless character.

There are still more reasons that the cast members should leave while they are still on top of their game. Since the show's inception, its writers have never been able to fully integrate story lines that make the workplace work. Ross and Monica's parents notwithstanding, the writers have never been able to bring in storylines with the parents. As the characters grow older, these issues make the sitcom more and more unrealistic. Moreover, watching the show's audience deteriorate into a few million viewers would be about as pleasing as Ugly Naked Guy sight-

Turn to FRIENDS, page 6

SOUND OFF

with Nick Markantonatos

AND ALL THAT COULD HAVE BEEN IS THE BEST IT CAN BE

"Starfuckers, Inc." - one of the many songs on NIN's latest release. (We just like to print foul language whenever we're allowed.)

By Kevin Monahan
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

NINE INCH NAILS
And All That Could Have Been (hive)
Nothing/Interscope

Some would not be interested in listening to a live performance from Nine Inch Nails without witnessing front-man Trent Reznor's violent thrashing spectacle. "Sorry, if I can't see some extremely expensive guitars and synthesizers get grinded into dust, you can count me out...." Normally, I would have the same response. That is if this document of 2000's "Fragility v2.0" tour didn't sound so damn good.

And All That Could Have Been captures NIN at their finest. It's better than anything else they have put out in the studio. The 16-song set is a diverse mixture of material from the industro-pop pioneers' twelve-year tenure, as well as an opportunity to homogenize the musical styles that differ from album to album. Whereas one can easily notice the change from their accessible 1989 debut, Pretty Hate Machine, to their follow-up EP, the grating guitar-driven noise that is 1992's Broken, selections from these two releases seem to meld smoothly together here.

"Terrible Lie" energetically opens the album followed by the ultra-poppy angst anthem "Sin", both tracks from their debut LP. These tracks segue into the extremely aggressive single "March of the Pigs", from their best-selling 1994 LP, The Downward Spiral. Credit for the smooth transitions and an edgier rendition of their earlier works is mostly owed to guitarist Robin Finck. Finck adds a few jarring riffs to "Sin", and a screeching guitar solo to "Terrible Lie". The excellent version of "Head Like a Hole", presented here can also be accredited to Finck, who gives the song a much darker tone (if such a thing is possible).

One of the most incredible aspects of Nine Inch Nails' music is how little Reznor's songwriting has matured in the ten years between Pretty Hate Machine and 1999's double-album, The Fragile. Sure, musically The Fragile is leaps and bounds ahead of its predecessors, but "downward spiral" can be used to describe the quality of Trent's lyrics since '89 (with a few exceptions). When in doubt, Trent repeats the same line over and over (and over and over) again until it's time to intervene with "enough already!" That said, NIN has always been better than what passes for angry hard rock music today. They are and have always been the prototype mainstream industrial band (despite Reznor's scorning of the term).

Thankfully, Reznor and company limit the selections from The Fragile to some of the best: the atmospheric instrumentation of "The Frail" and "The Wretched", "The Great Below", "The Mark Has Been Made" and the singles "The Day the World Went Away" and "Starfuckers, Inc.". Some of Broken's tracks are thrown in for good measure: "Gave Up", "Wish" and "Suck". And finally, The Downward Spiral's "Piggy" and their most popular single, "Closer" are included as well. The performance closes with "Hurt", ending the set on a somber note.

This CD and the accompanying video/DVD is a well cared for live production. It makes a good choice for one looking for a return to form for the Nine Inch Nails you remember from a few years back, or the obsessive freak who absolutely MUST have all the Halo numbers (this one's seventeen).

Choreography of contrast

PHOTO BY BILL T. JONES

Bill T. Jones and the Arnie Zane Dance Company performed Wednesday at the Fine Arts Center.

By Melissa Ladd
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Fine Arts Center hosted a vibrant performance of Bill T. Jones' choreographic talents last Wednesday. Three of the works presented by the Bill T. Jones/ Arnie Zane Dance Company were only just recently premiered. The dance company appeared on the dance scene in 1982 at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The ten-member company now has more than fifty works in its repertoire and has performed all over the United States and the world. The company is recognized for blending dance with theater, while Jones is known for his use of striking and subtle language in movement to speak to his audience.

"Verbum," meaning "word" in Latin, was the title of the opening piece. The stage was set with large, silver frames that seemed to represent doorways through which dancers stepped during the course of the piece. The choreography could be described as sign language with the entire body. Everything from delicate finger gestures to extensive use of the spine communicated meaning, whether understood by the viewer or not. Symmetry, angles, working off of symmetry, fluidity, sharpness and intricate hand and footwork were all visible. One particular movement that stood out involved the first two fingers of one hand, and the dancer or dancers would "walk" them from one side of the head over to the other and down the shoulder and arm.

The piece involved four sections, the third one featuring a solo piece performed by Eric Bradley. His movement changed between slow and contemplative to quick and sharply spontaneous steps. This piece was extraordinary in its contrasting elements – the light silver of the sets and costumes against the black background. Contrast was also in the textures of the set and the costumes: the frames had a smooth metallic quality and the costumes with a soft, velvet texture. The movement even contrasted itself, going from quick to slow, and from sharp and angular to rounded and easily mutable.

"World Without/in", the second work presented, was an obvious, extremely eye-catching fusion of dance and theater. At center stage were white stairs descending in equal lengths down stage left and right from a platform. Flowers covered the low altar downstage, as well as "bloomed" around the musicians who occasionally interacted with the dancers from across the stage.

Two audience members, both students at Amherst College in the Theater and Dance program, had contrasting opinions about the set. One student stated that the stage design was one of the best uses of set that she had ever seen, while another called the staging "distractingly tacky."

The dancers that emerged onstage demonstrated many different characters, using elaborate costumes, props, masks and evident attitude. They seemed to represent many human characteristics such as greed, lust, suffering and others. Many entrances and exits were executed from the center of the stage below the raised stairs. The audience found itself grasping for what the meaning of the piece exactly was.

The stage was relentlessly busy with characters and musicians constantly moving about. The composition resembled a fairy tale or a painting, and held the viewer's attention throughout its duration. The most memorable props were obviously the abundant flowers, which were used and relocated often, and also a unique umbrella, constructed out of money, that was carried around by a single character.

One viewer felt that the whole piece referred to the concepts of the id, the ego, and the superego. Musical variations that distinctly deviated from the general flow were complemented extremely well by the movement. At one point, a dancer was dashing up and down the stairs to music notes that also scaled up and down sharply. This piece, whether understood, misunderstood, pleasing to the individual or not, was undeniably eye-catching.

The third piece, a musical interlude, was calmer than "World Without/in." The musicians were again placed on

Turn to DANCE, page 6

Sorry, Arnold

By Nick Pizzolato
COLLEGIAN STAFF

COLLATERAL DAMAGE
Starring Arnold Schwarzenegger
Directed by Andrew Davis
Now Playing at Cinemark

Collateral Damage stars Arnold Schwarzenegger, who in his time as being one of Hollywood's leading action stars has played a variety of "tough guy" roles. In this film Arnold is not a robot, a clone, a mercenary, Hercules, a cop (from either Russia or in a Kindergarten class), a villain of Batman, or even a father who needs to get his son an action figure. More importantly, Arnold doesn't even play a good person. His heroism is brought on by temporary insanity, and even that is not done well.

Arnold is Gordy Brewer, a "super" firefighter in Los Angeles. As he is waving to his son, about to cross the street and meet his family, Colombian terrorist "The Wolf" (played by Cliff Curtis) blows up the federal building next door, killing some CIA and Colombian government officials, but also killing Gordy's family. When Arnold wakes up in the hospital he realizes that he saw The Wolf and now he wants him brought to justice, as any man would. So he goes to the FBI, where he then happens to mention that he used to work with the bomb and arson unit, so he knows all about explosives – of course he does. This wouldn't be an Arnold movie if he didn't have a working knowledge of how to kill people and blow things up.

But in bureaucratic fashion, the FBI and the CIA, whose respective chiefs are played by Miguel Sandova (who can usually be recognized as the typical Hispanic drug overload) and Elias Koteas (who is widely recognized as Casey Jones from Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles 1 & 3) tell him that not only is the U.S. government trying diplomatic solutions for bringing The Wolf to justice, but in truth it may never catch him again. And then Arnie snaps.

While watching an interview with the head of a group that sup-

Turn to FLICK, page 6

COURTESY WWW.SONYPICS.COM

Ah-nold is busting heads in Coll-ah-ter-ahl Dah-mahge (Read previous with accent.)

dance

continued from page 5

COURTESY BILL T. JONES

stage to the left, (from the audience's perspective), and a solitary dancer placed on the other side of the stage. The movement was calculated and progressive – repeated over and over throughout the dance, changing direction of focus each time it was repeated. The viewer's attention was equally divided between the musicians and the dancer.

The final piece of the evening, "Black Suzanne", was an explosion of energy. A black backdrop with a grinning, red and black Suzanne flower was illuminated before the dancers took the stage. Its silly and cartoon-like appearance produced a chuckle from the audience. The dancers were clothed in bright red costumes that resembled a bathing suit/life jacket combination, or, rather, something that would be seen on Parisian fashion runway that has little or no practical use. Yet they were vibrant and exposed the bare legs of the dancers, boasting incredible muscle definition.

A distinctive action in this piece was an elevation of two dancers into a standing position about chest height off the ground. The effect was breathtaking. Physical contact and competition in this piece were constant and intense. Dancers literally threw their bodies through the air and seemed to be testing their own and each other's limits.

Bill T. Jones created powerful impressions with the works displayed at this performance. He invoked emotion, contemplation and attention with memorable choreography and presentation.

friends

continued from page 5

ings.

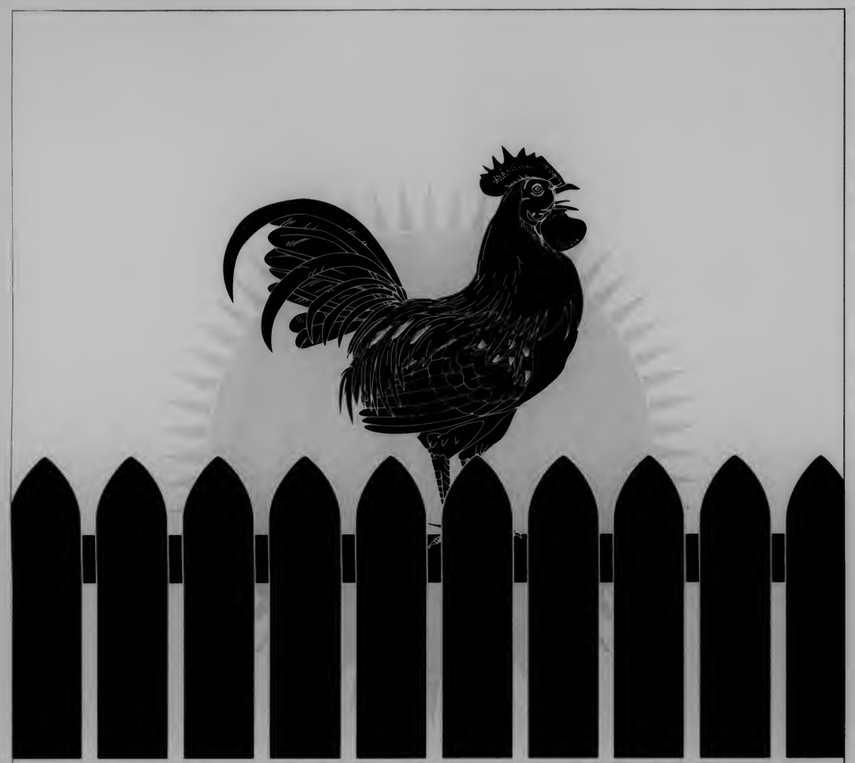
Leaving when the cast is still holding the ball, instead of it holding them is a wise choice. Last season "Friends" was faced with slumping ratings (admittedly due in part to the scheduling of "Survivor" in the same time slot on rival network CBS). It seemed the sitcom had just about run its course. But Rachel's pregnancy helped revitalize the show and ratings once again surged. God has given our "Friends" a second chance at seizing the opportunity of departing-and they should take up the offer.

Sadly in the end, the show will most likely return for another season. NBC and the show's producer, Warner Bros., and the cast have been negotiating for weeks. The six stars, who currently pocket $750,000 per episode, reportedly want a bump from 750,000 to $1-1.25 million (depending on which source you rely on) per actor per episode. According to a recent USA Today report, the actors turned down an offer of $800,000 per show. Plopping down more money is highly plausible as NBC wants to maintain its Thursday night Must See TV moniker. A $1.25 million paycheck would be $500,000 more than each Friend earns now, and it would raise the cost of the season to north of $150 million. That would make it the most expensive sitcom in history - although syndication rights should help it zoom past "Seinfeld" to make "Friends" the most lucrative show in history as well. As the annoying ex-girlfriend of Chandler would say in regards to those salaries, "Oh. My. God."

At this rate we'll be watching post-menopause Monica balloon to 200 lbs., sprinkle laxatives in her food and degenerate into a neurotic neat-freak compulsively cleaning her already immaculate living room umpteen times per day.

flick

continued from page 5



ports the Colombian's actions, he calls the deaths of the boy and mother as "regrettable" calling them "collateral damage." And might I just add, how clever is that putting the name of the movie in the movie. Wow, that hasn't EVER been done before.

So Arnie goes ballistic, first going down to the group's L.A. office and trashing it saying over and over, "I'll show you colla-hiteral dah-mage." And then when he gets released from jail, with a small laptop and with a little help from his friends, (why friends would get him ex-CIA operatives in Colombia instead of therapy is beyond me) he gathers enough information so that he can sneak into Colombia and destroy the entire guerilla army of radicals, but more importantly he can kill The Wolf.

And that's just about where the plot ends. For the next hour and half we see Arnold running, (which is pretty funny because, let's face it: the man is about as mobile as a statue) we see Arnold swimming (funny for the same reason) and we see Arnold being shot at and blowing things up. But he's not motivated by anything except revenge and murder. At least in Predator, (which also takes place in a South American jungle) he was getting paid and then he was getting hunted. The audience had a reason to cheer for this guy. In Damage, we are suppose to cheer a crazy man.

In fact, there are no good guys in the entire movie. The CIA, inherently, is considered evil. Then there are the Colombians (and I'm sorry, but I have yet to see a film with good Colombians, and I'm getting pretty sick of it) who killed the mother and son. Then there's John Leguizamo, who was in the film for comic relief, but what no one in Hollywood has realized yet is that he is about as funny as being shot in the foot); he is a drug dealer with a good heart. My favorite is the guest spot by John Turturro (also comic relief) who plays a Canadian mechanic who happens to also be a pervert. That's right, a Canadian. I would like to meet the casting director of this movie and hit them across the head. So, the audience is left with cheering a constant flow of lowlifes.

Collateral Damage is another failure in Arnold's long list of movie credits. The movie is not only badly written, badly acted, and uses cheap Arnold stunts (that everyone has seen, because he does the same ones over and over), but also the decision to release it now, when Americans are so on edge on terrorism and bombings of federal buildings, is just a bad call by Warner Bros. Studios. Not that delaying the film until June would have made it any better. It would be just as bad, but at least some more healing time as a nation would have been allowed for. This movie insults everyone, from fire fighters to South Americans... and especially the American audience.

It used to be the end of a great night.
It could soon be the start of a great day.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

At Ernst & Young, we believe that when you wake up in the morning, you should be excited about the day ahead. The challenges of the workplace should keep you stimulated, your capabilities should be stretched, and your horizons continually broadened. Because only when our people grow, both professionally and personally, do we grow as a company. Oh happy day!

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

WRITE FOR ARTS

Halle Berry and beau head out in casual versions of the classic suit and little black dress combo.

Gwyneth Paltrow and Luke Wilson appear to be headed to Bubs for their big Valentine's Day date.

Valentine's Day Vogue

COURTESY NECCO

By Shauna Billings
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ranking, in order, the most difficult dressing situations: 5. Meeting the boyfriend/girlfriend's 'rents (yup, we're speaking in Seventeen magazine lingo today – now go eat some fro-yo). 4. Deciding, as a hermaphrodite, what to wear to the prom. 3. Which of the many various combinations of tight black pants and sparkly tank tops to wear to the frats this Friday. 2. Trying to decide what to wear on that "I look like crap" day (Do you get all sassed out to make up for your uberhideousness, or do you just embrace your heinousness and stick with the sweatpants?)... and the number one most difficult and stressful dressing situation? What to wear on that first date.

With Valentine's Day fast approaching, the subject is on the hearts and minds of many of UMass' love-struck student body. It's that precarious situation – the first date with your crush, second or third date with that person whom you've kind of been seeing, or the thousandth date with your significant other of three years. Any situation that you're in, you've got your own stress to deal with.

With the first date there's that whole balance between wanting to look good, but not too good. Yeah, I know – it's all part of the game playing, but such is life, no? I guess that's the reason as well for scintillating conversations like, "Why didn't you call?" "I thought you were going to call me." "No, you said you were going to call me." When will the madness end, people? But getting back to the subject at hand (like I ever do), first date dressing is tough. You want to show the person that you are interested, but not crammed with them.

With that second or third date, you've established that you're both interested in the other person, but again you're still playing those games so that the person doesn't think that you'll perish without them. And with your three-year girlfriend, you've probably already worked yourself into that rut of heading out to Bub's Barbeque in your New Balances and your favorite (barbeque smeared) "Yankees Suck" T-Shirt – so now's the time to show her you really do care, and put on some clothes that require having used an iron.

In truth, the logic behind dressing for dates is different but the end ensemble is generally always the same. For your typical dinner date, it's best not to wear jeans on Valentine's Day, as they're a little too casual. (Unless you're rocking the romantic candle-lit dinner on the Bison farm, in which case spurs are the accessory of the moment.) A classic look for guys is a button-down shirt and a pair of khakis (Preferably khakis without cargo pockets, but if that's all you've got then that's all you've got. Style File doesn't have an aversion to the pockets – it's just that we're trying to spread the sans pocket couture love to all the guys out there.). A sweater is always a nice touch for chilly February nights as well. If you've decided to go all out for V-Day, feel free to sport a suit. Just beware, one has to have a certain ease to sport a suit and tie, or you just end up looking like a nervous six-year-old ring bearer.

Style File with Shauna Billings

Ladies, ladies, ladies, as usual, we've got more clothing options – which ultimately leads to a more stressful choosing. For a dinner and movie date, I'd go with a skirt. It's dressy, without having the "this is such an important moment in my life" implication that can go along with wearing an actual dress. Knee-high boots, a vibrant skirt and a simple top looks like fashionable but is almost as comfy as your pj's. Not really the skirt type? A sleek pair of pants and a tailored blouse (with the top buttons undone, you man killer you) looks hip and sexy. If you're going out with the aforementioned suit-guy, by all means bust out the little black dress – but otherwise keep it toned down. You'll feel more comfortable, and you won't get annoyed when your guy shows up with wrinkles in his chinos.

Fashion is all well and good, but the most important thing is that you dress in a way that makes you feel comfortable and at ease. You want to present the real you, not some stiff, buttoned-up version of yourself. So have fun this Valentine's Day, and save me some of those chocolates. Mmmm.

Brad Pitt and Jennifer Aniston are the poster couple casual chic.

Charlie Sheen and Denise Richards get all dress

COMING SOON...VALENTINE'S DAY!

Whether you...
Want to be funny/play a joke • Want to make a good friend smile
Be a secret admirer • Want to say a little "I love you"

Reserve Your Valentine's Day Collegian Personal by Tuesday, February 12th for the Collegian's Thursday, February 14th Valentine's Day Issue.

For more information call the Collegian @ 545-3500
Drop off order forms @ Collegian in the Campus Center basement or mail to 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003 (by 2/12)

Client: Date: Taken By: Office Use Only
Date to run: February 14, 2002 Headline: Personals
S.S.# Total Words: X .10¢ rate =
Total Cost (w/specials) Authorized signature:

Specials

Free Red Spot Color w/purchase of a graphic
$2 Heart Graphic at Beginning & End ❒
$4 Heart Graphic Border ❒
$5 Heart Shadowed Behind Message ❒

Graphic #1 ❒
Graphic #2 ❒
Graphic #3 ❒
Graphic #4 ❒

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN/UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
VALENTINE'S DAY CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING INSERTION ORDER

Cash ❒ Check # _____ VISA/MC# _____ Exp._____

ADVERTISING COPY

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Insert one character, space, or punctuation mark per box - use capital letters where they apply - Cost figured on each line of form used

RUTGERS NEW BRUNSWICK
THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW JERSEY

SUMMER SESSION 2002

Get on board for a unique educational experience.

REGISTRATION BEGINS FEBRUARY 25

http://summersession.rutgers.edu

Summer Session I • May 28 - July 3
Summer Session II • June 24 - August 2
Summer Session III • July 8 - August 14
Saturday Morning Classes • June 1 - August 10

- Undergraduate & Graduate Courses
- Morning, afternoon and evening classes
- Saturday morning classes
- Outstanding faculty
- Vibrant academic atmosphere
- Credits transferable to other colleges universities
- Off-Campus classes at:
  Brookdale Community College, Lincroft
  Freehold Colonial Campus on Rt.9
  Rutgers University Northwest Executive Training Facility, Mt. Arlington

For a free Summer Session catalog, including registration form, call 732-932-7565
Outside the 732 area code call 1-888-4RU-SUMMER, or e-mail your request to catalog@rci.rutgers.edu

THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW JERSEY RUTGERS

Expert explains dog body language

By Christel Irvin
ROCKY MOUNTAIN COLLEGIAN (COLORADO STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) FORT COLLINS, Colo. - The leading cause of pet deaths and abandonment in the United States is due to an owner misunderstanding human/animal's communication techniques, according to Dr. Rolan Tripp.

Tripp, who is a nationally recognized animal behavior expert and an on-air consultant for the Animal Planet Network, presented a lecture Friday evening to approximately 140 people at the James L. Voss Veterinary Teaching Hospital at Colorado State University called "Understanding Canine Body Language."

"Canines don't have verbal language, so they are dependent on body language," Tripp said. "Therefore, they are better at reading people body language than people are at reading people body language."

One body language example is when dogs are happy and excited, they show a submissive grin by pulling back their lips and showing their teeth. But some owners interpret this as a snarl.

"There was at least one case that I know of where a family was greeted by their dog who was grinning and so happy to see them that they mistook it for a snarl and had it killed," Tripp said. "That is the most tragic example I know of (misinterpretation)."

How a dog owner should interpret a dog's body language depends on the situation.

Interpreting a dog's body language helps an owner to know when a dog is trying to assert its dominance. Large dogs have a tendency to jump up and put their front paws on their owner's shoulders. Owners often see this as a loving hug when it is really a posture of dominance.

"By allowing the paws to be placed and left on their body, the owner is submitting to a more dominant member of the pack and might be setting up a future aggressive confrontation," Tripp said.

Even when a dog nudges an owner's hand with its snout to initiate petting it shows it can control the owner.

But owners can easily establish their leadership role over their dog without much work. Tripp said one way to do this is to pet the dog on the back of its neck. The scruff of the dog's neck is actually a power spot and is very easy to assess. This is usually where owners pet their dogs out of habit.

"You need to be a positive, respected, trusted leader," Tripp said. "The way you get there is by controlling resources of dogs (such as food, treats and toys) and not threatening them. A dog does not understand physical punishment and you become an unreliable leader."

At the end of the presentation, Tripp played video clips that showed various body language canines use to calm themselves and other dogs. Nathan Kuehl, employee with the College of Veterinary Medicine, said he attended the seminar because he is a dog owner.

"It was entertaining and (Tripp) provided some information that I had not known," he said.

Judy Serby, a Colorado State Forest Service employee, said she just wanted to be able to take care of her son's dogs better and so she attended Tripp's presentation.

"It actually reinforced a lot of things I already knew and gave good tips on things I didn't know," Serby said. "He was an incredible speaker and very entertaining."

Interpreting your dog's body language:

* Blinking repeatedly has a calming effect to dogs.
* Ears laid back and flat show a sign of fear or submissiveness.
* Barking can be territorial or a stress reliever.
* Howling says the dog is lonely and may be suffering from separation anxiety.
* Yawning is a way to calm another dog.
* A quick tongue flick is respect and usually done when they hear a command.
* Chewing is a sign of stress, boredom or they are teething.
* The solicitation gesture, or "shake" as most people know it, is a gesture for "please."
* Pawing at a person is an attention getter and the dog asserts its control.
* Broad, slow sweeping tail movement could mean the dog is in pre-attack mode.
* Take all body language and interpret it in the given situation.

Smoochers lock lips for nearly 5 hours

By Brian W. Shelden
INDEPENDENT FLORIDA ALLIGATOR (U. FLORIDA)

(U-WIRE) GAINESVILLE, Fla. - Wanting to jump start Valentine's Day and give Cupid a run for his money, seven couples competed Saturday in The Lingerie Co. Kiss-a-thon.

Despite the cold temperature, couples began arriving early in hopes of walking away as Gainesville, Fla.'s kissing champions.

Roommates Melissa Rubin and Jenn Brown arrived with their boyfriends ready to have a good friendly competition.

"I won a spot from Kiss 105.3," Brown said. "It was a total accident. I heard the chance to call up and I didn't even know what the prize was."

Brown said once she claimed her place in the Kiss-a-thon it was all the incentive Rubin needed.

"Once Melissa heard I won she kept listening to the radio to try and win. I don't know why she tried so hard, they're just going to lose to us," she said.

Rubin said winning a chance to enter the contest wasn't quite as easy as just making a phone call.

As the start of the contest drew closer, The Lingerie Co.'s owner, Brandy Heinlein, gave the couples some advice.

"Keep your lips locked at all times," Heinlein said. "If your lips don't stay together, you're out."

Heinlein said she got the idea from a friend who was second runner-up in another Kiss-a-thon.

"About five years ago I was giving a home lingerie party and I met this girl who lasted 11 hours in a kissing contest. I thought it was a great idea," she said. "Once I opened The Lingerie Co., I thought it would be a perfect combination, lingerie and kissing."

None of the couples showed signs of loose lips as the clock ticked. The participants were asked to perform various stunts including turning in a circle, jumping up and down and even drinking through straws.

As the day progressed, the couples began to slip away one by one from cramps in their legs to overfilled bladders.

After two hours John Best and Mary Riley could hold on no longer.

"It was really fun at first," Riley said. "After the first hour I started to get tired and I really had to go to the bathroom."

The competition continued with The Lingerie Co.'s staff crossdressing the contestants on top of their clothing. Men were dressed in bras and panties and women in boxer shorts.

After a grueling four hours and 55 minutes the final competition fell and the victors were Erik Margolin and Sara Rotter.

As the crowd applauded, Margolin and Rotter rubbed their chapped lips and Rotter said she was glad it was over because, "Erik forgot to shave his face."

When asked what the couple planned to do with the $750 gift certificate to The Lingerie Co., Erik smiled and answered, "We've got some shopping to do."

Mice infest Penn dorms

By Christina Yang
DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN (U. PENNSYLVANIA)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA - When worst comes to worst, place some cheese in a pizza box and wait.

That is exactly what University of Pennsylvania sophomore Ankoor Shah and his roommates did earlier this semester, hoping to trap some of the mice scampering about their room in Gregory College House.

But Shah and his roommates are not the only ones dealing with what seems to be an increased number of mice in Gregory this semester.

Although Gregory College House Dean Christopher Donovan acknowledged that there is a mice problem, he said that there has not been a surge in the number of complaints.

"I really hadn't heard more complaints than usual," Donovan said. "I haven't heard more than other college houses."

Donovan added that since the buildings that comprise Gregory are older buildings, complaints about mice are only natural.

"We always hear complaints," he said. "These are old buildings; we've got some mice."

Many residents, however, said that they have seen more mice in recent weeks than before.

Jennifer Jackson lives in Van Pelt Manor – part of Gregory – for the second consecutive year and said that she has noticed a significant increase in the number of mice this year.

"There are definitely more than there were last year," the College sophomore said.

She said that upon seeing mice "dart back and forth in the hallway," she and her roommates called maintenance and staff put down glue traps.

Maintenance workers "were helpful, but since [the mice problem] is so dorm-wide, you can't really do anything about it," Jackson said.

Engineering sophomore Teasha Katagiri said that since the mice infestation began, it has become necessary to keep the room extremely clean.

"We try to keep everything off the ground, so there's no crevices for them to hide," she said.

Donovan speculated that perhaps not all students who have problems with mice report them to maintenance.

"Maybe students haven't been calling them in," he said. "Or maybe it's just a few people that are having a really big problem."

Shah said that he and his roommates have never reported their mice problem to maintenance, but that their own homemade traps have been somewhat effective.

"Eventually we figured out where [the mice] were," he said. "We had to throw out a shoe that one of the mice had made a house in."

And there are other war stories of mice destroying residents' belongings floating around the dormitory.

Wharton sophomore Tarannum Rahman said that not only has she seen mice around her room at various times, but mice have chewed holes in her things, as well.

"When I got back from winter break, I had a bag, and it looked like it had been chewed through," she said.

Maintenance "came and finally set a trap, but we haven't caught it yet," Rahman added.

Donovan noted that residents often do not like to deal with disposing of the mice corpses, which is made necessary by the glue traps that maintenance uses.

"I think some students don't call specifically because they bring in the glue traps, so that might be some of the problem," he said.

www.dailycollegian.com

STUDENT TRAVEL
It's YOUR trip, take it!
London.....$274
Amsterdam....$351
Paris.....$349
Los Angeles....$198
New York.....$115
Washington D.C.....$78
Fares are round-trip from Hartford. Restrictions may apply. Tax not included
BUDGET HOTELS for as little as $18 A NIGHT!!!
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

YOU COULD WIN A WEEK IN CANCUN

Grand Prize: Club Med Trip for Two
First Prize: Coca-Cola CD Players (1 per campus)
Visit a participating campus retail outlet for Entry Forms and Official Rules.

The Catholic Community @ Newman Center invites you to join them to begin the 40 DAYS of the Lenten journey
Ash Wednesday Services
Wednesday February 13, 2002
Distribution of ashes at Masses and at Prayer Service
8am, 12:15pm, 5:15pm, 7pm
9pm Prayer Service
Remember that you are dust and into dust you shall return.
Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St. 413.549.0300

WRITE FOR THE SCHOOL PAPER!

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for: Friday 2/8 – Thursday 2/14/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
HOLLERBALL (PG13) 12:50 4:50 7:45 9:50*
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 12:05 4:30 7:40 10:20*
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 3:55 7:10 9:50*
BIRTHDAY GIRL (R) 4:50 10:15*
I AM SAM (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25
THE COUNT OF MONTE CHRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
THE MOTHMAN PROPHECIES (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
A WALK TO REMEMBER (PG) 12:25 7:35
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
SNOW DOGS (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30
* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
cinemark.com

2002 Winter Olympics

Controversy surrounds Olympic festivities

Opening ceremonies kick off the Olympic games

By Lisa Ogden
THE UTAH STATESMAN (UTAH STATE U.)

(U-WIRE) LOGAN, Utah – The Miracle on Ice 1980 U.S. hockey team wowed audiences for the second time in Olympic history during the Opening Ceremonies for the 2002 Winter Games in Rice-Eccles Stadium.

Captain Mike Eruzione led the 18-member hockey team, who won the gold medal in the 1980 Olympics beating the predicted-to-win Soviet Union team, as they lit the cauldron to mark the beginning of 17 days of intense competition.

Fifty-two thousand spectators attended the ceremony, and the security at the venue outnumbered the athletes 5 to 1.

President George W. Bush spoke at the beginning of the ceremonies on the effect the Olympics could have on international relations, and how fear would not stop the Games.

"We're learning how to make America more secure," he said. "We won't let the terrorists shut us down."

In memory of the Sept. 11 attacks, eight athletes were chosen by their teammates to carry in a flag that survived the devastation and spent three days buried in rubble at Ground Zero before being recovered.

Those athletes were accompanied by police, firemen and other civil servants from New York City.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir sang a poignant rendition of the National Anthem, accompanied by the Utah Symphony, as the television cameras panned to show crying spectators.

A symbolic program then followed with ice skaters portraying the Child of Light, 13-year-old Ryan Sandborne, fighting his way through a winter storm to find the Fire Within.

The traditional Parade of Nations took place near the beginning of the ceremony, whereas in years past it has taken place closer to the finale. Greece began the processional, followed by all the other nations involved in alphabetical order, with the United States entering last as the final culmination and hosting nation.

Performances by the five Native American tribes in Utah and by residents reenacting the Mormon pioneers entrance into the valley, gave a symbolic history of Utah while drawing the world into the spirit of the Games.

Athletes including Picabo Street, Dorothy Hamill, Scott Hamilton, Phil Mahre, Bonnie Blair and Dan Jansen carried the torch in the stadium before Eruzione stepped out of a door near the base of the cauldron to complete the ritual.

Speculations have abounded for weeks about who would light the cauldron during the Opening Ceremonies, and although it is always one of the best-kept secrets of the Olympic Games, the identity of the carrier seemed to be fairly predictable this year.

The Miracle on Ice team has been one of the most popular guesses by media and others, especially after the team reunited for last week's NHL all-star game.

Brandon Farnworth, an Olympic volunteer from Salt Lake who was able to get a preview of the Opening Ceremonies at the Wednesday, Feb. 6 dress rehearsal, said secrecy was important in making the ceremonies the incredible event they were.

"The world is gonna be stunned," he said that night. "But we can't give anything away. The element of surprise is going to make the ceremony."

President Bush became the first standing U.S. President to open a Winter Olympics. While standing with members of the U.S. Olympic team, he officially welcomed the world to our country.

"On behalf of a proud, determined and grateful nation, I declare open the Games of Salt Lake City, celebrating the Olympic Winter Games," he said.

The ceremonies performances focused on the theme of the Games to "Light the Fire Within."

SALT LAKE 2002

Much ado about red, white, blue

By Lauren Akselrod
CAVALIER DAILY (U. VIRGINIA)

(U-WIRE) CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. – While the commencement of the 2002 Olympic games in Salt Lake City last Friday brought the world together, the traditional torch lighting sparked controversy.

Among the words of the 100 pages of the Olympics' charter, it states that the host country is responsible for making each and every participant and visitor feel respected and comfortable.

And no moment holds more significance in light of this charter than the symbolic commencement of the games.

In past opening ceremonies, participants in neutral clothes have performed the torch lighting. This year, however, things took a turn from the ordinary when United States 1980 Olympic men's hockey team captain Mike Fruzione led his former teammates into Rice-Eccles Olympic Stadium.

The team wore replicas of the red, white and blue uniforms they wore 12 years ago when they beat the Soviet Union and went on to win the gold medal.

The team's non-traditional attire this year — which lead to chants of "USA! USA!" — caused other countries to rate the ceremony as too "politicized," the Associated Press reported.

First-year College student Abby Pittman also felt that the ceremony was out of place.

"If another country had done that to us we would make a big deal about it," Pittman said. "We used the Olympics to promote ourselves."

In addition, the presence of the World Trade Center flag caused countries such as Sweden, Japan and Kuwait to say that the Sept. 11 attacks should not be linked to the Olympics.

"I understand that they want to commemorate the attack, but I think that it's important that they respect the fact that the Olympics is a world event," said first-year College student Misuko Aelvoet, an international student from Japan.

On the other hand, second-year College student Gary Woods said people are looking at the ceremony in the wrong way.

"The 1980 team was just reminding us of an amazing event that shows what people can do one day if they give it their all," Woods said.

Despite the controversy of the outset of the events, several students agreed that the red, white and blue display was not intended to cast a shadow on the torch lighting.

"We were just showing our patriotism and welcoming the rest of the world," first-year Engineering student Ryan Chorazy said.

SALT LAKE 2002

Poverty protests at Olympics end in arrests

By Wynne Parry
Daily Utah Chronicle (U. Utah)

(U-WIRE) SALT LAKE CITY – A poverty rights protest peaked with arrest of five activists Friday, just prior to the Opening Ceremony of the Winter Olympics.

The March for Our Lives, a rally that arrived in Presidents Circle, attracted both local and national groups, all loosely united under the banner of poverty issues.

Protesters congregated at Reservoir Park, located near Greek Row, Friday afternoon before heading onto the University of Utah campus. There, speakers addressed welfare reform, immigration, a living wage and other issues, decrying massive amounts of money spent elsewhere.

"Real homeland security is feeding, clothing and housing ourselves and our children," said Cheri Honkala, executive director of the Kensington Welfare Rights Union, a Philadelphia-based group. "God is definitely on the side of the poor."

The march began as dramatically as it ended. Protesters lined the sidewalk of the park. Ahead of them police in yellow and black lined the road. As the chant "hey-hey-ho-ho poverty must go," rose up from the crowd of about 500, the presidential motorcade passed in front of them and behind the police line. After the cars had passed, police dispersed and the march began, creeping toward campus.

At its destination, the march curled up the north end of Presidents Circle. On University Avenue, a second yellow and black police line blocked off access to Rice-Eccles Stadium and the Opening Ceremony. However, five female protesters, including Honkala, continued their walk in that direction police. The women stopped when they could go no further, nose to nose with police. The crowd remained behind them in the designated protest area. Police with riot gear began arriving. "Amazing Grace", both sung and hummed, arose from the crowd lined up on Presidents Circle.

The standoff continued for several moments. Finally, a police official told the women to move back.

"If you fail to do so, you will be taken to jail," he said. "I'm declaring this an unlawful assembly."

The women did not move and police pushed back the media that surrounded them, taking the five protesters into custody. As she was put into a police van, Honkala yelled to the media, "Poor exist in America. Tell the whole world."

After the arrests, the crowd filtered back toward Reservoir Park.

About 15 legal observers with the American Civil Liberties Union watched over the events.

Janelle Eurick, an ACLU staff attorney who oversaw the observers, said the civil disobedience did not come as a surprise. "They were planning on getting arrested," she said.

The observers came to record the use of unnecessary force, if it occurred. However, the police handled Friday's events completely "by the book," she said. "We're surprised everything is going so well."

Police were just fulfilling their duty of "safety and security for everyone," according to Salt Lake County Deputy Mark Olsen.

The Opening Ceremony of the Olympics was both backdrop and target for the march, which drew international media.

"The Olympics provide a distraction," said Pete Litster, a member of the local Citizen Activist Network, as he introduced the "alternative torch run," which arrived in Reservoir Park earlier that afternoon. The Games take money and attention away from the marginalized, he said.

Protesters threw products and symbols of Budweiser, Coke, Texaco and General Motors into a bag intended to weigh down the protester/torchbearer and decry the corporatization of the Games.

Andy Jones, a U alumni, held a doll with the words "GM owns my body" written across her plastic skin. The toy represented GM's discrimination against women of child-bearing age in Mexico, he said.

"I think we need to show the Olympics for what they really are," he said.

But not everyone shared the enmity toward the Olympics.

"We're trying to get a message out. At this moment the eyes of the world are on the Olympics," said Willie Baptist, KWRU education director, who is himself homeless. "While the Olympics is something to be respected, the lives of people are something to be respected."

The events of Sept. 11 made life seem all the more precious, a message he feels should carry through the protest.

Baptist wore an orange vest, indicating he was part of the internal security for the protest. "We want to do everything we can to work with local authorities," he said.

"I think it's important that people band together and say 'we exist,'" said Lisa Shaw, a senior at the U studying women's studies who attended the march.

SALT LAKE 2002

MEDAL COUNT
Austria 6
Germany 6
USA 6
Norway 4

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

DISCOVER the World in the PEACE CORPS
Education, Business, Environment, Agriculture, Health & Community Development
Events st the Campus Center
Stockbridge Job Fair Feb. 12 10-2
Campus-Wide Career Fair Feb. 13 10-3
Information Meeting Feb. 21 7-8
Life Sciences Career Fair Feb. 27 10-3
Contact the Peace Corps Recruiter: 112 Stockbridge Hall, Umass 545-2105 peacecorps@fnr.umass.edu www.peacecorps.gov

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins 4.49
Nachos Especial 4.49
Sweet Potato Fries 3.29
1/2 PRICE!
Jodie's
OCMP Welcome Week
CLOSED ON MONDAY
51 N. Pleasant Street 253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/jodies

Increase Your Options
Consider Peace Corps
Join Us to learn more about a life time of benefits
PEACE CORPS
Wednesday, February 13
Campus-Wide Career Fair
10:00-3:00 Campus Center First Floor
Thursday, February 21
Information Session
7:00 p.m. Campus Center 905-09
www.peacecorps.gov 1-800-424-8580

Head for the Mountains!
Enter To Win A FREE day of skiing at Berkshire East
For you and a friend on February 23, 2002
Including:
•FREE Lift Tickets
•FREE Transportation
•FREE Ski Lessons
•FREE Equipment Rental
Coca-Cola
Name:
Address:
Phone:
E-Mail:
Berkshire East Ski Area
Bring or mail entries to the Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center Basement: MDC 113 Campus Center, University of Mass., Amherst MA, 01003

Three Divisions: Men, Women & CO-ED

SHOOT:

Two players alternate shots from 6 spots on the court in 30 seconds

SCORE:

Men and Women division winners win ROUND-TRIP AIR-FARE to anywhere in U.S.
CO-ED Division finalists will shoot at Halftime on Weds. Feb. 13, 7 pm vs. St. Bonaventure

WIN:

CO-ED Champions of each Atlantic 10 campus will compete during the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship in Philadelphia for $10,000 and the ShootOut Crown

Official Sponsors

GMAC

U·S AIRWAYS

verizon

ShootOut Qualifying Round:
Tues. Feb. 12, 4 pm
The Cage

Campus ShootOut Finals:
Weds. Feb. 13, 7 pm
Mullins Center vs. St. Bonaventure

Festival Sponsor

Softsoap Active

Presenting Sponsors

Coca-Cola

Chicago Pizzaria

wmua fm 91

Free and Open to All Students TO ENTER LOG ON: www.atlantic10.org
Or See Intramural Director for Details and Registration

Expectations not very high for Minutemen

By Elena Panesis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After finishing second in the Atlantic 10 conference last year, the outlook for the Massachusetts men's tennis team's 2001-2002 season seemed positive. Yet, with injuries to key players including sophomore star Rory Theis and No. 1 senior captain Steve Prisco, the squad learned that appearances truly can be deceiving.

"Our expectations aren't as high as last year," Prisco said. "We're missing some guys like Rory and Brent Davis who transferred. Our goal is to go out and do the best we can."

This past weekend the Minutemen traveled to Ithaca, New York for the annual Cornell Invitational and played four undermanned matches due to ineligibility and injuries. After forfeiting every doubles point, the Maroon and White ended up losing to Binghamton College, Assumption College and St. Bonaventure 7-0. In Sunday's 6-1 fall to the University of Buffalo, freshman Reid Stubbs pulled out the lone win of the weekend for the team, defeating Nick Zizula 6-4, 3-6, 6-1. Also, the default due to illness Sunday of No. 2 singles player freshman Scott Sans-Leeb did not help the Massachusetts cause.

In the fall season, which usually serves as a warm-up to more vital conference matches in the spring, the squad squeaked past Binghamton 4-3 and the 7-0 shut out to the very same team Saturday was hardly characteristic of the Maroon and White's ability.

"We played a different format this weekend," Prisco said. "We didn't play six singles and three doubles. It was weird and not a regular match. Also, we beat Binghamton earlier in the year and this time we lost all the matches. For them to beat us like that was because of injuries and ineligibility. Jed Greenberg had not practiced enough to play either and he will play six next match. Plus, I should be healthy enough."

Prisco, a stellar competitor and leader on and off the court of the Massachusetts men's tennis program for four years, has suffered an ongoing back injury this season limiting some of his play.

"I've been doing physical therapy in the training room the last seven days," Prisco said. "Tomorrow night I'll try playing in practice. Hopefully it won't hurt too much."

Saturday the Minutemen will take on a tough opponent, Ivy League member Yale followed by an equally challenging team Sunday, Colgate University.

Last season Colgate defeated the Minutemen 5-2 in a hard fought, positive match at their indoor home courts of Hampshire College.

"Yale and Colgate are both very tough opponents that are always good," Prisco said. "We're going to give it our best shot but our odds are that we'll lose."

The Minutemen play their first home match of the spring season Sunday, Feb. 24 against Boston College, a non-conference rival that the team defeated last year on the road.

"BC is a big rival at home; we beat them last year," Prisco said. "It's definitely a winnable match. It's going to be tough but it's possible. Right now we're getting keyed up for that one."

Student files report against BU coach

By Robert Devaney
Northeastern News (Northeastern U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON – A Northeastern University student has filed a report with the university's campus police that he was assaulted by longtime Boston University hockey coach Jack Parker before a game at Matthews Arena on Jan. 4.

Justin Harriman, the student who filed the report on Jan. 17, told police in a report that he did not want Northeastern Police to investigate the alleged assault; Harriman instead wanted them to have it on record, according to NU police officer Lieutenant Detective Jim Pollard.

On the date of the alleged incident the Northeastern men's hockey team was hosting the Boston University Terriers when according to the report, Harriman was assaulted by Parker and others on the BU team.

In an interview with The News on Jan. 8, Harriman, one of the recognized leaders of Northeastern's cheering section, the Dog House, said that before the game was when the alleged incident took place. He said he was standing on the lower level near the tunnel where the players come onto the ice preparing to taunt BU players as they exited the tunnel.

Harriman said as he prepared to taunt the players using his megaphone, Parker allegedly warned him not to use it. He then grabbed him and pulled him toward the railing forcing his jersey over his head.

At this point, according to Lt. Pollard, the report states Harriman told police that he was assaulted by Parker and a player or players on the team until another BU coach pulled people away from him.

"Everyone gets heckled at games, but he took it to another level," Harriman said.

Parker, who was unaware that the report had been filed, said that it was a case of him protecting his players. He said Harriman's jersey was not pulled over his head and did not comment on the accusations that were made against others affiliated with the team.

"I told him I didn't want him using that horn while my players walked by for the safety of my players," Parker said. "When he began doing it I went to grab the megaphone. I couldn't reach and grabbed the jersey he was wearing."

Parker said that a similar incident almost happened last year when BU was visiting Matthews. He said during that incident Parker had a referee come over and gave Harriman a warning that he would be escorted out of the arena if he used the megaphone up close on the team.

During the incident on Jan. 4, Parker said in an effort to prevent the problem from happening he called over a referee as he had done last year, but when the referee left is when Harriman allegedly put his players in danger.

According to Parker he felt he had to protect his players and staff, not from being harassed, but from having their ears damaged if Harriman yelled into his megaphone at close range.

"He is a great fan," Parker said. "A great supporter of the team, but there was a danger."

Boston University Sports Information Director, Ed Carpenter said he was aware of the event because he was informed of the "obnoxious" fan but did not see the incident.

Lt. Pollard said it is unusual but not unheard of for someone to file a report but ask the police to not investigate or follow up on the charges.

"We see this in roommate conflicts sometimes, where one roommate wants to have it on record that they and their roommate had a conflict," Lieut. Pollard said. "Or when someone receives a threatening e-mail."

Harriman in his Jan. 8 interview said he attempted to file a report after the game but said when he spoke with Northeastern police officers, he felt they dissuaded him to do so. A week later Harriman told The News he was not going to file a report.

Northeastern Athletic Director Ian McCaw said he was made aware of the incident by Northeastern Police but said the athletic department didn't plan on taking any action.

"We have campus police at all our events," McCaw said.

■ hoop

continued from page 14

Raheim Lamb, a first-year swingman for the Maroon and White. "And we just really came together as a team and talked about getting focused."

All year, this team's mental toughness has been questioned. UMass' problem lies in its knack for being consistently inconsistent and its failure to play a full 40 minutes of basketball.

Saturday in its 62-47 win over LaSalle, the Minutemen again failed to properly compete for the game's duration, but did find a way to rough things out defensively and pull out the victory.

"I think we definitely showed some mental toughness in the last game, considering we didn't score for 11 minutes and still played defense the way we need to," Lappas said. "So that was a good sign."

But it's not something he's going to get entirely elated over. Lappas understands that even though his team is carrying the knowledge of how not-to-win basketball games, it's not going to matter anything come early March when the A-10 tournament rolls around.

"That experience is never good for you," Lappas said. "When you lose three in a row and then you're in a situation where you have to win three, maybe four in a row to win the tournament, that's never a good thing for you. The pressure is always great, especially in a tournament situation when you get down. The tournament is completely different from the regular season. You never know how guys are going to react to a situation."

It goes even more for this team. Like any roster, it wants to win really badly, and at times had shown it can. But as infantile programs usually show, this year's group of Minutemen hasn't learned the exact process of triumph.

And that's not something to snivel over. It's actually something Lappas plans to build on.

Ick.

Castaway Lounge
Will proudly present another successful
Amateur Night
Monday February 25th starting at 7 pm

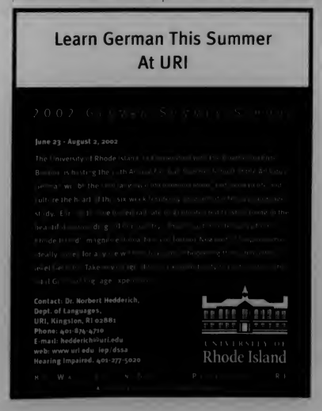
PENTHOUSE PET DOMINIQUE ST.CROIX
- Cash prizes awarded
- All ladies over 18 must apply in person
- Open on Mondays at 3pm with 10 Beautiful Exotic Entertainers Food and Prizes given away

Open Tuesdays – Saturday 11am - 1am
VIP Room available for private engagement parties
Phone# 413 665 8733

Happy Birthday Brady!

McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern Hosts
Budweiser
Quarter Tournament
TO

COLLEGIAN SPORTS:
NOT OUR BEST EFFORT.



THE TRADITION CONTINUES
NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VAN WILDER

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST
@ Cinemark at Hampshire Mall, 367 Russell Street
7:00 PM Wednesday, February 20, 2002
FREE ADMISSION *while passes last
* Passes available at Cinemark at Hampshire Mall, 367 Russell Street, beginning the Wednesday prior Passes required. Seating is limited and not guaranteed. Please arrive early Presented in association with Cinemark at Hampshire Mall, 367 Russell Street

IN THEATRES SPRING 2002
WWW.NATIONALLAMPOON.COM
ARTISAN

Learn German This Summer
At URI

RING IN THE NEW YEAR WITH
GREAT CONNECTIONS! GREAT VALUE!

3500 FREE Minutes for LIFE!
That's 3200 Night & Weekend and 300 Anytime home airtime minutes every month!
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up now for one year and remain on a SingleRate℠ East Plan.
— PLUS —
UNLIMITED Nationwide Long Distance
When calling from your home rate area. Airtime charges apply.

GREAT CONNECTIONS!
The whole family can stay connected with the Family SharePlan℠.
Activate a primary line on any SingleRate East Family SharePlan℠ $35 or higher and add up to 3 lines for only $20 a month for each additional line!

GREAT VALUE!
Buy one digital phone, get one phone FREE!
Available on select phone models with annual contract.

HOLYOKE MALL • (413) 533-2500
HADLEY • 322 Russell Street • (413) 587-3248
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.

verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer

Offer valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plans. $30 activation fee per line. $175 early termination fee per line. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. All calls subject to taxes and other charges. Requires digital service and certain CTIA equipment. Phone model may vary. While supplies last. For Family SharePlan℠ only one user can have a primary plan and others must be on secondary plan. All lines must be activated on the same billing account. Night & Weekend hours: Mon-Fri 9:01pm-5:59am, Sat 12am-Sun 11:59pm. Some restrictions apply. See store for details.

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

LAST CHANCE TO GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE FOR FALL 02 AND SPRING 03!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! INFORMATION SESSIONS WEDNESDAYS AND THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 THROUGH FEBRUARY 21 IN 614 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351. FINAL APPLICATION DEADLINE MARCH 1.

Do you know what a local sorority is? Meet the sisters of Iota Gamma Upsilon. Recruitment party times: Sunday-Wednesday 6:30-8:30 Call Arlene for info. Or rides 256-6874 406 N. Pleasant.

Contact your Avon Representative at Umass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail avonerica@hotmail.com.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto, runs good. $700. 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Laptop AST Ascentia 200MHZ. Very light. CD Rom, Floppy, Bag, many extras, Windows ME. $400. 413-478-9338 Lv msg.

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

The department of linguistics needs monolingual speakers of English for a one hour language learning experiment. You will be paid $9. For more information, contact Dr. Joe Pater at 586-2537 or pater@linguist.umass.edu.

Substitute teachers needed for full day and part day $7.00 an hour. Cushman Scott Children's Center 549-1167.

Mothers helper/ PCA. Help disabled mom with driving and household chores. References and drivers license required. Own transportation to south Deerfield 2 to 3 afternoons/ week, $8/hour. 665-3914.

EMPLOYMENT

Minuteman Pest Control is looking to hire 2-4 Seasonal Service Technicians. The job description includes treatment to residential exterior foundations. THE FOLLOWING QUALIFICATIONS WILL APPLY:
Must be at least 18 years old
Must have reliable transportation
Must be able to start work in early spring (April 2002) until September
Must be able to work Saturdays
Take and pass a State Applicators Certification Exam in early 2002
We are offering an hourly wage of $12.00-$14.00 to start and will train.
FOR MORE INFORMATION PLEASE CALL 800-586-1009.

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for SAT and MCAS courses, held year-round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $13/hr; paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job; flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4939.

After school care positions available. 20 years and older. Experience with school age children required. Call Matt or Brett at the YMCA in Northampton. 584-7086.

EMPLOYMENT

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an*d more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.independentlake.com and apply on-line.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions. (413) 625-2288.

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed. 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5197.

Cruise Line. Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruiseasreers.com

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742.

FOR SALE

Futon Platform bed very attractive $190. Electronic keyboard plus, stand, plus Amp. $290. And Dell inspiration laptop 3 months old, $1075. Call 549-7202

Mac Quadra 630 face 32 Ram w/ 17 in. view Sonic monitor. Perfect for word processing $125 (413) 665-6833.

FURNITURE

Couch Green/ floral pillows, $350.00. Recliner/ Lazyboy $100.00 259-1020.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro, Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David GoodRich (Pmulrey, Emekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D_GoodRich@hotmail.com

LOST AND FOUND

VW car keys reward! 545-3639.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female only 1 room available ASAP HT/HTW included cumingsm@elms.edu

SERVICES

Feeling ripped off? Your new car is a lemon; the warranty on your stereo just expired and it needs major repairs; you loaned a friend money and you can't get it back or the dry cleaners ruined your favorite suit! Is ELSI giving you grief about your student loan? Are debt collectors knocking at your door? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Panama City from $129! Boardwalk room with kitchen Next to clubs! 7 Parties Including free drinks! Daytona $159! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break Super Sale! Book your trip with StudentCity.com and save up to $100 per person to Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, Padre and Florida. Most popular student hotels including the Oasis and the Nassau Marriott Crystal Palace! Prices start at $399! Sale ends soon! CALL NOW! 1-800-293-1443 or go to StudentCity.com!

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available. $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlessssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels, Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

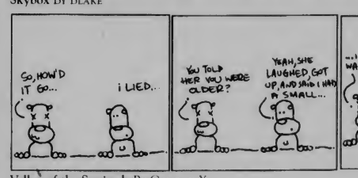
WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

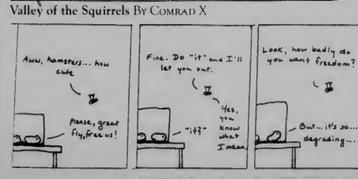
Noodle By Jacki

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Skybox By Blake

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"I could always go into puppet-making, that's a lucrative career."

–Shawna Magarick

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 37 LOW: 27	HIGH: 33 LOW: 10	HIGH: 37 LOW: 21

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – There's no reason for you to be frustrated or bored today; there are plenty of opportunities for you spread your wings at this time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You must react quickly today if you're going to parlay chance meetings and developments into something permanent and profitable.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Get together with someone who shares your ideals, and you both can work to come up with a very realistic plan that can pay off handsomely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Now is the time to fulfill that promise you gave someone only a day or two ago. Don't wait, or the benefits of your actions will be limited.

GEMINI (May 20-June 20) – Surprise someone you love, and you'll receive a great deal in return – and what you get is sure to satisfy more than just your vanity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Take care that you don't do or say anything that could be considered "tactless" or "out of place." It's important that you focus on property.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What seems to others to be an emergency or a crisis of some sort is actually a routine development to you. You're used to things being dramatic!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can climb a personal peak today, but you must also be sure that you don't remain too long at the heights. Get yourself back down to earth.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can turn your work into a great deal of fun today if you look at the bright side and work to prolong those things that please you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – An optimistic outlook is good for everyone around you today. There may be one thing, however, that gives you cause for doubt; keep it to yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Don't forget that something you know may be in need of a little more privacy today. You'll know what to do when the time comes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – This is a good day to thank someone special for special for looking out for you in a time of need. The more personal you can be, the better.

Collegian Graphics...we have the sweetest 'margins.'

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Yankee Corn Chowder

Beef Ragout

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

DINNER

Yankee Corn Chowder

Chicken Pot Pie

Vegetable Stir Fry with Pork

Vegetable Stir Fry with Tofu (W Basics) (vegan)

California Quiche (vegetarian)

HSCN

Housing Services Cable Network

3 ..... CBS / 3
4 ..... NESN
5 ..... Fox Sports NE
6 ..... PBS / 57
7 ..... HSCN Movie Channel
8 ..... WB / 20
9 ..... HSCN Movie Channel
10 ..... TV Guide Channel
11 ..... FOX / 61
12 ..... ABC / 40
13 ..... NBC / 22
14 ..... International Channel
15 ..... UMATV
16 ..... HSCN Info Channel
17 ..... ESPN
18 ..... ESPN 2
19 ..... UVC / 19
20 ..... ESPN Classic
21 ..... Cable-Ready Channel
22 ..... CNN
23 ..... CNN HL
24 ..... Weather Channel
25 ..... Learning Channel
26 ..... History Channel
27 ..... A & E
28 ..... Discovery Health
29 ..... Food Network
31 ..... NASA
32 ..... Home & Garden TV
33 ..... Travel Channel
34 ..... Lifetime
35 ..... CNBC
36 ..... Tech TV
37 ..... BET
38 ..... UPN-38
39 ..... USA
40 ..... TNN
41 ..... MTV
42 ..... CMT
43 ..... VH-1
44 ..... TNT
45 ..... TBS
46 ..... E! Entertainment
47 ..... Sci-Fi Channel
48 ..... Court TV
49 ..... Nick at Nite
50 ..... Comedy Central
51 ..... Cartoon Network
52 ..... Game Show Network
53 ..... TV Land
54 ..... FOX Family
55 ..... Univision
56 ..... Galavision
57 ..... Telemundo
58 ..... College TV Network
59 ..... C-SPAN
60 ..... C-SPAN2
61 ..... Bloomberg Television

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 12, 2002

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Bioterror" (In Stereo)		Secret Life of the Brain (N)		World of National Geographic		African-Americans
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "The Measure of Men"		Guardian "Lolita" (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "The Measure of Men"		Guardian "Lolita" (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	The Chair (In Stereo)		Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Leech" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WTXX		8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Leech" (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	70s Show	Undeclared	24 "10:00 AM - 11:00 AM" (N)		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)						News
WGBY	11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Bioterror" (In Stereo)		Secret Life of the Brain (N)		World of National Geographic		Charlie Rose (N)	(In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	The Chair (In Stereo)		Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Nightline
WSBK	41		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Roswell "Pandora" (In Stereo)		Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel (N)	Shipmates (N)
WTBS	42		Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	NBA Basketball New York Knicks at Orlando Magic (Live)						NBA Basketball Wizards at Lakers
A&E	43		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order (In Stereo)		Biography: Strangler		Law & Order "Snatched"		100 Centre Street (N)		Law & Order	(In Stereo)
CNN	25	21	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	35	30	Saturday Night Live	(In Stereo)	Daily Show	Geeks	★ "2001: A Space Travesty" (2000, Comedy) Leslie Nielsen				Battlebots (N)		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	52		Echo of the Elephants		Congo		New Detectives		New Detectives "Broken Vows"		FBI Files "Death in the Delta"		Justice Files
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		College Basketball Illinois at Michigan State (Live)				College Basketball Florida at Georgia (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	32		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait Jasmine Guy		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★½ "Doing Time on Maple Drive" (1992) James B. Sikking				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	45		Who Knows?	Making-Video	Music Videos (In Stereo)		Rock & Roll	Reel World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Making-Video	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	46		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Cheers	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	48		Star Trek "The Lights of Zetar"		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "The Beholder"		★★★ "Cadfael" (1997, Science Fiction) Ethan Hawke				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	49	24	Weird Places		Tales From the Tower		Daring Robberies		Unmasked! Exposing Secrets		Seeing Is Believing		Daring Robberies
TNT	50		NYPD Blue (In Stereo)		Pretender "The Inner Sense"		Law & Order "Ego" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Venom"		Charmed (In Stereo)		Witchblade "Dark-yaa"
USA	29		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Heiress" (In Stereo)		Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show (Live)						Living Single	Martin
HBO	65		(5:30) ★★ "The Closer You Get"		★★ "28 Days" (2000, Drama) Sandra Bullock. "PG-13"		★½ "Sweet Novembar" (2001, Romance) Keanu Reeves. "PG-13"						Sex and City	Greenlight
MAX	26		(5:00) ★★½ "Heat" (1995, Drama) Al Pacino. (In Stereo) "R"				★★ "Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit" (1993) Whoopi Goldberg. "PG"		★★★ "American Psycho" (2000) Christian Bale				Real Sex 21
SHOW	28		(5:30) ★★½ "Chances Are" (1989, Comedy) "PG"			Filmmaker	★★½ "What Women Want" (2000, Comedy) Mel Gibson. "PG-13"				Chris Isaak "Family Ties" (ITV)		Queer as Folk	(ITV) (In Stereo)

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

THE HARP IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
TUESDAY NIGHT!!
Team Pub Trivia
win money and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition

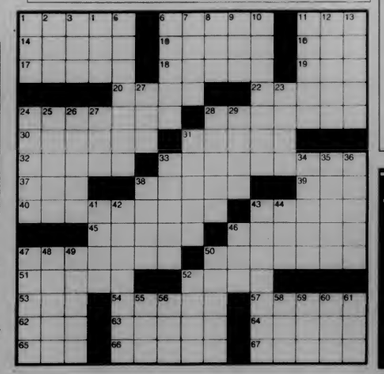
ACROSS

1 Quilt stuffing
6 Cadger
11 Actress — Dawn Chong
14 Cosmetic boy
15 Vex
16 Vintage
17 Eavesdrop
18 Informal speech
19 Daily record
20 Marie's shout
22 Dancer Castle
24 Sea north of Iran
26 Swiss and American
30 Major road
31 Veldt scavenger
32 Horse's "brakes"
33 One that's immune from criticism
37 Mandela's org.
38 Kind of premiere
39 Yes, to Yvette
40 "Get lost!"
43 Does pull-ups
45 Sword fights
46 William's title
47 Bulletins
50 Bedroom furnishing
51 Showy white bird
52 Pleasures
53 Continend for

54 Speck in the ocean
57 More gentle
62 Perron or Gabor
63 Midwest airport
64 Privileged few
65 Soak hemp
66 Head supporters
67 Dance spot

DOWN

1 Pause fillers
2 Charged particle
3 Batman and Robin, e.g.
4 Alter —
5 Garage jobs
6 Brick worker
7 Exclusively
8 — shoestring
9 Debate side
10 Cleanliness
11 Actors' quests
12 Solo
13 Rims
21 Loft filler
23 Use the library
24 Gem weight
25 Stadium
26 Adhere
27 Pig's digs
28 Pedal
29 Pasture browsers



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

SEEP DUET DAD
ALMA ONTAP TIDE
GAIT MIAMI AVON
ENTREAT PROWESS
IRIS ADO
BABOON WATERBED
EDITS YALE YETI
LIL ROVED NHL
EELS AGE MOTEL
MUSCULAR MEASLY
ORE DEER
PETUNIA ARTLESS
EXIT GRATE OLEO
APES HARES CLAM
ROD BEST KATE

11-15-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

31 Loiters
33 Gets dirty
34 Pocket change
35 Cup fraction
36 More sensible
38 Playground shout
41 Singer Brickell
42 Bidding sale
43 Pleaded
44 That fellow's
46 Use a crowbar
47 Not even once

48 Pointed arch
49 Small gift
50 — on acts like a grandparent
52 Ninny
55 "— tells seashells"
56 Resinous deposit
58 Spinks defeater
59 "Conduct" start
60 Catchall abbr.
61 Vintage auto

DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.12.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts men's basketball team hosts St. Bonaventure Wednesday night at the Mullins Center.

Refusing meltdown

Strange year continues for a program rebuilding

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Sure, Steve Lappas doesn't like to lose. But come on. After he does, you won't find him in a cave under the Mullins Center with twelve boxes of Kleenex.

"A lot of things in life happen that get you down – many worse than losing a game – and you have to get up again," said Lappas last night during a break in his weekly WHMP radio show. "I mean, people get sick, people die. There are much harder things to get back from than losing a basketball game. If you lose, you lose. Just get back to work, get yourself ready for the next game. But to be down, come on. You have to put in perspective.

"We're just playing ball."

Some hoop adherents may tell you that Division I basketball is actually more than a game. They'll let you ponder the hypothesis that when it comes to big time roundball, losing truly does parallel death.

But so subsist the people that don't understand the fact that basketball players are real, live human beings. So exist the fanatics that can't grasp the idea that – like them – their team does not enjoy losing.

They're the people that give up on teams like this year's Minuteman squad – a team that started off brilliantly with wins over Oregon and N.C. State, but soon found a way to register a trio of 3-game losing streaks that included failures to Holy Cross, Rhode Island and Duquesne.

Still, that doesn't mean UMass (10-11, 4-6) is necessarily close to submission. Super-cynics around the world might not believe it, but adversity does sometimes bring teams closer together. Back in mid-January, after the Minutemen lost the last game of its second 3-game slide, senior captain Shannon Crooks called an urgent meeting in the locker room.

"We had a meeting for about an hour," recalled

Turn to HOOP, page 13

UMass scares No. 1

Minutewomen start 2002 with success

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Much like the geese that flee the bitter New England winter annually for warmer destinations, each year the Massachusetts softball team plays the first month of its season away from Amherst, waiting anxiously for spring. And although the Minutewomen do not get to enjoy home-field advantage for some time, it gives them the opportunity to participate in several of the most elite softball tournaments in the nation.

The No. 24 ranked Maroon and White headed to Tempe, Ariz. this past weekend to take part in the Fiesta Bowl Classic, which featured host No. 1 Arizona as well as other top softball squads. Prior to feasting for the Grand Canyon State, Head Coach Elaine Sortino and her players were excited to play against such high competition because teams like Arizona usually give the team the Minutewomen a measuring stick for where they stand on the upcoming season.

If this tournament was any indication, UMass softball will be in fine shape this campaign.

The Maroon and White capped off a fine weekend (three wins and two losses) on Sunday with a heart-stopping extra-frame affair with the highest ranked team in the nation. Although UMass fell short in a 1-0, eight-inning classic against the Wildcats, the team without a doubt showed that it will be a force to be reckoned with in the coming months.

"Somebody had to win, and somebody had to lose," Sortino said. "But I got an outstanding performance from my team."

The Minutewomen had quite a bit working against them in their final showdown. Not only did they have to confront a pro-Arizona home crowd, but they faced the unenviable task of going up against the dominant Jennie Finch. The senior Wildcat entered Sunday's game coming off a torrid 2001 season in which she finished with an NCAA-record 32-0 year that garnered her Player of the Year honors.

Still, the Maroon and White kept it close due to outstanding pitching from junior Kaila Holtz, and fine all-around defense as the team was able to silence the ferocious Wildcat hitters until the final frame. Arizona had serious scoring threats in the second, fifth and sixth innings, but was able to escape the jams in all three instances. Holtz ended a bases-loaded jam in the second with a strikeout, started a double play to end the fifth, and in the next inning, center fielder Teri Rooney gunned down a potential run at home to end another Wildcat threat.

Holtz finished with seven strikeouts scattering seven hits, while Finch ended the game with 15 strikeouts, pitching a three-hitter. While the Minutewomen were not able to plate any runners, Sortino had nothing but praise for her team.

"We took the biggest dog in the nation down to a photo-finish," she said.

UMass began the weekend, however, with three impressive victories over Kansas and Texas on Friday, and Texas Tech the following morning.

In its first game of the season against the Jayhawks, the Maroon and White was held scoreless for the first five innings until a fiery seven-run sixth inning catapulted the team to a 7-1 victory. The offensive explosion started innocently enough with RBI singles by Holtz and second baseman Ashlei Bakken, but soon turned a pitcher's duel into a hitting clinic as five more runs came across, led by an RBI single by Nicole Wilson and a two-RBI hit by junior Anna Perez. Holtz picked up her first win of the season with a four-strikeout, six-hit effort.

The team continued its winning ways later on Friday afternoon as its bats stayed hot in a 9-1 stampede over the Longhorns. The Texas pitching staff found the strike zone to be the size of a library card as the Minutewomen took full advantage of four walks and two wild pitches, along with RBI singles from Aisha Franke and reigning A-10 Player of the Year Scooter Wheeler to score five runs right out of the starting block. A-10 Pitcher of the Year Jen Hadley notched her first victory as she K'd five Longhorn hitters in her five-shutout innings of work.

UMass picked up its third and final win of the tournament on Saturday morning with another quality performance over the Red Raiders from Texas Tech. Freshman pitcher Kelli Arnold, who Sortino said was progressing quickly in her short amount of practice time, showed no signs of freshman jitters in her collegiate debut, as she whiffed six batters on route to her first victory of the season. Shortstop Emily Robustelli led the UMass offensive charge with a hit and run scored in the second inning, and a long homb over the right field wall in the sixth.

Although the Minutewomen did drop their final two games of the Classic, to UNLV on Saturday afternoon (6-4) and the Sunday morning nail-biter to the Wildcats, Sortino had nothing but praise for her squad. She was very impressed with all facets of her team's game, offensively and defensively, especially since her players had been only practicing together for nine days.

"We beat three very reputable and very fine teams in Kansas, Texas, and Texas Tech," Sortino said.

Moreover, she said that the education her team got will be invaluable for her team in the upcoming weeks as it continues to participate in the nation's elite tournaments, including the highly competitive Leadoff Classic in the coming weeks.

"We took positive, valuable lessons from the wins and the two losses, both physically and technically on the field, but mentally as well," Sortino said.

UMass will next play in the Leadoff Classic starting Feb. 22 in Columbus, Ga. against teams such as powerhouses Stanford and Cal-State Fullerton.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kaila Holtz helped the Minutewomen battle top-ranked Arizona to extra innings last weekend.

There's No Doubt About It
Arts page 5

Athletics needs to take a cut
Ed/Op page 4

Sports
Sports page 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

WEDNESDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.13.02

Bird is the word during Hampshire Bird Club meeting

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

On a 15-acre preserve in Hawley, Mass., the Center for Rehabilitation Of Wildlife (C.R.O.W.) has been taking care of injured birds and small mammals for the last 11 years.

Monday night at the Immanuel Lutheran Church in North Amherst, the Hampshire Bird Club held a slide show presentation by professional naturalist and author Bill Danielson, who spoke for over an hour about C.R.O.W.

Because he gets to handle many young and injured birds that would otherwise never approach people, Danielson had a wide array of close up slides that would normally have been very difficult to attain.

Highlights of the show included impressive shots of Pine and Evening Grosbeaks, American Kestrels, Ruffed Grouse, Wild Turkey, Pileated Woodpeckers, Turkey Vultures, and many close up pictures of a Barred Owl that has been coming back to Danielson's yard for the past six years.

"All through my childhood, my mom was very open to bringing in baby birds, so I was used to it," Danielson said, who graduated from the University of Massachusetts with a degree in wildlife management. "Later on, I worked at the Sandy Hook Unit of the Gateway National Recreation Area (in New Jersey) as a ranger, and I worked with birds that would get hit by cars.

"It really happened by accident. Taking care of sick animals just seemed like the thing to do."

In Spring, when the bird population reaches its peak. In western Massachusetts, the Center usually holds up to 200 birds at once. And because many of the baby birds need to be fed every 15 minutes, it makes for a lot of hard work for the people that work there.

However, the birds do go to sleep at night, so the C.R.O.W. employees do not need to work the overnight shift as well.

"The first thing you do if you find an injured bird is get an empty box," Danielson said. "Next, fill a soda bottle or something with a cover with warm tap water and put a towel over the bottle with the bird next to it to keep it warm. Then, call 1-413-625-BIRD for better instructions."

Even though injured or baby birds enter the center for a variety of reasons, by far the number one cause of unnatural death among feathered species is cats. The American Bird Conservancy has estimated that the average outdoor cat kills up to 100 birds and small mammals per year, and with the outdoor cat population of the United States at 80 million, up to 8 billion animals are being killed each year in this country alone.

"Don't let your cat outside," advised Danielson. "If you have a screened in porch that is fine, but they will kill just for the fun of it."

According to Danielson, American Robins are the most common bird the Center receives, but over 100 species have at one time or another passed through C.R.O.W.

Among those the Center has received are many residents of the UMass pond, particularly juvenile Mallards that are abandoned by their mothers after incessant pestering by the male population.

The male ducks tend to loiter around and bother whichever female crosses their path, and sometimes this can become so bothersome that the mother will actually leave her offspring.

Once a bird reaches the Center, trial and error is the only affective way of deciding how to treat the many different species, but in the process, the staff generally forms close relationships with its feathered patients.

However, if possible, all birds are released back into their appropriate habitat after recovery.

"When it's bing you, you know the bird is ready to go," Danielson laughed.

JINBAI GUO/COLLEGIAN

Birds of a feather stay together.

Uncle Sam wants a few special men

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

With Valentine's Day around the corner, the United States Army is looking for few special someones.

This month the U.S. Army Recruiting Command restores a 36-year-old Army program which would allow men to directly request Special Forces at their enlistment.

"We're looking for dedicated disciplined recruits. It's a very vigorous recruitment option," Captain David Connolly, an Army recruiting spokesman, said. "We need motivated individual candidates."

The program had been discontinued in 1988 when the Army started choosing its Special Forces troops through in-service procedures.

"This pilot program returns an exciting opportunity for dedicated, disciplined recruits considering Special Forces," the Army said in a released statement.

Only 400 soldiers will be accepted in the program.

"That's a low number, from a recruiting command point of view," Capt. Connolly said. "They tell us they need 400, and that's what we fill."

The recruits will go through 80 weeks of training. Special Forces recruits must meet the Army's standards for enlistment first.

"Recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 29, must not have been reached your thirtieth birthday prior to ship date, qualify for and volunteer for Airborne training," Capt. Connolly explained. "[A recruit] must be a U.S. citizen, have a high school diploma. They must be eligible for a security clearance and get at least an 85 on the Defense Language Institute Battery Test."

According to the Army's statement these requirements will ensure that only qualified candidates will be given the opportunity to join the Special Forces. Recruits will have to sign at least five-year enlistments.

Enlistment bonuses also apply.

"For this offer, you can get 13,000 dollars for five years, which is the minimum for this option, and 16,000 dollars for six years," Capt. Connolly said. "There's also a wide range of standard enlistment incentives

Turn to ARMY, page 3

SENIOR AIRMAN EDGAR LITTLEJOHN/U.S. AIR FORCE/EDITED

U.S. Special Forces personnel execute a static line parachute jump.

School of Education stable for now; departing dean says the worst is yet to come for UMass

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Maybe it's a good thing that the Board of Trustees announced that the Commonwealth has a responsibility for education. At least, that's what Bailey Jackson thinks.

"As far as I know, we're not cutting any programs right now," Jackson, the Dean of the University's School of Education, said in a quick interview yesterday afternoon. He reported that the hit taken by the School – the same five percent cut as taken by all schools and colleges – wouldn't terribly impact the preparation of teachers.

Great news on a campus devastated by recent budget cuts, especially in light of the tremendous impact that early retirement has had on some departments. Both the Math and Music and Dance departments expect to lose upwards of 12 members of their faculty to early retirement; Jackson expects to lose, at the most, six.

Graduate students were also hurt, although not ones currently enrolled. Instead, Jackson reported that funds for future graduate students would be rolled back. Searches for new faculty were also canceled. However, Jackson expects that it will be the retirements, despite the low numbers, that will do the most damage.

"I don't know what we're going to do," Jackson said. "Right now, everyone we are losing is in the teacher education department, mostly in elementary/early childhood."

Ensuring that the School can handle the impact will be difficult, said Jackson, but he again relied on the importance that the University's Chancellor, President and the Board of the Trustees put on education. As such, he expects that stopgap measures will be in place to ensure a new crop of teachers.

Retirements and budget cuts haven't been the only things to affect Jackson's school. Jackson announced last semester that he'd be resigning as Dean effective this summer. He said that he expects the transition, which will involve a transitional fill-in before a national search for a new Dean can conclude, to go smoothly. All of that written though, Jackson's outlook is hardly rosy. On the budget situation itself, Jackson takes a bleak look at the University's future.

"I expect it to get worse. If things are the way I hear they are – that there are contracts that need to be addressed and the state needs to the money to pay for them – I expect that to mean another budgetary hit," Jackson forewarned.

Dean Jackson's premonitions of the future won't impact his current approach. He is currently working on a plan to deal with the impact that cuts have had on the School of Education. A School-wide retreat has been planned and Jackson also noted that meetings between concerned students and faculty have already occurred. Furthermore, Jackson said that meetings between him and the school's other administrations were ongoing in the planning for the budget crisis, his transition and a plan for moving forward.

Eventually, Jackson conceded, there would probably be cuts to academic programs – all the more likely if his visions of the University's future come true. But he said there had been little conversation thus far about what might be cut.

"Not yet on the programs though," Jackson said, explaining that he couldn't speculate as to what might be lost. "Something is going to have to happen, and the faculty workforce will have to respond, but there are a number of different options available and they haven't been discussed."

Whatever the case, Jackson seemed confident that the School of Education would weather the current storm, be it with the support of the University of Massachusetts administration or the careful planning of his faculty.

SCOTT ROBERGE/COLLEGIAN

Dean of the School of Education, Bailey W. Jackson

Students demand oral contraception; V-Day activists work on reproductive rights, violence

By Bridget Henry
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts branch of Vox: Voices for Planned Parenthood discussed contraceptives and reproductive rights at their meeting on Feb. 11.

Sara Brumfield, co-coordinator of Vox, is a sophomore Biology major at UMass.

"I'm amazed at how little the average woman knows about reproductive issues in general," Brumfield said.

Through Vox, Brumfield and other members are taking action to make oral contraceptives more available to women at UMass. While they see contraception as a basic health need for women, most health insurance plans in the United States do not cover contraceptives. The insurance required by students at the University is one of these plans.

The UMass branch of Vox is affiliated with Planned Parenthood in Springfield and is comprised of students speaking out on reproductive rights.

After three years of campaigning, Planned Parenthood activists pushed the Massachusetts legislature to make women's reproductive rights a priority. In January of 2002, the Massachusetts House joined the Senate to pass a bill that ensured that more than 1.5 million Massachusetts women of reproductive age have contraceptives covered by health care.

Last year, New York University announced its decision to change its student health insurance plan after, "hundreds of students had signed a petition calling for the addition of prescription contraceptives, emergency contraception and abortion to the health insurance plan," according to Mallory Curran, a student at NYU School of Law and a coordinator of a student coalition that advocated the policy change. University of Virginia students won contraceptive coverage after sending hundreds of letters to their insurance representative and petitioning the student council. This semester, the University of Illinois announced that employees would be able to fill their oral contraceptive prescriptions at the health center for free, after a coalition of students (who already have contraceptive coverage) and employees fought to get birth control added to the employee health insurance plan.

These success stories signify progress made by Vox supporters. The Vox organization hopes UMass will follow suit and provide oral contraceptives under the University's supplemental insurance plan.

"It doesn't make sense that condoms are so readily available but oral contraceptives, which are more effective at preventing pregnancy, are not," Carissa Figueroa, a senior Marketing major and Vox member said.

Both Figueroa and Brumfield explained that the pill does more than prevent pregnancy; in many cases it regulates menstrual cycles and improves skin. The topic turned to emergency contraceptives (EC), as Brumfield noted that EC is also unavailable under the UMass health plan.

"It's your right as a female to control your fertility," Brumfield said. "It doesn't seem fair that we shouldn't be able to obtain emergency contraception."

Taken within 72 hours of unprotected sex, EC can reduce the risk of pregnancy by as much as 84 percent, Planned Parenthood claims. Although the American Medical Association recommends that rape survivors be counseled about their risk of pregnancy and offered EC, many hospitals do not routinely provide EC to sexual assault survivors.

"Of the hundreds of thousands of women who are raped or sexually assaulted in the U.S. each year, it is estimated that 32,000 become pregnant," Gloria Feldt, president of Planned Parenthood said in a released statement. A leading provider of EC, Planned Parenthood advocates that all hospitals offer EC as an option to reduce the risk of unintended pregnancy.

Every year around Valentine's Day, the V-Day College Campaign (VDCC) invites colleges and universities around the world to get active. Vox will make a special effort this year to educate men and women about emergency contraception on V-Day, as part of their continuing effort to make sure that every woman is healthy and safe.

Through sponsors like Vox, VDCC stage benefit

Turn to VOX, page 3

DIVERSITY CALENDAR

FILMS

UMASS – The film Frontiers of Dreams and Fears, a look at the day-to-day lives of teenagers living in refugee camps, will be screened on Wednesday, Feb. 13, at 7:00 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. This event, presented by the Five College Palestine Action Coalition, is free.

UMASS – The German film Alles Wird Gut (Everything Will Be Fine) will be broadcast at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 13 in room 227 of Herter Hall. The film, a lesbian romantic comedy, is being screened as part of the 9th Annual Multicultural Film Festival. Director and co-screenwriter Lanna H Tayeb will be present to discuss the film.

HAMPSHIRE – Lumumba, a political thriller about African leader Patrice Emery Lumumba, will be broadcast in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall on Friday, Feb. 15 at 7:00 p.m. A panel discussion of the film will be held at Mount Holyoke College on Wednesday, Feb. 20 – see "LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS" for more details.

NORTHAMPTON – The film Hopes and Promises will be screened in Northampton's Academy of Music on Sunday, Feb. 17 at 2:00 p.m. In addition to the showing of the film, Israeli and Palestinian musicians will perform.

UMASS – A "Video for Justice" on the subject of imprisoned Native American activist Leonard Peltier will be shown in room 803 of the Campus Center on Tuesday, Feb. 19 and Wednesday, Feb. 20, both nights at 7:00 p.m. This film is part of a movement to free Peltier, titled, "Until Freedom is Won!"

AMHERST – Lee Tamahori's film Once We Were Warriors, the story of a poor Maori family becoming alienated from their culture, will be broadcast in Amherst College's Campus Center Theater on Tuesday, Feb. 19 at 7:00 p.m. This event, part of the At Human Cost Film Series, is free.

UMASS – The Bosnian film No Man's Land will be broadcast in room 227 of Herter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 20 at 7:30 p.m. The film depicts the struggle of three soldiers trapped in a trench, which serves as a microcosm for the ethnic strife in the Balkans. This event, part of the 9th Annual Multicultural Film Festival, is free.

PERFORMANCES

AMHERST – Southern Illinois University Professor Siona Benjamin, a Jewish multi-media artist from Bombay, India, will give a performance titled "Spicy Girl – Finding Home and the Dilemma of Belonging" in room 115 of Amherst College's Fayerweather Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 13 at 7:30 p.m.

SMITH – Eve Ensler's play "The Vagina Monologues" will be performed at Smith College's John M. Greene Hall on Thursday, Feb. 14 at 8:00 p.m. This event, part of the "V-Day Initiative," costs $5. Proceeds will go to local organizations working to prevent violence against women.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Ebony Cafe: A Little Soul For the Night, a Black History Month variety show, will be performed in Mount Holyoke's Blanchard Campus Center on Saturday, Feb. 15 from 8:00 p.m. to 2:00 a.m. This event is free.

SMITH – Former Smith College Theater Professor Deborah Lubar will perform her self-written one-woman show, Naming the Days, in Theater 14 of the Mendenhall Performing Arts Center on Friday, Feb. 15, and Saturday, Feb. 16, at 8:00 p.m. In Naming the Days, Lubar plays three wildly different women thrown into close quarters by war. When the women return home as refugees, they struggle with surprising humor to piece together the broken bits of what their lives have become. Tickets are $5 for Five College Students, $12 for general admission.

SMITH – Gospel singer and songwriter Gabriel Hardeman will perform at Smith College's Helen Hills Chapel on Saturday, Feb. 16 at 7:30 p.m. This event is free.

RELIGIOUS

UMASS – The Jewish Student Union will sponsor Purim Mask Making on Wednesday, Feb. 20. Meet at the Student Union Craft Center at 7:00 p.m. if interested, and bring money.

CELEBRATIONS

UMASS – Students For a Free Tibet will sponsor a LOSAR celebration on Saturday, Feb. 16 at 6:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event, a cultural festival of Tibet, will feature appearances by CHAKSAMPA, Yak Dance, and Tibetan "Mo Mos." Admission is free.

SMITH – A drag ball will be held in Smith College's Davis Ballroom on Friday, Feb. 15 at 9:00 p.m. This event, which will feature student and guest performances, is free.

COUNSELING

UMASS – The Everywoman's Center and the Bilingual Collegiate Program will be organizing a support group for Latina students, titled, "Somos Otras Las Latinas?" The group, which will be conducted in Spanish, will begin on Monday, Feb. 18, and will be held from 5:00 to 6:30 at the Everywoman's Center. It will give students the chance to discuss their problems in a supportive environment. If interested, call Marisol Sondoval Sonntag at (413) 374-5747.

UMASS – Everywoman's Center will be hosting "Lesbian Connection: Pathways to Healthy Relationships," an eight-week educational support group designed to improve intimate relationships, beginning on Wednesday, Feb. 20 from 5:30 to 7:00. Registration is necessary – call 577-0077 if interested. This group is offered free of charge, and is open to lesbians from the five colleges and the surrounding community.

SEMINARS/WORKSHOPS

UMASS – Finding a Lover For Life, a workshop for single gay and bisexual men, will be held on Thursday, Feb. 14 from 4:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. in the Stonewall Center. The workshop will be presented by David Price, author of Finding a Lover For Life: A Gay Man's Guide to Finding a Lasting Relationship.

LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Erica Harth will discuss her book, "Last Witnesses: Reflections on the Wartime Internment of Japanese Americans," in Odyssey Bookshop on Wednesday, Feb. 13 at 7:00 p.m. The Bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

SMITH – A lecture, "New Family Narratives: The Transformation of American Families and Assisted Reproductive Technologies," will be delivered in Wright Hall Auditorium on Thursday, Feb. 14 at 4:00 p.m. The lecture will focus on the psychological, medical, ethical, legal, and dynamic issues emerging for families and clinicians regarding the use of assisted reproductive technology. This event is part of the Smith College School for Social Work's Fall/Winter Speaker Series.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Nikki Giovanni will present the keynote address for The Essence of Blackness, Mount Holyoke's Black History Month celebration, in Gamble Auditorium on Thursday, Feb. 14 at 7:30 p.m.

AMHERST – Martin Luther King, Jr. scholar David Garrow will deliver a lecture, "The Life and Legacy of Martin Luther King, Jr." in Amherst College's Johnson Chapel on Saturday, Feb. 16 at 7:00 p.m. A reception will follow the lecture in the Gerald Penny Black Cultural Center in the Octagon.

SMITH – Richard Jaffe, assistant professor of Buddhist studies at Duke University, will deliver a lecture, "Forging a New Buddhism: Late Nineteenth Century Japanese Buddhists in Asia" at 4:30 p.m. on Monday, Feb. 18, in room 201 of Smith College's Seelye Hall.

SMITH – Columbia University Law Professor Kent Greenawalt will deliver a lecture, "Establishing Religious Ideas: Evolution and Creationism" in room 201 of Smith College's Seelye Hall on Tuesday, Feb. 19 at 5:00 p.m. The lecture is being delivered in honor of retiring Smith College Philosophy Department professor Malcolm B.E. Smith. A reception will follow in Seelye 207.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A panel discussion addressing the purpose of cultural houses on the Mount Holyoke campus will be held in Gamble Auditorium on Thursday, Feb. 19 at 7:00 p.m.

UMASS – Boston-area attorney Al Lizara will deliver a lecture, "Ethnic and Racial Discrimination in the Wake of 9/11," a discussion on the impact of 9/11 on American racial and ethnic relations on Thursday, Feb. 14 at 3:00 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A panel discussion of Raoul Peck's film Lumumba will be held in the New York Room of Mary Woolley Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 20 at 4:30 p.m. See "FILMS" for information about a showing of the film at Hampshire College.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Dr. S. Allen Counter will deliver a lecture, "North Pole Legacy: Black, White, and Eskimo" at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 20, in Odyssey Bookshop. Dr. Counter will be discussing a novel about Matthew Henson, the African American who helped to discover the North Pole with Robert Peary. The bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts – operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a tri-college publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siriawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Shawn Daugherty Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Eat sushi and take a sushi lesson for free with your YCMP.

Get free lessons on how to make sushi when you purchase a YCMP

Everyone loves sushi. So when you buy one of our incredible YCMP meal plans, we'll teach you how to make sushi. There's great value and lots of fun!

For more information, visit our Food Service Office at the Worcester Dining Commons or call us at 545-2472.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS MEDICAL SCHOOL

The University of Massachusetts Medical School, in Worcester MA, is one of the fastest growing medical campuses in the country, and has built a reputation as a world-class research institution, consistently producing noteworthy advances in clinical and basic research. Along with medical education, other endeavors supported by UMMS include:

- Commonwealth Medicine, which supports various state agencies and public sector initiatives throughout Massachusetts;
- Mass Biologic Laboratories in Jamaica Plain, manufacturers of vaccines, monoclonal antibodies and plasma products;
- Eunice Kennedy Shriver Center in Waltham, which conducts research related to mental retardation and other developmental disabilities.

UMMS is an equal opportunity employer. We offer highly competitive salaries based on experience; an excellent benefit package including generous time-off policies, 13 paid holidays, paid continuing education benefits for employees and family members, health and dental coverage.

Please plan to visit us at the Campus-Wide Career Fair on February 13th at the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center. UMMS is interested in candidates with the following majors (Undergraduate and/or Graduate):

- Animal Science
- Biochemistry
- Biology
- Counseling/Psychology
- Microbiology
- Molecular & Cellular Biology
- Neuroscience & Behavior
- Psychology
- Public Health

If you are unable to attend, please check our website and/or apply online at www.umassmed.edu. Please reference job code: JF/UMA.

army

continued from page 1

that if they qualify for they can get. Quick ship bonus, a bonus if you ship before 28 May 2002 you can tack on the quick ship bonus."

The total bonuses cannot exceed 20,000 dollars.

Special Forces soldiers, known as "Green Berets," are the Army's strategic, multi-purpose force trained in unconventional warfare. This includes, according to the Army, "foreign internal defense, direct action, and special reconnaissance, combating terrorism, information operations and counter-proliferation.

"They operate in urban, jungle, desert, mountain, maritime and arctic environments and are sometimes called on to survive for months at a time behind enemy lines," Army recruiting said. "But their missions aren't just related to combat. Special Forces Soldiers are diplomats and teachers who are trained in foreign languages and are called on to teach military skills to people around the world. The Green Berets also support global humanitarian relief efforts."

On the Net: US Army Recruiting: http://www.goarmy.com

vox

continued from page 1

productions of Eve Ensler's play "The Vagina Monologues" on campuses to raise money and awareness to stop violence against women. One of the goals of the VDCC is to empower young people, who Ensler refers to as "the leaders, shapers and messengers of the future."

"The Vagina Monologues" will be performed on campus on Feb. 21-23 at 8 p.m.

The performances will further Vox's mission to educate the community about reproductive health, promote awareness about discrimination against women, and to ensure that everyone has contraception available to them.

"[Being involved in Vox] is a great way to be informed and to participate in important reproductive movements," Brumfield said.

"But it's not only for women," Figueroa said. "Men should be involved too. It's their girlfriends, their mothers, their daughters."

On the Net: Planned Parenthood: http://www.plannedparenthood.com; Contraceptive Coverage Bills: http://www.covermypills.org; V-Day: http://www.vday.org

Screen legend's life celebrated in photos

Kicking off the Spring season of exhibitions at the Student Union Art Gallery is Marlene Dietrich: A Legend in Pictures. The exhibit, which consists of 40 original black and white photographs that move chronologically through Dietrich's life and career, opened on Tuesday and will be on display until Feb. 22.

The collection is on loan from the Goethe Institute in Boston. It came to UMass after being on display at the Boston Public Library for the past month. Renowned photographers such as Ray Jones and Georges Hur shot many of the 40 prints. They capture a wide range of images, from luminous set pieces, instantly recognizable headshots, celebrity photo-ops (John Wayne, Cary Grant and Fritz Lang appear in the series as well), to family portraits.

Dietrich's career is remembered today as much for the scandals surrounding it as for work it produced. Nicknamed "the best dressed man in Hollywood," her pioneering androgyny on screen and off, as well as her dalliances with both men and women, has cast her as a feminist and gay icon.

Her varied film career is not to be overlooked, however, and A Legend in Pictures offers not only still photographs from a number of her movies, but also a continuous televised showing of her work. The photographs and films, taken together at the exhibit, are ample demonstration of why Marlene was one of the first "stars" Hollywood produced, and why her image and career are still so captivating.

"If she had nothing more than her voice she could break your heart with it," Ernest Hemingway once said of Dietrich. "But she has that beautiful body and the timeless loveliness of her face."

The exhibit is free and open to the public Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Friday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

–Justin Hardy

COURTESY IMDB

Marlene Dietrich in the 1937 Paramount Pictures release Angel.

TIBORA GIRCZYE-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Fernanda Custado, a comparative literature PHD student, watches a Marlene Dietrich movie, surrounded by photographs of the movie siren in the Student Union Gallery.

mark your calendars

THE ALANA JOB FAIR ...IS COMING SOON!

Wednesday, February 13, 2002
Campus Center Auditorium
5:30 - 8:30 PM

Be sure to dress appropriately and bring a supply of resumes!

ALL STUDENTS ARE INVITED!

Sponsored By: Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Diversity in Management Education Services (DiMES), Minority Engineering Program (MEP), United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC), Native American Student Support Services (NASSS) and the Campus Career Network (CCN)

DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL/OPINION

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM 2.13.02 ED/OP EDITOR: MATTHEW DESPRES

A new slant on budget

to waste money

Maybe the budget issue is becoming a case of overkill. Everywhere a student on this campus looks and reads there is yet another report of new programs slated to be cut, new measures to be enacted and new worries for us.

That is possibly why the riots in Southwest occurred on Super Bowl Sunday two weeks ago, as a celebration for a winning team and a stress release. However, in the cold light of reality two weeks later one realizes that this is likely the worst thing that the student body could have done. Riots happen every time there is a big game. The students have begun to anticipate it, the police obviously know that they are coming and frankly, the whole campus is outright sick of them. But what's worse is that they influence expenditures.

When Southwest goes out and lights a table on fire, or a chair, or a security desk, the campus pays. We pay in the replacement of the furniture, of the additional manpower needed to clean up the site and a whole slew of other immediate ways.

We also pay in a long term way as well. Because we as a student body engage in such activities as riots the administration begins to think that students are a danger to each other. They sink money into expenditures such as video cameras that rob other unsuspecting students of their privacy and suck up funds that we could be using to pay a professor or two. But according to the administration we need additional safety measures, due in part to the fact that students flock from their dormitory rooms to throw bottles at each other every time their favorite sports team wins or loses.

An increased need for safety protection affects us in different ways as well. Because there is a plethora of dangerous actions and crime on campus such as robbery, rape (and yes riots) we need an adequate amount of police officers to patrol the area. They are forced to brace for the worst, use riot gear as protection and help those that are injured find their way to the hospital.

As a student body we need to take a serious look at the way that we behave and how that affects the way that the money is spent on campus. Budget cuts are unfair to all students, however maybe we as a student body could give the administration something new to cut, if we could act responsibly.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

THE VIEWS AND OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THIS PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL WRITERS AND DO NOT NECESSARILY REPRESENT THE VIEWS OF The Collegian.

Academics over athletics:

Pouring money into sports pulling us back

SAM WILKINSON

Mike Coyne is a scorned man. Last week, I had the audacity to criticize some of the benefits that athletes on campus get – free clothing, free education, tutors, and, most infuriating, access to gyms at all times – and Coyne was angered. He advised that I educate myself before writing about the Athletic Department.

Which is more than I can say for the crank caller who left me a message inviting me to practice "on the turf" which didn't, entirely, make any sense to me.

Anyway, Coyne attempted to bolster his position, sending me the writings of Nelson Lacey, who is not only a professor in the School of Management, but also the Co-Chair of the UMass Athletic Council. In Lacey's written argument, he compares UMass to Nebraska, Connecticut, Penn State, Rutgers, Colorado and Maryland, pointing out that schools like Nebraska spend more on football that UMass does on all of its sports.

Oh how scandalous!

The crux of Lacey's argument is that our Athletic Department is, quite frankly, doing better than similar departments around the country and at far lower cost. As such, cutting the AD's budget even further makes little sense. Lacey points out that we spend far less than most of our competition while offering more sports than almost everybody else in the country. Implicitly, Lacey suggests that, if anything, the AD needs more money.

Coyne alleges that Lacey's arguments constitute the research that I should have done before writing about the inequity of athletes getting, in addition to everything else, to use every gym on campus while 24,000 other students go without.

I decided that relying on my opinions just wasn't enough – if the Mike Coyne's of this world think that I am uninformed, perhaps I am. So I called one of the "comparative" schools Lacey mentioned in his argument for continued funding of UMass athletics: Nebraska.

It was strange that our campus would be compared with Lincoln's. After all, while UN is similar to UMass in that both are state schools, Nebraska's football program has been slightly more successful than ours in these past few years.

Or decades.

Or entirely.

In fact, the University of Nebraska averages 74,000 fans per football game. According to Gary Fouraker, Nebraska's assistant athletic director, the average ticket costs upward of $40. That's almost three million per game. But is that all Nebraska makes?

Not at all. In fact, for losing the national championship game to Miami, Nebraska was paid $13,000,000. If that isn't enough, UN has lucrative television contracts for its games against the likes of championship contenders like Kansas State, Oklahoma, Texas and Colorado.

The grimmer facts are these: Nebraska is financially independent from the University of Nebraska. It pays for all of its own programs through the money that the football team makes, including scholarships. The football program alone generates $35 million, with another five million coming from other programs (like basketball, volleyball and baseball). Further damning, UN's athletic department pays money back to the school, to the tune of $1.5 million per year, plus $200,000 for a parking garage so the team can, as Fouraker said, "use it on game days."

UMass spends half as much on its entire Athletic Department as Nebraska earns with its football team alone. How anybody could claim that UN and UMass are thus comparable is beyond me – UN absolutely dwarfs UMass in every conceivable athletic-financial way. It is a mistake for athletic supporters like Lacey, and by extension Coyne, to compare the two while ignoring the sheer volume of monies involved.

Instead, we should have been compared with other local sports schools – Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont for instance. Attempting to put UMass in the same echelon as Nebraska or Penn State or Colorado or Maryland is a mistake, if only because those schools are big-time sports schools and, quite frankly, UMass is not.

No matter how many times we fondly remember our Final Four run, the fact of the matter remains that on the big-time athletic picture, UMass is an also ran. Not because we don't have good teams – we most certainly do – but because our good teams don't bring in money. Our basketball program has not been consistently competitive for more than the last ten years (and that is desperately stretching it for recruiting purposes). Our football program plays in Division I-AA, and while it won a championship some four years ago, the team plunged to a pathetic 3-8 record last season. Our hockey program is dead last in Hockey East. How can the Athletic Department continue on its current path?

> "...necessary classes have to be offered, that the necessary professors have to be hired, and that the needs of the Athletic Department will have to take a backseat to the needs of our cash strapped University."

Of course, in time the campus critics desperate for money are going to be asking questions bigger than this. They'll want to know how, in our current budgetary condition, can UMass continue to justify an Athletic Department that can neither bring in revenue nor stand on its own?

Continuing to hemorrhage money simply so our athletes can play seems excessive, especially with the University's crunch for classes and the very real possibility that our departments won't be able to fully educate our students. No argument from anybody in the Athletic Department – be it Nelson Lacey, Mike Coyne or the Department's director, Bob Marcum – is going to win out over an argument that our student body should come first.

That means the necessary classes have to be offered, that the necessary professors have to be hired, and that the needs of the Athletic Department will have to take a backseat to the needs of our cash strapped University.

That's not research – that's reality.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

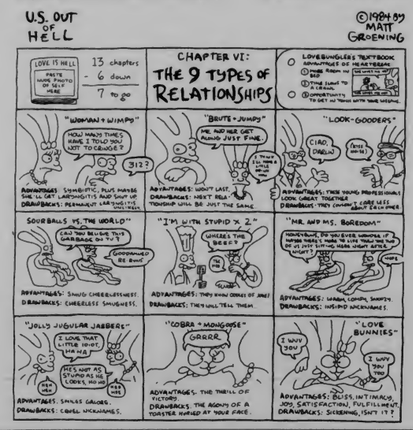
Letter to the editor:

In defense of Southwest

To the editor:

This is addressing the article "Lighthearted: You might be..." approach to living in Southwest." I've never read such a close-minded statement of subjectivity as Thomas Sutphin's article. If you couldn't tell by now, I live in Southwest. So we have "riots." But you can hardly call them riots. But what is worse? Going right downstairs in your residence area to check out the action or trucking all the way across campus. Six from Sylvan (them) to come to Southwest and check it out.

You can hardly comment on Southwest if you don't live here. It's all a matter preference. Some people enjoy being in contact with other people and having a city-like atmosphere. Others prefer shutting themselves off from society and enjoy spending their time writing articles about how un-cool Southwest residence are. But...it's all a matter of preference. Each living residence has some sort of stereotype. I would like to bring up a quote in the article which seems to be a bit of a contradiction. "If you are still stuck in high school world in which you believe that your life, the sports you play the people you harass..." Doesn't printing an article that trash talks the same exact University you attend fall right under high school level maturity? Right beneath giving wedgies and expecting something "special" after prom.



Now there has to be something that you can make more use of your valuable time with. I noticed in your piece, you brought up the subject of the budget cuts. Hmmm... I don't know, stop trying to put fellow students down and collaborate with us in this crucial affair of money sucking scandals.

Try to avoid writing another article about anti-budget cuts. There are only so many articles that get to depress me day in and day out and there are only so many headlines you can use, "Budget Cuts Back Fire," "Budget Cuts/Cuts Safety," "Budget Cuts Just Plain Blow," Yes, we get it, it's no walk in the park. But according to you, it's a walk through Southwest apparently.

You're basing your opinions alone on what you have seen during riots. We are not convicts, we are not rednecks, we are not drunken buffoons, we are not rambunctious horny teenage boys, we are all not slutty teenage coeds, we are not candidates for guest appearances on the Howard Stern Show (or Jerry Springer for that matter). We are UMass students damn it, and like it or not, you have to share the campus with us.

Point is we are all in the same boat, same college, and have the same problems. We just happen to get excited over sports events. We've waited 16 years for the Pats to win, let us reward ourselves with gathering around a few brick buildings and being loud. Does it bother you that much? I've met a lot of awesome people all over campus. Central, Northeast, Southwest, Orchard Hill and Sylvan. I've yet to generalize and form stereotypes of "residence oppression."

Desirae Mix
UMass

Media must act as corporate watchdog

BILL LARKIN

In 1977, Victor Blasi – now a Civil Liberties Professor at Columbia Law School – wrote an article for the American Bar Foundation Research Journal about the value of free speech.

In "The Checking Value in First Amendment Theory," Blasi argued that the media in a democracy must enjoy freedom from censorship, so they can check the abuses of government. While I agree that our officials can violate the citizens they serve, they are not – as Blasi insists – unique in their "capacity to employ legitimized violence."

The Enron scandal, first publicized in January, illustrates that both public and private entities can reap great harm on the public. But while Blasi's acolytes attack the White House for refusing to reveal the content of Dick Cheney's meetings with Enron officials while he conducted his energy task force, the loopholes that allowed the scandal to foment have been ignored.

I do not suggest that the White House's censorship critics have done wrong by questioning the administration's tight lips. It's very likely the White House may be hiding some corrupt offense committed by the Vice President.

As the House votes on banning soft money campaign contributions, I realize the establishment – Republican and Democrat alike – want their communications with donors obscured. And certainly, if Enron told Cheney about their woes, before they declared bankruptcy and the accounting and ethical scandal ensued, then the public should demand his impeachment, as well as the removal of any other officials who knew of the company's designs.

Also, the President is fooling no one when he attacks the General Accounting Office's pending lawsuit. The only "future confidential information" threatened by such action is the influence peddling so treasured by political insiders yet so dangerous to a wartime administration.

However, insider influence is nothing new. And – regardless of the House's vote – it will continue to plague American politics until tax dollars fund clean elections. Therefore, in watching the actions of our highest officials, the media should not abandon their corporate posts. Kenneth Lay is not as alluring a target as George W. Bush, but – in this case – more deserving of scrutiny, more symptomatic of an equally subversive problem.

Little has been written about the regulatory inadequacies that allowed a commodities (energy, timber, broadband, etc...) futures trader to fool its stockholders and swindle millions from the retirement funds of its lower level employees. The same market ideology that loosened energy regulations – catapulting Enron from a gas mining company into a financial giant – allowed the company to operate without the scrutiny of its public financiers. The wild horse running with the fewest reins doesn't win the race; rather, it escapes the arena.

> "...the media must realize that free speech should be used not only as a counterweight to government, but also as a check on corporate America."

Our system operates on the premise that the market will remove costly obstacles to improve production efficiency, even with essential resources such as electricity. But, when the executives behind production value their profit over all else, something has to give. For Enron, they used offshore partnerships and elusive accounting practices to drape their financial losses. But their deception only supported the company for so long, and when the company capsized under it's own weight, the upper-level executives cashed in their bloated stock, while other investors – including employees whose 401Ks hung on the company's value – drowned in the bankruptcy panic.

Although the President's own mother lost her entire investment in the collapse, Bush has largely ignored Enron. In his State of the Union address, he weakly criticized the company, but failed to announce any new action against them. The Securities and Exchange Division has not been given any new oversight capabilities to investigate offshore finances – surely the President wouldn't want to bully any of America's chums in the WTO – nor have the punishments for financial fraud been increased. And the committee assigned to investigate Enron's activities will prove fruitless, as the company's executives continue to exercise a Fifth Amendment defense.

The press has not – rightly so – vaulted this issue ahead of the War on Terrorism and the flagging economy. Yet, aside from a few vague articles narrating the events prior to January's bankruptcy announcement, they quickly removed this important event from public debate. They have not illustrated that such fraud undermines the American ideal that sound investment and hard work can ensure the financial comfort of every citizen. All the rules of economic fair play have been abandoned. For years, an influence peddler has been allowed to raise energy and other commodity prices as a middleman, while failing to responsibly report its losses each quarter. Enron has sacked consumers, investors, other businesses (at the supply and production ends), and employees, and a few of its brass may be punished. But will the judicial fate of a few criminals prohibit such events from occurring again?

The leash of the media watchdog must be loosened to let it haunt the corporate backyard as well as the political: fences exist around Wall Street as well as Washington. If we are to let the market dictate the public's fate, then they should be armed with as much information about the companies they invest in as the candidates they elect to office. To believe that CEO's are fangless, while politicians are full of venom, is to invite corruption to close the doors of the classes forever. Therefore, the media must realize that free speech should be used not only as a counterweight to government, but also as a check on corporate America.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian columnist.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS&LIVING

COLLEGIANARTS@YAHOO.COM 2.13.02 ARTS EDITOR: MIKE DELVO

Oscars announce 2002 nominees

By Jake D. Lewis
COLLEGIAN STAFF

74TH ANNUAL ACADEMY AWARD NOMINATIONS

This year's Oscar nominations are out, and now the countdown to giving away the gold statues has begun! The most noticeable thing about this year's hopefuls is that the great strides that the Academy has made to become a more diverse (read: less white) organization are quite obvious.

This year's show, however, will be remembered for its surprises: Did anyone ever think that rapper-turned-actor Will Smith would ever be a nominee, or that a tiny, independent film like In the Bedroom could practically sweep all the major categories? How about the idea that a musical could win Best Picture? Not even 1996's acclaimed Evita had as much buzz behind it as Moulin Rouge. And even though Bridget Jones's Diary was a very funny movie, does it really warrant an Oscar nod towards its star, Rene Zellweger? I mean, really...c'mon.

This year also sees the addition of a new category, Best Animated Feature, but there's a catch: This award will only be given in years where there are five or more animated films, even though it only consists of three nominees. Fortunately, this year there have been a handful to choose from, even though a Scottish, green ogre will probably reign supreme.

There are, of course, your usual Oscar standbys, like Russell Crowe and Judi Dench in the acting categories, with Robert Altman and Ridley Scott settling back in to their usual directing cushion. At the same time, there are notable absences, such as The Coen Brothers' The Man Who Wasn't There, overlooked for screenplay or directing merits. Surprisingly, Academy favorite Steven Spielberg is not guaranteed a seat at this year's ceremony since his A.I. is only up for Best Visual Effects and Best Original Score (throw-away categories).

Finally, there were the ones that we hoped would be nominated but, alas, were not. David Lynch is up for Best Director, but his film Mulholland Drive or female lead Naomi Watts didn't get in the game. Gene Hackman couldn't turn enough heads in The Royal Tenenbaums to get in on the race, either.

Disappointingly, Memento's March release date last year is too far behind us that it's only up for one, minor award, while it's true place resides among the Best Picture group.

Below is the list of the major nominations, as well as a handy scorecard for Oscar night. The 74th Annual Academy Awards will air Sunday, March 24th on ABC, hosted by Whoopi Goldberg.

BEST PICTURE
A Beautiful Mind
Gosford Park
In the Bedroom
The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring
Moulin Rouge

ACTOR IN A LEADING ROLE
Russell Crowe, A Beautiful Mind
Sean Penn, I Am Sam
Will Smith, Ali
Denzel Washington, Training Day
Tom Wilkinson, In the Bedroom

ACTRESS IN A LEADING ROLE
Halle Berry, Monster's Ball
Judi Dench, Iris
Nicole Kidman, Moulin Rouge
Sissy Spacek, In the Bedroom
Rene Zellweger, Bridget Jones' Diary

ACTOR IN A SUPPORTING ROLE
Jim Broadbent, Iris
Ethan Hawke, Training Day
Ben Kingsley, Sexy Beast
Ian McKellen, The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring
Jon Voight, Ali

ACTRESS IN A SUPPORTING ROLE
Jennifer Connelly, A Beautiful Mind
Helen Mirren, Gosford Park
Maggie Smith, Gosford Park
Marisa Tomei, In the Bedroom
Kate Winslet, Iris

BEST DIRECTION
Ron Howard, A Beautiful Mind
Ridley Scott, Black Hawk Down
Robert Altman, Gosford Park
Peter Jackson, The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring
David Lynch, Mulholland Drive

BEST FOREIGN LANGUAGE FILM
Amelie
Elling
Lagaan
No Man's Land
Son of the Bride

BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY
Amelie
Gosford Park
Memento
Monster's Ball
The Royal Tenenbaums

Turn to OSCARS, page 07

DENZEL WASHINGTON WAS NOMINATED FOR A BEST ACTOR ACADEMY AWARD.

COURTESY INTERNET MOVIE DATABASE

Hey Baby, Hey Baby, Hey

GIRLS SAY... BOYS SAY... OUR GUY SAYS "MAD PROPS" TO NO DOUBT'S LATEST ALBUM.

COURTESY FRANK W. OCKENFELS

By Nikolas Markantonatos
COLLEGIAN STAFF

NO DOUBT
Rock Steady
Interscope

No Doubt's 1995 album Tragic Kingdom made them one of the biggest bands of the 90s and helped popularize ska-punk. But last year's lackluster Return of Saturn put the group's future into doubt. Gwen Stefani, the fundamental element of No Doubt, seemed so-so... yesterday's news. All of a sudden her teen fan base seemed to ditch her after the grown-up material the group decided to tackle.

Somewhere along the line Stefani suddenly became cool again. Last year she collaborated with Eve ("Let Me Blow Ya Mind") and Moby ("South Side") – two of the snazziest songs of last year. Eve's hip-hop and Moby's electronica placed Stefani's voice in a different environment from the group's ska-pop. She once again affirmed her standard of eschewing the norm by crafting a flashy feminist kick in the mouth. Unlike last year's dud Return of Saturn, it was those duets that vaulted her back into the public consciousness.

The newly married Stefani (to Bush front man Gavin Rossdale) seemed to appeal to the masses once again. She's edgy but still down to earth; hip but reserved. She exudes an around-the-way-girl accessibility, free of the ego-tripping stupidity typical among many celebrities. Even if it's an act, it is a completely convincing one, and there's the impression that Stefani is really as sweet natured and unaffected as she seems. And now she seems more in your face with a grander punch than she ever has before.

On Rock Steady, No Doubt ditches the ska and employs harsher and heavier pop. Stefani is at her all-time boy-crazy, party-hopping inner teen high. And how great it is to see her at her bubbly and wacky old self once again.

The producers of Rock Steady include reggae vets Sly and Robbie, dance hall hit makers Steely and Clevie, techno geezer William Orbit, U.K. hip-hop avatar Nellee Hooper, and New Wave oracle Ric Ocasek. And of course bassist-keyboardist Tony Kanal, guitarist Tom Dumont and drummer Adrian Young are right by her side.

Stefani shines on "Hella Good," a lusty number dripping in carnal pleasure. The percolating beat

Turn to NO DOUBT, page 6

Rollerball is hell on wheels

By Johnny Donaldson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ROLLERBALL
Directed by John McTiernan
Starring Chris Klein, Jean Reno, LL Cool J, and Rebecca Romijn-Stamos
Playing at Cinemark 12 in Hadley

There's a particular breed of bad movie that revels in its own cruddiness, while at the same time treating it with a straight-faced earnestness – it's as if the producers set out to make a deliriously wrong crap classic, but didn't realize that this movie was that deliriously wrong crap classic. Rollerball, this week's plastic slam-bang action cartoon, is shoddy and stupid in a way few movies are, but never realizes how inept it really is. The movie is pure and utter trash, but there's something endearing about the way it treats its awfulness with such naive seriousness.

Rollerball, remade from a minor 1975 James Caan movie (never seen by me), is another entrant in a growing list of movies that satirize (or, at least, pretend to satirize) fascistic, death-sport television "entertainment." Of course, the practice of satirizing sleazoid reality/game/sports shows is getting to be tougher. As such ante-upping acts of sadist-outrageous garbage like "Fear Factor," "The Chamber" and MTV's "Kidnapped" (as well as "The Jerry Springer Show" and pro wrestling) make the jokes seem quaint.

Daniel Minahan's black comedy Series 7, about a reality show in which contestants kill each other, lampooned the genre with straight-razor accuracy, mimicking the excesses right down to the very style of "reality TV:" the shaky, handheld camerawork; the ominous, hyperbolic voiceover narration; the squirmy, face-to-the-camera confessionals that, to me, always seemed like overwrought auditions for a soap opera about self-absorbed bad actors. Rollerball may get some of its tweaking right – especially with the inclusion of a blowhard announcer – but it also hangs itself with its own incompetence.

LIKE YOU DIDN'T KNOW Rollerball WAS GOING TO BE AWFUL.

COURTESY MGM

The movie is set in an unspecified near future, when a new sport called rollerball is burgeoning in popularity. It opens with a dumb stunt, as two young men, including earnest NHL candidate Jonathan Cross (Chris Klein, who has wasted nearly all the potential he showed in Election), street luge through the roadways of San Francisco – which doesn't appear all that dangerous considering the streets are nearly devoid of all traffic.

Cut to four months later in central Asia, where Cross is now the best and most popular rollerballer in the sport. Petrovich (Jean Reno, wearing a mustache that threatens to devour his mouth), the sport's founder and leading throned kingpin, has turned Kazakhstan into a new Las Vegas, sucking money from poor, oppressed peasants and treating his star like a son (which is old action movie shorthand for slimy, scheming villain or dead meat).

Rollerball, as a sport, is played in dingy circular arenas, and looks like a Frankenstein patchwork of roller derby, hockey, motocross and the X-Games. It's a Sisyphean task to follow an actual game, as the sport is overcomplicated, under explained, and incoherently edit-

Turn to ROLLERBALL, page 7

VH1

By David Conwell
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

VH1 Continues to Rock

"Who the (explicative) watches VH1?!? It's for boring old people. No edge, nothing fun." – Me (1994). That was a common statement made once upon a time. VH1 had been "old," and soft – mostly playing Bryan Adams or post Genesis, Phil Collins videos. VH1 was always secondary to what MTV was about, always secondary to what MTV was doing. But honestly, the times have changed greatly over the last few years in the realm of music television.

VH1 continues to amaze me, always finding ways to stay honest. I first started to take notice in 1999 and 2000 with "the Rock Show." It aired at midnight four or five days a week, and played killer videos from the eighties and nineties. That dude Kane, from New York's KRock radio station hosted it. Motley Crue, early Soundgarden, and even Cannibal Corpse were part of the wide range of bands played, and all, I might add, were NOT played on MTV. Some have actually never been aired there.

Pantera is a truly mainstream metal band has rarely

Turn to VH1, page 7

Kill. Crush. Destroy. + Dead Pilots... What's the Deal?

HEY LOOK! ISN'T THAT JASON SHELTER, DARREN SHEARER AND DAVE KURTZ OF THE NEW DEAL? I THOUGHT SO.

significant others

THE NEW DEAL
The New Deal
live Electro

With the big-beat brilliance of The Chemical Brothers' new Come With Us winking at me from one side of my desk, it's hard to give any other techno a spin without a sigh. The New Deal aren't just yer run of the mill electronic experimentalists, however, and their 2001 debut, a culmination of heavy touring and a couple of EPs, paints them as a reliable fixture in the small world of live, creative electronic music (the album was recorded live in Soho, Montreal, Ithaca and Atlanta). They've got enough fire to melt away the drone of most club DJs spinnin' techno, and if any sounds were worthy of being dragged from the mixing boards to the concert hall, it's these. Suitable for dancers and head-nodders alike.

Like the Brothers, The New Deal knows how to find a hook and give it some love. They also know when to move on, often throwing three or four of the worthiest hooks out in the space of a single track. Their straightforward approach is even more surprising considering the three members all come from jazz and jamband backgrounds. There's no aimless wandering to be found on the album, though, this is strictly to enjoy, not explore. No world music sounds, no crazy vocalists/rappers, really not much innovation, just straight-up, head-ringing beats. There's no time for digging your toes into the sand, Groove Armada-style, on this ride.

The New Deal isn't kidding around, and their claws-out approach is admirable and more than a little rare for an electronic act. Even the longer tracks, like the nine-minute "Technobeam" and "Then and Now," don't get away from them; the first builds to an amazing Daft Punk-like display of sound-twisting acrobatics and the second is a spacey but assured send-off. Tight, aggressive, grabbing: If only more electronic acts had such an accurate compass.

The New Deal performs at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Saturday, February 23. (Michael Delano)

WATCHMAKER
Kill.Crush.Destroy
Wonderdrug

If anyone ever doubted the existence of the Prince of Darkness, the new release from Watchmaker boldly titled Kill.Crush.Destroy should instill fear into the hearts of the non-believers. This album rendered bombing obsolete as a military tactic in Afghanistan. Let's just put it this way: Watchmaker's music was reported to have been successful nine out of ten times at driving terrorists out of caves through 24 hour auditory torture. Not entirely comprehending the power of the new Watchmaker release, I turned on my stereo and listened to the first five songs on the album; it was by the sixth song, cleverly titled "Flowers of Evil," that I found myself bleeding out of every cavity in my face and struggling to swallow down a septic mass that had worked its way up from my bowels and lodged itself in my throat.

My roommate, while forced to listen to Watchmaker's contribution to the music world, burst into flames. The carnage didn't stop there, however, since while walking innocently down the hall, the noise of Watchmaker penetrated the being of one of my floor mates who then immediately gave birth to a pulsating devil fetus that took it upon himself to bludgeon my still burning and charred roomate's eyes with a spoon.

In all seriousness, though, this is one of the worst albums I have ever heard. At what I believe to have been an attempt at wit, Watchmaker decided to rename the instruments they play on the album, because apparently ordinary instruments just aren't hard enough. According to the album's credits page, the drummer utilizes a "drum turret" to project his powerfully lame, typical beats. This band has obviously been inspired by Boston's great hardcore superpowers Blood For Blood, Scissorfight and Anal Cunt. Wait, did I say inspired by? I meant they completely rip off the sounds of these bands. Unless you are aspiring to conjure up the beasts of hell, stay away from this band. If you seek entertainment along the lines of Watchmaker, I would gladly climb into the "fart turret," put a mic to my ass, and fire away. (Justen Harn)

ALL THE DEAD PILOTS
Easily Lost in the Present
Hyphenated-American

All the Dead Pilots have released their debut album, Easily Lost in the Present, and it should be taking off soon. The band has been together less than a year but the cohesion of the sound is flawless. These Baltimore veteran musicians have been with such groups as Onespot Fringehead, Moviegoer, Holy Rollers and Skypup. The band is made up of Dave Ort on vocals, Paul Ort on guitar, Greg Anderson on bass and Chris Smith on drums.

With all that experience behind them, the four members got together and formed a sound that no established band has. The mix of bass and guitar is seminal and the drums are powerfully and accurately laid down. On top of all that, you have a vocalist that can actually sing. Some of the standout songs like "Whine Down" or "Constantly Keep" are powerful and hard while not being overly heavy. Other songs, such as "Cloudy," have a polished sound that could easily land in the next big teen movie. The whole stream of music also has a pattern to it, and flows well from one song into another. This is definitely a CD that you can put into your Discman and just play right through.

Easily Lost in the Present was recorded at Noise Boy Studios under the direction of Shawn Overbay. The album only took a few days to record initially, but a few months to remix and master. The product of that effort is a rhythmic and melodic musical masterpiece. This album is definitely one that should be added to the record collection of anyone who likes an alternative sound mixed with more musical content than many established bands have. (Eitan Novotny)

■ no doubt

continued from page 5

NO DOUBT IN PAST, AND APPARENTLY FROM THIS PICTURE, UNHAPPIER DAYS.

makes her sound like a detective on a mission, but whatever the task the song comes off as a hard-pumping romp. "Hey Baby" (featuring Bounty Killer), the lead single, is an irresistible and striking number.

"Running," a tender love paean unleashes plenty of frills for its message, but remains gentle inside. "Waiting Room," about anticipation, is a great collaboration with Prince. Prince may have lost his luster as a songwriter and producer, but he's still got something as a singer.

A deep bass and reggae-roots influence the title track and "Start the Fire" as things heat up. As do the layers of metallic-punk on "Platinum Blonde Life." "Don't Let Me Down," with some jerky rhythms and guitar hooks, makes it an exquisitely produced track. But the kick sadly doesn't have nearly as much power in the other tracks.

Rock Steady treads a fine line on knob twirls and tweaks that sometimes work and other times fall into cheesy Omgo-Boingo land. The assortment of vocal enhancements are a welcome addition to Stefani's sometimes bare and dull vocals. But on "Making Out" the scratches become grating instead of gratifying and the bleeps in "In My Head" are just plain lame.

In the end the album fails to connect with the listener — much like the band itself, there's something oddly flimsy about it. But, hey, they're a music group and they just want to have fun. Stefani is the congenial pop star while the rest of the band rest on their rock-star credo. They wouldn't want it any other way, and neither would we.

the FRESH CUTS
Your alternative music source.

3.99 GIVE 'EM THE BOOT III — Various Artists
10.99 MTV2 HANDPICKED — Various Artists
10.99 CITIZEN COPE — Citizen Cope
10.99 LOSTPROPHETS — The Fake Sound Of Progress
13.99 ROBERT BRADLEY'S BLACKWATER SURPRISE — New Ground
13.99 JOSH CLAYTON-FELT — Spirit Touches Ground
13.99 JACK JOHNSON — Brushfire Fairytales
13.99 KASEY CHAMBERS — The Captain

MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.
102522 11165 Sale ends February 23, 2002. www.mediaplay.com

Head for the Mountains!
Enter To Win A FREE day of skiing at Berkshire East
For you and a friend on February 23, 2002
Including:
•FREE Lift Tickets
•FREE Transportation
•FREE Ski Lessons
•FREE Equipment Rental
Name:
Address:
Phone:
E-Mail:
Coca-Cola Berkshire East Ski Area
Bring or mail entries to the Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center Basement: MDC 113 Campus Center, University of Mass., Amherst MA, 01003

■ rollerball

continued from page 5

COURTESY MGM

COURTESY MGM

LADIES LOVE L.L. — EXCEPT WHEN HE APPEARS IN CINEMATIC TRASH LIKE THIS.

REBECCA ROMIJN-STAMOS SHOULD GO BACK TO MODELING, AND CHRIS KLEIN SHOULD JUST GO FAR FAR AWAY.

ed – there are lots of flashy visuals of bodies slamming into each other and metal balls being thrown at an iron gong in a shower of sparks. It makes little difference when, in the big climax, Petrovich suspends all rules, fouls and penalties. If rollerball were real, it would be a notch above a basketball player playing against himself in entertainment value.

Rollerball teams are coed, but Rollerball lacks the sexual-politic raucousness of Paul Verhoeven's sci-fi satire Starship Troopers, substituting a PG-13 tryst between Cross and scarred team bad girl Aurora (Rebecca Romijn-Stamos) – nothing we haven't seen before. Aurora informs him, via a computer in the steam room (?), that a serious injury suffered by a teammate was planned. Petrovich has discovered that spilling a little blood on the track increases ratings, and he'll do anything to keep the Global Instant Rating (imagine an automatic Nielsen counter) above a 20. Cross and his teammates, which include his best friend Marcus Ridley (LL Cool J, in another movie below his talents), try to quit but find that Petrovich is a wily villain – or he studied various other action movies for pointers.

Rollerball is a movie for a generation informed by MTV, Jerry Bruckheimer and the WWF. The movie dispenses with niceties like plot and character, in favor of "kinetic" body-slamming spectacle, backed by an earsplitting and obnoxious hard rock soundtrack (including Rob Zombie and Slipknot) that at least drowns out the insipid dialogue. Unfortunately, the movie lacks the kind of propulsive force that made something like The Fast and the Furious into a ticklish slab of tasty mozzarella.

Rollerball is, instead, an inert mess, a dead zone of action movie cliches. It's an exercise bike of a movie, spinning its wheels but never going anywhere.

I'm sure Klein is a nice guy, but he's all the screen presence of a potato chip. As the dimwitted jock of Election he was terrific, but he's been hopelessly bland in nearly everything else, and he doesn't feel like an action hero. He's the nice guy you want to root for in a romantic comedy, not the buff warrior. LL Cool J's a splendid actor (as everything from a charismatically menacing crime lord in In Too Deep to a responsible family man in Kingdom Come), but the look in his eyes says this is a paycheck performance. Reno and Romijn-Stamos seem to be competing for the Boris-and-Natasha award for most grating Russian accent. One can't really blame the actors, when no one is given a character to play. Cross, Ridley, Aurora – they're all pose able life-size action figures, automatons programmed to spout gibberish. This is some of the worst writing ever, not because it's memorably bad, but because it's forgettable and perfunctory. Only a lazy screenwriter would use dialogue like "We're outta here!" and mean it.

The most appalling thing about Rollerball is that it is hypocritical. It has the gall to denounce entertainments that use violence for ratings, when it's just a dumb, fake example of what it rails against. The movie makes clear what it really is – an idiotic slice of violence porn. The action is not offensive in and of itself, but by back bending more than an Enron executive, it becomes insulting. Here it is, not even Valentine's Day, and we have the movie that may just be the worst movie of 2002.

■ VH1

continued from page 5

COURTESY MTV

"I'LL SEARCHING FOR A CLUE.

COURTESY DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC AND DANCE

SORRY FOLKS WE JUST WANTED TO LET YOU KNOW WHAT YOU'VE BEEN MISSING: HITTING ALL THOSE FRAT PARTIES.

been on MTV, but you could catch Pantera or Megadeth on "The Rock Show" once or twice a week. Both of these bands have been influential within their genres but MTV is too worried about their wallets to give them airtime. Hair bands were a not left out during this show either. (You just have to love it, puts a spring in my step every time I see them).

Staying creative, and competitive, VH1 gained recognition through two shows, "Pop-Up Video" and "Behind the Music." Seriously, what great ideas for shows. Nothing else had been able to get the viewer so close to video creation, and the actual stories of the bands themselves. "Behind the Music" was good enough to absorb your precious time with the story of Duran Duran. I remember my friend skipping out on what would become the party of the century, because he had plans to watch the Megadeth behind the music. (He's devoted). It's good stuff for people who love music.

VH1's current lineup is better than it's ever been. The creators have not forgotten they're a music station, so it's the music that becomes the focus within the show. Where else can you see clips from the Beatles on Ed Sullivan, or Sinead on "SNL?" I also was lucky enough to catch the clip from the MTV Music Awards when Nirvana was supposed to play "All Apologies" (or something) but played "Rape Me" instead. At the end, Krist Novoselic threw his bass in the air, only to have it come back down and hit him in the nose – true comedy. "TV Moments" is the self-explanatory name of the show, and one can catch some classic clips there.

VH1 is also home to my new favorite show, "Forever Wild" hosted by none other than Sebastian Bach, former lead singer of Skid Row. (I used to want to be this guy in third grade). It's been quite some time since I have watched a TV show regularly, (besides "Sports Center") but if you have a show where Sebastian and Slash give you a tour of the L.A. rock scene and tell stories of their heydays, then I'm watching it. Laugh if you will, but it beats the hell out of watching Carson. (Slash would wreck him.)

Other outside shows include the return of "Ren and Stimpy" and the "Movies that Rock" setup where you can see cult classics like the Rocky Horror Picture Show. I also saw I Sure Thing starring John Cusack, pre-SayAnything. I missed The Def Lepard Story, but it looked like a riot.

VH1 has gained its respect, because even if you care not about Sebastian, or the vast stories of groups like Styx or rappers like Dr. Dre, there is within these shows an appreciation for the past. Without these pasts, nothing would be what it is today. For those of us who can't stand the current mainstream, we can wade in the mainstream of the recent past, and bask in our own nostalgia. "Who watches MTV?!? It's for annoying teenyboppers with no taste. There's no edge, nothing fun." – Me (2002)

■ oscars

continued from page 5

BEST ADAPTED SCREENPLAY
A Beautiful Mind
Ghost World
In the Bedroom
The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring
Shrek

BEST ANIMATED FEATURE
Jimmy Neutron: Boy Genius
Monsters, Inc.
Shrek

BEST ORIGINAL SCORE
A.I. Artificial Intelligence
A Beautiful Mind
Harry Potter & The Sorcerer's Stone
The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring
Monster's, Inc.

BEST ORIGINAL SONG
"May It Be" The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring
"If I Didn't Have You" Monsters, Inc.
"There You'll Be" Pearl Harbor
"Until" Kate & Leopold
"Vanilla Sky" Vanilla Sky

JENNIFER CONNELLY IS STUNNING, TALENTED AND SOPHISTICATED. FINE ARTS EDITOR, JULIE BURRELL MADE ME SAY IT.

SPRING BREAK
Best Airlines
Best Prices & Best Parties
Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan
Jamaica, Bahamas
Florida, South Padre Island
GO FREE!...CALL NOW!
1-800-SURFS-UP
www.studentexpress.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for: Friday 2/8 – Thursday 2/14/2002
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
ROLLERBALL (PG13) 12:50 4:50 7:45 9:50*
COLLATERAL DAMAGE (R) 12:05 4:30 7:40 10:20*
BIG FAT LIAR (PG) 12:15 3:55 7:10 9:50*
BIRTHDAY GIRL (R) 4:50 10:15*
I AM SAM (PG13) 12:30 4:15 7:15 10:25
THE COUNT OF MONTE CHRISTO (PG13) 12:45 4:10 7:00 10:00
THE MOTHMAN PROPHECIES (PG13) 12:30 4:00 7:20 10:05
A WALK TO REMEMBER (PG) 12:25 7:25
BLACK HAWK DOWN (R) 12:05 3:50 7:10 10:25
SNOW DOGS (PG) 12:35 4:05 7:05 9:45
THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS (R) 12:20 4:10 7:50 10:30
A BEAUTIFUL MIND (PG13) 12:10 4:20 7:25 10:35
LORD OF THE RINGS (PG13) 12:00 3:45 7:30
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

carloansOK.com
GET YOUR CAR IN 24 HOURS
FASTAPP CODE: 2032
Log on to www.carloansok.com and fill out the fast and secure online application. Walk into the dealership already approved and ready to drive the car of your choice! Log on now! www.carloansok.com
OK!
FAST! EASY! ON-LINE AUTO APPROVAL!

OXFORD SUMMER SEMINAR
JUNE 30 – AUGUST 9, 2002
COURSES INCLUDE:
BRITISH LITERATURE AND HISTORY
INTERNATIONAL POLITICS AND LAW
ARCHITECTURE
ETC.
The UMass Oxford Summer Seminar offers over fifteen courses. It is located at Trinity College, Oxford, one of the most attractive colleges in the University. Small classes are taught by British faculty. The program fee is $4350. (financial aid is available) For more information, stop by 378 Bartlett Hall to pick up a brochure or email us at oxford@english.UMass.edu
545-1914
WWW.UMASS.EDU/OXFORD

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!
ICHIBAN
OPEN 7 DAYS
Delivery Available
Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)
What is the Difference?
#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice.
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"
#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl
10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)
Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up
Reserve for Karaoke

Live Music
McMurphy's welcomes
THE GUITAR DUDES
every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

Moguls bring excitement to fans

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of the newest and most exciting Olympic sports wrapped up yesterday at Deer Park, just outside Salt Lake City. The men's freestyle moguls competition has been awaited for just the past three Olympic Games and the Americans, after picking up the gold back in 1998 in Nagano, were looking for a repeat performance this time around. Leading the charge was reining gold medallist Johnny Moseley, the man who almost single-handedly saved the sport with some of his innovative tricks, who has breathed new life into the sport with his new move aptly called the Dinner Roll.

Moseley pulled out the Dinner Roll, a twisting move in which his bodies axis is parallel to the snow, in the preliminary round on Tuesday morning, elevating him to second place and into the final round later that day. The only member of the four-man American contingent to make the final 16 was 26-year old Evan Dybvig. Dybvig, who qualified for the Games at the final World Cup event, tore his ACL and MCL in his right knee, a knee that was already scheduled for surgery following the Olympics. However, despite the setback in what he said would be his final competitive race, the Vermont native stormed upbeat and stuck around to cheer on his teammates.

The final round brought a number of surprises on both the front and back ends of the spectrum. Early favorites Stephane Rochon of Canada and Jeremy Bloom of the U.S., a wide reciever at the University of Colorado who took this past season off to concentrate on qualifying, failed to impress the judges and finished fifteenth and ninth respectively.

In the end it came down to four skiers, with Moseley leading the charge. He set the bar for all those who followed him by hitting a triple twist before nailing the Dinner Roll for the second time, much to the delight of the record crowd that was in attendance at Park City. His score of 26.78 placed him in front, but only for a short while, as Richard Gay of France nailed both his jumps, a quad twist and triple twist spread at the bottom to move in front.

Gay's stay at the top was even shorter as Nagano silver medallist Janne Lahtela of Finland came up with a flawless run to go to the top with just one skier left. Lahtela's final jump, a huge quad twister and his precise turns down the mountain won over the judges who gave him a score of 27.97, the best score of the day in any round.

That final skier was American newcomer Travis Mayer who tallied a 27.59 to grab the silver and knock teammate Moseley, the crowd favorite, off the podium. Mayer used Moseley's old move, a 360 mute grab and a triple twister in the finals, but it wasn't enough to overcome Lahtela and in the end he had to settle for the silver.

This was the second American silver in the moguls at these Olympic games, as Shannon Bahrke grabbed second place at the women's competition just a few days earlier.

SALT LAKE 2002

Medal Count

SALT LAKE 2002

				Total
USA	3	4	2	9
Austria	1	1	5	7
Germany	2	3	1	6
Norway	3	3	0	6
Russia	1	2	2	5
Finland	2	1	0	3
ITA	2	1	0	3
France	1	1	1	3
Canada	0	1	1	2
Japan	0	1	1	2
Switzerland	1	0	1	2
Holland	1	1	0	2
Estonia	1	0	1	2
China	0	0	1	1
Sweden	0	0	1	1
Spain	1	0	0	1
Czech Republic	0	0	1	1
Poland	0	0	1	1

Crimson to face off in Salt Lake

By David R. De Remer
HARVARD CRIMSON (HARVARD U.)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. – Both the United States and Canadian Olympic women's hockey teams are stocked with Harvard players: forwards Jennifer Botterill and Tammy Shewchuk on Team Canada, and forward Julie Chu and defensemen A.J. Mleczko and Angela Ruggiero on Team USA. Just three years ago, Ruggiero, Mleczko, Shewchuk and Botterill all teamed up to lead Harvard to a national title in 1999. Now on opposite sides of the ice at the Olympics, they still maintain pride in each other's accomplishments – the latest being Ruggiero's selection as a U.S. flagbearer in Friday's opening ceremonies.

"I think it is a great thing for Harvard that Rugger was chosen to carry something so important," wrote Shewchuk in an e-mail message. "Even though we are competing against each other, I am still very proud of her."

All five Harvard women's hockey players in the Olympics have made a major impact in international competition in the past year, and there's no reason to doubt they'll do the same in this Olympics. And contrary to what the national prognosticators are saying, the outcome of the Gold Medal game on Feb. 21 is hardly predictable.

Botterill, who scored the goal that clinched the Crimson's national championship in 1999, and Shewchuk – Harvard's all-time leading career scorer – have dismissed the notion propagated by the national media that the Americans' perfect 8-0 record against Canada in pre-Olympic exhibitions makes them a clear gold medal favorite.

"The games we have played up to this point have been prep games," Shewchuk said. "And I am confident, as are my teammates, that we have all the tools and the ability to pull it off in the end. We know that it will be a battle, but it is one we are ready for."

"Honestly our team feels fantastic," Botterill added. "We really respect the United States for playing great hockey in the fall, but our season-long focus with our training has been peaking for the Olympics. And I think we've learned something from every game this year. Our team really believes in itself."

Before the United State's eight-game winning streak began in October, the majority of prognosticators favored the Canadians. After all, this is the same Canadian team that has won all but two major international championships throughout its history, the two exceptions being the 1997 Three Nations Cup and the 1998 Olympics. Canada has won all seven International Ice Hockey Federation World Championships.

And in the most recent of those championships in April of 2001, goals from two familiar Harvard faces – Shewchuk and Botterill – lifted a Canadian team that had been practicing together for just two weeks to a 3-2 victory over a U.S. team that had been training together in Lake Placid for seven months. Botterill was named World Championship MVP after leading the tournament with eight goals scored.

So if the U.S. and Canada meet in the gold medal game then those eight exhibition results mean nothing. The U.S. is well aware of this fact.

"It was a great tour for us, and we're very happy with it, but this is a whole new ballgame," said defenseman Karen Bye, a member of the U.S. National Team since 1992.

The Olympic tournament format has a new look this year. The field has been expanded from six teams to eight. The preliminary round splits the competitors into two four-team round-robin pools, with the top two teams in each pool advancing to the semifinals.

The U.S. plays Germany (Tuesday, 1 p.m.), China (Feb. 14, 6 p.m.) and Finland (Feb. 16, 1 p.m.) while Canada takes on Kazakhstan (Monday, 1 p.m.), Russia (Feb. 13, 1 p.m.) and Sweden (Feb. 16) in the preliminary round.

In the most recent world championship, Canada's 3-2 win over the U.S. in the gold medal game was the only close contest either team had to play. All other U.S and Canada wins were by four goals or more.

In the 2000 championships, neither team was as dominant. Finland lost to both by just a goal.

Unlike other nations, the U.S. and Canadian teams have been training together since the summer. In fact, the vast majority of U.S. players have been together for two years.

National teams such as Sweden and Finland have, by contrast, allowed their players to continue to play in Division I colleges this year, which could make the U.S. and Canada even more dominant.

But both of the gold-medal game favorites are making the typical promises not to overlook any opponent.

"You never know," Botterill said. "You certainly need to be ready for every game."

"Everybody's asking us about the gold medal game when we haven't even played our preliminary games yet," said U.S. women's team captain Cammi Granato. "Our goal is obviously to get there, but we have to take it one step at a time."

Olympics light up Utah stadium

By Micah Davis
THE DAILY UNIVERSE (BRIGHAM YOUNG U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVO, Utah – A crowd of more than 52,000 people gathered at Rice-Eccles Stadium Friday to witness the most anticipated event of the 2002 Winter Olympic Games.

Braving a wind chill of 10 degrees, spectators along with nearly 72 million television viewers cheered throughout the ceremony.

"Is this a great show or what?" said Mitt Romney. President and CEO of the Salt Lake Organizing Committee, emphasizing that the performance was being watched throughout world.

Composed mostly of volunteers the production illustrated the Olympic theme, 'Light the Fire Within,' and Utah's American Indian and pioneer heritages.

Traditional portions of the ceremony included the parade of athletes, with each country represented by its athletes, the host country following last, and the presenting of the Olympic flag and lighting of the torch.

Awaiting the torch arrival, Dr. Jacques Rogge, President of the International Olympic Committee and Mitt Romney, SLOC President and CEO stirred emotions with speeches to athletes and spectators.

Romney spoke to the Olympic athletes on how the children of the world will be watching them during the next 16 days.

He said, "Children around the world are dreaming. Dreaming of daring performances, cheering friends, and proud parents."

He told the athletes that just yesterday, they themselves were children and because of hard work, dedication, and support from family, friends, and coaches, their dreams have now become a reality.

In between sentences, Romney was cheered on with thunderous applause.

Concluding his speech, Romney said, "May the fire we see within you light a fire within each of us."

Rogge spoke next and told the athletes what it takes to make a champion. He said, "A champion is someone who respects the rules, who rejects doping, and who respects the spirit of fair play."

Rogge said a champion surpasses personal limits and isn't always the first one to cross the finish line.

The Sept. 11 tragedy was mentioned and Rogge said it was a tragedy that affected the whole world and that the rest of the world stands united with America.

Following the speeches, the games were officially opened by President Bush with high anticipations from the crowd that still awaited the torch arrival and news of who the final torchbearer would be.

With only minutes left, the torch arrived being carried by several athletes before it was carried up the stadium stairs by former American gold medallists Picabo Street and Cammi Granato.

Collegian Sports : Always on Time

Dream it. Do it. Disney.
We're coming to campus!
build your resume and meet students from around the world
Thursday, February 14 at 7:00PM
Hasbrouck 106
Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM wdwcollegeprogram.com

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7379
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2002
ARE YOU READY?
Negril and Montego Bay
ONE LOVE, ONE HEART, ONE GREAT PARTY!!
Come to Jamaica and feel at right at an unbelievable price.
From airfare to your hotel, parties and activities, these reliable tour operators will get you there
Sun Splash Tours
1.800.426.7710
www.sunsplashtours.com
Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

THE MONKEY BAR
INTERNATIONAL NIGHT
Featuring:
EVERY WEDNESDAY
DJ Big Phil
SPINNING REGGAE AND HIP HOP
Midnight Snacks
Ski Pass Giveaways
Weekly Drink Specials:
Rum & Coke $2.50
Sex on the Beach $3.00
Bud + BudLight Pitchers $5.00

LOSING IT:
False Hope and Fat Profits in the Diet Industry
An evening with author Laura Fraser
A reformed dieter and ex-bulimic, Laura Fraser talks about her journey from battling an eating disorder and, after recovering, taking on the American diet industry in an undercover investigation. She'll talk about the history of America's obsession with slenderness, and all the false hopes, scams and medical disasters that women have endured in order to attain an impossible ideal. She'll take on the paradox of why Americans are heavier than any other people, and yet diet the most, and she'll talk about some practical changes.
Monday February 25
7:30 to 9:00 pm
Campus Center
Room 174–176
A FREE TALK sponsored by University Health Services, Everywoman's Center and Five College Inc.

Youngsters can't handle pressure

INSIDE THE NBA with Glen Straub

Everyday I check the headlines on the ESPN.com National Basketball Association website. It gives me a chance to freshen up on my NBA wisdom.

Yesterday, I was scrolling down the page skimming through the headlines and buried at the end of the page was a somewhat disturbing blurb.

It read, "Utah Jazz guard DeShawn Stevenson was sentenced to two years of probation Monday for having sex with a minor."

DeShawn Stevenson was Utah's first round pick in the 2000 NBA draft. The Jazz drafted him straight out of high school. He is twenty years old.

Stevenson was accused of giving a 14-year-old girl brandy and then having sexual intercourse with her the night he was drafted in June of 2000.

His lawyer, Roger Littman, and prosecutors in Fresno, Calif. have been negotiating for several months and Stevenson will not serve any jail time, but must complete 100 hours of community service and pay $1,100 in fines.

His story is particularly disturbing because when I was 14-years-old, NBA players were my idols. Now I am just the same age as many of them and they are making childish mistakes.

Stevenson's lewd act is a sure sign that only a minuscule few are ready to make the galactic leap from high school to the NBA.

The extremely talented players that make the high school to pro jump are young men sometimes considered boys.

The majority of them are not ready to handle the extreme pressures and responsibilities of being in the NBA spotlight.

Kobe Bryant and Kevin Garnett were able to do it instantly. Tracy McGrady and Jermaine O'Neal took some time to get comfortable, but have finally found their niche in the league.

Giving a 19-20 year-old guy, who has spent their whole life living in a lower class family, millions and millions of dollars instantly can at times be troublesome. A feeling of invincibility can emerge. Once that happens, things like what happened to Stevenson can occur.

He has now caused his organization, his teammates and most importantly himself much embarrassment.

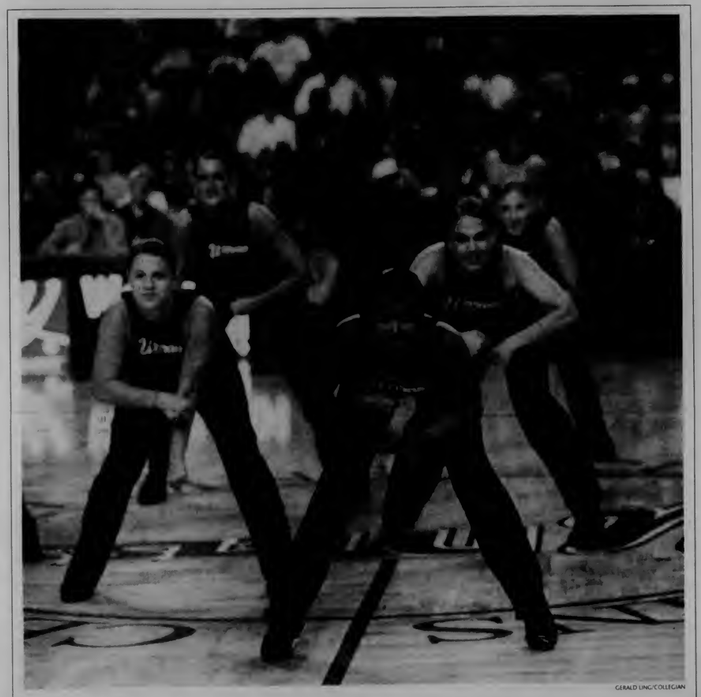
This argument has been expressed by many of today's top NBA writers. Why must I bring it up again you ask?

Well, last week at Commissioner David Stern's annual state-of-the-league address during the All-Star break in Philadelphia, Stern proclaimed that his lawyers have assured him that Akron high school junior LeBron James would not be victorious if he challenges the NBA's age limit in court.

LeBron wants to declare for the 2002 NBA Draft. That would mean he would forego all of college and his senior year in high school. In an agreement made during the lockout year in 1998, the league and the players union decided that players couldn't declare for the draft until their high school class has graduated.

LeBron, who is arguably one of the best high school players in the nation, is challenging the NBA because he feels that there is age discrimination involved in the case. Imagine if he actually wins the case.

That means a high school senior would be suiting up for one of the 30 organizations in the NBA.



The idea seems unreal and ridiculous.

Even some of the NBA's veterans cannot even handle the pressures of the spotlight.

Stephan Marbury recently was arrested on a drunk-driving charge.

How can we expect a high school senior, like LeBron, to properly display himself as a professional?

Glen Straub is a Collegian Columnist.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Everybody dance now
The UMass dance team attempts to pump up the crowd during a television timeout.

UMass BRIEFS:

Skiing
The University of Massachusetts ski teams competed in the Boston College Carnival this weekend at Ascutney Mountain, Vt. The men's team finished third in the both the giant slalom and slalom, while the women came in second in the giant slalom and fourth in the slalom.

Senior Ken Thoman (Lebanon, Ohio) finished seventh in the slalom with a total time of 1:41.41. Junior Rich Granger (Princeton, Mass.) came in eighth with a total time of 1:42.56. Sophomore Beau Gibson (Oakland, Md.) finished seventh in the giant slalom with a total time of 1:40.67. Granger and Thoman were eighth and ninth, respectively, with total times of 1:40.79 and 1:41.31 in the giant slalom.

On the women's side, senior Lauren Brodey (Hansville, N.Y.) finished fifth in the slalom with a total time of 1:49.75. She was also 10th in the giant slalom with a total time of 1:48.81. Junior Carolyn Lewenberg (Newton, Mass.) finished third with a mark of 1:44.58 in the giant slalom. Both teams will compete in the Smith Carnival Feb. 15-16 at Berkshire East in Charlemont, Mass. This is the final regular season race before the NCAA qualifiers.

Gymnastics
Junior gymnast Katie Teft (Grand Rapids, Mich.) was named Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week, the conference office announced today. Teft led the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team in a fifth-place finish at the URI Invitational in Kingston, R.I. on Sunday.

Teft was brilliant on both the uneven bars and the balance beam, capturing individual titles in both events. She claimed the uneven bars title with a school-record tying 9.950, and tied for the beam title with a season-high 9.900. A bar and beam specialist, Teft has won seven titles in 10 competitions this season, including four of five uneven bar competitions. She also has the best score this season among Atlantic 10 gymnasts on the bars and is tied for the conference high with George Washington's Devin McCalla on the beam.

The Minutewomen will return to action this weekend, as they conclude a five-week road trip when they venture to Cambridge, Mass., to take on M.I.T. The dual meet is scheduled to begin at 7:00 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 16.

Track
Freshman Christina Bizon (Warwick, R.I.) was named the Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Rookie of the Week by the Atlantic 10 Conference for her performance at the individual-scoring St. Valentine Invitational held this past weekend at the Boston University Armory. Bizon won the weight throw with a toss of 51'0.25," her best of the season and currently the top mark in the conference. The throw also stands as the third-best in UMass history.

Overall UMass set season-best performances in seven events at Boston University including the pole vault where senior co-captain Rhianna DaCruz (Pawtucket, R.I.) set a new school record for the third consecutive week clearing 11'6.75."

The Minutewomen return to action this Friday, Feb. 16, at 10:00 a.m. as they travel to the Mackal Field House on the campus of the University of Rhode Island in Kingston, R.I., for the Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Championships.

— Courtesy UMass Media Relations

soccer

continued from page 12

throughout her high school career at Lexington High. She led the Minutemaids in either assists or scoring in each of her four years in the program.

"I'm not a player who gets a lot of attention," Bibler said. "I do a lot of small things like making good passes and good runs."

In the end the lure of Amherst proved too much for the speedy central midfielder, as she turned down offers from Boston University and Howard to head to her state University.

"It's nice to stay in the area and I'm excited to be able to have my family watch me play," she said.

The other three recruits all come from the state of New York, giving the Minutewomen five women from the Empire State on their roster. Lindsey Bellini and Amy Maffucci each come to Amherst from the Rochester area, and despite the fact they played at different high schools, they did play together with their club team, the Rochester Jr. Rhinos. Maffucci will play in the back and help to fill the hole left by the graduation of two-year captain Sarah Cook.

"I'd like to make an impact as soon as possible and help the team any way I can," the Pittsford, N.Y. native said. "The fact that there is an open spot [in the back] give me even more motivation to work as hard as I can and do whatever it takes to earn it."

Bellini, who could not be reached for this story, is a midfielder who for the past two years was named All-State in New York while leading Webster Schroeder High School to the state semifinals, including a state championship this past season.

The final member of the UMass recruiting class of 2002 is Tiffany Hamill, a sweeper who converted to the position from the midfield prior to her senior season. She seems to be the most likely to replace Cook in the middle of the UMass backline.

Hamill, who comes from Syracuse, N.Y., is not coming to Amherst on her own however. She played on the same ODP team as Maffucci and Bellini and has played against the pair at the Empire Games and the State Cup.

"I think it's good to have [them] coming here with me," she said. "I'm not going to feel as alone with them here."

The push to return to A-10 glory has already begun for the Minutewomen and you can be sure that all five of these newcomers will contribute greatly in that push.

RING IN THE NEW YEAR WITH
GREAT CONNECTIONS! GREAT VALUE!
3500 FREE Minutes for LIFE!
That's 3200 Night & Weekend and 300 Anytime home airtime minutes every month!
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up now for one year and remain on a SingleRate℠ East Plan.
— PLUS —
UNLIMITED Nationwide Long Distance
When calling from your home rate area. Airtime charges apply.
GREAT CONNECTIONS!
The whole family can stay connected with the Family SharePlan℠.
Activate a primary line on any SingleRate East Family SharePlan℠ $35 or higher and add up to 5 lines for only $20 a month for each additional line!
GREAT VALUE!
Buy one digital phone, get one phone FREE!
Available on select phone models with annual contract.
HOLYOKE MALL • (413) 533-2500
HADLEY • 322 Russell Street • (413) 587-3248
@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 for details, dial ext. 226 for franchise opportunities.
verizon wireless Authorized Retailer
Offer valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plans. $30 activation fee per line. $175 early termination fee per line. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Usage rounded to next full minute and Unused allowances lost. All calls subject to taxes and other charges. Features, rates and coverage may vary by market. Not all features available on certain CDMA equipment. Phone models shown may not be available in your area. Family SharePlan℠: only one user can be on a primary per month basis. Night & Weekend hours: Mon-Fri 9:01pm-5:59am, Sat 12am-Sun 11:59pm. Some restrictions apply. See store for details.

YOU COULD WIN A WEEK IN CANCUN
Grand Prize: Club Med Trip for Two
First Prize: Coca-Cola CD Players (1 per campus)
Visit a participating campus retail outlet for Entry Forms and Official Rules.

DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIED

113 CAMPUS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PHONE: (413)545-3500 FAX: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits, and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services room 428 Student Union or call 545-0865.

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Room 428 Student Union.

THE SPOT! Memorial Drive, Chicopee. Monday nights 18+ dance Party with DJ Stylze. Friday nights DJ Chris James top 40 Dance Party. Saturday 2/16 "Undertow" the Toole Tribute 10 p.m. $3.00 cover. Sunday 2/17 "Countdown to St. Patty's Day" with just George the X-rated comedian + "meet the guiness girls!!"

LAST CHANCE TO GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE FOR FALL 02 AND SPRING 03!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! INFORMATION SESSIONS WEDNESDAYS AND THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 THROUGH FEBRUARY 21 IN 614 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351. FINAL APPLICATION DEADLINE MARCH 1.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Contact your Avon Representative at Umass. Call 883-1613 or e-mail avonerica@hotmail.com.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study area in basement, cable, telephone (Internet access), in all bedrooms and study NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Honda Accord call 259-0068.

1994 Acura Integra Auto, AC, CD, Am/Fm cassette, Power Steering Windows, Moon roof, single owner, Excellent condition $5500.00 O/B/O 546-6445.

'87 Volvo Wagon Auto. runs good. $700 585-0599 582-9103

COMPUTERS

Laptop AST Ascentia 200MHZ. Very light. CD Rom, Floppy, Bag, many extras, Windows ME. $400. 413-478-9338 Lv msg

Pentium Computer with CD Rom $99.00, with color monitor $139.00. Color Pentium laptop starting $99.00 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

After school care positions available. 20 years and older. Experience with school age children required. Call Matt or Brett at the YMCA in Northampton. 584-7086.

EMPLOYMENT

Minuteman Pest Control is looking to hire 2-4 Seasonal Service Technicians. The job description includes treatment to residential exterior foundations. THE FOLLOWING QUALIFICATIONS WILL APPLY: Must be at least 18 years old Must have reliable transportation Must be able to start work in early spring (April 2002) until September Must be able to work Saturdays Take and pass a State Applicators Certification Exam in early 2002 We are offering an hourly wage of $12.00-$14.00 to start and will train. FOR MORE INFORMATION PLEASE CALL 800-586-1009.

More than a summer camp, an experience of a lifetime. Trail's End Camp (Beach Lake, PA) -Baseball, Basketball, Golf, Volleyball, Mountain Biking, Tennis, Ropes Course, Hockey, Arts & Crafts (Woodworking, Photography, Fine Arts, Video/Film), Waterfront (Waterskiing, Boat Drive, Canoe, Sailing, Kayaking), Pool Instructors and Male General Counselors. TOP SALARIES AND BENEFITS!!! ON-LINE APPLICATION!! www.trailsendcamp.com or 800-408-1404.

Substitute teachers needed for full day and part day $7.00 an hour. Cushman Scott Children's Center 549-1167.

Whitewater Raft guides needed at Crab Apple Whitewater in Claremont- 35 min. from Amherst. No experience necessary- will train. Full and part-time summer positions. Must be athletic and personable. Photography position available. Full time summer job and weekends spring and fall. Some photography experience necessary. Will train. Call for applications on both positions (413) 625-2288.

EMPLOYMENT

Instructor, the Princeton Review, the nation's largest test prep company, seeks teachers for SAT and MCAS courses, held year-round in the Springfield area. Teaching experience helpful, but not required. Job involves teaching small groups of high school students basic math and English skills, as well as test-taking strategies. Starting pay is $13/hr, paid training and all course materials provided. Great part-time job; flexible hours. For more information call the Princeton Review at 413-584-6849. To apply, fax cover letter and resume to the Princeton Review at 413-586-4939.

Childcare needed for 2 children in our Amherst Home Mon. 3:15-5:15 Wed 1:30-5:30 $8.00 an hr 253-5197.

More than just summer employment. Independent Lake Camp Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving an'd more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life call 1-800-399 CAMP or check our website at www.indypendentlake.com and apply on-line.

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line Entry level on board positions available. Great benefits. Seasonal or year round. (941)329-6434 www.cruisesareers.com

SUMMER JOBS!!! Help new students get off to a good start peer advisors needed for summer orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/ week. Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 12

Mothers helper/ PCA. Help disabled mom with driving and household chores. References and drivers license required. Own transportation to south Deerfield 2 to 3 afternoons/ week. $8/hour. 665-3914

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742. Mountain Bike www.bikes.com 99 Fusion 19" exc. cond. $400 413-374-0653.

FOR SALE

Guitar Cort Acoustic/ electric with Fishman preamp and case. Mint cond. $450 413-374-0653.

Mac Quadra 630 face 32 Ram w/ 17 in. view Sonic monitor. Perfect for word processing $125 (413) 665-6833.

FURNITURE

Couch Green/ floral pillows, $350.00. Recliner/ Lazyboy $100.00 259-1020.

INSTRUCTION

GUITAR, MANDOLIN, SLIDE lessons with nationally touring David Goodrich(P Mulrey, E Mekeown, R Polenzani) 15+ yrs teaching, all levels. 413-374-6310 D GoodRich@hotmail.com

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired Pro. Djata Bumpus. In Amherst call 413-731-1450.

PERSONAL

Formal date needed: 3 prior dates required contact: Scott Simmons 549-9441.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female only 1 room available ASAP HT/HTW included cummingsm@elms.edu

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnat? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Party Cruise! 5 days $279! Includes meals & free parties! Awesome beaches, night life! Departs from Florida! Cancun & Jamaica $459! Springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386.

Spring Break Tickets! Get a FREE MTV audience tickets to select shows when you book your Spring Break though StudentCity.com! Go to MTV.com or call StudentCity.com at 1-800-293-1443 for details! Tours and tickets are limited.

TRAVEL

Mexico/ Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $169 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Montreal Maddness Spring Weekends $99 Quad. Occupancy price includes round trip luxury motor coach 3 days, 2 nights deluxe hotel directly downtown, breakfast, dinner, free nightclub admissions, dome + more. Departs March 15-17, April 19-21, other weekends available $10 security fee. Call Global Express Tours (781) 979-0076.

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Maratlan FOR FREE! To find out how call 1-888-777-4642 or email sales@suncoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Best prices! Space is limited!!! 1-800-234-7007. www.endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Cancun, Jamaica, South Padre and Florida. BEST Hotels. Free parties. Lowest prices! www.breakerstravel.com (800) 985-6789

TRAVEL

A Free Spring Break! Hottest destinations/parties!! Lowest prices guaranteed. Best airlines/hotels! Free Booze/food! 2 Free trips on 15 sales. Earn cash! Group discounts!! Book on line. www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Lost a SIBLING to SUICIDE? Seeking participants for research project: men or women who have lost a brother or sister to suicide. Involves a confidential interview and brief written questionnaires. Participants receive $75. Please help us to better understand the broad effects of suicide on the daily lives, relationships, and emotional outlook of surviving brothers and sisters! If interested or for more information, please contact Dr. Jannette McMenamy at (617) 636-4830 or jmcmenamy@lifespan.org.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1	CBS
4	NESN
5	Fox News SP
6	FSN NE
7	HSCN Music Channel
8	WB 56
9	HSCN Movies Channel
10	TV Guide Channel
11	UPN 38
12	Ads
13	NBA
14	International Channel
15	MATV
16	HSCN Info Channel
17	Ads
18	ESPN 2
19	ADS
20	ESPN Classic
21	Cartoon Network
22	ESPN
23	CNN HE
24	Weather Channel
25	Learning Channel
26	History Channel
27	A&E
28	Discovery Health
29	Food Network
30	Bravo
31	Home & Garden TV
32	Travel Channel
33	Lifetime
34	CNN
35	Tech TV
36	BET
37	UPN 38
38	USA
40	TNN
41	MTV
42	CMT
43	VH-1
44	TNT
45	TBS
46	E! Entertainment
47	Sci-Fi Channel
48	Court TV
49	Nick at Nite
50	Comedy Central
51	Cartoon Network
52	Game Show Network
53	TV Land
54	FOX Family
55	Univision
56	Galavision
57	Telemundo
58	College TV Network
59	C-SPAN
60	C-SPAN2
61	Bloomberg Television

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 12, 2002

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova Alchemy (In Stereo)		Secret Life of the Brain (N)		World of National Geographic		African-Americans
WFSB	3	1	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "The Measure of Men"		Guardian "Lolita" (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "The Measure of Men"		Guardian "Lolita" (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	The Chair (In Stereo)		Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Leech" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WTXX		2	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Leech" (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Blind Date	Blind Date
WWIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	70s Show	Undeclared	24 "10:00 AM - 11:00 AM" (N)		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Olympic Winter Games (In Stereo Live)							News
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova Alchemy (In Stereo)		Secret Life of the Brain (N)		World of National Geographic		Charlie Rose (N)	In Stereo
WGGB	22	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	The Chair (In Stereo)		Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Roswell "Pamacea" (In Stereo)		Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel (N)	Shipmates (N)
WTBS	29		Cosby Show	Roseanne	Friends	Roseanne	NBA Basketball New York Knicks at Orlando Magic (Live)						NBA Basketball: Wizards at Lakers
A&E	48		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order (In Stereo)		Biography: Shangler		Law & Order "Snatched"		100 Centre Street (N)		Law & Order (In Stereo)
CNN	20	23	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Live From...	The Point	Larry King Live		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	15	30	Saturday Night Live (In Stereo)		Daily Show	Geeks	★ 2001: A Space Travesty" (2000, Comedy) Leslie Nielsen				Battlebots (N)		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	52		Echo of the Elephants		Congo		New Detectives		New Detectives "Broken Vows"		FBI Files "Death in the Delta"		Justice Files
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		College Basketball Illinois at Michigan State (Live)				College Basketball Florida at Georgia (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	24		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait Suzanne Guy		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Doing Time on Maple Drive" (1992) James B. Sikking				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	32		Who Knows?	Making-Video	Music Videos (In Stereo)		Rock & Roll	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Making-Video	Dismissed	Kidnapped
NICK	35		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Kids-Darndest	Kids-Darndest	Chears	Cheers	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	50		Star Trek "The Light of Zetar"		Earth: Final Conflict (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "The Beholder"		★★★ "Gattaca" (1997, Science Fiction) Ethan Hawke				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	37	24	Weird Places		Tales From the Tower		Daring Robberies		Unsolved Exposing Secrets		Seeing Is Believing		Daring Robberies
TNT	25		NYPD Blue (In Stereo)		Predator "The Inner Sense"		Law & Order "Ego" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Venom"		Charmed (In Stereo)		Witchblade "Diplopia"
USA	27		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Believer" (In Stereo)		Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show (Live)						Living Single	Martin
HBO	26		(5:30) ★★ "The Closer You Get"		★★ 28 Days (2000, Drama) Sandra Bullock PG-13				★½ "Sweet November" (2001, Romance) Keanu Reeves PG-13				Sex and City	Greenlight
MAX	36		(5:00) ★★½ "Heat" (1995, Drama) Al Pacino (In Stereo) R				★★ "Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit" (1993) Whoopi Goldberg PG		★★★ "American Psycho" (2000) Christian Bale				Real Sex 21
SHOW	65		(5:30) ★★½ "Chances Are" (1989, Comedy) PG				Filmmaker		★★½ "What Women Want" (2000, Comedy) Mel Gibson PG-13		Chris Isaak "Family Ties (N)"		Queer as Folk (N)	(In Stereo)

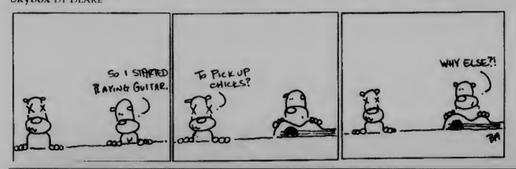
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Noodle By Jacki

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Skybox By Blake

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"The world is no longer a romantic place. Some of the people still are however, and therein lies the promise. Don't let the world win."

–Ally McBeal

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 32 LOW: 11	HIGH: 37 LOW: 17	HIGH: 44 LOW: 23

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You must give yourself the best possible chance today. The odds may have been against you as the day opens, but you can turn things around.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You'll realize at very quickly when a new and profitable opportunity comes your way. How soon can you free yourself up to take advantage of it?

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You'll receive some last-minute information today which may require you to change your plans and reschedule your day from top to bottom. Get to it!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You'll very likely hear about something today that is fast approaching, and for which you must prepare with great care. Trust your instincts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Episodes will transpire and fade into memory so quickly today that you may feel as though you're merely changing channels hour by hour.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You'll realize at very quickly when a new and profitable opportunity comes your way. How soon can you free yourself up to take advantage of it?

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Take care that you don't become too critical too soon. Let someone impress you with his or her ingenuity and creativity first.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You can afford to be a little different today – but you must have a good reason to you with his or her ingenuity and creativity first.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You have to reduce the incidence of surprise today if you are going to enjoy any real confidence or stability. Avoid outright risks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You'll receive a surprise gift today from someone who has been looking out for you over the past several days, weeks or months. Get more info!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You're in control, whether you know it or not. Make things clear; let others know just what your situation is and what you expect from it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You're not going to stick to one style of behavior or presentation today; explore all manner of expression, and do what strikes your fancy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Don't worry about those things that are out of your control; they all have a way of working out. Minimize your own errors.

Nothing screams "I love you" like a photograph of you and your sweetie in the Collegian: Stop down today or call 545-1809 and ask for Tibi

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT
COME PARTY at THE HARP
in North Amherst
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900

ACROSS
1 50%
5 Gran holders
10 Herbs
14 Jai —
15 Hill
16 Dog in "Garfield"
17 Vinegary
18 Bowling venue
19 Oxen's harness
20 Trophy stand
22 Od an office chore
23 "That was closer"
24 "This must weigh —"
26 Forbidden
29 Bright flower
33 Ice hut
34 Gourmet mushroom
35 Sedan or convertible
36 Necklace part
37 White-water craft
38 Actress Capshaw
39 Be — hippie gatherings
40 Doughnut quantity
41 Stacks
42 Counselor
44 Time periods
45 Raucous laughs
46 Pingles
48 Chandelier pendant
51 Valentine gifts
55 Right, on a map
56 Marshy inlet
58 Diva's rendition
59 Gardner of mysteries
60 City near Kyoto
61 Tackle the quarterback
62 Bold look
63 Committee
64 On the sheltered side

DOWN
1 Hinged fastening
2 Medicinal plant
3 Praise
4 Hearth need
5 Use the rink
6 Spouse's brother
7 Lounge about
8 Pamplona cry
9 Wily
10 Trifling (with)
11 Goddess' statue
12 Freshwater fish
13 Bird food
21 Drive away
22 Food wrapping
24 Producer Spelling
25 Squirrel's refuge
26 Shinbone
27 Double —
28 Use TNT
29 Cash
30 Florida town
31 Informal farewell
32 Boutique buy
34 Labyrinths
37 Hit on the noggin
38 Polish sausage
40 Tap one's fingers
41 Ceremonial fire
43 Type of cracker
46 TV host Alistar
47 Customary
48 Flake off
49 Unustuall
50 Wight or Capri
51 Meg of "Sleepless in Seattle"
52 — Mountains of Russia
53 Cut into cubes
54 Benefit
56 Type of jazz
57 Clean — whistle

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	E	E	N		T	H	E	M	E		S	A	C	S
Y	A	L	E		R	E	V	E	L		A	R	L	O
E	R	I	C		E	R	A	S	E		R	E	A	L
S	P	A	T	T	E	R		A	V	O	C	A	D	O
				A	R	T		A	D	A
C	A	R	R	Y	O	N		S	T	A	S	H	E	D
A	W	E	S		P	A	S	T	E		M	A	D	E
S	A	L			L	I	K	E			I	D	A
T	R	I	O		V	I	E	D		A	K	I	N
S	E	C	R	E	T	E		L	E	A	G	U	E	S
		A	M	A				F	I	R
D	R	A	C	U	L	A		R	E	M	O	T	E	S
H	I	L	L		I	N	D	I	A		U	R	A	L
O	P	I	E		A	D	U	L	T		N	A	V	E
W	E	T	S		N	I	N	E	S		D	Y	E	D

10-22-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

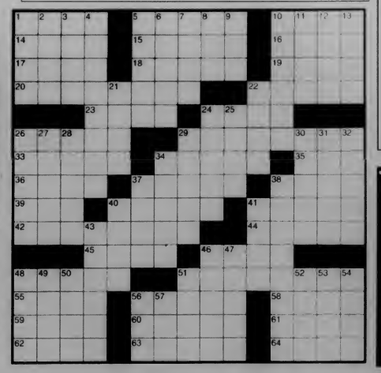
LUNCH

Vegetable Tortellini Soup

Chicken Nuggets

Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)

Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)



DINNER

Vegetable Tortellini Soup

Roast Turkey

Boston Scrod

Thai Seitan (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hammel
Photo Editor: Tibora Gircyec-Blum
Copy Editor: Jim Pignatiello
Production Assistant: riki Alcid
Production Staff: Cara Horowitz, Lizzy Nielsen, Mike Kulak

DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
COLLEGIAN_SPORTS@YAHOO.COM 2.13.02 SPORTS EDITOR: ERIC SODERSTROM

New recruits to bolster soccer program

LINDSEY BETTINI

By Justin Pearson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After failing to qualify for the Atlantic 10 Tournament for the first time since the conference was incepted back in 1993, the Massachusetts women's soccer team began its push to redeem itself in 2002 with a strong recruiting class announced earlier this week. Head coach Jim Rudy has brought in five newcomers to replace his five departing seniors. Gone are the Maroon and White's starting goalkeeper, sweeper and three-fifths of the starting midfield. While the newcomers will not be able to match the experience and leadership qualities of the departing five as of yet, Rudy feels that he has brought in a group of players that will all fit into the UMass system. Each of the four field players is small, quick and agile, which greatly suits the Minutewomen's style of play of attacking down the flanks before firing a cross into the box. This is a major deviation from the current direction of most other Division I teams who are looking for size and strength to go up the middle rather than speed down the wings.

But before UMass could fill any of its other holes, it was of paramount importance for Rudy to ink a second goalkeeper to serve as an understudy to rising junior Kelly Nigh. Nigh has shown glimpses of being a top-notch keeper during her two years in Amherst, and will look to pass on some of the knowledge that former A-10 Defensive Player of the Year Julie Podhrasky instilled in her. The recipient of that information will be Fayetteville Ga native, Kristen Rutland.

In 1999 and 2000 Rutland helped lead Starrs Mill High School to the Georgia Division 3A State Championship and a No. 5 national ranking in '99 by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America. A member of her state's Olympic Development Program, Rutland is looking forward to her four years in Amherst.

"I'm going to be incredibly nervous the first time I'm starting," Rutland said. "But I usually perform really well when I'm nervous."

Making her decision to come to the Pioneer Valley all that much easier was Coach Rudy's track mark with goalkeepers. During his 14 years in Amherst Rudy has coached such keepers such as Danielle Dion, Podhrasky and Women's World Cup Winner Brianna Scurry.

"He's the main reason I came to UMass," Rutland said. "He's such an incredible coach and he's so well known for his keepers."

With that hole filled, Rudy and assistant coach Rebecca Myers began to focus on other potential problem areas. They did not have to look far to find a creative center midfielder, as Adair Blyler of Lexington, Ma will attend UMass next fall.

"I had a great visit during the season and I saw that the team was really close," she said. "It also helps a lot just knowing some of the other players and coach from camp."

The camp that Blyler was talking about is the Advanced Soccer Camp that the Minutewomen sponsor every year. In 2001 Blyler was named Team MVP at the camp, adding to a number of personal awards that she won

Turn to SOCCER, page 9

COURTESY TIFFANY HAMILL

TIFFANY HAMILL —

ALICIA BRYAN

AMY MATTUCCI

COURTESY KRISTEN RUTLAND

AND KRISTEN RUTLAND WILL ALL JOIN THE WOMEN'S SOCCER TEAM NEXT YEAR

UMass to go hunting for Bonnies

Just off a 62-47 victory over LaSalle Saturday night, the Massachusetts men's basketball team hosts St. Bonaventure tonight at the Mullins Center.

A rematch of their Jan. 26 match-up in which the Minutemen won 67-65, the Bonnies visit Amherst tonight looking for revenge.

And for UMass, it's not at the most opportune time.

St. Bonaventure (14-8, 6-5 Atlantic 10) is coming off a huge 80-79 victory over conference elite Xavier, after erasing a seven-point deficit in the final 3:03 to end the nation's longest winning streak (12 games).

In that game, the Musketeers managed 20 turnovers thanks largely to the Bonnies' frustrating, constant full-court pressure. And that's something UMass coach Steve Lappas is fully aware of. In fact, it's the first of his two big keys for Wednesday's game.

"We can't turn the ball over," said Lappas, whose team is averaging over 15 follies a game, two more than its opponents. "A lot depends obviously on how we handle our press.

"You can get ready for the press from now 'til Doomsday but you still have to go out there and make the passes and do the things that you need to do," he continued. "But we have to handle their pressure." Lappas' second key depends on the quality of guard pressure from his perimeter players, especially Shannon Crooks and Anthony Anderson.

"We have to get on their 3-point shooters and limit them the best we can," said Lappas, whose squad travels to Philadelphia this weekend for games against Temple and St. Joseph's. "We have to try and limit their number of attempts, which I thought we did a very good job of last time. They didn't really get as many attempts as they normally do."

If the Minutemen can somehow repeat that defensive performance from late January, they should have no problem sweeping the regular season series. The 63 points that UMass allowed last game is St. Bonaventure's lowest output this season. The 26 the Minutemen allowed in the second half is also a season-low for the Bonnies.

But holding St. Bonaventure down for a second time this year will be a tough task. The Bonnie offense is eighth in the nation in scoring, averaging nearly 83 points a game. And credit most of that to J.R. Bremer, the nation's third-leading scorer, in the Bonnie backcourt. The senior All-America candidate is averaging 25.2 points per game and has had six games with over 30 points.

"Crooks will probably start on him but Raheim (Lamb) is definitely going to play him some," Lappas said. "Crooks is quicker than Raheim and right now I'd rather have Shannon out there chasing him."

But if Bremer starts to light it up, look for Lamb to take a majority of the duty. Lamb held LaSalle's Rasual Butler, then the nation's 20th leading scorer, to just four points.

-From Staff Reports

GERALD DING/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks and his 14.8 PPG average will attempt to drive by St. Bonaventure tonight at the Mullins Center.

WHERE CAN YOU SEE THIS OSCAR NOMINATED FILM? ARTS PAGE 5
SHAPE UP OR SHIP OUT ED/OP PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
THURSDAY ☆☆☆☆☆ ISSUE EIGHTY ONE ☆☆☆☆☆ 2.14.02

Political Science offers globalization seminar

By Sharmila Chakravorty
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

People around the world are more connected then ever. This is the phenomenon that is being discussed in Jeffrey L. Sedgwick's seminar: "Globalization: The Challenges of Freedom and Progress."

The course and lecture series at the University of Massachusetts is one of 16 programs selected by the Freedom Project, funded by the Templeton Foundation.

The class meets Tuesday nights and address fundamental questions about the nature of freedom and free markets. The class is mixed in composition with "quite a few sophomores, which are the target group," Sedgwick says they focus on impact of freedom and progress for less developed countries.

"We want to discuss what globalization is, what people think about it and why it is happening," Sedgwick said.

Students read and discuss material from various authors including Thomas Jefferson, Adam Smith, David Hume, Hanna Arendt, Hernando De Soto and Jean Bertrand Aristide. An hour before each class, students submit a question inspired by the week's readings.

"It can be whatever peaked their interest, what they found challenging or controversial," Sedgwick said. "There is no set outline."

At the beginning of class he proposes a question to the class and allows the discussion to unfold. Once that topic has been explored he moves to another question.

The grading for the class also consists of two interpretive essays about a country undergoing globalization. Aside from classic and contemporary information, Sedgwick wants his students to "Go out and find appropriate data to make a compelling presentation."

Sedgwick recently spent two semesters teaching in Western Ukraine where he was able to witness the dynamics of globalization. "I thought a seminar that challenged students to grapple with the complexities of economic development and political democratization would be timely and interesting."

Accompanying the seminar series is a series of four public lectures that will bring an assortment of scholars and policymakers in the field of globalization to UMass this semester.

The freedom project awarded a total of $418,818 in grants to sixteen colleges for a variety of courses designed to teach students the virtues and challenges of human liberty. The thirty-two faculty members who designed the courses will also receive a total of $47,000 in fellowship prizes.

Enrollment in the class is limited to twenty students, and since the add-drop period has passed interests students should contact Professor Sedgwick at the Political Science Department.

Arcaro joins University faculty

By Bridget Henry
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Kathleen F. Arcaro, an environmental toxicologist, has recently joined the faculty of the College of Food and Natural Resources at the University of Massachusetts. She will be working with other faculty members in the department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences as well as in the Environmental Sciences program.

Arcaro came to UMass from the School of Public Health at the University at Albany, where she taught environmental physiology and conducted research on environmental disrupters of reproduction. She was very excited to begin her work at the University.

"What attracted me to UMass immediately was my colleagues," Arcaro said. "I have the opportunity to work with the members of the Environmental and Veterinary Animal Sciences as well as people from Wildlife, Entomology, and Microbiology. My research fits right in with what they are doing."

Arcaro's research is focused on pollutants routinely detected in urban and suburban environments that may act as mimics or inhibitors of human reproductive hormones, such as estradiol.

When walking into the lab in Morrill, Arcaro can be found busily examining stains of breast cancer cells. She examines the effect of PCB's (found in pesticides, fruit, vegetables, and some pharmaceuticals) on the cell cultures. Specifically, she looks to see if these compounds affect cell growth, and tries to predict activity by looking at the chemical structure of PCB's. She is particularly interested in the health effects of mixtures of these pollutants, which may be responsible for incidences of cancer in a given community.

"If I find that mixtures of these pollutants are more harmful than each of the pollutants individually, my research will help answer some of the remaining questions of how pollution threatens our health," Arcaro explained.

Arcaro's research is supported by a grant and a career development award from the National Institute of Environmental Health. She was awarded a postdoctoral fellowship from the National Institutes of Health to study at the University at Albany, earned her doctorate at the Institute of Animal Behavior at Rutgers University, and completed her baccalaureate degree at Douglas College of Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ. She is a member of the Society of Toxicology as well as the Society of Environmental Toxicology and Chemistry.

Next fall, Arcaro will be teaching Environmental Science 112. She hopes to spark an interest in environmental toxicology among her students. To provide a link outside the classroom, she plans to welcome guest speakers like people that protect water supplies and environmental lawyers.

"I want to get freshmen excited that they can make a difference and apply what they have learned to the real world," At this, Arcaro stated that she was happy to see UMass students getting involved in important environmental issues, specifically mentioning Students for Sustainability.

Arcaro has many goals for her career at UMass, but mainly she hopes to train future environmental toxicologists.

"I would also be very interested in helping to develop an upper level reproductive toxicology program," stated Arcaro. "I am excited that the Environmental Science program is developing for graduate students."

HOW SWEET IT IS TO BE KISSED BY

HERSHEY KISS COURTESY HERSHEYS.COM LIPS COURTESY VIRTUALKISS.COM

Okay, so it's that time of year again. You'll hear all the usual sayings involving love, romance, and true happiness. You'll see the paper red hearts taped to the walls. And you'll smell the passing scents of candies, perfumes, and roses on their ways to their recipients. Yes folks. It's Valentine's Day.

But we in the Feature's Department have decided to bypass all of that. There'll be no talk here of what love entails, little cartoon cupids, or displays of red roses. No indeed. For we have decided to get right down to the matter at hand. So what's Valentine's Day really all about then? Why kissing, of course.

Kissing has spanned the ages as a favorite past time of many. Egyptians hieroglyphics, medieval tapestries, and current films all portray kisses in various forms. People of many ages share everything from cutesy little pecks on the cheek to tongue-tiring action. And for the most part, the reviews are good. When it comes down to it, people do enjoy the act of kissing.

What is it that makes it so appealing though? And what makes a good kisser? Hey, for that matter, what messages are out there waiting to be discovered about lip locking?

Just how are kisses portrayed in films, the Internet, books, or even songs? And what of its healthy effects on the human body? Ask no longer, folks. These questions and more will be answered as we explore kissing from all the angles.

♥♥♥

Favorite kisses mark the best of the best and usually make the best stories to retell. University of Massachusetts students were asked what there favorite types of kisses were and if they had a favorite place to be kissed or kiss? The answers that followed were revealing, to say the least.

